Mr. Brodeur defends the deal and the outlay of $100 a day for each tug, by saying that the water was kept open by them whatever their horse-power was, and that was enough, as it enabled the grain to be moved to Georgian Bay ports. But that was not the point, as the members of the House could see it. The point was the extravagance of the outlay, and its palpable political favoritism.

A deep suspicion is warranted about the whole transaction from the well-known fact that navigation remains open of its own accord nearly all winter on Lake Superior. At the head of the lake the U. S. mail steamer "America" has for years plied between Duluth, Two Harbors and northern ports for over 100 miles as late as January and February. If this is so, and it can be vouched for, it cannot be supposed that freighters leaving Fort William as late as December 13 would have much trouble to break ice for themselves out of Thunder Bay, sure as they were, of not being troubled with such obstacles in the lake, the river or at Georgian Bay ports.

Was the ice breaking in early December, for which the Government paid three little tugs $100 a day each, a mere "fake?" The matter will bear further looking into. Mr. Conmee's son-in-law and his partners, the Messrs. Bowman, old partners of Mr. Conmee, must be very clever men in their business to work the Marine Department in the way they did.

The San Francisco Argonaut makes a striking comparison between the action of the British and United States insurance companies as to the payment of claims after the great earthquake, which is not at all to the credit of the United States companies, says the Brockville Times. The British companies refused to pay earthquake damages but would pay for fire damage not caused by earthquake. If the courts hold that dynamite was used to stay the progress of the fire, they will also pay dynamite damage. The United States companies, on the other hand, are evasive, quibbling and wholly unsatisfactory in their replies to their policy-holders. This leads the Argonaut to criticize the home companies severely and to say:

"But behind all this is the fact that while the British companies will pay no more than their legal liabilities, THEY WILL PAY."

While it is risky to make predictions two years ahead about politics in the United States, or in any other country, it begins to look likely that Mr. Bryan will again be nominated for the Presidency by the Democratic party. His very defeats, as Collier's points out, both in his campaigns, and especially in the convention of 1904, have left him stronger with the Middle-Western voters, who have always been the basis of his strength. Feeling that he has never had a fair opportunity, that he had more votes than McKinley in one election, that life insurance and other corporation money is now shown clearly to have been used in large sums to compass his defeat, and that the men who dominated the convention of 1904 were corporation servants, the Bryan following is looking eagerly for a contest on more even terms. Mr. Bryan succeeded in a notable measure in living down the reputation in which he was formerly held by those who regarded him as being a shallow demagogue. If he ever attains the Presidency, he will at least be the most travelled man who has held the office. The Bryan world-touring party were in Hungary last week and reached Constantinople a few days ago. The political leaders of Hungary entertained Mr. Bryan at a banquet at Budapest, and the speechmaking continues even at Constantinople. The chances are that he will be invited to address the Russian Duma when he happens in.

The following remarks, from the Toronto Star, are quite as applicable to Belleville as they are to Toronto. It must be gratifying to all the citizens to note that, of late, the accidents resulting from broken planks, loose boards, etc., have been greatly reduced, but there still remain many old mantraps To be sure, the Council are laying cement walks as fast as they can, and there is hardly any doubt that our citizens in general will support them if they double the amount so far voted for this season's sidewalk construction. The granolithic walks are among the best assets the city has, Under the caption of "The old wooden walks," the Toronto Star says:

"Rapid progress is being made in replacing by concrete the wooden sidewalks from which Toronto has too long suffered. During the past two months more than a hundred separate contracts for new sidewalks have been begun and completed. Many more are under way. This useful change has been largely the result of legislation authorizing the city to lay a sidewalk and charge the same as a local improvement, even though the property-owners interested opposed the undertaking. The power has been judiciously exercised, to the benefit in nearly every case of even those who objected.

"There remain, however, even in the centre of the city, some stretches of wooden sidewalks so bad as to be a public peril. In some cases their defectiveness makes the city liable to claims for damages. The Engineer ought not to hesitate about taking steps to secure the abolition of these out-of-date remnants of bad conditions that only exist because of the unprogressiveness of a few citizens, whose penuriousness ought not to be allowed to stand in the way of the city's development, and the supplying of a public necessity"

In Mr. W. B. Northrup's speech, a portion of which appears to-day, a suggestive and peculiar thing comes to light, namely; In a little over two months, 556 immigrants arrived at Winnipeg, who had come from Europe. These people were all booked through to the United States; they had never, at any time, any intention of staying in Canada, yet the Canadian Government paid the North Atlantic Trading Company $5 per head for each of these 556 people! The same system was going on all the time. Mr. Northrup only mentioned this one incident as an instance. Just think of the gigantic fraud being perpetrated on the people of Canada!

OLD AGE.

Comes to Everyone, But its Visits May be Postponed.

Old age is not a question of years. Some men are old at forty, others are young at sixty.

It's a mighty hard proposition to look young, no matter how young you feel if your hair is falling out and your head becoming bald.

Perhaps you are tired trying ineffectual remedies for this evil.

We don't blame you if you are.

Why not try an effective one for a change.

There's a great opening in the west of Canada for the Ontario "school-marm." There exists a great scarcity of teachers. The growth of the young idea is greater than the teachers of how to make it shoot, says the Peterboro Examiner. The old injunction of "Go west, young man," should be varied to "Go west, young woman." The enterprising young damsel, with a pedagogic equipment, has a double chance in the Northwest—to get a school, as a teacher, and to get a husband, the latter, perhaps, a comparatively trifling matter, but sometimes not entirely despised by the average girl. She will thus likely have two strings to her bow, and more than likely two beaux—on the string.

TO PAY DIVIDEND

YORK COUNTY LOAN AFFAIRS ARE GETTING STRAIGHTENED OUT.

Hamilton, June 12. — Ald. Gilbert, of this city, has good news for those interested in the York Loan company He has been notified by the assignee that a payment will be made in a few days to those who put their money into the concern. The assignee gave him no idea of what the amount of the payment would be, but he stated that only those who had handed in their books would share in it. For that reason the alderman is anxious for those who have not yet done so to hand in their books to him.

B. of Q. Conference.

DISCUSSES THE LOCAL OPTION ACT AND THE LORD'S DAY BILL.

Port Perry, June 12.—The most important discussion at this, the closing session of the Bay of Quinte Conference was in connection with the presentation by the Rev. G. W. Clarke, B.A., of an able report on the state of the work. It showed progress in all departments, urged temperance propagandism, and one day of rest for all and all to rest on one day; deplored the scarcity of ministers, and called for union of audiences to meet this scarcity. Quite a discussion was precipitated on two items of the report, the first concerning the words "unfair and un-British" in relation to the sixty per cent. provision in the liquor bill, and, second, "a day of rest for all and all to rest on one day." It was all but unanimously determined to have these words stand in both cases.

The final resolution in the Lord's Day bill was presented by Rev. Dr. Shorey. This is to be forwarded to Parliament. It showed in brief that inasmuch as this is in constitution a Christian commonwealth, and the Lord's Day is known and recognized as the statutory rest day in this land, the members of Conference think that all persons and classes of persons who seek citizenship in this land should conform to the civil requirements of our Christian institutions. To do otherwise would be dangerous legislation, and would lead to the subversion of the Lord's Day itself.

The report of the temperance committee deemed the local option bylaw the most effectual measure within the reach of the electors of the province, and recognized the good work of Dr. Chown and of the W.C.T.U.

The board of examiners is as follows: G. W. Henderson, J. A. McCamus, W. B. Tucker, B.A., B.D.; R. Bamforth, B.A.; J. G. Lewis, B.A.; G. F. Metzler, M.A., B.D., Ph.D.; W. G. Clarke, B.A.; G. W. Marvin, M.A., B.A., Ph.D.; R. Burns, Ph.B.

The changes in the last draft of stations are; W. D. P. Wilson goes to Sidney, G. E. Ross to West Huntingdon, S. G. Rorke to Canifton, F. Woodger to Melrose, G. Horton to Morven, J. F. Mears to Newburgh, Geo. McConnell to Demorestville, W. A. Banner to Salem, William Coombe to Hilton, R. L. Edwards to Baltimore, E. E. Howard to Myrtle and Columbus, D. Williams to Woodville, Dr. Clare, B. D., to Atherley, C. E. Mark, colleague, Bobcaygeon, G. C. R. McQuade to Haliburton, S. Crookshanks to Norham, W. D. Harrison to Keene, H. Thomas to Queensboro. These are two new chairmen, S. T. Bartlett and John Garbutt.

The Rev. John Scanlon, of Prescott, addressed the Conference on behalf of a committee of the Montreal Conference on the erection of a monument to Barbara Heck, at Prescott. Seven Conferences here and in the United States join in this project. The monument is to cost some $4,000.

Rev. Messrs. J. J. Ferguson H. T. Ferguson and John Locke, of Toronto Conference, were introduced and gave addresses.

The Conference special committee are the President and Secretary of Conference, chairmen of districts, Dr. W. E. Tilley, T. Wickett, O Hezzlewood and W. J. Greenwood.

The Conference closed at about 11 o'clock this morning, the shortest session known for General Conference year.

Temple Band Will Play in This City.

The Temple band, a Salvation Army organization, which belongs in Toronto, and has been making a tour through Eastern Ontario lately, will visit this city to-morrow. Papers in other places where it has played speak of the Temple band as a fine musical organization. The band will give a concert on the corner of Front and Bridge streets at noon to-morrow, and in the afternoon at 2 o'clock, will play a programme on Victoria park, to which all are invited.

Vaccination For the White Plague.

FRENCH SAVANTS HAVE EXPERIMENTED SUCCESSFULLY.

Paris, June 12. — Dr. Calmette, of the Lille branch of the Pasteur Institute, has communicated to the Academy of Sciences, on behalf of himself and his colleague, Dr. Guerin, the result of important experiments foreshadowing the prevention of tuberculosis by vaccination. The form of tuberculosis treated is that of the digestive organs, which Dr. Calmette believes is extremely common in children. Drs. Calmette and Guerin believe that Dr. Behring's method of injecting virulent tuberculosis bacilli is dangerous. Accordingly they render the germs innocuous by killing, or half killing, them with heat, and they are then administered intestinally, as a preventive. The experiments thus far have been confined to calves and kids, but they have been so successful that their efficacy indicates they will be equally effective in the case of human beings.

They believe that infants can be rendered immune by a dose of properly prepared bacilli in milk a few days after birth, and a second dose a few weeks later. It would be imperative to protect them for at least four months from natural tuberculosis infection, to which the treatment would render them particularly liable.

Dr. Roux, of the Pasteur Institute, has been working independently in the same direction, and has obtained similar results.

The first instalment of this story will appear in The Intelligencer on Saturday.

The prize list of the Canadian National Exhibition, to be held in Toronto, Ont., Aug. 27 to Sept. 10, which is now being distributed, contains many changes compared with last year. In nearly every department there is a material increase in the premiums. In the horse department classes have been added for Welsh, Shetland and Hackney ponies, and the prizes in the first section of the breeding classes have in several instances been doubled. It has also been decided to award the premiums in the trials of speed on the three-heat plan, each heat to be considered a completed contest and the money to be divided according to the place won in each heat. The Dominion Short Horn Association having increased their grant for prizes to $2,000, the exhibition management have responded with a like amount, so that there is considerable expansion also in the cattle department. In the sheep division wether sections have been added to each breed of sheep. In this connection it might be mentioned that the management are making arrangements that will enable sheep to be judged under cover. In the poultry department a number of sections have been added and the list has been increased by an extra number of specials. Several changes have been made in the dairy department and the building is to be supplied with improved cold storage. In the floral division a prize is added for the best and most original floral design. Several sections recommended by the Ontario Beekeepers' Association have been added to the honey classes. Several sections have also been added to the women's and children's departments. The total increase all round amounts to close upon $4,000, which means that the aggregate sum given in premiums by the Canadian National Exhibition is approaching the $50,000 mark. Entries are set to close on August 4.

MASSASSAGA.

Mr. Adams and Mr. J. Anderson, of Queen's University, Kingston, conducted services on the Ameliasburg circuit in the absence of Rev. Mr. Barnes, who is attending Conference.

The ice cream social held in the school house on Friday evening last in aid of the Epworth League, was a grand success. A duet given by Mrs W. Osbourne and Miss M. Jones, of Belleville, was very well rendered. Twenty-three dollars was realized.

Mr. P. F. Le Riche, of Belleville, was a guest of P. B. Hamilton for a few days last week.

A number from here attended the funeral of the late Minnie Ashton, of Rednersville, last week.

CHANGE IN TIME ON NEW YORK CENTRAL, SUNDAY, JUNE 17.

The summer train schedule of the New York Central will take effect Sunday, June 17th, and on that date popular low rate excursions to the various resorts will be resumed. Most of the present trains will be continued, though in some cases the time may be slightly changed, and many new trains will be added. Complete information may be obtained at New York Central Ticket Offices.

LITTLE BELL BIOGRAPHIES

E. MacDowell

EDWARD ALEXANDER MACDOWELL, born 1861, sometimes called "the American Grieg," is the first great composer that Western civilization has produced. Had he not given so much time to teaching, and were he not now afflicted with an incurable brain disease, he would have left a name in the departments of song and pianofore composition not surpassed by Schubert and Chopin.

As it is, he has written sonatas which are the equal of those by Schumann, Chopin and Grieg. But however full of freedom, individuality and charm these may be, MacDowell's songs and pianoforte pieces belong to the musical treasures of the world. His songs are full of simplicity and of fresh spontaneous melody. Of them the best known and most popular are "Thy Beaming Eyes," "Sweet Blue-eyed Maid," and his "Slumber Song," but all of them are equally beautiful and winsome and tender in expression.

Aside from his sonatas, his pianoforte pieces are altogether different from any other composer's in imagination and style. Nothing in the realm of music could be more naive and tender or more pure and poetic than "To a Wild Rose" (in Woodland Sketches) and "From a Wandering Iceberg" (in Sea Pieces). They cannot be rendered save by an artist and on a perfect instrument like which, with its full, rich Singing Tone and Illimitable Repeating Action, expresses every shade of musical feeling, beautifully, poetically. The Bell Art Piano is emphatically the Musician's Perfect Piano.

The full series of "Little Bell Biographies" in booklet form, illustrated, will be mailed free on request by

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness.' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how, The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

THE SECRET OF CONTENT.

(Roy Farrell Greene in Leslie's Weekly.)

It isn't what a fellow has that clothes him with content,
That puts him in that frame of mind where joy and peace are blent,
And makes him feel that recompensed are those who plan and strive;
That he's, in truth, well satisfied, and glad that he's alive.
It isn't money stored in banks there placed to his account,
It isn't mortgages he holds, of fabulous amount;
Nay, none of these sheathe worry's thorns as down life's path we jaunt—
It isn't what a fellow has, but what he doesn't want.

Though wandering feet may be a curse, far more are itching hands
That grasp, but never satisfy, their cravings and demands,
Though rolling stones accumulate very little moss,
They don't like avaricious palms, keep smarting at their loss.
And so, the man of modest wants who keeps desire curbed
Strolls side by side with happiness when others walk perturbed.
Possession ne'er makes man immune of cares that siege or haunt—
It isn't what a fellow has, but what he doesn't want.

If one's by wish and want imbued his days will all be spent
In futile spurts upon life's road to overtake content,
If one's desires modest be, he'll find them all supplied
And be a constant "Sunny Jim," with life well satisfied!
It isn't bonds that make for cheer, nor stock that peace supplies,
It isn't silver pleasure brings, nor gold contentment buys,
It isn't bank or treasury notes, though fistfuls you may flaunt—
It isn't what a fellow has, but what he doesn't want.

A number of changes were made in the Assessment Act during the last session of the Legislature, but none of a very radical nature. The new feature of the Assessment Act, the business tax, remains unaltered in principle, although it has been strenuously attacked. Some people consider it the most unjust feature of the Act. The changes which were made in the Act dealt chiefly with exemptions. Householders living in municipalities whose population exceeds $5,000 now have income from personal earnings exempt to the extent of $1,000, in places of less than that population the exemption is $700. Persons who are not householders living in a municipality of more than 5,000 population have income from personal earnings exempt to the extent of $600 and in smaller places up to $400. This change will affect income taxpayers in Belleville, as under old arrangement smaller exemption applied to all places with a population less than 10,000.

A change that was needed was the exemption of income from investments when such income does not exceed $300. Formerly it was only income from personal earnings that was at all exempt. Hardship was worked by the law which taxed widows who might be living on a small income derived from the proceeds of an insurance policy. In such cases the few dollars more or less represented by a tax, would mean a very considerable difference to the person affected. It seemed unjust that an old person, eking out an existence on three hundred dollars a year, should pay the same amount of taxes on income as a householder next door who was in receipt of a thousand dollars yearly. Probably as many criticisms were levelled at the Act on this score as on any other. The business tax is still harshly criticized, but no changes are likely to be made in the principle of its working until it has been more thoroughly tested.

A sign of the times is the appearance of another "barnacle" article in the Toronto Globe. The Globe's criticism of the late Ontario Administration was a powerful influence in bringing about its downfall, says the Edmonton News. From every Conservative platform Mr. Ross and his colleagues were condemned out of the mouth of their journalistic friend. The course pursued by the leading Liberal organ of the province was a very far from consistent one, and though that chapter in provincial politics did not bring it any prestige, any more than did its stand on the Autonomy bills, its attitude served to disintegrate the party to a very serious extent. It won the maledictions of its party friends by its first utterances and then the contempt of the general public by throwing itself into the campaign on behalf of those whom it had so strongly criticized with a vigor in which, in view of the opinions it had expressed, there was no reasonableness. It started out as an exponent of independent views and ended as a party hack. Will history now repeat itself?

The exposures of the tainted meat industry at Chicago, which are directly due to Mr. Upton Sinclair's novel, "The Jungle," recall the effect of some of Dickens' books. As far back as 1902, it is now pointed out, the report of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry set forth some of the nauseating disclosures that are now matters of common talk; and later some medical journals took the subject up. Still the public in the United States refused to get "interested." It was only after the publication of Mr. Sinclair's book and its perusal by President Roosevelt, who promptly ordered special investigations to be made, that general attention was arrested. Fiction has not ceased to be a power in the world.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Unchanged—Chicago Market is Firm for all Stock.

London, June 12.—Cattle are quoted at 11c to 12c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8⅜c to 9¼c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 14c to 15½c per lb.; lambs, 16½c, dressed weight.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, June 12.—Receipts of live stock at the city market as reported by the railways were 93 carloads, composed of 1606 cattle, 740 hogs, 485 sheep and 188 calves. Besides the above hogs there were four carloads received by other dealers from country points.

Prices ranged from $4.80 to $5.20 per cwt., the bulk going at $4.90 to $5.10. Export bulls sold at $3.75 to $4.25 per cwt.

Choice picked lots of butchers' cattle sold at $4.80 to $5 per cwt.; loads of good at $4.60 to $4.80; medium at $4.40 to $4.60; common at $4.25 to $4.40; cows, $3.50 to $4.25 per cwt.

H. Murby reports a moderate trade. Owing to high prices for beef cattle, all steers at all fleshy are being bought up at prices that would be too high for feeding purposes. Prices are reported by Mr. Murby as follows: short-keeps, 1100 to 1200 lbs., at $4.50 to $4.75; good steers, 900 to 1050 lbs., at $4 to $4.25; good steers, 800 to 900 lbs., at $3.90 to $4.10; light stockers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, $3 to $3.25; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Between 30 and 40 milch cows and springers were offered. The good to choice cows, of which there was not a large number, were in demand at good prices, but common to medium were slow of sale. Prices ranged from $30 to $60 each.

Calves were as usual in good demand at $3.50 to $6 per cwt.

Receipts were not large and prices remained about steady. Export ewes, $4.25 to $4.50; bucks, $3.50 to $4 per cwt.; spring lambs at $3.50 to $6 each.

There was a fair run for Tuesday. Mr. Harris reports prices unchanged at $7.40 for selects and $7.15 for lights and fats.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET

East Buffalo, June 12.—Cattle—Receipts, 75 head; fairly active and firm; prices unchanged.

Veals—Receipts, 75 head; steady; $4.50 to $7.

Hogs—Receipts, 2100 head; fairly active and a shade higher; heavy and mixed, $6.90 to $6.95; Yorkers and pigs, $6.90; roughs, $5.75 to $6.05.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 600 head; steady, unchanged.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, June 12.—Beeves—Receipts, 062; feeling steady; dressed beef in moderate demand at 7½c to 8½c per lb. for native sides; extra beef, 8¾c.

Sheep—Steady; exports to-day, 1020 cattle, 675 sheep and 2700 quarters of beef; to-morrow, 2850 quarters of beef.

Calves—Receipts, 81; feeling steady; dressed calves steady; city-dressed veals, 8c to 11c per lb.; extra carcasses, 11½c; country dressed, 7c to 9½c; dressed, 7c to 9½c; dressed buttermilks, 6c to 7c.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 4387 head; 13 cars on sale; sheep firm; lambs steady; good demand; one car held over; sheep, $4.25 to $5.90; lambs, $8.25 to $8.85; yearlings nominal.

Hogs—Receipts, 3498; nominally firm, and higher on Buffalo advices.

THE HUMAN BRAIN.

It Undergoes Wonderful Changes During Its Growth.

The wonderful changes which the human brain undergoes from the moment when it first appears in the embryo until it becomes the perfected laboratory of thought characteristic to the matured human being has been commented upon by several of the leading writers on biology, physiology, etc. During these successive changes, or, rather, transformations from the lower to the higher sphere, the human brain not only takes upon itself the general shape and form of the brains of various representatives of the lower classes of animals, but appears to have the same structural constituents, at least to a certain degree. Thus it has been found that the original germ of the brain as it appears in the human embryo has the exact outlines of a serpent's thought factory. After that the changes which take place while the brain is assuming the various shapes which it must undergo before it becomes perfect give it a decided resemblance to the brains of fishes, birds and mammiferous animals.

"Hein's "Thoughts on the Structure of the Human Brain" and Wilson's "Anatomy of the Human Body" both mention these queer transformations, as does also Hugh Miller in his famous work, "Testimony of the Rocks." Miller puts it in this way: "It has long been known that the human brain is built up by a wonderful process, during which it assumes in succession the form of the brain of a serpent, a fish, a bird, and lastly, before it assumes the characteristic human form, it takes upon itself the outline of a mammiferous quadruped's brain." Hence the remark made by scientific writers that "man is the sum total of all animals."

Talks on Orange Meat

(THE PURE FOOD) No. 1

Canadian from field to table.

ORANGE MEAT is made from the best wheat grown in Canada. That's the reason why it is the best cereal in the world. From the Western wheat fields, it is brought by rail and lake right to our elevators at Kingston. Then our experts cook, malt and toast it changing wheat starch to wheat sugars. From the time it enters our elevators as wheat—until it comes on your table as ORANGE MEAT—it is never touched by human hands. The wheat is entirely handled by machinery. It is a Canadian cereal—perfected by Canadians—to build up the health and delight the appetite of Canadians.

ORANGE MEAT contains all the body, brain and vigor building elements of wheat. Analysis shows that ORANGE MEAT contains more wheat sugars than any other cereal.

It's not merely "something good to eat." It is a perfect FOOD. It contains the whole wheat—the outer shell omitted from flour and the wheat germ which supplies Phosphorus to the nerves and brain. ORANGE MEAT weighs ⅓ more than any other package.

Your grocer has ORANGE MEAT in 15c. and 25c. packages. 15c. size contains coupons good for new premiums. 25c. size contains 2⅓ times the 15c. quantity. Write "Orange Meat, Kingston", for new premium catalogue.

He was surprised at how the sores healed—"I took your New Method Treatment for a serious blood disease with which I had been afflicted for twelve years. I had consulted a score of physicians, taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts, but only got temporary relief. They would help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicines the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swellings of the glands, palms of the hands scaling, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach, etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 8 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks' time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the New Method Treatment for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared. I was cured 7 years ago and no signs of any disease since. My boy, three years old, is sound and healthy. I certainly can recommend your treatment with all my heart. You can refer any person to me privately, but you can use this testimonial as you wish."

POOR HANDWRITING.

One of the Causes That Downed Napoleon at Waterloo.

The nose of Cleopatra had a marked influence on the destinies of the ancient world. The handwriting of Napoleon I., we are assured by recent historians, had a similar effect upon the evolution of the modern world. He did not write; he scrawled. By reason of this, among other causes, he lost Waterloo. Grouchy could not read with exactness his decisive message. Was it "bataille engagee" (battle is on), or "bataille gagnee" (battle is won)?

Grouchy chose the latter significance and, not believing it necessary to press forward, arrived too late. So much for the curl of a letter, a pen stroke or an illegible swell to an "n."

This question was brought forward by the writing master of the elder Dumas.

"Remember, Alexandre," the master said to him, "the great defeat of the emperor was due only to his scrawling hand. If you wish to succeed in the world be careful of your heavy and your light strokes." So if Napoleon had known how to write legibly or if he had taken the trouble to do so his descendants would reign today in France and we should not have had the republic. It appears historically established today that Dumas' writing master was right. And on such slight things rests the fate of empires.

The Osprey.

Allusion is often made, especially in fashion journals, to "osprey" feathers. Few words have been more loosely bandied about than this bird name. The Roman author Pliny's "ossifraga" (bone breaker) has been identified with the lammergeyer, a vulture that is reputed to break up bones too big for it to devour whole by dropping them from a height upon rocks. But both "ossifrage" and "osprey," a newer form, came to be applied to quite another bird, the fish hawk, which is now the true "osprey." Yet the "osprey" feathers—more properly egret feathers, or aigrettes—do not come from this bird, but from the egret, or lesser white heron.

The Sea Otter.

The sea otter combines the habits of a seal with the intelligence and amusing character of the otter. When met in herds far out at sea, which is but seldom now, they are commonly seen swimming on their backs. They even eat their food lying in this position on the water and nurse their young ones on their chests between their paws, exactly as a south sea island mother swims with her baby in the water. When swimming in this attitude they even shade their eyes with their paws when the sun dazzles them.

One of His Inferiors.

"He says he always tries to be polite to his inferiors and— Hey, where are you going?"

"Going to find him and give him a licking."

"What for?"

"I met him this morning, and he was as polite as a dancing master."

The Other Way.

The teacher had been talking about a hen sitting on eggs, says English Country Life, and, with the incubator in mind, asked if eggs could be hatched in any other way.

"Yes, sir," said an experienced person of nine. "Put 'em under a duck."

PIRACY AND PROPOSAL

By EPES W. SARGENT

Copyright, 1906, by Epes W. Sargent

Perhaps one reason why Hoffman respected his nephews was because of the excellent understanding between themselves and Alice Cutler. Ewan was bashful and self conscious in her presence, but the twins were her chums, and Ewan envied them.

He had been trying for six weeks to decide whether or not Alice cared for him, and he was afraid to put his fate to the test. He was not much of a ladies' man. Until he had seen Alice his yacht had been his sweetheart, and a cruise with a lot of good fellows outweighed all the allurements of feminine society.

Now he regretted a little—just a little—his devotion to the sea. He did not even know whether Alice thought of him as his nephews' uncle or as himself. Unversed in the ways of women, he could not decide. He might have asked his sister, but he dreaded Gertrude's gibes, so he devoted himself more than ever to the twins, and thus gained a right occasionally to enter the charmed circle, the center of which was Alice Cutler.

Then came the twins' inspiration. Bedtime tales of the Spanish main had fired their imaginations. Here they were on the gulf of Mexico, whence the gold laden galleons had made their start. Nothing would satisfy but that they should go upon a pirating expedition.

Their mother was glad enough to be rid of them for the week the cruise would occupy, and Alice Cutler manufactured a most imposing skull and crossbones flag to be broken out from the masthead when the quarry should be sighted. The twins carefully looked after the saluting cannon and its supply of ammunition, and laboriously practiced carrying wooden daggers between their teeth.

Then came the day of embarkation. The twins kissed their mother goodby, as dutiful pirates should, and set out with Alice for the pier, while Ewan hurried over to the postoffice to make sure that a belated business letter was properly posted.

"I'LL GIVE YOU A DOLLAR APIECE AS RANSOM," HE SAID.

He cursed his fate with true piratical fervor when he came to the dock and found that Alice had returned to the hotel without a goodby for himself, but once on board and under way he became absorbed in the twins' play.

It was one of their greatest charms that they could "make believe" with such absolute seriousness as to convince an outsider that their pretense was real, and Ewan grinned over their circumstantial account of the capture of a beautiful maiden, whom they were holding for ransom.

"We just tied a handkerchief over her mouth," exclaimed Dudley, "an' says, ''Less we get ten thousand dublins from your father we'll send him your ears.'"

"An' she cried," supplemented Gordon, "an' tried to take the bandage off, an' we tied her hands, an' it was doubloons, not dublins, what we said."

"'Taint, it's dublins," defended Dudley, and by the time the arbitrator had decided that neither was right on the pronunciation of doubloons the twins were ready to go down into the cabin and decide upon their course.

"Now, what I propose," explained Ewan, "is to get out in the gulf and wait for the galleons from the mines. They should have left Vera Cruz day before yesterday. Shall we do that or shall we set sail for Brazil, land a force and plunder the storehouses of the natives?"

"I don't think mother would like it," objected Dudley. "It's too far away. Besides, we've the beauteous maiden to ransom. We ought to cable her father, as we promised."

"Pirates don't cable," suggested Gordon. "They send messengers in disguise."

"I guess modern pirates use the cable," laughed Ewan, stopping a demonstration. "You youngsters had better pile on deck and keep a sharp lookout for treasure ships."

The twins departed, still arguing the question of to cable or not to cable, and, lighting a cigar, Ewan gave himself over to wondering why Alice had not waited to bid him goodby. She had half promised that she would be on hand to wish him good luck on his first piratical adventure. It was not like her to break her word.

He was still lost in thought when the steward came in to set the table for lunch.

"Beg pardon, sir," he asked, "shall I set a place for the lady?"

"Have the boys been telling you about their captive?" laughed Ewan. "I supposed that captives on pirate ships were fed on bread and water."

"The young lady in the cabin, sir, the one the young gentlemen were telling you about, sir."

"There's no young woman in the cabin," denied Ewan. "It's a part of their make believe."

"I thought you knew, sir," persisted the steward. "There's a lady in that cabin."

Hoffman made two steps to the door indicated and threw it open. There on the bunk lay Alice Cutler bound hands and feet and with a towel across her mouth. It was the work of a moment to release her, but it was five minutes before her lips permitted her to speak.

"Don't mind," she smiled as she listened to Ewan's horror stricken explanations. "I imagine that the boys took their piracy too seriously. It was all done so suddenly that I could not help myself, but I was sure that you would find it out when you came on board."

"And to think," he groaned, "that I was sitting in the cabin all the forenoon, and you were lying here suffering."

"It wasn't so very bad," she conciliated, "and the boys were so full of their cruise that you really cannot blame them. I hope you will not punish them."

"Punish them!" he echoed savagely. "If they are going in for this sort of piracy they should be strung up at the yardarm."

With a whoop the boys came tumbling down the companionway. As their glance fell upon their captive they jumped upon their uncle and began to pummel him.

"It ain't fair," protested Gordon, "to let the captives out. They might run away."

For a moment Ewan struggled with a desire to fight back, then he caught Alice's eye, and he contented himself with grasping the collars of two sailor jackets and bringing the twins in front of him.

"I'll give you a dollar apiece as ransom," he said sternly. "Not a cent more."

"You can have her," they chorused. "Give up the dollar."

Payment was made, and Hoffman sent word to the mate to head for home, to the great dismay of the twins, but on this point Ewan and Alice were agreed.

The sun was just sinking in the west as the Mona, renamed the Scourge, came in sight of home. From the bridge Alice and Ewan watched the landmarks loom up, while the twins, with Ewan's best binoculars, watched at the stern for pursuers.

"It is too bad to bring the cruise to such a sudden termination," she smiled.

"It is too bad to have to return to the real," he supplemented. "For the last four hours you have been my captive and now"—

"And now?" she prompted.

"The situations are reversed. I have been your captive ever since I came down here."

"Then you were a very unbusinesslike pirate," she laughed softly, "to ransom me."

"Why?" he demanded.

"Because," she whispered, "you had only to ask and"—

Ewan asked.

The next cruise of the Scourge will be a honeymoon trip.

How They Got Up a Row.

At one of the English country inns Hook and Mathews once got up a mock quarrel before a large company. The wit and the comedian each appealed most earnestly to the sympathy of the company, who, with the true British predilection for anything in the shape of a row, eagerly espoused the side of one or other of the champions. The contest proceeded, and Hook's cool invectives, we are told, grew more and more cutting and the gesticulations of Mathews more wild and extravagant. Blows followed, and the partisans, full of gin and valor, soon followed the example of their principals. A general melee succeeded. Candles were knocked out, tables and chairs overthrown, the glasses "sparkled on the boards," and in the midst of the confusion, just in time to avoid the arrival of the police and the impressive denouement, the promoters of the riot, unobserved, effected their escape, leaving their excitable adherents to compute at leisure the amount of damage done to their persons and property and to explain, if possible, to a magistrate in the morning the cause and object of the combat.—London Spectator.

Norway's Seaweed.

"All along the coast of Norway seaweed is gathered and burned," writes the Christiania correspondent of the London News. "This seaweed grows in veritable forests and is not of the common grass variety. There are actual trees of it, five or six feet high, with stems like ropes and leaves tough as leather. They begin to sprout early in the year and cover the ocean bed with a dense, impenetrable brush. As a source of income the seaweed industry now surpasses the fisheries, and it is more valuable than agriculture even in one of the leading farming districts of Norway. Owners of land abutting on the seashore are reaping a great harvest. After the weeds have been burned the ashes are exported to England, where valuable chemical substances are extracted from them. The most important of these products is iodine."

Colonel Muggs And His Luck

By Donald Allen

Copyright, 1906, by K. A. Whitehead

Colonel Muggs, U. S. A., was primarily to blame for his capture by Grecian brigands. He was pompous and portly. He wrote his name in big letters on hotel registers and talked about his mines and ranches. When he reached Corinth he strutted a little more than usual. He found there an English lord, and, wanting to show him that he wasn't the only prominent personage about, he cut a swath as wide as he could. Unknown to him there was an article in a Greek paper about him. He was said to be worth $50,000,000 and piling up millions more, and that he talked of buying up all the ruins in Greece and shipping them to New York as a free gift to the city.

Your true Greek brigand takes the daily newspaper and pays special attention to the society column. It was on account of that newspaper article that Colonel Muggs was taken in. He hired a carriage and driver and guide and two flunkies and drove out into the country from Corinth to "do" some interesting ruins, but before he was half finished sight seeing he found that the brigands had "done" him.

The colonel had made his arrangements overnight, and this had given his guide time to send word to the gang. There were five of them, and every man knew his business. They came upon the colonel while he was eating his lunch on a mass of masonry many thousand years old. It was so old that the brigands should have felt awed, but they didn't.

As soon as they had made the colonel understand that he was at their mercy they turned to and ate up the rest of his luncheon and wanted to punch his head because he hadn't left more. When they had finished eating and drinking they set out for the mountains.

The colonel exhibited a reluctance to go with them, but they caused a change of heart by pricking him with the points of their knives. One of them could speak English fairly well, and he explained that, while it was the intention to treat the captive with due consideration until he had yielded up the money, they couldn't permit anything bordering on the frolicsome in his conduct.

"Say, now, but who do you fellers take me for?" demanded the American, as he was being hustled along.

"We have made no mistake," was the reply. "You are the man worth $50,000,000."

"Fifty million nothings! Where did you get hold of any such rot?"

"In the newspapers. You shall see them when we get to camp."

"Well, you are a lot of fools. I have been swelling around some, and have perhaps given a false impression, but it's all being done on cheek. I'll tell you straight that I'm from Meriden, Conn., U. S. A. I'm no colonel, though I hate to admit it to a blamed gang of robbers. I'm simply Joseph J. Muggs, traveling salesman for a clock factory. I am over here to introduce eight day clocks, and I have hardly money enough to pay my hotel bill and get out of town. If you've got hold of me thinking to raise a stake, you are going to get left."

"We shall see," replied the leader, while the smile on his face showed that he thought the colonel was trying to work off old stock on him.

After a five hour tramp they reached headquarters in the hill. Headquarters was a dilapidated hut and a campfire in a lonely spot. Some black bread and roasted goat's flesh constituted supper, and later on the brigands sat in a circle around their captive, and the leader said:

"You shall have the freedom of the camp as long as you are with us, but some one will have an eye on you all the time. The first move you make to escape will bring a bullet. In the morning you may write a letter to your banker, and it will be sent to the town by messenger."

"What in the devil shall I write to my banker about?" demanded the colonel, who was tired and disgusted.

"That he shall send us a sum equal to what you would call $500,000 in your American money as your ransom."

"Jupiter Jewkins, but are you crazy! Have the whole five of you just escaped from some lunatic asylum? If you want any further chat with me tonight, then don't talk through the top of your hat."

"You will write in the morning," said the leader, while the others muttered under their breath.

"But I have no banker in Corinth."

"Then to the American consul. He will help you to get the ransom money from America. He will use the cable, and in three days it will be here and you will be free."

"Say, old man," remarked the colonel after a hearty laugh, "this will be one on me when I get back to Meriden. You seem to have got the idea that there are millions in the clock business. Let me tell you that if we show 4 per cent clean profits a year we are tickled to death. My bank balance in the First national of Meriden is about $7."

"The papers say that you are worth $50,000,000."

"The papers be hanged! If you run this brigand business by what the papers say you'll die in the poorhouse."

"But you are to buy up all the ruins of our country," persisted the leader.

"Yes, when hens climb trees. I couldn't buy one old broken column. Just make up your mind that you've got hold of the wrong man. It's that English lord you want to lay hands on. I've been putting on side, but it's all froth."

The colonel was ordered into the hut to pass the night, and the brigands went into caucus. They believed the American to be lying. Once they had captured a wealthy Frenchman who had lied them out of a big ransom, and they didn't mean to be caught again.

When morning came there was another slim breakfast. Then the leader said:

"If you wish to be free in two days, then write to your bank in Corinth."

"But I told you I had none," replied the colonel.

"Then to your country's consul."

"He could be of no use whatever."

"Listen to me," said the man as his comrades fingered their knives menacingly. "We give you one week in which to raise the ransom. After that you are a dead man. Don't trifle with us. You cannot deceive us, and you cannot hope for a rescue."

"Well, all I've got to say is that if you fellers tried to do business on your plan in Meriden you'd go stone broke in two weeks. I've told you the truth, and if you are too thick headed to absorb it it's your misfortune."

The brigands were in no hurry. Neither were they in any danger of being overhauled. They divided their ransom money with the It, and the It saw that they were not interfered with.

Nothing further was said to the colonel for two days. He made himself believe that he was out on a huckleberry excursion and tried to enjoy it. On the third day he noticed that the brigands began to exhibit signs of impatience and feel the edges of their knives. On the morning of the fifth writing materials were placed before him, and the leader said:

"Perhaps you will write to your banker today?"

"With the greatest of pleasure, if you will only tell me who he is."

"Oh, very well. There are two days left to you."

Colonel Muggs hadn't been taking things as easy as appeared. He was in a hole and couldn't see his way out. He couldn't raise $200 just then to save his life, and he realized that he had put himself into a false position and that the brigands would hold him to it. For four days he had had an eye out for any chance to make a break, but he had been under strict watch.

Soon after noon on that fifth day a big thunder cloud came sweeping up from the south and brought a torrent of rain and terrific thunder and lightning. Every one crowded into the hut for shelter, and the brigands were cursing and praying alternately when something occurred big enough to make a sensation in America for a few minutes. What it was the colonel didn't know until half an hour later, when he woke up. Then he found himself and the brigands lying in the midst of the ruins of the old hut. His fellow lodgers seemed very quiet, and he decided not to disturb them. He gathered up their knives and carbines, and, retaining one of the latter, he chucked the rest into a ravine and then set out for Corinth. If the brigands woke up after he departed they did not pursue.

"A-h-h, colonel, but my heart was rent with sorrow when I heard of your capture!" exclaimed the landlord at Corinth as the colonel walked in on him.

"Well, I dunno," was the reply. "You've got to get up pretty early to beat a Yankee and an eight day clock combined."

Accommodating Landlord.

A correspondent assures us that he never knew that it was possible for an innkeeper to be too accommodating to his guests until he went down to Nova Scotia and put up at a pleasant little hotel in the country. The landlord of this hotel laid it down as one of his principles of action to give people a little more than they asked for—to be "extra accommodating," as he termed it.

The landlord brilliantly illustrated his adherence to this principle the very morning after our correspondent's arrival at the hotel. The guest had to go away on the 7 o'clock train that morning and asked the proprietor to call him at 6. The guest went to sleep in the calm assurance that he should be aroused at the proper hour.

He seemed hardly to have fallen into a sound sleep when he heard a terrific pounding at his door. He sprang up wide awake.

"What's the matter?" he called out.

"Four o'clock! Four o'clock!" came the landlord's voice from the other side of the door. "Two hours more to sleep!"

It is needless to say that the guest slept no more that morning. The landlord's anxiety to be "extra accommodating" failed of its mark that time.

Where Gloves Are Grown.

The raising of kids for their skins is a leading industry among the French mountaineers, who obtain no small part of their subsistence from this source. Softness, delicacy of texture and freedom from blemish are principal factors in the value of kid skins, and to secure these essentials great pains are taken. As soon as the young animal begins to eat grass the value of the skin declines, for with a grass diet its skin immediately begins to grow coarser and harder in texture, and its chief merit vanishes. It is, therefore, kept closely penned, not only to prevent it from eating brass, but also to secure its skin from accidental injury from scratches or brushes, which impair its value. When the kids have reached a certain age at which the skins are in the best condition for the use of the glover they are killed, and the hides are sold to traveling hawkers, through whom they reach the great centers of the tanning industry at Annonay, Millau, Paris and Grenoble.

Mr. Northrup's Speech

ON THE NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The House is perhaps aware that under the terms of the agreement the publications had to be submitted to the department before they were made. And they were not so submitted, nor can we find evidence in the files that they were submitted afterwards, notwithstanding the protest of Mr. Scott. Mr. Scott's report is embodied in a letter from Mr. Smart to Mr. Preston, a part of which reads:

"The point is that a large part of the advertising is simply steamship advertising not directed by the North Atlantic Trading Company at all, but by Mr. Karlsberg and Mr. Falck, and it would appear to me that a large portion of the former—that is, the cost of the office rant, [illegible] covers steamship offices, which are established for the general [illegible] business, not only to Canada, but to all portions of the globe at all events [illegible] steamers represented by these individual steamship agents, and consequently we cannot be getting the advertising we expected when entering into the arrangement with the company."

This letter of Mr. Smart follows word for word the report that Mr. Scott had sent to him. And so, we find that in the month of June, 1903, Mr. Smart, then deputy minister, knew that the accounts sent to him were not proper accounts, that the money supposed to be spent was not being spent as it should be. And the additional fact remains, that from that day to this so far as I have been able to discover from the laborious search of the files, no practical attempt has been made by the Government to obtain genuine vouchers for the expenditure of that money. It was well to provide that the company should spend £3,000 a year, but was not the spirit of those who entered into the contract on the part of the Government displayed in the arrangement that, while the company was bound to spend £3,000 a year, on the other hand the Government has to pay on the immigrants reaching Canada monthly. And the company was not called upon to make return until the end of the year, and the vouchers sent him were the certificates of their own officers. Not only was Mr. Smart at the time he visited Amsterdam, aware that the accounts of the company were in the unsatisfactory condition which his subordinate had reported, but he knew also that the very reason of the contract—the settlement of Manitoba and part of the Northwest—was not being carried out by means of this company. We listened to a dissertation this afternoon by an hon. gentleman opposite upon the wonderful success of the present policy of the administration. We heard the Minister of the Interior, the other evening, dilate at great length upon the glories of that policy. But the practical question before this House, the question upon which hon. gentlemen must vote this evening, is not the general policy of the Government; it is not even the immigration policy of the Government—hon. gentlemen must vote on the particular contract made by this Government with the North Atlantic Trading Company and the various amendments and additions thereto. When Mr. Smart went to Amsterdam in 1904, he had in his pocket, or in his mind—or should have had—certain reports that had come from Winnipeg about the beginning of 1903. I find that in going over the files, Mr. Geo. A. Johnston—I do not know if he is the statistician, but it matters little, for he in this case, only started the ball rolling—wrote, under date of 30th of December, 1902, to the effect that while on an immigrant special, after great trouble he had found seven families of Russian-Germans ticketed to Winnipeg, but whose destinations and addresses were North Dakota and Minnesota. He says that he only ascertained this by examining their tickets and addresses. These parties had received specific instructions as to their destination and were very reticent about giving information.

"He further advised that these parties had specific instructions as to their destination and were very reticent about giving information."

And he advised the department to look into this matter. The department thereupon wrote to the Winnipeg agency, and the next letter I find is dated January 6, 1903, from Winnipeg. It says:

"Numbers are coming to Winnipeg en route to the United States and say the steamship officers told them that was the cheapest way. They arrive in mid-winter and are a heavy burden."

Then began a singular list of communications, the department at Winnipeg apparently being determined to drive into the heads of the Department of the Interior at Ottawa, that their immigration system, instead of being a glorious success, was a most dismal failure. Here are the letters;

"There is a report from Mr. Moffett of the 8th of January, 1903, inclosing Stemshorn's report showing that 556 booked for Winnipeg departed for the States between October 21, 1902, and January 6, 1903."

556 booked for Winnipeg and paid for by the department under this contract, left Winnipeg forthwith. This is interesting because—

Mr. A. K. Maclean. How does the hon. gentleman know that the bonus was paid on these people?

Mr. Northrup. I have read the files, which the hon. gentleman perhaps has not; and there has never been a dispute in all the letters filed, or any question that the company was not to be paid, on every adult and every child which reached this country.

Mr. A. K. Maclean. The hon. gentleman knows that the bonuses were to be paid only to those who belonged to the agricultural classes, and it is possible, and a fair presumption, that not one of these people belonged to the agricultural classes—unless the hon. gentleman can give some proof of it.

Mr. Northrup. I thank the hon. gentleman for saying that, I was hoping somebody would raise that point to give me an opportunity of telling him and telling the House that whoever will take the trouble to search the files will find that these officials at Winnipeg not only gave the names of the families and the ages of the individuals, but gave the names of the vessels in which they came out, and the officials protested in their letters against immigrants coming here who were routed for the States and this company getting bonuses for them. The Government has never repudiated the obligation to pay bonuses on these people. The Government has not closed up all its accounts, there are some disputes as to the accuracy of some of the figures, but as to the principle there is no dispute.

What Women Suffer.

AT ALL AGES THEY NEED THE RICH RED BLOOD THAT DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS ACTUALLY MAKE.

A woman needs medicine more than a man. Her organism is more complex, her system more delicate, her health is disturbed regularly in the course of nature. If anything happens to interfere with that natural course she goes through unspeakable suffering. In fact the health of every function and the health of every moment in a woman's life depend upon the richness and regularity of her blood supply. That is the simple scientific reason why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are worth their weight in gold to women of all ages from early girlhood up—they actually make the rich, red blood all women need.

Mrs. Edwin Ward, Brooksdale, Ont., says: "For years I suffered from those ailments that make the lives of so many of my sex miserable. I would take weak spells and become so nervous that I could not go about My stomach was out of order, and I frequently vomited the food I took Headaches and backaches afflicted me nearly all the time. Then I took a severe cold which settled on my lungs, and I went to a hospital for treatment. I had the best of care, but the doctors gave me little hope of recovery. My face and limbs became swollen and my system racked with a harsh dry cough. As the doctors did not look hopefully upon my case I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. By the time I had taken half a dozen boxes there was a great change for the better. I still continued to take the pills until I had used thirteen boxes, and I am now enjoying perfect health. I have no hesitation in saying that I believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cured Mrs. Ward by actually making the new blood her system needed. That is all Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do, but they do it well. They don't act on the bowels They don't bother with mere symptoms. They go straight to the root of the trouble in the blood. That is why they cure all blood and nerve troubles like anaemia, female irregularities, indigestion, rheumatism, headaches and backaches, sciatica, nervous prostration and St. Vitus dance. Substitutes and imitations won't cure, purging medicines only make you worse, therefore you must get the genuine pills with the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

"I suffered for five years with kidney and liver trouble, which caused severe pains across the back and a blinding headache. I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga, Tenn. These had at R. Templeton & Co.'s Drug Store.

MISS IDA M. TARBELL.

Her Advice to Women Who Want to Become Journalists.

As one of the most successful journalists in the United States Miss Ida M. Tarbell is certainly qualified to speak interestingly on "Women in Journalism," "Nearly all women who escape matrimony and the schoolroom try for journalism," said Miss Tarbell recently. "I have a profound respect for the woman who succeeds in it. If she can endure the first six months of brutalizing experiences she is apt to succeed. There is no other sphere in life where the fact that you are a woman counts for nothing. There is not a good and wholesome woman in the world who does not want consideration because she is a woman. When a woman enters the office of a great daily she is painfully conscious that she is a woman—just a woman. She cannot at first grasp the idea that the great daily is a wonderful and almost perfect machine that makes what she terms cruel demands. That daily paper is a wonderful creation, and all who serve it become a part of the machinery and not individuals. It takes a woman some time to realize this. She goes into the office, receives her first assignment, does her best on it and next morning finds that not a word of it is used. She takes her next assignment and perhaps two of the ten inches she wrote is used. Finally she goes to the busy man with the glasses at the night desk and asks why. She is coldly informed that her first articles were 'rot.' She thinks it is brutal and hard and does not understand why the men ignore the fact that she is a woman. Then she wants to quit. In lots of cases she does quit. Women, newspaper women, have to get over that habit of quitting—it's fatal. And she musn't cry—if she belongs to that class she will probably be asked to quit. Tears may be a forceful weapon in matrimony, but never in an editorial room."

MISS IDA M. TARBELL.

The Pretty Throat.

The most beautiful neck in the world loses its charm completely unless the texture of the skin is fine and the color creamy white. Yet how few necks are there which have not suffered in some way from high and tight collars, starched neckbands or dyed ribbons? Starch, by the way, is often accountable for the brownish rings seen on so many throats. Boas, furs, turned up coat collars, all seem to leave some sort of stain on a woman's throat, and yet these can be removed by the simplest means. Pure alcohol, or, if preferred, pure cologne, is about the best way of taking off the ordinary collar stain. It should not be forgotten that alcohol used near or on the face should always be of the very best quality, says Woman's Life. In ordinary street dress a woman's neck, provided her collar is pretty and fits well, never causes her a second thought, but when she is in evening dress and the lines of the throat are revealed the lines and creases she has engraved on her neck by carrying her head awkwardly are a source of real concern to her.

Waxed Floors.

Shellacked floors are indefensible if you determine to live up to certain standards. Such floors are to be seen in houses curtained with real lace, and they haven't even the excuse of being attractive. There is an imitation look about them that spoils the atmosphere as effectually as artificial palms in flower pots.

What can one substitute where labor is a consideration? Turpentine and beeswax, a pint of the former to an ounce of the latter; cost infinitesimal, as a quart of turpentine will do a number of rooms. Cut the wax into small pieces and put it to soak overnight in the turpentine. Don't try putting the mixture on the fire or you will share the fate of Mary, with her can of kerosene.

In the morning the wax will be dissolved enough to use. Apply it to your floor, your clean floor, with a sponge or a cloth. After it dries, a matter of a few minutes, you can polish it with a soft cloth with very little labor, though, of course, a polishing brush is better.

Ugly Elbows.

A well known beauty specialist claims that there is no necessity for ugly elbows, as elbows respond very quickly to treatment, and there are none so ugly that they are hopeless. Most elbows are disfigured by the callous places formed by continually leaning on them. These may be removed and the appearance of the elbow generally improved if on retiring each night the elbows are soaked for several minutes in warm water in which a pinch of borax has been dissolved. When carefully dried they should be well rubbed with a good cold cream. If the elbows are sharp and pointed try massaging them twice a day with a reliable skin food. The flesh all around them should be treated with the skin food, which will fill out the surrounding tissue and cause the angles to disappear. Of course it is unnecessary to add that if the habit of leaning on the elbows is an established one it should be broken immediately if any good results are expected from the elbow treatment.

Girls and Rings.

Girls whose hands are not yet fully grown and formed—that is, generally speaking, girls up to eighteen—should not wear rings. Many a taper finger has had its shape spoiled by a ring which became so gradually too tight that the wearer did not notice it until the mischief was done. Pianists or persons who play any instrument seldom wear rings. They think that the weight of the rings lessens the muscular strength of the finger. If a girl thinks she must wear rings, then let her at least take them off each night and rub a moment the part of the finger that has been covered by them. This restores circulation and helps the finger to attain its normal growth.

A Buff Dining Room.

Many women are having their dining rooms done in buff color instead of the blue which has been so much in vogue since the rage for Dutch furniture, placques, mugs and chinaware of all sorts. The walls done in this tone are light enough to permit of half drawn blinds of the same shade, and in many instances there are diminutive silken curtains of a lighter shade of yellow. Any yoke furniture blends nicely with this decoration on wall and windows, and especially effective is brassware—samovar, teakettle, coffee urn or finger bowls—in a dining room thus arranged.

Shredded Silk Skirts.

The girl with nothing a year should know that silk petticoats and linings when reduced to shreds and utterly unequal to their first purpose can be utilized for millinery trimming with very little picking over. The ruffles or goffered portions which remain intact are specially serviceable. One girl who is wearing a very becoming silk hat of this kind for theater and other evening affairs confessed to her women friends that it was evoked from a wornout petticoat and arranged over a frame made from a pasteboard bandbox.

Artistic Candle Shade.

Three dainty candle shades were recently made to order by an artist. White crape paper, tinted the shade of crab apple blossoms, on the lower part of the ruffle, which fell over the shade, produced a charming effect. On the upper rim of the foundation was laid an encircling wreath of crap apple blossoms and buds, fashioned from white crape paper, tinted with water colors, the buds being colored pale or deep, to correspond with the flowers.

Cracks In the Floor.

Cracks in floors around the skirting board or other parts of a room may be neatly and permanently filled by thoroughly soaking newspapers in paste made of a pound of flour, three quarts of water and a tablespoonful of alum thoroughly boiled and mixed. The mixture will be about as thick as putty and may be forced into the cracks with a knife. It will harden like papier mache, and the floor will be as smooth as when new.

A Luncheon Dish.

Nice for luncheon is this entree of cold boiled ham: Chop enough ham to fill a coffee cup and add to it two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese, a little cayenne pepper and two tablespoonfuls of cream. Fry rounds of bread in butter and spread with the ham mixture. Grate cheese over the top and brown in a hot oven. Before sending to the table decorate each round with an olive.

A Cheap Night Lamp.

In place of a four candle electric lamp or a glowworm lamp it is sometimes necessary to devise some way of getting a dim light through the night. Now, if a piece of candle is weighted so as to float upright in a tumbler partly filled with water it will last several hours and will burn until the wick is much below the surface of the water.

Eating.

The woman who overeats has only herself to thank for the unpleasant results. She knows better. If she doesn't, one experience ought to teach her. The woman who undereats or who eats what simply "tastes" and does not nourish her need not consider herself intelligent.

A bed should be placed so that the head is toward the windows, for in this way the light will not fall on the eyes and disturb the last hour of sleep that is claimed to be the most beneficial.

Melted castile soap and common oatmeal mixed with a little water and slightly perfumed is an excellent remedy for removing dirt from the hands and bleaching the skin.

HOW IT WORKED.

WIFEY'S SCHEME TO CURE HER HUSBAND OF EXCESSIVE SMOKING.

(Chicago Chronicle.)

She read about it in the back of a magazine. The advertisement said that it was tasteless, that it could be administered in the breakfast coffee, and that it would cure the most confirmed smoker of the tobacco habit without his knowledge.

To be sure, Elmer smoked only three or four cigars a day. Still, why should he smoke at all? She didn't.

So she wrote for the cure, and in due time it arrived, in a plain, sealed package, with full instruction inside.

Unfortunately it arrived before she was up. Elmer opened it, smiled to himself, sealed it up again, and said nothing.

The next morning she gave him his first dose.

"This coffee has a bitter taste, hasn't it?" he asked.

"Your stomach must be out of order," she answered. "It tastes all right to me."

That night he brought home a large, new box of cigars. Usually after dinner he smoked once. But that night he smoked all the evening. The atmosphere was thick.

The second morning he complained again about the coffee's bitterness.

"Well, no wonder your taste is out of order," she said reproachfully, 'considering how you smoked last night."

"I've had the most remarkable craving for tobacco lately," he muttered.

And at dusk he brought home a costly meerschaum pipe and a pound of Cavendish, and shutting himself up in the library, smoked like a forest fire until bed time.

"Hadn't we better change the coffee? Surely you must have noticed its odd taste," he said on the third morning.

"No, I haven't noticed it," she answered faintly.

He brought home from the city in the evening a huge tin box of Egyptian cigarettes, a hookah and a jar of Turkish tobacco.

"I never enjoyed smoking as I've done lately," he explained. "I can't keep a cigar out of my mouth."

And that night he smoked cigars and cigarettes, meerschaum, and hookah till he saw her rise and hurry, with a vindictive look, to the kitchen.

Following on tiptoe, he saw her unlock a drawer, take out a bottle that he knew, and pour its contents into the sink. He chuckled.

And thereafter he complained no more about the coffee and his tobacco appetite shrunk back to its normal proportions.

THE FACTORIES' REPORT.

Child Labor In Shops Should Be on a Par With Factories—Necessity For Ventilation—Cure For Burns.

The reports of the inspectors of factories have been issued by the Department of Agriculture and embody much useful information and the results of a year's acute observation of economical conditions in the province. The inspectors reporting are Messrs. James T. Burke, Thomas Kelity, Arthur W. Holmes, John Argue, Miss Margaret Carlyle and Mrs. James R. Brown. A list of accidents reported during 1905 numbers 635, 19 of which were fatal. To the International Harvester Co. are credited 131 of the accidents.

Child labor receives considerable attention, and it is believed the law is being better observed in this respect. The administration of the truancy act is required at the same time, as it is no advantage to the child to escape the factory to run wild on the streets. One inspector considers that the age limit for shops, which is now ten, should be fourteen, the same as the factories.

Ventilation Required.

Ventilation and the removal of dust in dust-generating industries are treated as matters of chief importance. The law requires employers to protect the health of their workers in this respect, but it is stated that the workers themselves do not always co-operate. Catarrh of the respiratory organs is usually the first result of inhaling dust-laden air, and it paves the way for pulmonary disease. Dust particles gain access to the system through slight abrasions of the skin and cause malignant pustules, ragpickers' disease, glanders and affections of the eyes. Rhoe, a Massachusetts physician, is quoted on the average life duration in that state. Factory workers live 36.3 years; craftsmen, 50.8; farmers, 65.3, and workmen without definite occupation, 47.4 years. An examination of the sources of supply of fresh air concludes that there are no decisive reasons for preference in the adoption of any of the three locations, near the ground, 25 to 40 feet above ground or from the roof.

Canners From Buffalo.

The importance of the growing canning industry is dwelt upon, and it is regretted that Canadian labor is not more prevalent, Pollacks, Italians and Swedes from Buffalo and Lockport do the work on piecework wages, and it is stated that many of the girls return with $200 to their homes as their season's savings. The conditions of housing and living of these workers is severely criticized. Overcrowding is reported. In one case sixteen females slept in a room ten by sixteen. It is recommended that a person should be solely employed in making up beds, and keeping them clean, in airing the rooms and such work. As it is, the beds are never made, the rooms are shut up tight all day, and the workers return at 9 at night to the rooms unchanged since they left at 6 in the morning. Filthy habits and want of sanitation are alluded to, and evidently there is room for improvement.

Some factories are in the habit of locking their doors during working hours. This is against the law, and must be stopped. The danger in case of fire and panic is obvious.

Under the act one hour must be given for the noon meal. Some prefer to take half an hour and get away half an hour earlier in the evening, but the inspectors take the position of enforcing the act.

Practical Suggestions.

Warning is given against storing coal, especially bituminous coal, near boilers. Other sources of spontaneous combustion are also indicated.

The bursting of emery and corundum wheels is mentioned, and frequent inspection urged, as well as the adoption of hoods as safeguards.

It is suggested that the plan adopted by Ottawa, of going systematically through the city, one street at a time, and compelling the erection of fire escapes where necessary should be applied to Toronto.

Insufficient staying of boilers is a point to dwell upon. People do not realize the danger, usually, as they would if they saw the weight actually suspended.

It is noted that manufacturers' generally do not consider it profitable to work long hours, and only in cases of necessity are overtime permits asked for.

In the construction of factory buildings from cement it is necessary from its non-porous quality to pay special attention to ventilation. This, with other features, is pointed out in the report.

A cure for burns is recommended as useful in factories and households generally. It is the discovery of Dr. Thierry of the Paris Charity Hospital. It is very simple, consisting of a saturated solution of picric acid. After bathing the burn, blisters do not form, and all pain is suppressed. The only inconvenience is the yellow stain, which may be removed with boric acid. A pound of acid in a barrel of water is the proportion used in the French foundries.

Relic Hunting Vandals.

The officials of the Education Department who went to visit the famous serpent mound in Otonabee Township, Peterboro' County, say they found the mound in a fairly well preserved condition, but that unless immediate steps are taken to preserve it, this interesting relic of bygone days will be entirely lost to posterity.

The mound is not being destroyed by the farmer who owns the land, but curiosity seekers from all over the country have commenced digging and tearing it up in hopes of finding Indian relics.

"If something is not done at once to protect it from these relic hunters, and from the plough of the farmer, which may desecrate it at any time, the mound will certainly be destroyed," said Mr. David Boyle.

Mr. Boyle points out that this serpent mound is the only one of its type in Canada. He does not accept the theory that the mounds of North America were the work of an extinct race of mound builders. "All evidence," he says, "goes to show that these mounds were built by the ancestors of our Indians, and mounds have been constructed by the Indians within historic times."

More money is lost by feeding hogs too long than by selling too early.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY.

Interesting Facts Concerning That Institution In the Limestone City.

From the last annual report the following information is gleaned concerning the Kingston Penitentiary: The number of inmates is 448, the number received during the year being 134. The annual cost of maintaining the institution is $146,447, but this can be reduced by a revenue of $42,800, making the cost per capita $209.

There is a special department maintained in the prison for female convicts and it is interesting to note that there is only seven in custody at the present time. On the point the warden very naturally remarks. "The gradual but persistent annual decrease in this class of prison population points to a time in the near future when the question of further maintainance of a full penitentiary establishment for female convicts will demand consideration. For this little family of seven delinquents we at Kingston Penitentiary are keeping up a prison establishment of thirty-two cells, with matron, assistant matron, kitchen, work rooms, wash rooms, etc. It would be infinitely better and cheaper to separate the women from the penitentiary. There are over thirty unoccupied cells but they are useless, as they cannot at present be used for male convicts."

Some years ago a suggestion was made to the Department at Ottawa that an arrangement might be made with the Ontario Government for the care of these women at the Mercer Reformatory. That institution has only between 50 and 60 inmates, although there is accommodation for three times the number.

The desirability of keeping youths under twenty out of the Penitentiary is emphasized by the inspector, who very rightly remarks, "This institution is adapted to those whose criminal habits have been formed, and whose characters are yet in the plastic or formative condition." As those under twenty years of age now constitute one-eighth of the prison population, the removal of the half dozen women would provide separate accommodation for young men under twenty who could be placed under more distinctively reformatory influences.—J. J. Kelso, Toronto.

EARL GREY ON PRISONS.

Gives Prison Aid and Reform Society Some of His Views.

At Toronto the other day, Earl Grey and Dr. Goldwin Smith spoke at a meeting of the Prisoners' Aid Society. Dr. Smith called attention to the want of discrimination between prisoners in some jails. He suggested that any difference as to authority might be settled by arbitration. It seemed to him that when men committed crimes it was right to punish, but there was no right to deprive that man of his means of reformation. Labor was the best means of reformation.

His Excellency the Governor-General expressed surprise at the character of the meeting, since he had anticipated only an informal discussion. The fact that there were constitutional limitations on his office had induced him to ask Premier Whitney as to whether it was proper for him to interfere in any way. The Premier had strongly expressed himself in favor of the speaker's efforts. His Excellency said he had visited jails in different parts of Canada, and there were conditions that called for reform. Prisoners awaiting trial, according to British justice presumed innocent until proven guilty, were mixed indiscriminately with others. There were no lights in many of the cells, the men awaiting trial being left to their own gloomy reflections. Such conditions called for immediate relief. He instanced a case where a young man waited in jail for months before receiving his trial on a charge of throwing a stone at a street car, with no companions excepting other prisoners. His Excellency stated he had brought the fact to the attention of the authorities, and he believed steps had been made to set matters right. In England prisoners awaiting trial were not punished, but kept in safe custody. They were there allowed to wear their own clothes and pursued their own occupations if possible. Prisons were schools for character. He had heard of instances were prisoners had begged on their knees to have their sentences extended over two years so as to have federal penitentiary treatment instead of facing the horrors of a provincial jail.

Rising Immigration Tide.

According to figures obtain from H. J. Tutt, agent of the Ontario Immigration Department at the Union station, Toronto, over 22,000 immigrants have this year come under the attention of the immigration officers at the station up to the end of May. This is an increase over the first five months of last year of nearly 8,000, and shows to what enormous proportions the immigration business is growing. Last year May saw 5,711 come in. For the five months of the two years the figures are as follows:

	1905	1906.
January	486	541
February	730	963
March	2,568	4,392
April	5,211	7,460
May	5,711	9,000
Total	14,706	22,356

It will be noticed from these figures that each succeeding month shows an increase over the previous one, though it is not large until the spring months come. When to this is added the fact that all passenger accommodation on vessels arriving at Canadian ports has been booked up to September, it gives an idea of what this summer may see in the way of high tide in immigration.

In addition to these figures, given out by Mr. Tutt, there have been a large number of persons arriving here under the care of the Salvation Army and similar organizations.

Asked as to the type of immigrant who has been coming in, Mr. Tutt said he believed most of the arrivals were of a better class than last year. They are a fine class of people, he said, and should make good citizens. The percentage of those included in the above figures who were not English-speaking people is so small as not to be worthy of notice.

Wedding Bells Still A-Ringing.

POPULAR BELLEVILLIAN WEDS COBOURG YOUNG LADY THIS AFTERNOON.

ACKERMAN — HOCKRIDGE.

At the hour of 3 o'clock this afternoon a pretty home wedding took place in the town of Cobourg, one of the principals being a well-known and popular young resident of this city. The bride was Miss Louie Hockridge, daughter of Mr. C. C. Hockridge, who resides on College street, Cobourg, and the groom Mr. Harry Ackerman, general manager of ex-Mayor Graham's industries in this city. Rev. H. T. Lewis, Methodist minister, of Cobourg, performed the ceremony. The bridesmaid was Miss Alice Foster, of Toronto, and Mr. John H. Hart, of this city, did honors for the groom. A large number of invited guests were in attendance at the interesting event. The bride and groom are both very popular, and the former received a magnificent array of gifts. After the ceremony the guests were handsomely entertained at the residence of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Ackerman left later in the day for a trip which will include Toronto, Niagara Falls, Albany, New York and Montreal. Upon their return to this city they will take up their residence on the corner of Queen and Ann streets.

Synod of Ontario

NOW IN SESSION AT KINGSTON — THE BISHOP'S CHARGE — SAYS MORAL STANDARD IS NOW VERY LOW.

Kingston, Ont., June 12.—At the synod of the Diocese of Ontario to-day Canon Grout, clerical secretary; R. V. Rogers, lay secretary, and R. J. Carson, treasurer, were re-elected, and E. J. Pense was made assistant lay secretary. Bishop Mills favored biennial sessions, and urged the committee on the subject to seriously consider the question.

In his charge to the synod, Bishop Mills declared that the present moral standard was very low, as evidenced in recent election contests. He believed in the pulpit decrying blind partisanship. He held that there was open teaching of infidelity in the schools of Ontario and Manitoba, instancing the High school geography, which propounded theories opposed to Scripture and Christianity.

His Lordship wished success to the efforts for union among the Methodists, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists, "a body of enormous strength and influence." He prayed for wider union, and described the attempts at it made by the Church of England, a church willing to give up much that she holds dear, but standing by trusts committed to her by God. These she dare not surrender, and this was the difficulty in the way of union. Personally, he had no hope of union, unless God worked a mighty miracle.

The charge was referred to a committee. The synod heard with regret of the death of Bishop Bompas, and stood silent and reverent as the Bishop paid tribute to his memory.

Rev Dr. Shearer, secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, addressed the synod and was heartily received. He paid tribute to the high character of Canada's public men, and protested against ministers in an uninformed way slandering those in high places.

The synod thanked Hon. C. Fitzpatrick for his work in drafting and presentation of the Act.

The synod protested against the use of the High school geography in use in Ontario, which taught infidelity. Greetings from Toronto and Ottawa synods were received and acknowledged.

Permission was refused to suspend the rules to present a protest against privileges being granted to Jews and Adventists under the Lord's Day Act. Chancellor McDonald said the object desired would be weakened by heated discussion.

To-night the synod sermon was preached in St. George's Cathedral by Rev. Dr. Stone, of Chicago, said to be likely the next rector of the cathedral.

Emmanuel R.E. Church Will Liquidate Its Debt

An adjourned congregational meeting was held in Emmanuel R. E. Church, Victoria avenue, last evening. At the Easter Vestry meeting a scheme was proposed the object of which was to secure pledges, payable in two years, sufficient to liquidate the debt on the church building and rectory. The committee last night reported that the necessary pledges had been obtained, and that, within two years, the church and rectory would be out of debt. After singing the Doxology, adjournment was made to the rectory next door, where refreshments were served by the ladies, and some time spent in social intercourse.

Four Weeks Tour In An Automobile.

MR. EDWARD GURNEY, OF TORONTO, HEAD OF THE GURNEY FOUNDRY CO., IN THE CITY THIS MORNING.

The name of Gurney, as no one needs to be told, is a household one in Canada, and it will interest our readers to learn that Mr. Edward Gurney, of Toronto, President of the Gurney Foundry Co., arrived in this city last night, and spent the night at the Quinte. The Intelligencer this morning had a brief interview with Mr. Gurney, and found the Canadian "Captain of Industry" very affable and eager to tell of the pleasure he had experienced during his present automobile tour, which has, so far, extended over four weeks. Mr. Gurney, accompanied by his two sons, has been over the states of New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and New Jersey, as well as a goodly portion of this fair Dominion. To his mind, a touring car is the ideal conveyance in which to travel for pleasure. There is nothing like it. The chances an automobile tour gives one for the study of human nature are unlimited, Mr. Gurney says. He thought the men who laid out the cities and roads of New England and the eastern states were rather in advance of their contemporaries in Canada—and also greatly in advance of their own descendants of to-day. Such splendid wide roads, lofty elms and beautiful suburbs as one finds in Boston, Albany, Rochester, and other cities of that class filled Mr. Gurney with admiration. He hopes to see them equalled in Canada some day. The eminent iron man looks the picture of health, and his four weeks' trip has evidently agreed with him.

Just think of it—four weeks in a touring car, over pleasant country roads. Who wouldn't be a millionaire?

A Million Dollar Fire in Baltimore.

TWO MEN BURNED TO DEATH THIS MORNING — BIG SAVANNAH DOCKS BURNED.

Baltimore, Md., June 13.—(Special)—A million dollar fire early to-day wiped out the big Savannah docks of the Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company, destroyed the steamer Essex, of that line, all the valuable freight with which the dock was crowded, and a number of scows loaded with cotton and rosin, with their freights, besides causing great anxiety as to the fate of the crew of the Essex, said to have consisted of about 40 men. All of the Essex crew save two are known to have escaped.

The two others were almost certainly burned to death.

The County Court.

SYLVANUS BURNHAM, WHO HAD A BAD RECORD, GOT A STIFF SENTENCE.

The trial of the old man, Sylvanus Burnham, who was charged with having committed perjury, was completed yesterday afternoon before Judge Deroche, the accused being found guilty. It appears that on the 9th of March, 1905, Burnham was tried here before the late Judge Lazier and convicted of obtaining, by false pretences, an overcoat and $10 from Bigelow Bros., of Trenton. At that trial Burnham swore positively that he had never been sentenced to the penitentiary for offences committed at Stratford and other places, whereas it was conclusively proved that such was the fact.

From documents and witnesses it was shown that in 1880 Burnham was sent up from Barrie on a charge of forgery and served four years, and in 1901 was sent from Stratford to the penitentiary for two years for obtaining goods under false pretences.

After the evidence had been submitted, Burnham, on his own behalf, addressed the jury and was followed by County Attorney Anderson. His Honor briefly reviewed the evidence submitted.

The jury were out but a few minutes when they returned a verdict of guilty and Judge Deroche sentenced Burnham to three years in the penitentiary.

Matters of Moment to Military Men.

Four companies of the Fifteenth Regiment, namely, D, E, F and G, were last evening inspected by Col. Young, of Kingston. These were respectively in command of Capt. Brown, Capt. Barragar, Lieut. McFee and Lieut. Wallbridge. The men were, shortly after 8 o'clock, paraded to the hospital lot, where they were put through various manoeuvres and inspected minutely by the inspecting officer. The various companies appeared to be well up in their drill, and Capts. Barragar and Brown were especially complimented by Col. Young upon the efficiency of the companies under their command. A large number of spectators were about the lot whilst the inspection was taking place.

This evening the Regiment will be inspected upon the hospital lot.

D. AND D. INSTITUTION TERM CLOSED YESTERDAY, AND THE SILENT BUT HAPPY BAND ENTERED UPON THE LONG VACATION.

Our silent friends of the Institution shall now pause a while from letters. Although, to the industrious, labor may seem only pleasure by another name, the dawn of the holiday season ever is saluted with throbbing hearts by earnest students, young and old. True, the glad shelter, kindly guidance and patient training received must ever remain dear to those who were the immediate objects thereof, yet freedom from task, at least for a while, is the crowning consummation youthful wisdom is wont to long for, and perhaps not unjustly. To attain knowledge, even under normal conditions, is difficult enough for the majority of us; but when the path is strewn with obstacles once considered insuperable, nothing short of a Spartan effort will avail, and hence the permissible joy which ensues. That the term now closed at the above establishment has been fruitful of results was amply shown at the examinations. Good health, too, so essential in this intense age, was a pleasant feature which materially contributed in bringing things to pass. The closing exercises took place yesterday morning, and as usual were made the occasion of very gratifying words, the dominant feeling being one of pride for past accomplishment and of hope, after merited rest, of still greater endeavor. The main feature of the proceedings, of course, was the Principal's address, in which the work of the session was carefully reviewed and gratitude expressed for the many blessings a kind Providence had been pleased to bestow. Reference was made to the convention of former students, which opens here on Saturday evening, at which a pleasant as well as profitable time is expected. The pupils, led by Mrs. Balis, signed, very prettily, "Home, Sweet Home." After a silver medal had been awarded to Miss Mary Rielly for distinct good conduct, Miss Annetta Johnston, gold medalist, pronounced a graceful valedictory on behalf of herself and co-graduates. Mr. Mathison then proceeded to assign the various routes, and no doubt by this hour not a few of the children have happily reached their parental homes.

MR. R. B. COOPER DIED LAST EVENING

BORN IN PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY, BUT HAD BEEN A RESIDENT OF BELLEVILLE FOR TWENTY-SEVEN YEARS.

In the death of Mr. Reuben B. Cooper which occurred about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, at the family residence, Moira street, a well known and highly respected resident of the city passed away.

Deceased had been in declining health for some time, and his demise was anticipated. In the year 1832 he was born in Bloomfield, Hillier township, County of Prince Edward, where he resided for some time. Some 27 years ago he came to the city, and since then has successfully conducted a milling establishment. Mr. Cooper always took an active interest in municipal matters and before coming to the city was a member of the Hillier Township Council, being at one time the Reeve. In the years 1883 and 1884 he was a member of the City Council, being one of the three representatives from Coleman Ward. He was also for some years a valued member of the Board of Health, being at times Chairman of that body. Whilst serving the city in these capacities he did his duties conscientiously and fearlessly. Deceased was not connected with any secret societies. Mr. Cooper was a member of Christ Church and always took a deep interest in Church works. In politics he was a staunch Conservative. The late Mr. Cooper was twice married, his first wife dying long ago. A widow and one son, Ald. Cooper, and one daughter, Mrs. Podesta, of Toronto, the latter the offspring of the first marriage survive. To the bereaved relatives will be extended the heartfelt sympathy of all classes of citizens, as it is universally felt that a good man has gone to the reward of the faithful.

DEFERRED DIVIDENDS

Imperial Life Disapproves of the System.

Although 85 Per Cent. of Its Business Is Conducted Upon This Plan—Mr. Bradshaw Says They Were Forced Into It by Competition—Was Fulford Policy For $100,000 a Liability Or a Loan?—Home Life Is Next.

Toronto, June 13.—The Royal Commission on Insurance held a short session yesterday, only sitting but thirty-five minutes in the afternoon to complete Mr. Hellmuth's examination of the secretary of the Imperial Life.

The Home Life was to have been gone on with immediately after the conclusion of the Imperial, but owing to certain witnesses having failed to receive subpoenaes, the work of the commission came to a standstill.

The Home Life will be called to-day at 10.30.

Mr. Bradshaw in the morning was questioned by Mr. Tilley on the old subject of the relation of loading to expense. He followed out his idea of Friday night and again told the commission that the first year's expenses should be limited to the first year's loadings, plus the anticipated loadings for the first five years. The reserve required by statute, in the actuary's opinion should amount to just enough to make the company solvent.

Actualities and technicalities occupied a large part of the time in the morning in the explanation by Mr. Bradshaw of the gross premium valuation.

Competition Will Lower Rates.

Witness disagreed with the preliminary term plan which allows a company to spend the whole first year's premium for expenses. It was wrong in principle. He also disagreed with Mr. Tilley that the Armstrong bill would result in the increase of rates, contending that competition would keep rates down despite the fact that expenses must be limited to loading, and hence the tendency would be to increase the loading.

Mr. Bradshaw would not advocate any hard and fast standard of loadings. He said that the actual death loss for the Imperial Life since its inception had been 52 per cent. of the H. M. table. The company had earned a higher rate of interest because they had invested in mortgages on western lands.

Mr. Bradshaw read a statement showing why he did not think it necessary to have standard forms of policy contracts. He also condemned in no uncertain voice, the issuing of estimates of profits. He thought that the transactions of life insurance companies, should be made public. He opposed compulsory mutualization, but advocated giving permission to mutualize.

Lessens With Age.

Just before the close of the morning session, Mr. Hellmuth took the witness through the profit and loss statement of 1905. Mr. Bradshaw admitted that th ratio of expenses to loading in the Imperial Life was one hundred and seventy-one per cent., while the Canada Life's rate was 162 per cent. after being in existence over 60 years.

Mr. Bradshaw told the commission that when a company was about twenty years old, it should get its expenses within the loading, but with the Canada Life the conditions were different. He volunteered that when the Imperial Life was as old as the Canada Life the expense ratio to loadings would not be 60 per cent.

At the afternoon session, Mr. Hellmuth reviewed parts of Mr. Bradshaw's evidence. He elicited the fact that 85 per cent. of the Imperial Life Co.'s business was upon the deferred dividend system. Witness considered that it would be better if insurance companies would eliminate this system. He was opposed to this method, but the Imperial had been forced into it by competition. He was in favor of a sound business method.

Liability of Loan.

Mr. Hellmuth, referring to the Fulford policy of $100,000, asked Mr. Bradshaw if the transaction was not a liability. He was at a loss to see the insurance feature. He took an instance where a sum of money was loaned at 3 3-4 per cent. for a period of years, which he thought was a distinct analogy. Mr. Bradshaw could see no connection between the two, and would give no answer as to his opinion as to whether or not Mr. Hellmuth's instance was a liability or a loan.

Mr. Bradshaw again explained the life feature in the agreement between Senator Fulford and the Imperial Life.

Witness admitted that the lapse ratio for last year of the Imperial Life was higher owing to the disturbance in life insurance affairs which had affected the stability of the policyholders.

This concluded the hearing of the Imperial Life.

The Home Life, an amalgamation of the People's Loan, and the chief witness, Mr. Pattison, is not now connected with the company. Mr. Shepley had failed to subpoena him. Mr. McLaughlin, appearing for the Home Life, could not bring Mr. Pattison without a subpoena.

First Matrimonial Agency.

The title "Matrimonial Agencies and Advertisements" ought to attract attention in our time, when requests for marriage fill the journals in the form of gross or jocular and sometimes serious announcements. That may seem to be a new phenomenon of modern life, yet M. Henri d'Almeras in La Revue Hebdomadaire says the real originator of this industry was one Villaume. In the last days of the empire he set up in Paris a sort of universal agency, which would supply furnished apartments, domestics, wives and husbands.—Journal de St. Petersburg.

The Tally Stick.

An old time way of proving one's right to the payment of money loaned was by tally sticks. A plain stick was used, and when a man loaned a sum a stick was broken, and the creditor and debtor each took a part. When the time for payment came the man who had the stick which fitted exactly to the stick held by the creditor received the money. Two sticks never break in exactly the same shape, so there was never any dispute about who had a right to the money.

Their Reward.

Dr. Strachan, bishop of Toronto, was waited upon by two churchwardens, who complained that their clergyman wearied his congregation by repeating the same sermon. He had preached it twelve times. The bishop asked for the text. Neither of the churchwardens could remember. "Go back," said the bishop sternly, "and ask your clergyman to preach the sermon once more and then come back and tell me the text."

Installments.

Bacon—Did you ever get anything on the installment system? Egbert—Yes; I got my household that way. First I got my wife, then her father and mother and now I'm getting her brothers and sisters.

Extreme views are never just. Something always turns up which disturbs the calculations founded on their data. —Tancred.

SAILORS AND "COOMES"

Arctic "Jack Tars" Fell in Love With Esquimaux Maids.

Smoked and Danced With the Fair Ones of the Northland—Witness Steward Duchesnay Says He Saw Some of the Officers "A Little Bit Happy, But Not What You Would Call Drunk"—At War With Moodie.

Ottawa, June 13.—Before the special committee investigating the Arctic supplies, Charles Duchesnay, steward of the Arctic, was the first witness called yesterday morning.

He described the progress of the voyage until Fullerton was reached.

To Mr. Northrup he said that there were many Esquimaux there, and during the whole winter they fed about fifty or sixty of these natives from the ship's stores. The greatest number at one time would be about ninety-five. On leaving Fullerton for Chateau Bay there were between twenty and twenty-five barrels of furs on board, and some of these at least were transferred to the Neptune; at any rate he saw none after leaving Chateau Bay for Quebec. He said there had been dances held regularly one week on the Arctic and the next on the Erik.

Refreshments For Sixty.

Mr. Northrup read an order which Duchesnay got from Major Moodie, asking him to have refreshments ready for about sixty in a hurry.

Mr. Brodeur—Where did you get that order? addressing Mr. Northrup.

"I gave it to Mr. Northrup," said the witness.

The Chairman asked if Mr. Northrup was going to file the documents, and he answered that he intended doing so.

Mr. Duchesnay said the orders for the stores for the Esquimaux had been given by Mr. Weeks, the purser. At Burwell orders were given to him by Major Moodie to send 35 pounds of tea, 35 pounds of coffee and other supplies to Joe Lane for two men and two women who were cripples and could not come on board for their supplies.

The Ladies Smoked.

Reverting to the dances on board ship, the witness said they danced with Esquimaux ladies, and they smoked with them, too. "All the Esquimaux ladies smoked," he said. Major Moodie had given orders that they were not to be allowed below deck. There had been some trouble about their visiting the cabins, and Capt. Bernier had made a fuss about it. He complained about the noise.

Mr. Northrup: Did any of the Esquimaux ladies come on board at night?

Mr. Duchesnay: I don't know myself, but Capt. Bernier had a fuss with Major Moodie over some trouble of that kind.

Mr. Vanasse told me he was disturbed at night.

Mr. Pardee: Just tell us what you know. We can get Vanasse's story from himself.

Mr. Duchesnay said that he did not see any of them. He was on the wrong side of the boat.

Mr. Northrup said that he wanted to show, if possible, that there was some bartering with the Esquimaux with Government goods.

Sailors and Their "Coomes."

Evidently the sailors had fallen in love with these fair maids, for the witness often heard them talking of going to see their "coomes," meaning thereby their sweethearts. He said each man got a pound of tobacco per month and no more. Cigars were only given out on feast days, of which there were three. Each man got one or two cigars apiece. He never saw any of the crew smoking cigarettes, but he saw Major Moodie smoke them. As regards liquor, he declared the men were called to Major Moodie's room on the feast days and each given a drink of rum. He did not think it was fair that the men should be taken there and given one drink, while a bottle would be sent down to the mounted police.

Examined by Mr. Bennett, the witness said he could not tell whether goods were on board the Arctic or not which he had signed for. He did not check them. He was asked to sign by either Capt. Bernier or Mr. Boudreau. He could not remember which, but they were both together at the time.

Hats For Them.

Mr. Duchesnay said there were ladies hats on board ship. He saw an Esquimaux lady wear one of these hats, but he could not say whether the Government bought them or not.

A pack of cards was given out once a month to the crew.

It was customary for the Esquimaux to come to the Arctic to sell furs, but when they came to the vessel with their parcels one of the mounted police took them away to the barracks. He had seen the natives take furs also to the Erik.

The witness, though a French-Canadian, had not objected to the non-observance of St. Jean Baptiste Day. He said he did not like feast days, because they gave him far more work.

Asked by Mr. Bergeron if there had been any drunkenness on board among the officers, Mr. Duchesnay said he had seen some of them "a little bit happy, but not what you would call drunk."

Photographer Lost $300.

Asked if there was any gambling on board, Duchesnay said the photographer told him he had lost $300. He did not see any money on the table.

The Esquimaux came first with their furs to the Arctic, but afterwards went to the barracks. He thought the police gave orders to this effect. Witness exhibited an order to Dr. Flood, asking him to give an Indian woman some brown sugar, when she called, for medicinal purposes; the woman was to call twice a week.

To Mr. Pardee, Mr. Duchesnay declared that the boat had been provisioned all right and the quality was good.

Mr. Pardee asked if the furs were brought on board at Fullerton.

Duchesnay replied that they were brought on board at Fullerton in barrels, and transferred to the Neptune, on which Major Moodie left for the north. That is, the barrels had a strong resemblance to ones taken on board at Fullerton. Some of the furs were in bales. The furs would fill a good part of the room, in which the committee was.

War on Moodie!

"Why do you say," Mr. Pardee asked, "that the furs came on board at Fullerton and afterwards were taken from the Arctic and placed on the Neptune with Major Moodie. Had you not your knife out for the major?"

"Well, perhaps I had," admitted the witness. "I ought to; I had reason."

"There was blood on the moon between you and the major?"

"Yes."

"You said that when you got a chance you were going to tell Mr. Monk?"

"I said I was going to tell Mr. Monk."

"And when you were going to give your evidence you said there was to be war with Moodie?"

"I don't know that I said that."

Sailor's Own Fault.

The cross-examination of Duchesnay was resumed yesterday afternoon. He stated somewhat reluctantly that the reason why the sailors had to go to Major Moodie's room for their liquor was that they had abused their privileges.

"In your opinion, was it a well-ordered, well-managed expedition?" asked Mr. Pardee.

"It was fair," was all Duchesnay would admit. He said the officers got more privileges than the men.

Explaining the cause of the trouble between himself and Major Moodie, he said that the major was too much of a dictator. Mr. Pardee insisted that the witness had become intoxicated soon after leaving Quebec, and that when he had been fined $5 by Major Moodie he threatened he would get even with him and would tell Mr. Monk the whole story.

"When did you give those papers to Mr. Northrup?" asked Mr. Macpherson.

"Last night."

The witness said he had a grudge because there was no fair play to the French-Canadians. They were fined and others were not.

May Not Have Been There.

There was a good deal of cross-examination as to Duchesnay having signed receipts for certain goods. These invoices had also been signed by Major Moodie and Capt. Bernier. The witness said he had not checked the goods. He signed because he believed thoroughly in the honor of Capt. Bernier. He still believed him to be as straight a man as walked this earth.

In reply to Mr. Bergeron he said that if he had not signed he would have lost his position. It might happen that though he signed for them the goods were not there.

Mr. Bergeron brought out from the witness that Major Moodie had shown a bias against French-Canadians, and that is why St. Jean Baptiste Day was not observed. A French-Canadian cook had been fined for stealing a knife. It was afterwards shown by Mr. Brodeur and Mr. MacPherson that English-speaking members of the expedition had been fined.

The witness said he had been a Liberal. He got the appointment to the Arctic through Laurence A. Wilson, liquor dealer, of Montreal. He would not go with that expedition again for $100 a week.

RAILWAY BOARD READY.

Three Commissioners Get Together—Ingram Resigns From Parliament.

Toronto, June 13.—The new Railway and Municipal Board, James Leitch, K.C., A. B. Ingram, M.P., and H. M. Kittson, met Premier Whitney and other members of the Cabinet who happened to be in the city yesterday, and discussed the laws of organization. The oaths of allegiance and office were administered by Assistant Provincial Secretary Mulvey, and the commission is ready to begin business.

Chairman Leitch did not know when the commission would hold its first meeting, but it will probably be some day this week.

Mr. Ingram forwarded to Ottawa last night his resignation as a member of the Dominion Parliament.

HURL ASSEGAIS FROM TREES.

But Bullet's Are More Deadly and Natal Rebels Run.

Durban, Natal, June 13.—Col. Mackenzie's column Monday attacked the rebel natives who had sought shelter in the bush. The latter climbed trees, whence they hurled assegais on the troops, but bullets dropped them out of the branches. Over forty were thus killed, and altogether one hundred and sixty natives were slain.

Darkness ended the operations of the troops, but the rout of the rebels is regarded as practically complete.

Embargo Removal Imperative.

London, June 13.—(C.A.P.)—On behalf of the Free Importation of Canadian Cattle Association P. L. Gray has written the Premier and other Ministers declaring that the removing of the embargo is imperative to the health of the people in view of the revolting revelation at Chicago.

Ellen Terry's Jubilee.

London, June 13.—Miss Ellen Terry's jubilee matinee at the Drury Lane Theatre from 12.30 to 7.30 yesterday afternoon was the most remarkable manifestation of British approval of the stage in its history. Miss Terry appeared as "Beatrice," in "Much Ado About Nothing." Crowds stood all night for a chance to pay a tribute to the great actress.

Despondent Takes His Life.

Leamington, June 13.—A young man, Thomas Wallace, deliberately committed suicide yesterday morning by shooting himself with a double-barrelled shot-gun. Both charges entered his mouth, killing him instantly. He had been ill for some time, and seemed very despondent.

Four Burn to Death.

Ottawa, June 13.—At Killaloe, situated in South Renfrew, 94 miles from Ottawa, early Saturday morning, the four sons of Daniel Dickson, engineer, were burned to death by a fire, which destroyed their home.

Killed by Train.

Toronto, June 13.—A man between 40 and 50 years of age was killed on the G. T. R. near Port Credit yesterday morning. Up to late last night he had not been identified.

Senate To The Rescue.

Motion For the Names of North Atlantic Trading Co.

Senator Lougheed Said "the Company Had Been Shown to Be a Fictitious One, Formed of Creatures of Mr. Preston—Senator Ferguson Puts Pertinent Question: "What is the Use?"—Government Behind Witness.

Ottawa, June 14.—In the Senate yesterday afternoon Senator Macdonald moved for a statement containing the names of the persons composing the North Atlantic Trading Co. He could see no reason for secrecy in the matter. The expenditure of the people's money was involved. Witnesses had refused to answer questions before the committee of the House, and had been sustained in their refusal by the Government supporters.

He believed the Government had nothing to do with the formation of the North Atlantic Trading Co., but that it had been arranged by Messrs. Preston and Smart with the knowledge of the Hon. Mr. Sifton.

He thought the Government and the Liberal members of Parliament regretted the contract having been entered into.

He doubted if the company was an honest one, and favored the names of the people composing it being given, no matter what the consequences were to the individuals.

Formed of Preston's Creatures.

Mr. Lougheed said the company had been shown to be a fictitious one, formed of creatures of Mr. Preston. Former Deputy Minister of Interior Smart had seen to the completion of the contract, and then retired to the company to share its advantages. Messrs. Preston and Smart had refused to answer the committee's questions as to the names of the persons in the company. Mr. Jury stated that Mr. Preston was the chief beneficiary from the North Atlantic Trading Co.

Mr. Scott: "Mr. Preston denies that he received any benefit."

Mr. Lougheed: "But no one takes that statement by Mr. Preston seriously."

Mr. Scott: "He swears to it. Jury declared he did not believe in a God, so his evidence is not very binding."

Serious Responsibility.

Mr. Lougheed said the Government had taken a serious responsibility in entering into the contract. It had paid out money under it. It could not be shown that services had been rendered for the money paid. The statement that the members of the Government did not know of the contract and did not know of the names of the members of the company did not relieve them from responsibility.

Sir Richard Cartwright said he was not surprised at the evidence of jealousy Conservatives showed at the Liberal Government. He was one of those who had seen the folly of the fruitless Conservative efforts to produce immigration in the old days. It was not surprising they should be jealous of their successors' success.

Senator Ferguson declared that Sir Hibbert Tupper had formulated charges and staked his seat that he would prove them against the same Minister, Mr. Sifton, but the Government had not given an enquiry.

What is the Use?

What was the use of making charges in this case? What was the use of making charges to get an enquiry when the Government stood behind witnesses in their refusal to answer questions?

The action of Mr. Smart in joining the North Atlantic Trading Co., burning his letter books and giving up a $4,000 position and obtaining special privileges for the company was very suspicious.

There were strong indications that Mr. Preston was interested in the company. He was intimate with Leopold, who was an agent of the company, and an agent interested in sending skilled laborers to Canada. A son-in-law of Mr. Preston was solicitor of the North Atlantic Trading Co.

Suspicious Circumstances.

Another suspicious circumstance was the secrecy as to membership. Senator Ferguson quoted a press despatch containing a declaration by Lord Strathcona that he had never had any connection with the North Atlantic Trading Co., and the contract never had his hearty endorsation.

Sir Richard Cartwright interrupted to say that Lord Strathcona had never stated that over his signature. The anonymous despatch proved nothing.

Senator Ferguson thought it proved Lord Strathcona had nothing to do with making the contract. The North Atlantic Trading Co. was set up as a toll gate to obtain profit from immigration to Canada from continental Europe.

A MILLION DOLLAR FIRE.

Baltimore Again Hard Hit by the Fire Fiend—Five of the Essex Crew Burned or Drowned.

Baltimore, June 14.—The greatest fire since the conflagration of 1904, involving a property loss of about $1,000,000 and the sacrifice of two lives, occurred here early yesterday.

For a time the entire harbor front was threatened on the north side, and flames being with difficulty kept within the confines of the wharf of the Merchants' and Miners' Transportation and on the south side a stubborn battle was fought to prevent the fire from spreading from the steamship Essex and six barges, which were burned.

The fire started at 1.30 o'clock, but at 5 o'clock was out. The Essex was then but a shell. Two of her crew are missing, and it is believed that they were burned to death or jumped overboard and were drowned.

Packing House Damaged.

On the south side of the harbor the packing house of Moore & Brady Co. was damaged, the steamer Minnie Wheeler of the Baltimore, Chesapeake and Atlantic Steamboat Co., and a cotton shed of the Merchants' and Miners' Transportation Co., were partially destroyed. They caught fire from the barges and the Essex when they floated across the harbor after being cut loose from their moorings.

The steamer Essex was half unloaded. She was lying alongside of the south end of the wharf, and before word could be passed she caught fire and was towed out into the harbor, burning fiercely.

Six Barges Burn.

Six scows and barges that were also lying alongside of the wharf were ignited at once and were soon completely destroyed. A number of them were towed out into midstream so as to prevent them from setting fire to adjoining property.

The barges and scows were loaded with cotton and resin and the flames blazed fiercely, the heat from them being intense.

It is estimated that the total loss will be $1,000,000.

The fire originated in a district surrounded, except on the water side, by extensive lumber yards, but the direction of the wind saved these from destruction.

Five Lives Lost in the Fire.

Later—The dead bodies of Atkinson and Costello have been recovered from the wreck of the steamer Essex, as was also the body of Manuel Odello, fireman, whose head was completely burned off his body. Two other men who have not yet been accounted for, are supposed to have lost their lives by being burned to death, or by drowning.

George F. Jewell Dead.

London, June 14.—After having been city auditor for 24 years, George E. Jewell passed away at 5 o'clock yesterday morning. Deceased was 70 years of age and has been ill but two days Heart failure was the cause of his death.

Will Obtain Divorce.

Paris, June 14.—The Castellanes case is proceeding uninterruptedly toward a final hearing. Negotiations are about to be closed whereby a decree of divorce will be secured without a controversy and an adjustment will also be effected with Count Boni's creditors, but no steps taken toward the abandonment of the case or a reconciliation of the count and countess.

Railway Board Meets.

Toronto, June 14.—The Provincial Railway and Municipal Commission had a meeting at the Parliament Buildings yesterday and began the work of drawing up rules for the conduct of the cases to come before it. The commission has temporary quarters in the Speaker's chambers.

Troops Save Negro.

Norfolk, Va., June 14.—The negro, William Lee, charged with criminal assault on Mrs. Robert Barnes and her cousin, Miss Francis Powell of Kingston, Md., was brought safely to Norfolk yesterday by the troops, who were hurried to Eastville, Va., yesterday.

Gomez Will Retire.

New York, June 14.—According to The World's despatch from Caracas, Venezuela, via Port of Spain, Tuesday, Gen. Gomez will retire on Independence Day, the 5th of July, and Gen. Castro will resume the Presidency at once.

One Firm Gives In.

Toronto, June 14.—The Toronto Chandelier Co. have acceded to the demands of the electrical workers, and the men will go to work to-day. This firm employs about ten men. It is said the larger firms intend to put up a fight.

Nova Scotian Drowns In West.

Regina, Sask., June 14.—A drowning occurred below the reservoir on Wascana Creek, about a mile south of the city. The victim was a young Nova Scotian, Blair Murphy, who came to Regina three or four months ago.

Township Clerk Dies.

Mildmay, June 14.—James Johnston, clerk of the Township of Carrick, and one of the most highly respected citizen of the County of Bruce, died suddenly last evening. A widow, four sons and one daughter survive him.

Daily Intelligencer.

The Intercolonial.

The Montreal Star, in the following article expresses an opinion which has long been held by The Intelligencer.

"Hon. Mr. Emmerson announces that the Intercolonial is to have a surplus this year, and that he will raise the rates on its services until it can show this happy result annually. No one realises more clearly than Mr. Emmerson, probably, that a surplus is badly needed in the political career of the Intercolonial this year. Even faithful Government journals and Parliamentarians from the West were beginning to object to the heavy and unceasing drain upon the revenues of the country caused by Intercolonial deficits, and to ask if, after all, the nation had not better abandon the apparently hopeless task of making a Government railwas self-supporting.

"It would be a most unfortunate thing for Canada in many ways if the Intercolonial were to be given up by the Government as a hopeless failure It would paralyze for a generation any courageous feeling in our people that they might, under a certain amount of provocation, declare their independence of railway magnates and set up in the transportation business themselves. It would, in a word, cast the country at the feet of the railway interests.

"What such an abandonment would mean for the Maritime Provinces, it would be difficult to say. Much would depend upon the hands into which the line of rails would fall They might be simply held out of use in order to build up another line of rails; or they might be run at a burdensome rate. Certainly it will pay no section of the community so well as the Maritime Provinces to turn the Intercolonial from a burden into a staff, and to finally convince the country that its Government ownership should be continued. To reach this desirable result, the Maritime Province people — politicians as well as patrons of the road —can well afford to co-operate with any Minister in a fair adjustment of the rates in order to make the traffic bear its cost.

"Whether Mr. Emmerson will have the courage to carry out his programme, remains to be seen. He may be merely endeavoring to "jolly' the Western members into passing general estimates on capital account. But certainly some Minister must have the pluck to take up and drive through just this policy if the road is to be saved to the sort of Government control which now exists. Still, should this fail and should no Minister arise with sufficient strength and backbone to make the line a commercial success, the road need not even yet be sold under the hammer. There is always the experiment of an independent Commission to try. The Ontario Government is making its "New Ontario" line pay under a Commission; and there is no reason why the same system might not be applied to the Intercolonial. Then we should have Government ownership and permanent competition with private railway lines assured; and, coupled with this, we would have something very like private company operation of the Government road. A brisk, well-equipped and well-supported independent Commission might easily succeed where Ministers — hampered by "political exigencies" — had failed."

Congratulations, your Worship.

Up to the hour of going to press the Topics man hadn't received any wedding cake, but we cheerfully join in the chorus of good wishes for the health and happiness of Mayor Sulman and the charming and estimable lady who to-day became his bride.

Here's your good health, your Worship, and may the skin of a gooseberry make a nightcap for all your enemies.

If some of the people who own autos in this vicinity want a little excitement, let them tackle some of those elevated crossings in West Belleville.

Really, if some of the streets are not patched a bit soon, cyclists would be justified in asking the Council for permission to ride on the sidewalks. (Some of 'em don't need permission, but that's another story.)

It might fairly be asked, what harm would cyclists do if they rode on the walks of streets which might be specified by the Council, provided they followed the rule laid down in many other places, namely, dismount before getting within ten feet of a pedestrian? It would undoubtedly be a great convenience to many people, but the privilege, no doubt, would be abused by the reckless and thoughtless, as all such privileges generally are. However, if any of the aldermen rode wheels on some of the outlying residential streets of this city, they would cast longing eyes on the walks, sure.

The canned meat scandal, says a contemporary, is in everybody's mouth. But the canned meat isn't.

What's the matter with the June brides? They seem to have made an awful splash at first and then backed off the stage, But perhaps they didn't like to be married yesterday, the 13th.

Wasn't it nice of that Salvation Army band to come down here and play on the day of the Mayor's wedding. The Army people have quite a warm spot in their hearts for His Worship since he presided at one of their meetings in the City Hall one time. He'd have beaten the big drum if they had asked him to.

Didn't it make you rather proud of the boys when you saw the Tommies out last night? Strictly all right, weren't they? And to think of a fine regiment like the Fifteenth having no armory for these many years. Hon. Doc Borden and Mr Jerry Hurley should be jolly well ashamed of themselves!

The Hamilton Spectator is out in favor of Sunday funerals. It says they entail little extra work on clergymen, who will probably at most get no more than five or six each per year, whereas the prohibition of Sunday funerals deprives workingmen, who must labor for those dependent on them, of the opportunity of paying the last tribute of respect to the memory of those they respect and honor. There is a good deal in that argument, too, but the Spectator advances another: It says the majority of people do not go to church, and Sunday funerals sometimes take men there who would not otherwise darken a church door.

The uncivil and close-mouthed officer is not always the best detective The Hamilton Spectator says: "The late Detective Murray was the reporter's friend. He always had a story for the press. And, by-the-way, he was quite as successful as a detective as those of his brethren who look wise; but will say nothing."

"I cannot say good-night, my dear;
It grieves me so to part."
And there he stood and held her hand

"I cannot say good-night," he sighed,
"And tear myself from you."
Just then her father's voice rang out;
"Say good morning, then. Skidoo!"

Don't lick your postage stamps any more. But you probably won't, after reading the following from the London Lancet: "Struck with the brilliancy of the yellow coloring used in a threepenny postage stamp, we were somewhat startled to find on analysis that this coloring was due to a poisonous salt, chromate of lead (chrome yellow). Nor is the amount negligible. Each threepenny stamp weighs rather more than half a grain, and the quantity of chromate of lead present was found to be 2.53 per cent. According to an analysis, therefore, of the threepenny postage stamp a fatal dose (one-fifth of a grain) of enromate of lead would be contained in fourteen stamps." Other stamps, besides the yellow kind, may contain poison. Nuff sed.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

EXPLOSION ON AN AMERICAN STEAMER AT LIVERPOOL— SIX KILLED, FORTY INJURED — FOUL PLAY SUSPECTED.

Liverpool, June 14.—(Special)—The American line steamer Haverford, from Philadelphia, docked here this morning. While stevedores were unfastening the hatches at 8 o'clock for the purpose of discharging the cargo an explosion occurred, followed by fire in the hold.

The men were thrown in all directions.

One was blown to atoms, five others were killed and forty injured.

It is believed the explosion is due to spontaneous combustion, but as the explosion force was directed downward some persons suspect foul play.

Pretty Wedding on Wednesday Afternoon

The marriage of Miss Lillian M. Stewart, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Ogilvie Stewart, Coleman St., to Robert J. Anderson, of Turriff, took place on Wednesday afternoon at the residence of the bride, in the presence of a number of immediate friends and relatives, Rev. A. C. Maybee officiating. The bride was gowned in a dress of golden brown raw silk, trimmed with white silk and silk embroidery, with hat to match. The bridesmaid, Miss Lena Gowsell, of Foxboro, wore a grey voile dress trimmed with white lace. Mr. Daniel Monroe, of Turriff, did the honors of best man. The bride received a number of costly and useful presents. The happy couple left on the train for their future home in Turriff, amid showers of rice and the best wishes of a host of friends for a happy future.

The Temple Band Played Fine Music.

The Temple Band, a Salvation Army organization, gave a brief concert on Front street during the noon hour to-day. There were the customary Salvation Army exercises, and the Band played two selections, which showed its members to be sterling musicians. A concert was given on Victoria park this afternoon.

Legault Wanted Bread, So Broke a Window.

A young man named Alfred Legault, last night, between the hours of 10 and 11 o'clock, effected an entrance to Mr. J. Wallace's bakeshop on Front street, by breaking a pane of glass. He was caught in the act and locked up. This morning he appeared before the Magistrate and pleaded guilty to the offence. He was remanded until Saturday. The young man in question is not considered mentally strong, and when asked why he did the act said he wanted bread as he was hungry. Legault is a resident of the city.

SAFETY.

Never in all the history of transportation has travel been safer than it is to-day. Seated in perfect comfort in any of the mile-a-minute trains of the Lake Shore Railway you are in less danger by far than was your grandfather in the lumbering six-mile-an-hour stage of a half or three-quarters of a century ago. Trains over this line are protected and guarded in a way that is but little short of marvellous. Every device that skill or money can provide is used without regard to the expense and in spite of the high speed—the fastest in the world—you are as safe here as in your own home. Combined with safety and high speed are luxurious comfort and punctuality, all combined to make a service unequaled the world over. See that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief Ass't G. P. A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. SOME RECORD FEES

ONE WOMAN RECEIVED A BILL FOR $20,000 FOR VISITS FROM NOTED PARIS SPECIALIST.

London, June 13.—Prof. Bergmann, the German specialist, has been summoned to Constantinople to the Sultan's daughter, who is suffering from appendicitis. This is one more illustration of the desperate and costly measures adopted in the case of serious illness.

In England, doctors rarely make exorbitant charges for going any long distance to see their patients. Five dollars a mile is supposed to be a fair average charge, with an ordinary fee at the end of it, and several well-known surgeons are content to visit cases one hundred miles away, on a line with reasonably fast and regular trains for $200 and their ordinary fee.

It is quite possible to combine several cases in a district. Sir Frederick Treves used to send cases to Westgate, and pay an occasional combined visit to them, and at places like Eastbourne and Torquay, every consulting physician has several patients who welcome a visit.

Specialists of world-wide fame, like Porf. Pagenstecker, the German oculist, lose such large sums by two days absence that they must perforce charge more. Dr. Pagenstecker has more than once received a fee of $4,000 for coming to England.

French surgeons dislike leaving Paris, and charge exorbitantly for doing so. A famous living surgeon recently charged $4000 for going from Paris to Biarritz (a ten hours' journey), to perform a long, but simple, operation; and a well known Paris ladies' doctor refused an offer of the same fee to go to Nice. An American woman who became suddenly ill at Cherbourg, and was visited twice a week for a month by a Paris surgeon, was horrified to receive a bill for $20,000.

On one occasion, when the late Cecil Rhodes was ill in South Africa, an English doctor "treated" him by cable, every symptom and change being carefully telegraphed to London, and instructions sent back.

LITTLE POCKET PHYSICIAN.

HYOMEI INHALER THAT NEVER FAILS TO CURE CATARRH.

Thousands who have been cured by Hyomei, call the inhaler that comes with every outfit "The little pocket physician," as it is so small that it can be carried in the pocket or purse

Prior to the discovery of Hyomei, statistics showed that at least 97 out of every 100 persons in this state were suffering from catarrh in some form. The remarkable results following the use of Hyomei are shown by the smaller percentage to-day of people suffering from catarrh.

A complete Hyomei outfit consists of "the little pocket physician," a medicine dropper, and a bottle of Hyomei, and costs only $1, while additional bottles of Hyomei can be procured for 50 cents, making it the most economical, as well as the most reliable treatment for the cure of catarrh.

If you cannot obtain Hyomei of your dealer, it will be forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Write to-day for consultation blank that will entitle you to services of our medical department without charge. The R. T. Booth Company, Hyomei Building, Ithaca, N. Y.

Remarkable Growth of British Metropolis.

London, June 13.—In laying a corner stone at Tottenham, the Bishop of London in an address gave to the students of Marlborough College a remarkable picture of the growth of London. Among other things he said "Can you imagine, anything which lies upon me more, day and night, then what to do with those enormous populations, which, like great nations, are springing up all over London? Tottenham was only a little village not so long ago, and Edmonton another. Besides, Willesden is growing by leaps and bounds, and Southall is increasing from a village into a great town. One day I visit a village, and upon my next visit to the place a year or two afterwards I find it engulfed by houses. As there are no ancient endowments to provide for the 40,000 people who every year come into my diocese, you can imagine how grateful I am to Marlborough College, not only as an old Marlburian, but as bishop of the diocese, for coming down here and building up such a happy, loving church home as you have in this district."

CHILD'S PLUCK SAVED A LIFE

TEN-YEAR-OLD GIRL RESCUES SEVEN - YEAR - OLD COMPANION AFTER A DESPERATE STRUGGLE.

London, Ont., June 13. — Another drowning accident was narrowly averted to-night by a magnificent act of bravery on the part of 10-year-old Violet Wilson, who lives near the Meadow Lily Mills, on the north branch of the Thames. For sheer pluck the deed that snatched little Louisa Harris, 7-year-old daughter of G. G. Harris, from a watery grave has never been equalled here. With other children, Louisa was playing teeter-totter on the river bank, when she fell off the board into the mill race and was swept away by the swift current. To dash into a raging torrent, such as the Meadow Lily Mill race is after being swollen by the recent heavy rains, is an act which might make many a strong man hesitate but Violet Wilson, who happened to be passing, without an instant's indecision uttered a cry of "Lou shan't drown if I can help it," plunged into the current, and, half-drowned herself, succeeded in bringing the other child to shore.

Both were carried far down the stream before this was accomplished, however, and it was fully an hour before little Louisa regained consciousness.

Forty-Two Poisons In Every Dinner.

Chicago, June 13. — Do you know that you eat forty-two poisons at every dinner on the average?

Harry B. Walmsley, food expert of Kansas City, and the man behind the Pure Food bill in the last session of the Legislature, declares such to be the case.

Every restaurant bill of fare bears on its face the proof of food adulterations, he says.

Here are the various foods and the way they are poisoned, according to this expert:

Butter—Covered with coal tar dyes.

Meat—You know all about the meat.

Lard—Used in frying meat—Made from diseased hogs.

Catsup—Full of salicylic acid, colored with coal tar dyes.

Bread—Full of alum.

Coffee—Full of copper salts.

Tea—Full of copper salts.

Pepper—Always impure; full of cocoanut shells, sawdust and clay.

Vegetables—All impregnated with various coal tar dyes.

Rosy apples—Made rosy with coal tar dyes.

New potatoes—Freshened up from old potatoes with alum water, after being scraped.

"Half of the deaths in the United States are the result of impure foods," Mr. Walmsley declared warmly. "It is practically impossible to get pure food in this country."

Synod of Ontario

SHRINKAGE IN MEMBERSHIP — THE COWSHED INCIDENT, — OIL ON TROUBLED WATERS.

Kingston, June 13. — At the Ontario Synod meeting to-day a tempest over the use of the chancel of All Saints' Church as a cow-shed came to a happy ending. Explanations were made by Bishop Mills and Rev. Mr. Forneri, rector of St. Luke's, the congregation was censured, and E. J. B. Pense, M.P.P., on behalf of the Diocesan Executive Committee, poured oil upon the troubled waters, and the discussion ended with everybody smiling. The chancel has been reclaimed, taken apart and put away for future constructions.

Archdeacon MacMorine reported upon the state of the Church in the diocese. There had been a shrinkage in membership, but the archdeacon stated that in view of the exodus to the west it was a wonder that the Church of England held its own as it did. Money contributions had keenly increased.

Mr. Edward J. B. Pense, M. P. P., presented Canon Starr, acting rector of St George's Cathedral, with a festival stole of satin damask heavily embroidered, with a monogram of gold and opal set in gold.

BAY OF QUINTE W.M.S. IN SESSION

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY DELEGATES GATHER AT PORT HOPE — SUBSTANTIAL GROWTH SHOWN.

Port Hope, June 13. — The thirteenth annual convention of the Bay of Quinte branch of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church opened here yesterday, with about one hundred and sixty delegates in attendance. The President, Mrs. Platt, and other officers of the society occupied seats on the platform, and after the opening speeches had been concluded the business session commenced and the usual preliminary committees were appointed. Rev. G. W. Henderson, pastor of the church, presided at the evening session and extended a formal welcome to the visitors, which was responded to by Mrs. Winterbourne, of Trenton. The annual address of the President was then read, after which followed the Treasurer's financial statement and the Corresponding Secretary's report, both of which showed substantial and encouraging financial and numerical growth.

Mrs. Nicholson, of Belleville, was appointed press reporter, with Mrs. Alf. Vermilyea, also of Belleville, as assistant.

WILL MEET IN BOWMANVILLE.

NEXT SESSION OF BAY OF QUINTE CONFERENCE TO BE HELD THERE.

The next session of the Bay of Quinte Conference will be held in Bowmanville in June, 1907.

The General Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada, which meets every four years, will assemble in Montreal in St. James' church on September 12th next.

Rev. J. P. Wilson and Rev. Geo. Brown, of this city, have been chosen as delegates from the Bay of Quinte Conference. Out of 132 ministers in the Bay of Quinte Conference only sixteen are elected.

Mutes Going Home.

Toronto, June 13.— This morning several parties of pupils from the Institution for Deaf Mutes, at Belleville, passed through to their various homes, east and north, in charge of several of the teachers. The pupils number about two hundred and thirty, and of these one carful left early this morning, in charge of Mr. Campbell, for Windsor. Mr. Coleman had the care of about fifty bound for Guelph, Stratford and Sarnia, and Mr. Stewart, editor of the little paper, "The Canadian Mute," took a small party in the direction of Palmerston and Owen Sound. Mr. Denys, another teacher, left Belleville to-day with a party for Ottawa. In the meantime Superintendent Mathison is to-day at the King Edward Hotel, awaiting reports from each party as to the safe arrival of all the charges.

CHANGE IN TIME ON NEW YORK CENTRAL, SUNDAY, JUNE 17.

The summer train schedule of the New York Central will take effect Sunday, June 17th, and on that date popular low rate excursions to the various resorts will be resumed. Most of the present trains will be continued, though in some cases the time may be slightly changed, and many new trains will be added. Complete information may be obtained at New York Central Ticket Offices.

FORTY YEARS AGO.

The Ill-Fated Fenian Raid Recalled—U. S. Chief Sufferer.

About 2 o'clock in the morning of June 1, 1866, a band of 1,500 Fenians, under Gen. O'Neill, crossed the Niagara River from Black Rock and camped at Fort Erie. The reeve of the village was called on to provide the army with provisions, and the refreshments were produced after a hasty conclave of the local authorities. A detachment of the band was sent to cut wires and destroy bridges along the Buffalo and Lake Huron Railway (now the Grand Trunk), and the main body took up a position at Frenchman's Creek. Here O'Neill rested for a day, awaiting reinforcements, but in their absence he moved along to Ridgeway, his force having melted away until only about 700 remained. The Fenians held a strong, concealed position, into which Col. Booker's troops blundered, unsuspecting the presence of the enemy. There was an interchange of fire, after which the Canadian force retired, the ammunition of the Queen's Own being exhausted. The Fenians, however, were outflanked and forced out of their position.

Blunders and Accidents.

To describe in detail the succession of blunders and accidents that accompanied subsequent fighting and the final retreat of O'Neill across the border would occupy a full column, and give satisfaction to no one, says The Mail and Empire. Upon Capt. Akers, R. E., most of the blame has descended, for on two occasions his failure to properly deliver his superior's orders caused disaster. A junction of two Canadian forces that would have swept the Fenians from the field was defeated through this officer's neglect. The campaign, if a raid of a day might be so called, was too short and the alarm too sudden to permit of initial blunders being atoned for; but the invaders were chased out of the country, at the cost of a few lives on either side. Canada received only indirect compensation for the Fenian outrage, in the shape of a guarantee of her Intercolonial loan, for at the request of England this country did not press its claims on the United States. Had this been done they would have been allowed, and a precedent established which would have cost Britain several extra million pounds in the matter of the Alabama claims. So that, after all, the United States was the chief sufferer financially through the madness of John O'Neill.

Very few people lose their minds because their neighbors lose their money.

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness,' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how. The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

McClary's Sunshine Furnace

burns coal, coke or wood equally well, and grates for both are always supplied.

In mild weather, when a steady fire is not needed, the chilliness can be taken off a house with a wood fire—the large double feed doors will admit a heavy, rough chunk.

The "Sunshine" is a glowing opposition to cold winter days, and will produce more comfort from the same amount of fuel than any other furnace.

You should examine this heater before buying any other.

TIMELY TOPICS.

UNCLE HIRAM ON HIGHER CRITICISM.

Me and Martha heard the lecture,
At the church the other day,
An' I'd really like to tell you
What the preacher had to say;
For he talked in measured rhythm
On the "higher criticism,"
An' he said old-fashioned doctrines
Now have mostly passed away.

An' he said the light o' science
Had full many comments won,
Since the higher criticism
Had its noble work begun.
Jest as if the light o' man
Could illuminate God's plan;
Jest as if a tallow candle
Could illuminate the sun.

Me an' Martha sat an' listened,
But we didn't understand
What this high-toned city preacher
Tried to figure out so grand;
It was all too deep for me.
For I really could not see
How it helped us on our journey
To the bright celestial land.

Why this higher criticism?
Why this theorizing craze?
Prying into plans eternal,
Doubting God's mysterious ways,
When the Bible reads so clearly?
Here's a sample I love dearly,
An' it's got enough o' gospel
For the balance o' my days:

"Come, ye weak an' heavy laden,
Come, an' I will give thee rest:
Drop the load of sin and sorrow,
Lay thy head upon My breast."
Why don't every gospel preacher
Try to follow the Great Teacher,
Both in walk and conversation,
If they want their labors blest?

I suppose the world's advancing
At a very rapid rate,
An' my poor old-fashioned notions
May be sadly out o' date;
But I'll give this word o' warning:
On the resurrection morning
Higher criticism lectures
Won't unlock the golden gate.

A reminder that Independence Day is not so far off, says a Yankee paper, is contained in the arrival at New York of the British steamship Yeddo, with one hundred million firecrackers, from a quarter of an inch in diameter. Also there were stored away under the hatches 20,000,000 bombs, thousands upon thousands of pin wheels, Roman candles, "nigger chasers," golden fountains and every variety of celebration explosives that the slant-eyed Celestials make in enormous quantities for American consumption around the Fourth of July.

Here is an extract from Mr. Upton Sinclair's novel, "The Jungle," which has stirred up such a fuss in connection with the Chicago canned meat trade. It will give some idea of the plain language used in the book:

"They, the Lithuanian family, had always been accustomed to eat a great deal of smoked sausage, and how could they know that what they bought in America was not the same—that its color was made by chemicals, and its smoky flavor by more chemicals, and that it was full of "potato-flour" besides?" Potato-flour is the waste of potato after the starch and alcohol have been extracted; and it has no more food value than so much wood, and as its use as a food-adulterant is a penal offence in Europe thousands of tons of it are shipped to the United States every year.

"One of the relatives had mysteriously disappeared one Saturday night. On enquiry it was said by the "Boss" that he had got his week's money and left there. This was the usual explanation in cases of disappearance. When, for instance, a man had slipped into one of the rendering tanks and had been made into 'pure leaf lard' and 'peerless fertilizer,' there was no use letting the fact out and making his family unhappy."

SALMON WHICH LEAP.

New Brunswick's Fishery Commissioner Tells of Seeing Them at Play.

Mr. D. G. Smith, Fishery Commissioner of New Brunswick, tells an interesting story of how he obtained the photograph of the "leaping salmon" exhibited in the window of the Intercolonial Railway office, Toronto, Ont. Many people who had never heard of leaping salmon doubted the genuineness of this product of the photographic art.

After remarking that his picture had obtained prizes in magazines, Mr. Smith says:

"As the photograph is exactly what it purports to be, and has been favorably judged by those who are competent in such matters, and as the Intercolonial Railway has added to its excellent series of exhibition bromides, it is right that the aspersion on its genuineness should be met by a statement of the circumstances under which it was taken.

"One day in early August five years ago, when visiting the Big Sevogle, a tributary of the Northwest Miramichi, I observed a large number of salmon attempting to leap over the nine feet perpendicular fall a short distance above the Square Forks. I timed the leaps and counted 33 in 45 minutes. The scene suggested a unique photograph, so the next week found me back to the spot with my old camera and plates. I made a raft of three cedar sleeper logs by battening them together with short boards nailed to their upper sides, and by means of two suitable lines leading from the up stream end, I had my assistants draw it, with myself seated on it with the camera on its tripod in front of me, as near to the fall as I dared to approach and fasten it there. The salmon were not leaping so plentifully as the week before, but I snapped nine of my sixteen plates the first afternoon, and the remaining seven the next. It was all guess work with a mechanical focus, and although I had, on developing them, but one perfect picture out of the sixteen plates, I felt that the result was worth going some forty miles to get."

Mary and Her Little Lamb.

A young woman, a blue ribbon, and a pet lamb were seen on York street, near Front, the other afternoon, says The Toronto Star. Beheld separately, the sight would have been unprecedented, though lambkins don't frolic every day on the King's highway. The three-in-one attraction, so to speak, was different. The lady's name may not have been Mary, and the lamb in the flesh boasted not the snowy fleece attributed to the lamb celebrated in poetry. Truth to tell, the lamb that almost blocked York street needed a bath. Sundry rolls on the city pavements had impaired the immaculate whiteness discovered by the poet. Still, the juvenile sheep created a sensation. Crowds gathered, and so did the police. Incidentally several dogs took an interest in the woolly visitor. The lamb was timid, but its owner had a parasol, and when she struck out a canine yelped. So far as the people were concerned the lamb was unconcerned. It was not alarmed even when a boy stole up, pocket knife in hand, to cut the tether. The urchin was caught in the act, however, and narrowly escaped a hearty cuff on the ear.

"Mary and her lamb" proceeded down Front and up Simcoe.

"They are going to school," a newsboy remarked.

"What are you giving us?" scoffed another. "School's out."

If little lambs are like little boys, this little lamb was not on its way to school. Its gambols implied immunity from care, but if a butcher who passed in his rig had had his way the lamb's spirits would have slumped.

"That's a plump little animal," he observed. "What'll you take for it?"

The butcher was told that he was a brute. He grinned, so the lady was right.

NOVA SCOTIA NOMINATIONS.

Two Liberals Elected by Acclamation, Premier Being One of Them.

Halifax, N. S., June 14.—Yesterday was nomination day in Nova Scotia for the general election, to be held June 20.

Straight party candidates were nominated in fifteen out of the eighteen counties.

In two counties—Victoria and Antigonish—Liberals were elected by acclamation.

In King's County, Conservatives are supporting two Union Reform candidates, who are opposing two straight Liberals.

Premier Murray, in Victoria, was one of the candidates elected by acclamation. In 1901, Antigonish and Yarmouth returned Liberals by acclamation.

Very little interest is being taken throughout the province.

Was in Thin Red Line.

Toronto, June 14.—The last man of the "thin red line" of the Crimea, in the person of Charles Ellingsworth, an Army and Navy Veteran, was successfully operated upon at the General Hospital for appendicitis yesterday morning, and his recovery is hoped for, despite his advanced age of 72 years. Mr. Ellingsworth also served in the Indian Mutiny.

Two Children Drown.

Barrie, June 14.—A double drowning accident occurred near Dalston yesterday afternoon, when John and George Benham, aged 8 and 10, sons of Arthur Benham, lost their lives. They went bathing in a creek on their way home from school, got beyond their depth and died.

Jubilant Over Crop Prospects.

Winnipeg, June 14.—Manitoba people are jubilant over the continued good crop reports from the country. In reports received yesterday there is perfect unanimity regarding the condition of the growing grain. The wheat is about a foot high on the average.

"Doc" Connors Suicides.

Windsor, June 14.—The body of "Doc" Connors, one of the best-known colored men in Windsor, was found Tuesday evening in the river. He had evidently carried out a threat to end his life because of poverty and suffering from rheumatism.

Capt. Pelletier Drowned.

Quebec, June 14.—Capt. J. A. Pelletier, a well-known insurance agent of Quebec, was drowned near Isle Aux Dies, Montmagny, being knocked off a schooner by a boom.

Degree For Westinghouse.

Berlin, June 14.—The Technical University has conferred on George Westinghouse, the American inventor, the degree of doctor of engineering.

ROMAN MILLIONAIRES.

The Phenomenon of Mammoth Fortunes Not a New Thing.

While it is not a very tangible consolation to those of us who belong to the less favored class commercially, there is at least a sort of historic comfort in knowing that the phenomenon of mammoth fortunes is not a new thing.

A magazine writer goes back to ancient Rome, when there were no railroads or trusts or corporations, and gives some figures on the individual fortunes of that day which might look attractive even to some of our modern plutocrats.

Seneca, the philosopher and author, was worth $17,500,000; Lentulus, the augur, $16,600,000; Crassus, the politician who formed with Caesar and Pompey the first triumvirate, had a landed estate of more than $8,000,000; the emperor Tiberius left a fortune of $118,000,000, which the depraved Caligula got rid of in less than a year. A dozen others had possessions that ran into the millions.

It is true that these Romans did not "make" these fortunes in what we would call regular commercial operations. But they got the money, and they held on to it, which is about all that can safely be said of possessions that run into seven figures in any age or country.

And, speaking of campaign contributions and so forth, Julius Caesar once presented the consul Paulus with $200,000 merely as a token of esteem and coupled with the hope that Paulus would do the right thing in a certain political matter that was pending. The argument was effective with Paulus, and neither he nor Caesar suffered any in popularity.

There are many things under the sun that are not new.

NAILED TO THE CROSS.

The Two Thieves That Were Crucified With the Saviour.

In nine out of ten pictures of the crucifixion where Christ's two companions in death are represented they are pictured as having been fastened to the cross with thongs or cords. The question naturally arises, Were the thieves in reality bound to their different instruments of torture while the blessed Saviour was nailed to his? And, if so, which mode of death was considered the more ignominious—binding or nailing? The remoteness of the event and the fact that in this case historical truth may have been sacrificed to pictorial effect make the above questions hard ones to answer. The early writers almost invariably refer to the thieves as having been nailed to the cross, while the early picture makers adhered to the general rule of representing them as having been tied or bound to their separate crosses.

If we are to give any credence to the story of the holy Empress Helen and her reputed discovery of the three crosses in the year 328 A. D., the two thieves were nailed to their crosses in a manner similar to that observed in the crucifixion of the Saviour. This conclusion has been settled upon for this reason: When the three crosses were disinterred from the mound in which tradition said they had been buried, that upon which Christ had suffered was only distinguished from the other two by the miracles it performed. This would certainly suffice to prove that all three of the instruments of torture bore similar nail marks and that the tradition of Christ being the only one nailed was not known at that time.

"Well," answered the prophet cheerfly, "I can always get the kind of weather all right, but I haven't quite succeeded in hitting the dates exactly."

UNDER WAITING ORDERS

By JAMES GHEE

Copyright, 1903, by E. W. Sargent

Jack Randolph sat on the piazza and read over the telegram again. Already the paper was cracking on the creases from frequent foldings and unfoldings. Randolph could have read it from memory. "Go to Old Point Comfort," it read, "and wait orders."

He had been waiting orders for four days now, and repeated telegrams to the office had simply brought forth repetitions of those instructions.

Randolph was sick of it all. Ever since he had refused point blank to consider the question of a marriage to some girl his father had picked out for him he had been exiled to the road as special salesman and had been jumped from east to west on the most absurd propositions.

There might be a man coming to Old Point who wanted to buy a suspension bridge, but Randolph could not see why he had not been sent to the office of the firm instead of being shipped to Old Point. Not that he objected to a week at the famous resort with nothing to do, but the uncertainty of it all was irritating. He decided to send another telegram and headed for the telegraph office.

He never got there, for just as he swung around a corner of the piazza the prettiest girl he had ever seen ran into him as she dashed along the piazza. By the time mutual apologies were concluded Jack had forgotten all about the telegram and had come to the conclusion that he was satisfied to stay at the Point as long as the office decided he was needed there.

Instead of going into the office he volunteered his services as guide to Marjorie Carson, who had arrived the night before, and it was well along in the afternoon before he even thought of the despised telegram.

He met Mrs. Carson on their return and that evening he changed his seat to their table and was installed as their guide and counselor. More than ever was he glad that he had refused to accept his father's dictum and marry some one else. Of course it would make an awful row when he wrote that he was going to marry Marjorie, but he had gained some recognition as an engineer, and it would not be hard to make his way if only Marjorie would accept him.

HE HAD THROWN AN ARM ABOUT HER.

Marjorie's frank friendliness was scarcely encouraging to his hopes, but as the days progressed he gained in her favor, and before the end of his first week he had begun to flatter himself that he was making headway.

Mrs. Carson clearly approved of him. Early in the acquaintance he had taken pains to acquaint her with his history in an impersonal sort of way that did not sound like a formal announcement, and she had smiled and replied that she had heard of his father. After that she had been much in the background, and the young people went boating and on other excursions alone.

It was well along in the third week before he had ventured to speak of love to the girl. It was as they were coming home one evening, and in saving herself from a fall as she stepped on a loose stone, she had caught at his coat sleeve. He had thrown an arm about her and had kept it there until with a rosy face she had disengaged herself.

"I can get along all right now," she said, as she stepped ahead. He laid a hand upon her shoulder.

"I hope you can't," he said simply. "I should like you to think that you always needed me."

"I don't," was the savage answer. "I don't ever need you, and I wish you would go away."

"Pardon," he said quietly. "I had no wish to be offensive."

They went along in silence, but as they parted at the foot of the piazza steps she turned toward him and held out her hand.

"I am afraid I was very rude," she said simply. "Will you forgive me?"

"If you will take back what you said," he answered pleadingly.

"I think you're horrid," she exclaimed with a sudden shift from her penitential mood. "If you were a gentleman you would not annoy me this way."

She sped up the steps before he could demand an explanation, and left behind her a much puzzled swain.

He was too tactful to reopen the question that evening, but for half the night he paced the floor after he had gone to his room and vainly sought for an explanation of her odd remark.

That she liked him was apparent. He could not see wherein he had been offensive, and yet she had spoken as if he must understand what the matter was.

He was still puzzled the next morning when they met at breakfast, but there was no opportunity for an explanation until late that evening. Just before the party broke up Jack and Marjorie were standing on the piazza. The others had moved toward the entrance and had left them alone in the corner.

"What did you mean yesterday?" he asked. "I was not conscious of giving offense."

"I should think it would bore you as much as it does me," she answered, "but I don't want to talk about it, so good night."

She sped down the piazza. He turned half irresolutely, then with a sigh he turned back and went down the other side.

That night he walked the floor again, but no solution came to him, and at last he threw himself upon the bed and slept a sleep in which Marjorie perpetually danced before him, ever eluding his grasp and yet ever entreating him. Some intangible barrier seemed to be separating them, and he had the uncomfortable feeling that if he could determine the nature of this barrier he would gain her hand.

So strong was this impression that immediately after breakfast he sought Marjorie on the piazza.

"You've been mystifying me long enough," he said abruptly. "I want to know what it all means."

"As if you didn't," she said scornfully. "I've caught you and mother laughing over it lots of times."

"I assure you that I do not know what you mean," he said.

"Just as if you were not down here by your father's orders," she scoffed. "I saw it all the moment mother said you were here."

Randolph gasped. "You don't mean to say that you are the girl father wants me to marry?" he cried.

"Why, of course," she retorted. "Just as if you didn't know."

"I didn't," he replied promptly. "The moment the pater said marriage I balked and did not even learn the name of the girl."

"Then why are you here?" she demanded. "You know it was all a prearranged plan."

For answer he pulled out the telegram. "I thought it was some one who wanted to buy a bridge," he explained. "Had I supposed otherwise I should never have come."

"Are you sorry you did?" she asked teasingly.

"Not if you say yes," he answered promptly.

"Since you are not acting under orders and just loved me"— she began. The sentence was not finished; there was no need.

Ten minutes later Mrs. Carson found them in front of the telegraph desk. Jack held a telegram in his hand. It read:

"Special business concluded. Think I shall stay on. Think I have done very well in default of more definite instructions."

Ruling Switzerland.

In Switzerland they have no idea that they are essentially idiots and must have great men and superior and divinely gifted intellects to rule them and tell them what to do about their affairs. They do not think much of "ruling" in Switzerland nor much of the idea of divinely gifted intellects. All are great men in Switzerland, and one is as great and as divinely gifted as another. To the Swiss mind the great men are those that do something in science or literature, like Agassiz or De Saussure; but they have no particular fancy to be "ruled" by anybody, however great. You will find many an intelligent Swiss that cannot tell you the name of the president of Switzerland. He knows the name of the president of the United States, always, but he does not know who is at the head of his own country. Not because the interest he takes in his political affairs is small, for it is very great; but because who may be president of Switzerland is not important. Whoever he is, he amounts to nothing, he effects nothing, he "rules" nothing. The only rulers of Switzerland are the Swiss people.—Everybody's Magazine.

Age of Birds.

The doctrine of vegeterianism appears to be slightly shaken by the result of an investigation that an English newspaper has made into the subject of the longevity of birds. With one notable exception the carrion, or meat feeding birds, are the longer lived. The exception is the swan. The average ages of some of the best known birds are given in the following: Blackbird lives 12 years, blackcap 15, canary 24, crane 24, crow 100, eagle 100, fowl, common, 10; goldfinch 15, goose 50, heron 59, lark 13, linnet 23, nightingale 18, parrot 60, partridge 15, peacock 24, pelican 50, pheasant 15, pigeon 20, raven 100, robin 12, skylark 30, sparrow hawk 40, swan 100, thrush 10 and wren 3 years.

When Boston Was Young.

A book published in 1817 informs us that the fare by steamer from New York to New London, Conn., was $7, including board. The distance is given as 140 miles and the time twenty-one hours. The same book tells us that Boston is not yet a city, "because the people fear that the power invested in corporations would be injurious to their liberties." Further on it is stated that "this town is the headquarters of federalism in politics and Unitarianism in religion."

Cupid In Town

By CONSTANCE D'ARCY MACKAY

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

It was a warm morning in midsummer. The sky was intensely blue and the air rife with the smell of dust and heat parched pavements. Fifth avenue seemed as arid as a desert. Houses were closed, their blinds drawn. Maids gossiped in areaways. Instead of the pageantry of carriages which graced the street on winter afternoons there were occasional cabs, lumbering automobiles and buses filled with tourists.

I was strolling along toward the club and devoutly wishing I was any place but in town, when suddenly I espied Honoria Langham. She had come in from a house party on Long Island, and our meeting was the merest accident. I at once suggested the little Casino in Central park as a cool and inviting place for luncheon. Honoria agreed. "Aunt Myra considers you such a safe companion," she said demurely.

"I KNOW IT'S SHEER FOLLY," SAID I, "THIS DREAM OF MINE"—

"It's one of the compensations of being ineligible," said I. For I was ineligible, there was no doubt about that. My income of a few paltry thousands barely sufficed to keep me on the social merry-go-round. And I had added indiscretion to poverty by falling in love with Honoria. Of course no one could have guessed it. Even Honoria's aunt would have scoffed the idea of my being a probable suitor. In fact the very dimness of my prospects enabled me to see more of Honoria than I otherwise could have done. I was considered perfectly safe, for Honoria's circumstances demanded that she make a brilliant match, and I was the least brilliant man of her acquaintance. It was the old, old story of the moth and the star. If the moth was foolish, so much the worse for the moth! And as for the star—Honoria and I had long since decided that love was out of the question. So, on the way to the Casino our conversation was strictly confined to platonic platitudes.

We had luncheon at one of the little tables close by an open window, through which the green reaches of the park were enticing to the eye. Sunshine dappled the leaves with the light and shadow. Squirrels frisked across the grass. The hum of the city sounded far away and indistinct. Now and then a breeze stole in, carrying with it a faint, half woodsy perfume. The mirror across from us reflected Honoria's frills and furbelows, her clear delicate profile and every turn of her graceful head. There were the clink of ice in tall, thin glasses and a gay bubble of festivity and laughter from some of the other tables. Honoria's eyes met mine.

"There are worse places than New York," I observed.

"Oh, what is so rare as a day in town," murmured Honoria.

"I bless the fate which prompted you to leave the seashore and let me have a glimpse of you," said I.

"It wasn't fate; it was dressmakers," said Honoria. She put back her veil with an adorable gesture. "Am I very much burned?" she demanded.

"Only enough to be becoming," said I.

"You're a bit brown yourself, Dick," she observed.

"People who make hay while the sun shines"— I began.

"Ah," said Honoria, "that's just what I was going to ask. Are you progressing well with the heiress?"

"Modesty forbids me to say," I answered. "How's old Croesus?"

"Doing nicely, thanks," laughed Honoria. Then her face grew grave. "Dick," she said, "do you realize that this is the last luncheon we'll have together tete-a-tete?"

"I know," said I, "that our year of camaraderie is over. And it was fun while it lasted, wasn't it, Honoria? All our little walks and talks and drives. And it's got to end because we're afraid of poverty."

"We do love luxury," sighed Honoria.

"We'd be miserable without it," I argued.

"You," went on Honoria, "must marry the heiress in order to obtain a yacht and all the other things you can't possibly get along without."

"While old Croesus can give you a house in town and several in the country, not to mention a box at the opera and gowns of Paris creation, yet when I'm steaming around Gibraltar and you're giving splendid entertainments in your brownstone front I dare say we'll look back on these times we've spent together with a good deal of amusement and some regret. Don't you think so, Honoria?"

But Honoria was engaged in spearing an olive and apparently did not hear me.

"I've often wondered," she said musingly, "how it would seem to be poor. I suppose I'd make my own hats and wear ready made tailor suits and live in a little box of an apartment."

"But even a box of an apartment can be made attractive," said I. "I know of some dingy shops on the east side where one can pick up fascinating old prints and brasses for almost nothing and furniture that is a joy to discover. There's a Tuscany lamp that's waiting to send a cheerful glow over polished wood and the backs of one's favorite books, and there are curious andirons, made solely to reflect the gleam of a small hearthstone—such a hearthstone as I have imagined you sitting by, Honoria, while the snow falls without, and"—

"Some of our friends would give us up," said Honoria hastily.

"We'd find better ones to take their places."

"Our greatest diversion," said Honoria, "would be the theater, and we could go so seldom that it would take us a long time to decide which play we really wanted to see."

"We'd enjoy it all the more," I declared. "And after it was over we'd go off together to same quaint cafe—oh, I know of places that you've never even dreamed of, Honoria—places where struggling poets and artists have carved their names on the tables and where a Hungarian violinist plays, not the catchy music of the concert halls, but things that are heartbreak and rapture and longing all in one. And the people we know will be supping at Sherry's or Delmonico's—all the wealthy, foolish people who haven't found out that life is ashes and faces but a picture gallery and talk a tinkling cymbal, where no love is. Are you listening to me, Honoria?"

"Yes," answered Honoria very low.

"I know it's sheer folly," said I, "this dream of mine. We've talked of it so often and decided that it was impossible. But now that we've come to the parting of the ways, do you think that the other things of life really matter so long as we miss the exquisite joy of being together? Ah, Honoria, I know it's madness—worse than madness—to ask it, but could you care enough to give up luxury for a poor duffer of a fellow who isn't worthy of you and loves you with his whole heart and soul?"

"But the heiress"—

"Oh, d—hang the heiress!"

"Dick!"

"I mean confound her! Honoria, for the last time, will you marry me?"

Honoria's answer was so low that I had to lean across the table to catch it.

"Honoria," I cried, "is it true—do you really mean it?"

"Don't, Dick," said Honoria. "Those people at the other table are watching us. They'll think we are engaged!"

"But so we are!" I cried exultantly. "So we are!"

The Caribou as a Swimmer.

Clad with a coat of oily wool next his skin, the caribou is covered exteriorly with a dense pelage of fine quills. Every caribou, indeed, wears a cork jacket, and when this is prime, the creature seems on the water rather than in the water. No other quadruped that I know swims as high as the caribou. Their speed afloat is so great that it takes the best of canoemen to overtake a vigorous buck. A good paddler is supposed to cover about six miles an hour, so the caribou probably goes five. There are many kinds of woodland and rough country over which the caribou cannot travel so fast as this. What wonder, then, that they are so ready to take to the water as soon as they find it in their course! Mr. Munn assured me that several times he saw caribou swim a broad bay that was in their line, though a trifling deflection would have given them easy walking along the shore to the same point and with but little increase of distance.—Ernest Thompson Seton in Scribner's.

The Terrible Cockatrice.

The explanation of the origin of that remarkable organism, the cockatrice, leaves nothing to be desired as regards accuracy of detail. We are told that "when the cock is past seven years old an egg grows within him, whereat he greatly wonders." We can well imagine the dismay of any well conducted masculine bird of that age on finding himself in such a compromising predicament, but how did he communicate his feelings to the historian? That the embryonic cockatrice had some mysterious power of self advertisement is evident, for we hear further that "a toad privily watches him and examines the nest every day to see if the egg be yet laid. When the toad finds the egg he rejoices much and at length hatches it, bringing forth an animal with the head, neck and breast of a cock and from thence downward the body of a serpent."—Pall Mall Gazette.

How Death Feels.

In a sermon at St. Pancras parish church, the bishop of London gave an indication of his views as to what the sensation of death would be like. He said: "At an operation, when you receive whatever it is that makes you for the time being insensible, you seem to be carried for the moment out of the body. You are, in fact, out of the body. The body is for the time dead. Your spirit, your mind, is perfectly active. I dare say it is the experience of many others that you seem to be swept swiftly under the stars toward your God. When you are out of the body, or seem to be, if only for a few moments, you realize what death will be."—London Telegraph.

UP IN THE NORTHLAND

FIRST SETTLER AT THE MOUTH OF THE WABI RIVER.

Fifteen Years' Progress — No Doubt About Fruit-Growing There — The Reward of the Pioneer—Man With a Long Bow Tells a Most Absurd and Foolish Story—New Liskeard Growing by Leaps and Bounds.

Fifteen years ago this summer William Murray landed at the head of Lake Temiskaming, cleared a plot of ground at the mouth of Wabi River, and built his cabin where he could see the beautiful lake and hear its waters lapping the low shore. He is a Scotchman, with the national nomadic spirit in his veins—the people who have been pioneers in every land. He had a love of the romantic, and did not dread the loneliness of his life in the wilds of the lone northland. At that time he had no idea of seeing a town of 3,000 grow up around him, but he did see a wide, prairie-like expanse of country heavily timbered and extending far back.

A Site to Delight.

The soil was rich looking and fertile, and promised ample returns for labor spent upon it. But it was the location which inspired the romantic Scot to settle there—it was a site to delight the heart of any man with a vestige of idealism in his make-up. Stretching away south was the beautiful expanse of water—the blue of the lake reflecting back the blue of the sky, past his cabin door the Wabi flowed steady and strong—the great highway for trapper and explorer.

The Pioneer's Reward.

Mr. Murray has watched the place grow year by year, although it is only six years since the town began. He is very optimistic, and declares that the town has a good future ahead of it. All the land for 25 miles back is taken up and farms are being cleared and homes built where a few years ago there was not a white man.

Another pioneer, Mr. Hawksworth, has been in 12 years, and is equally optimistic. Most of his farm has been sold for town lots, and it will be only a short time until his entire farm disappears in that way. Close beside his comfortable, neat home, stands a teepee—the bark structure which sheltered him the first winter he spent in the country.

It was somewhat of a surprise to the writer (J. C. Ross in The Globe) to see his garden—apple and plum trees in bloom, black raspberry and strawberry bushes thriving and promising a full crop, rhubarb plants over a foot high and many old-fashioned garden flowers in full bloom—and all this 350 miles north of Toronto.

Man With Long Bow.

The sight of these fruits and flowers reminds one of the absurd write-up in The Cobalt Free Press of a week ago. Some man who had been reading tales of Arctic exploration and felt the chill of the atmosphere as he read, wrote a most absurd letter about the clay region north of New Liskeard. He declared that all it was fit for was "the growing of Jack pine and snowbanks." He also stated that "at the time of writing—May 11th— there was three feet of snow on the ground." As a matter of fact, I was north to the end of steel on May 10 and 11 and never saw a trace or vestige of snow. It seems almost too absurd for comment, but such yarns should not pass by unnoticed. It would be better for such men to get away from their easy chairs and grate fires, and if they must write articles let them look over the land and see for themselves the actual conditions.

New Liskeard.

New Liskeard is growing very rapidly. The people attribute it to a number of causes—the mining boom ten miles away, the building of the road north and to the settlement of the farming lands around the town. At any rate, it is growing and its sawmills are busily turning logs into lumber, and her carpenters are working overtime to transform the lumber into homes.

There are two newspapers in New Liskeard, and both are doing good effective work in behalf of the town and district. The older and larger paper, The Herald, began its career two years ago and has now about 1,000 subscribers. They are installing a new fast press, and, with the completion of this act, will have the most up-to-date plant north of Toronto. Mr. Roebuck, the editor and proprietor, is an all-round handy newspaperman.

The New Liskeard Speaker, under the guidance of Mr. Stevenson, began its career a few months ago and is already a healthy, vigorous journal. Both the papers are independent in politics, with perhaps a shade of preference for the Conservative faith.

The Mayor of the town, Mr. McKelvie, is one of its progressive business men, and he is most optimistic of the town's future, declaring that it will rival and surpass many of the live towns of old Ontario.

Bliss Carman, Poet.

Eastern Canada produced a clever and interesting personage in Bliss Carman, journalist. Mr. Carman was born at Fredericton, New Brunswick, April 15, 1861. He was educated at the Collegiate Institute and University of New Brunswick, capturing his degree in 1881. A post-graduate course was then taken at Harvard and the University of Edinburgh. He was office editor of The Independent, New York, 1890-92. Mr. Carman has the appearance of the poet, and, whether deliberately or by predisposition, has the appearance generally associated with the poet—a clearly outlined profile accenuated by somewhat long hair brushed backward by the fingers, perhaps in compliance with the eccentricity of genius. His publications include "Low Tide on Grand Pre," "Behind the Arras," "A Seamark," "Ballads of Lost Haven," "Songs From Vagabondia (in collaboration with Richard Hovey), "By the Aurelian Wall," "A Winter Holiday Ode for the Coronation," "Pipes of Pan," and others. Like several other Canadians, who did not find their literary efforts rewarded at home, Mr. Carman is now a resident of New York.

Mr. Northrup's Speech

ON THE NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. A. K. Maclean. I am not talking about the principle, I am talking about what took place; and I say the hon. gentleman cannot give any evidence that will substantiate his statement.

Mr. Northrup. I refer the hon. gentleman to the files, and I tell him that he will find in the files the names of even the vessels in which these people came out, and the complaints that they were being sent to Winnipeg when they were routed to the United States. Now I take it for granted that the officials of this Government have some ideas of their duties, some idea as to what they should do in the position in which they are placed. Read this series of reports, and you will see whether or not the officials at Winnipeg considered that this country was being defrauded by every immigrant that left this country. Here is a letter of the 13th of January, 1903, from Mr. Smith, commissioner:

"He has gone further into matter and finds that during the last six months of 1902 nearly 1,500 are recorded in their books as destined for United States."

There is a letter from Mr. Smith, commissioner at Winnipeg, dated the 13th of January, saying that of the number who came in 1902, nearly 2,300 souls were recorded in their books as having come to Winnipeg who were really destined and had gone to the United States.

He explains the reason why. He explains that the Canadian Pacific Railway rate to Emerson was so much cheaper than the American rate to Pembina that the people were sent through by way of Winnipeg when they were going to Minnesota or Dakota. They were ticketed to Winnipeg, cared for by the department there; and the company were entitled under the terms of this contract to payment for them; because there is nothing in the contract about settlement in this country, the moment they reach this country they entitle the company to a bonus. That number of 1,500 went to the States during the last six months of 1902. That went on from day to day:

On the 15th of January, 1903:—

Then there is a telegram from Mr. Smart, dated January 22, from this same Mr. J. Obed Smith, saying;

"During last year records show 2,094 immigrants ticketed to Winnipeg or similar Manitoba points destined for the States. Of these 21 Icelanders, 151 Scandinavians, 1,922 Russian-Germans. Doubtless several hundreds of other Russian-Germans, although ticketed to Winnipeg, left immediately for the States without declaring such as their intention."

Then again on the 26th, three days later on, he gives statistics for a party of 80 that had gone to the States that day. Now when we find the Minister of the Interior, comparing this contract with the contract made by his predecessor, and when we find that under the contract made by the Conservative Government they were only bound to pay on adults when they reached Manitoba, whereas the present Government are bound to pay on every adult or infant coming under the agricultural or domestic class the moment they reach the shores of this country, surely there can be no doubt as to which is the better contract. Mr. Smart, knowing these facts, having his attention called to the fact of these reports when he went to Amsterdam the following year, should have been doubly careful to see that a company which so easily earned its money when the gain to the country was so slight—he should have been doubly careful to see that the company was doing its duty in every possible way. Now, sir, here are certain facts that are discoverable from the files brought down before the Public Accounts Committee and I say there are certain inferences one can fairly draw from them. We know in the first place now that Smart and Preston entered into a contract, no doubt about that. We know that that contract entered into by them was not made known in Canada, that is expressly stated in a memo. to council, or to the minister. It was a secret contract made between Preston and Smart, which was not to be made known in Canada. We know that a few months after that contract was made it was changed greatly to the advantage of the company, apparently by Mr. Smart alone, who that very day cabled and wrote to Preston triumphantly telling him the contract had been changed to the advantage of the company. We know that Smart's attention had been called, first to the character of the accounts sent in by him and their lack of verification, then to the fact that the immigrants were not remaining int his country, and he, knowing all these facts, went to Amsterdam and found the position there in such a state that if he had been a man anxious to do his duty by his employer, he would have been prompted to make every inquiry. But we find he did not even bother to make any report to Mr. Preston, or to Mr. Sifton, his minister. Then we find Smart coming back to this country, knowing from the facts I have stated that the company was not faithfully carrying out its duty, and entering into another agreement in 1904, still further changing the conditions to the advantage of that company, and giving them a hold on this country for a still longer period.

And then, sir, we find, after 1904, when Mr. Smart thought he had riveted this company on this country for ten years, when it required four years' notice to break the contract, that Mr. Smart writes to a member of this syndicate, and he will not tell his name, saying that he, Mr. Smart, intends to resign his position as deputy minister. Now, that is a pregnant fact; there are few men in this country who would not like to retain the position of deputy minister. I believe the salary is now $5000, and in Mr. Smart's case it has been shown that it included a trip to the Old Country whenever he desired to go. He was assured of a good position and a good salary for life, and here we have Mr. Smart resigning his position, and the only reason he could give in the committee was that he had such a love for immigration, that he was bound to devote the balance of his shattered life to that cause. Why, surely as deputy minister of this country he would have far wider scope for his devotion and usefulness to the cause of immigration than as the manager of any company. It is true the profits might not be as great, but the usefulness unquestionably would be greater. Mr. Smart writes to a member of this syndicate that he is going to resign, and of course a wink is as good as a nod to a blind horse and no one ever accused Mr. Preston or any friend of his, of being a blind horse. Shortly afterwards, Mr. Smart resigns and is appointed manager of this company, whose history I have tried to trace. Could anything be more clouded with suspicion than that? But there is something more. When Mr. Smart was being examined, inquiry was made as to letters he had written as deputy minister of the department, while in receipt of the people's money for the discharge of the duties of that office. He was asked to produce letters to this syndicate and refused, the only reason he gave was that they were private, but this morning he came back to the committee and what had come over the spirit of his dream, I know not, unless it is the old principle that whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad. This morning, he came before the committee and told us he would not and could not produce his letters, because he had burned them and his letter books. I am not here to attack Mr. Smart, but there are many business men on the opposite side of the House, and I would ask any hon. gentleman opposite, if he were sitting on a jury in a court of law and a question arose as to the contents of a letter and it was admitted, all the evidence being introduced by the accused, that while in a public office, enjoying public pay, he had written to a member of a trading organization, to which he had certainly given phenomenal privileges, announcing that he was going to retire, surely after he retired, giving up a magnificent position to accept the humble position of manager of a simple trading company, and we find when he is asked to produce the letters he simply refuses, because they were private letters and might injure other parties, and later says he could not produce them because he had burnt his letters and letter books—surely not the only letters in the letter books, because he must have many letters to others than members of his company—I ask the members if this does not seem to shed further light on the transaction investigation here to-day?

THE DOCTORS AGREE.

Two Physicians Both Agree on The New Scientific Dandruff Treatment.

Dr. J. M. Powell, of Spokane, Wash., says: "Herpicide has given good satisfaction in my family for dandruff."

Dr. W. G. Alban, of Walla Walla, Wash., says; "I find Herpicide all that is claimed for it as a dandruff cure. I shall prescribe it." Dandruff is a germ disease and you can't cure it unless you kill the dandruff germ: and you can't do that unless you use Newbro's Herpicide, the only preparation in the world that destroys the parasites. A delightful hair dressing; allays itching instantly, makes hair glossy and soft as silk. It is a sure dandruff destroyer.

I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga, Tenn. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s Drug Store.

WOMAN'S WORLD

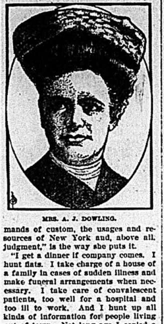
MRS. A. J. DOWLING.

A New York Woman Who Is a "Professional Friend In Need."

Mrs. A. J. Dowling of New York is a pioneer in her line of business, which is that of meeting emergencies that arise in households in the great metropolis, and her success in her chosen career may be a hint to other women in other cities as to a means of gaining a good income.

A few years ago, thrown upon her own resources, Mrs. Dowling's own experiences suggested the line of work she took up. She should be called a "professional friend in need," but her card reads, "Services in case of emergency."

"My business requires a person familiar with all sides of life, the demands of custom, the usages and resources of New York and, above all, judgment," is the way she puts it.



MRS. A. J. DOWLING.

"I get a dinner if company comes. I hunt flats. I take charge of a house of a family in cases of sudden illness and make funeral arrangements when necessary. I take care of convalescent patients, too well for a hospital and too ill to work. And I hunt up all kinds of information for people living out of town. Not long ago I copied a whole page from a reference book in Lenox library for a man out in Seattle.

"Then I give advice. So many people want advice. I see much of sorrows. I have saved many a girl from catastrophe or from needless expense by investigating positions that have been offered to out of town women. No one knows better than I what it costs to live in New York and what it means."

Mrs. Dowling is practically always employed, and her pretty apartments in Harlem are evidence of the good returns she gets from her work.—Brooklyn Citizen.

Cooking Potatoes.

The commonest mistakes we make in cooking potatoes are that we use too many fried and boiled potatoes. Fried potatoes are less easily digested than food cooked in other ways. The most wasteful way to cook potatoes is to peel them, put them in cold water and bring them slowly to a boil. This method allows the water to penetrate to the center of the potato, so that a good deal of the starch may be dissolved and lost, and the potato becomes soggy, because it has not been "cooked dry." On the other hand, if you put peeled or cut potatoes into boiling water the gluten is hardened at once (as is that other common albuminous food—the white of an egg), thus preventing the water from getting to the starch and thereby insuring a mealy potato.

The best way to cook potatoes is to bake them, because, a dry heat being used, none of the food value is lost. Next in nutritive order is the boiling of potatoes with their skins on. Next comes steaming, which every one should practice instead of the common way of boiling, because it wastes less starch, while giving the same kind of flavor and texture. Frying is the least rational process. Of the "fancy" methods "ricing" is one of the easiest and most attractive, and it has the great advantage of being useful for potatoes unfit for other uses.—Garden Magazine.

Covering Glasses.

In these days of microbes the careful woman never lets liquid stand uncovered for a moment, since it is well known that both milk and water quickly absorb impurities from the air.

When the liquid is in fairly large quantities in pitcher or water bottle the covering presents few difficulties, but often it is necessary to leave a glass half full, or medicine must be protected.

A clever housekeeper, tired of having cards slip off these glasses or extra doilies to wash, hit upon the scheme of using small individual butter plates for covers.

She keeps about a dozen or more of the butter dishes—the inexpensive white variety—in convenient places, half in her medicine cupboard, the rest stowed away in different rooms. Thus, when any one is ill or a glass of milk is to be kept overnight a butter plate is simply slipped, bottom down, into the top of the glass, resting on the edge.

The ordinary butter plate just fits exactly most glasses in common use and keeps the contents perfectly airtight.

Washing Blue Flannel Dresses.

Blue flannel dresses can be easily washed by the following method: Boil a quarter of a pound of yellow soap in three quarts of water, slicing the soap into thin shavings and letting it boil until it is all dissolved. Fill a tub with lukewarm water and add enough of the hot soapsuds to make a good lather. Dip the dress in and rub it well, but do not rub the soap on it, for it will leave a white mark. Wring it out with the hands, not with a wringer, because it creases it badly. Wash in another water with a little more of the soapsuds if it is much soiled. Then wring it again and dip into lukewarm water to rinse it and make it very blue with the blue bag. Shake it out thoroughly after wringing it and dry in the shade until damp enough to iron on the wrong side. It must not be dried entirely before it is ironed. Colored woolen or cotton stockings can be washed in the same way and rinsed in strong salt and water, to keep the colors from running, instead of blue water.

Teasing the Hair.

The abominable fashion of "teasing" the hair is responsible for much of the untidy hairdressing of today. To the uninitiated one must explain that "teasing" means combing the hair the wrong way so as to make it appear thick and fluffy. It ruins the hair eventually by breaking it and making it fall out, but even the prospect of future baldness will not keep the girls from doing it. If it were very becoming there might be some excuse for it. But whoever yet saw a "teased" pompadour that did not look exceedingly unlovely and untidy? If Mme. Pompadour could come to life and see some of the monstrosities patterned after the fashion she originated she would be overcome with remorse and chagrin.

A Dressmaking Hint.

The home dressmaker often has much trouble in fitting herself. A good idea is to buy one and one-half yards of strong lining and cut out a perfectly fitting bodice pattern to come five or six inches below the waist line. Bone and stitch it as if for an ordinary dress. Instead of hooks and eyes sew together down the front, then stuff the lining firmly with sawdust, shaping it as you proceed. Sew a strong lining across the bottom so as to stand on a table. Add a stock collar at neck, with a piece of lining across the top. This model is most useful for draping and trimming blouses, also for fitting collars and yokes.

To Clean Glass Globes.

To clean glass globes wash them with soap and water to which a little salts of lemon has been added. The great difficulty of getting the ground portion of the globe to look white is that grease settling in the roughness is hard to remove by soap and water alone or even by the help of soda. After the globes have been carefully washed in the manner recommended do not dry them with a cloth, but after allowing the water to run on them for awhile let them drain dry.

Kerchief Oversleeves.

Ornamental oversleeves to protect the dress sleeves while working at a desk can be made out of those pretty colored bordered handkerchiefs so numerous and inexpensive in shops. Cut off two of the corners and sew the kerchief together in such a manner that one remaining corner runs up in a point above the elbow, while the other is turned back at the wrist to form a pointed cuff. The seam of the oversleeve runs up the inner side of the arm.

The Borrowing Habit.

To say that one should never borrow is carrying the matter a bit too far, but one should never practice the habit of borrowing. Look out for your own stock of household supplies so that you will not be continually and daily running out of sugar, butter, salt, flour or any other staple and regularly needed article. If you must borrow, however, make it a point of honor to pay and pay with liberal measure and without being reminded of the obligation.

For Kindling.

Ten cents' worth of crude oil thoroughly mixed with half a bushel of sawdust will supply a satisfactory kindling for about three months. Half a teacupful in a piece of newspaper laid on a square of tin will start any fire. The mixture should be kept in a tin or iron receptacle in a cool, dark place.

Children's Garters.

The tension of a child's garters is a subject that every mother should pay attention to. Tight garters pulling on the little fellow's underbody will surely bring discomfort. See that there is just sufficient pull to hold the stockings up. More than this will cause the shoulders to come forward.

Hair Mattresses.

In buying a hair mattress choose one filled with black rather than white hair, as the latter has generally been bleached, which deprives it of springiness and makes it "mat" more quickly than the black or even gray hair.

Don't leave any crumbs in soiled tablecloths, napkins or doilies. Mice have been known to ruin these when they were tossed into a clothesbasket and left there just as gathered up from the table.

Any clothing worn during the day should be dispensed with at night. The night clothes should be loose in order that the air may pass freely through them.

When a lamp is not burning keep the wick below the top of the tube. This helps to prevent oil from working over the burner and reservoir.

Turpentine and beeswax melted to the consistency of cream makes a fine polish for leather upholstered furniture.

THE TIDY TADPOLE.

How This Cheerful Little Cannibal Eats and Develops.

A wonderful spirit of tidiness seems to pervade the tadpole world. They always eat whatever has become useless—their own eggs, their superfluous companions. Even those who are only weakly are cleared out of the way and the victims take it all as a matter of course. I have disturbed a strong member of the community just as he had begun to dine off the tail of a weaker brother, but the sufferer has not troubled to escape—he simply waited till the fratricide returned to complete his deadly work.

For some time there is no grave change in the tadpoles. They simply grow and become so far transparent that their internal mechanism, which consists of one coil of intestines, is plainly visible. When, however, they are about three months old a careful observer can distinguish a tiny foot on either side of the base of the tail. These grow slowly, but seem unable to move independently until shortly before the border land is passed which leads to perfect froghood. The hind legs have reached their full size before the front ones appear, and, while the feet grow slowly, the hands are ready made and can be used at once. For a day or two they can be seen under the skin before they venture forth, and their possessor is very restless and excited. He rushes madly about, jostling his comrades, and no doubt being voted a bore; then a more vigorous effort breaks the skin and the tiny hand and arm appear.

There seems some rule about the order of precedence here, as there is when the whiskers go, for last year my tadpoles, almost without exception, had their right hands some hours before the left, while on previous occasions I have had an entirely left handed crew.—Chambers' Journal.

MUSIC AT SEA.

Conditions Under Which Ships' Sails Sometimes Sing.

Some curious facts have been noted with regard to the sound conducting qualities of ships' sails. When rendered concave by a gentle breeze, the widespread sails of a ship are said to be excellent conductors of sound.

A ship was once sailing along the coast of Brazil, far out of sight of land. Suddenly several of the crew, while walking along the deck, noticed that when passing and repassing a particular spot they always heard with great distinctness the sound of bells chiming sweet music, as though being rung but a short distance away.

Dumfounded by this phenomenon, they quickly communicated the discovery to their shipmates, but none of them was able to solve the enigma as to the origin of these seemingly mysterious sounds which came to them across the water.

Months afterward, upon returning to Brazil, the crew determined to satisfy their curiosity. Accordingly they mentioned the circumstance to their friends and were informed that at the time when the sounds were heard the bells in the cathedral of San Salvador, on the coast, had been ringing to celebrate a feast held in honor of one of the saints.

Their sound, wonderful to relate, favored by a gentle, steady breeze, had traveled a distance of upward of 100 miles over the smooth water and had been brought to a focus by the sails at the particular locality in which the sweet sounds were first heard.

This is but one of several instances of a similar kind, trustworthy authorities claiming that this same music is often heard under somewhat the same circumstances and especially in a moisture laden atmosphere.—London Tit-Bits.

English Regard For Teaching.

If there is one occupation which Englishmen are unanimous in condemning as degraded and degrading it is that most fascinating, most difficult, delicate and important work, the training of the mind. In what are humorously called "the higher walks" of teaching there are respectable salaries to be earned and agreeable rooms or houses for occupation. Here, purged of the dross of utility, a man may once more take rank as a gentleman, and if he becomes head of a house the supreme uselessness of his position commands universal and silent respect.—Nineteenth Century.

Gentian Root.

Gentian root, often used as a tonic, is considered in many malarial countries a remedy against intermittent fever. Especially is this the case in Corsica, in that section of the island near the town of Aleria, which is infested with malaria. The inhabitants recently protested violently against the introduction of quinine on the part of the medical authorities, declaring that they would not abandon the remedy which had been used among them for centuries, the gentian root, either powdered or simply masticated.

Quite the Contrary.

"After all, my friend," began the solemn stranger, "life is but a dream, a"—

"Not much, it ain't," snorted the hard headed man. "In nearly every dream I ever had I was gettin' more money than I knowed what to do with."

Frenchmen and Spanish.

French people find it difficult to speak Spanish properly. Victor Hugo boasted that he was the only Frenchman who could really speak Spanish something of Spain being mingled in his ancestry.

But for some trouble and sorrow we should never know half the good there is about us.—Dickens.

CONTROL OF ENERGY.

Is It Possible For the Human Race to Avert Extinction?

The only conceivable way in which the human intelligence can ever succeed in averting the "procession of the great year" is not by postponing the issue, but by reversing the process. The question is this: While energy is being dissipated in accordance with the natural law, can we so manipulate things as to accumulate energy, making the unavailable available—notwithstanding the fact that cosmic processes seem to be essentially irreversible? Now there is assuredly no inherent reason why we should not accomplish this. It is true that hitherto all the atomic evolution that has been observed is atomic disintegration. We may speak now, indeed, of the analysis of the elements. But so it was, we may remember, that the older chemistry began, and yet analytic chemistry was the precursor of synthetic chemistry. We began by breaking up compounds, but now we can make them—can, indeed, make compounds hitherto unknown in nature. Similarly, it is more than probable that we shall ere long learn to achieve the synthesis of the elements as well as their analysis. No energy is ever lost. Even when the radium atom, itself the child of the uranium atom, breaks down and dissipates its energy, ending, it is supposed, as the dull atom of lead, the original energies are not destroyed. Why should they not be gathered up again and thus again become available? Are matter and energy to go on their way, ultimately destroying the human race? For myself, I incline to the view that victory will rest at last with "man's unconquerable mind."—C. W. Saleeby, F. R. S., in Harper's Magazine.

LIZARDS OF BARBADOS.

They Can Change Color and Drop Their Tails at Will.

The green lizards which swarm on every tree certainly have the hardest life of any creatures in Barbados, since their flesh is so delicate that everything eats them which can catch them. Cats, fowls, birds, monkeys and snakes all devour the poor lizards, which have only two methods of defending themselves, both very inadequate for the purpose. One is their power of changing their color, whereby they can appear bright green at one moment on the leaf of an aloe and then dark chocolate brown on a piece of damp earth. If this does not conceal them from their enemy they drop their tails. The caudal appendage jumps from the ground and makes a frantic dance all by itself, and if the pursuer is deluded into seizing it the lizard avails itself of the chance to escape and grow another tail.

For the rest the poor lizards are harmless things, with pathetic eyes, in which lurks an expression of weariness and disillusion, as though they were as old as the world itself and had found it all vanity and vexation of spirit. They are fond of plaintive music and will enter at the open windows when a piano is playing and sit listening and nodding their queer flat heads and looking out of those wistful eyes at the player till he or she, if of an imaginative temperament, might fancy she were playing to an audience of transmigrated souls.—Chambers' Journal.

Cigar Smoke and Love.

In Siam the lighting of a cigar indicates a betrothal. In that country a person wishing to become betrothed to the girl of his choice offers her a flower or takes a light from a cigar or a cigarette if she happens to have one in her mouth, and thereupon, provided there is no impediment in the birth months and years of the respective parties, steps are at once taken to arrange for the payment of the dowry. The families of the bride and bridegroom have each to provide at least $1,000. In Calabria, as in certain parts of India, a lighted taper or a lighted pipe betokens the acceptance of the suitor for the hand of a lady in marriage. In Siberia it is the custom that when a suitor has been accepted by a girl she presents him with a box of cigars and a pair of slippers as a sign that he is to be master in the house.

An Oddity In Toes and Digits.

There is one curious fact respecting the animal creation with which you will never become acquainted if you depend on your text books for information. It is this: No living representative of the animal kingdom has more than five toes, digits or claws to each foot, hand or limb. The horse is the type of one toed creation; the camel of the two toed; the rhinoceros of the three toed and the hippopotamus of four toed animal life. The elephant and hundreds of other animals belonging to different orders belong to the great five toed tribe.

THE GIRL WITH SPIRIT.

What She Looks For in the Man She Would Marry.

A girl with spirit nowadays does not marry a man merely because she likes him. Love itself isn't enough. Before she asks herself, "Do I love him?" she wants to settle certain questions in her mind.

For instance, is he congenial? What's the use of affection, asks the modern girl, if we're to have nothing in common to talk about and think about after we're married? If our tastes and ideas are so totally dissimilar that we shall never understand each other or agree, then he's not the man for me. There must be some common bond of interest and sympathy between us that will hold when caresses and endearments wane.

Next, says the spirited modern girl, has he good breeding? I don't mean the vapid airs and graces of a society polish, but the true gentleness of heart which makes him kind and courteous by nature. The instincts of a gentleman may be born in the lowliest, and unless he has these he may some day degenerate into a selfish boor.

What are his morals? asks the modern maid. Can I trust him wholly? If they are flabby and wavering he will never inspire my admiration and respect. I should give him a clean life and upright morals, and I cannot see why I should compromise by accepting less from him.

Also, has he a clean bill of health? He owes it to me to be perfectly frank about this.

Is he a selfish man? That is, will he demand the sacrifice of my individuality? Does he want me to marry him for myself or for my ministry upon his material needs alone?

And again, asks the girl of spirit, is he the sort of man who will take me into his confidence, or will he be reticent and secretive about everything, assuming me incapable of understanding his affairs? It would be wholly impossible for me to be happy unless there was absolute trust and confidence between us, says this resolute girl.

Will he recognize my right to an allowance? she wonders. That will be very necessary.

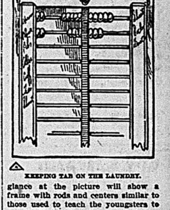
Other things are nonessentials, says the modern girl of spirit. But congeniality, good morals, good breeding, a clean bill of health, an unselfish interest in my welfare, frankness and a reasonable generosity—these are real essentials. No matter how much I care for a man I shan't marry him unless he possesses these qualifications.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

COUNTS THE PIECES.

Easy Way to Keep Tab on Clothes Sent to the Laundry.

Every housewife at some time or other has lost some of the clothes sent to the laundry. The nuisance of writing down each garment and the number given out is more troublesome sometimes than the loss of a piece occasionally, and consequently a permanent record is seldom at hand.

The device shown here is particularly adapted for such a purpose. A glance at the picture will show a frame with rods and centers similar to those used to teach the youngsters to count. Each rod carries an equal number of counters, and opposite every rod is the name of some garment that is likely to be sent to the laundry. In using the device the counters would normally be in the center, and as various articles are given out to be washed counters on the rods in alignment with the name of the article are to be moved to the side of the frame. When the clothes are returned reference to the counter will immediately show if all are in the bundle or not. Other uses of the device will be readily apparent.—Chicago News.



KEEPING TAB ON THE LAUNDRY.

Olive Oil.

The medicinal qualities of pure olive oil are numerous and are becoming better known day by day. A teaspoonful taken after each meal will relieve constipation and dyspepsia. Mixed with an equal part of lime water it is invaluable for burns. Poured into the eye it will remove any foreign substance lodged there. It is a sure cure for hangnails, is good for chapped hands, is excellent rubbed over the whole body after taking a bath and is beneficial for use in massaging a dry scalp.

The Radiator.

Why will people tolerate gilded or silvered steam radiators? The modern substitute for the hearth is not beautiful at best, but may be made inoffensive by proper treatment. When the woodwork of the room is white give the radiator a double coat of white paint. If the woodwork is natural tone or stained in a color let the radiator match as nearly as possible.

Fifteenth Passed Fine Inspection.

ONE OF THE BEST ON RECORD — HIGHLY COMPLIMENTED BY INSPECTING OFFICER.

It was "military night" last evening, all right. All the world and his wife were out "to see the soldiers," for was not last night Inspection night, and had not the boys to make their final bow to the public for this year, and be put through their facings before the Inspecting officers!

The Regiment left the market square shortly before 8 o'clock, and marched by way of Bridge and Front streets to the Hospital lot. The good old Fifteenth made a gallant show going up our main aisle, and many were the warm encomiums passed upon them by the spectators. Both bands played in fine form, and the men marched with a soldierly swing very pleasant to look upon. Col. Halliwell, in command, looked proud of his command, as he had excellent reason to be.

It was probably the largest turnout in the history of the Regiment, and on the Hospital lot it was impossible to form regimental front, one company having to lap over. The regiment was put through a few evolutions before the Inspecting officers arrived, showing smartness and good knowledge of their drill. The Inspecting officers, Cols. Gordon and Young, of Kingston, arrived, and received the "General Salute." After inspection came the march past, which was performed with a steadiness exceedingly creditable, indeed. It is possible that the old Fifteenth never did better, not even at the big Toronto parade before the Duke of York, now the Prince of Wales.

After a few regimental movements the Inspecting officer, Col. Gordon, addressed the Regiment, highly complimenting the officers and men on their efficiency, which was remarkable, he said, considering the disadvantages they labored under. Had the 'Fifteenth' the same advantages enjoyed by other regiments he had inspected, he believed it would be the best in this section of Ontario. "And I am not saying," said Col. Gordon, "that you are not the best as it is."

About 9.30 the Regiment marched back to the market square, by way of Victoria avenue, William and Bridge streets, where the men were mustered.

Following was the parade state of the Fifteenth last night:

Lt.-Col Halliwell.
Major Stewart.
Quartermaster Vermilyea.
Non-Commissioned staff—five.
Sappers and miners—six.
Regimental Band—32.
Bugle Band—Lieuts. Carman and Walker and 26 musicians.
A Company — Capt. Marsh, Lieut. Cook, 24 rank and file.
B Company — Capt. Hayes; 34 rank and file
C Company — Lieuts. Bleecker and Allen 34 rank and file.
D Company — Capt. Brown, Lieut. Allen, 34 rank and file.
E Company—Capt. Barragar, Lieut. Hampton, 32 rank and file.
F Company — Lieuts. McFee and Fish, 24 rank and file.
G Company — Lieut. Wallbridge, 34 rank and file.

A pleasant function, after the parade was dismissed, was the entertainment of the Inspecting officers by the officers of the Regiment at their quarters on Church St. It was a very informal affair, there being no set speeches, but things passed off most agreeably. The Inspecting officers left on the midnight train.

INSPECTION NOTES.

There was a tremendous crowd around the Hospital lot. It takes the redcoats to bring people out.

The Regimental band turned out 32 strong, and the Drum and Bugle Band 26. Both organizations played A1 marching music.

The opinion was freely expressed that, considering the time it had been organized, the Fifteenth brass band performed in a way highly creditable to the Regiment and the men who composed it. Bandmaster Allen has good reason to be proud of his bunch of wind jammers.

The cup representative of supremacy in drill and appearance has not yet been awarded. It was a close thing between B Company, commanded by popular Capt. "Jack" Hayes, and E Company, commended by that enthusiastic officer, Capt. Barragar, the two companies being tied on points of drill.

The regimental drill is now over for the season, but the regiment will go to Campbellford on Dominion day, to assist in the ceremonies attendant upon the inauguration of that village into a full-fledged town.

Every available uniform in the Quartermaster's stores was taken out. Many more men would have been on the Regiment's strength had there been unforms for them.

Wm. Doughty, Retired Farmer, Killed in a Runaway Accident

As the result of a runaway which took place at about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, on the Madoc road, just north of the city limits, an aged man named Mr. Wm. Doughty, of this city, received injuries which proved fatal.

It appears that the victim of the accident, at the hour named, left his residence on Grier street, driving a rather spirited horse, which was attached to a democrat wagon.

In the vehicle was a married stepdaughter of Mr. Doughty, and two children.

Owing to the horse acting rather fractious the lady and children got out, after the animal had somewhat quieted down, and this, no doubt, proved to be a wise move.

Mr. Doughty, after driving up Grier street and down College street, turned north on the Madoc road, intending to drive out to Ross' Corners, in the 4th concession of Thurlow township.

Just as Mr. Doughty drove over the hill, which is the boundary line between the city and Thurlow, the horse again became restive, and also kicked. It finally became unmanageable, and off it ran northward at a lively gait.

It had not proceeded far when the vehicle collided with a phaeton, in which was seated Mr. N. Vermilyea and four others.

A wheel of the phaeton was taken off and the occupants thrown out, but none were seriously hurt.

At this point Mr. Doughty was thrown violently out upon the side of the road, alighting upon a pile of stones.

Assistance was at once procured and the victim of the accident was picked up.

It was then apparent that he had sustained serious injuries.

He was as quickly as possible conveyed to his home and medical aid was summoned.

Later he was taken to the hospital, and all that medical skill could suggest was done, but it was of no avail, death resulting later. The unfortunate man's injuries consisted of the chest being crushed in, an arm broken and severe bruises about the body.

Mr. Doughty, the victim of the unfortunate affair, was 62 years of age. He was for many years a yeoman, residing in the 3rd concession of Madoc township. A few years ago he moved to Thurlow township, and about a month ago, with his wife, moved into the city, taking up his residence on Grier street.

Those who were acquainted with the deceased speak in the highest terms of him, and his tragic death is sincerely mourned. No family of the deceased survives.

Double Drowning At Bridgewater.

TWO RIVER DRIVERS WENT UNDER A JAM YESTERDAY MORNING — THEIR BODIES NOT YET RECOVERED.

An appalling accident, which cast a gloom over the community affected, took place at Bridgewater, this county, yesterday morning.

It appears that two river drivers, named John Brill, of Bridgewater, and Thomas Farrell, of Tyendinaga, were engaged in breaking a jam above the old dam. The two men were in a boat, with two other men. On the shore was a fifth man, who held a rope which was fastened to the boat. The current got hold of the boat, and in trying to hold it the man on shore was badly bruised and cut. Finally the boat upset, and two of its occupants, Brill and Farrell, were drowned. Both went under the jam, and their bodies have not yet been found.

Both are married men with families.

Estimable Lady Died Yesterday Afternoon.

After some weeks' illness Mrs. T. Blackburn died yesterday afternoon at the family residence, Charles St. Deceased, whose maiden name was Miss Emma S. Creepar, had been a resident of this city all her life. She was an amiable lady, beloved by all who knew her. The late Mrs. Blackburn was a member of the Methodist Church. In addition to the husband, a family of three girls are left to mourn the demise of a loved one.

MAYOR SULMAN MARRIED TO-DAY

OUR POPULAR CHIEF MAGISTRATE TAKES A BRIDE IN THE PERSON OF MISS CLARA I. PRINGLE — PRETTY AND STYLISH WEDDING.

A charmingly pretty wedding occurred in this city at 2 o'clock this afternoon, the groom being our popular Mayor, Mr. C. N. Sulman, and the bride Miss Clara Isabel Pringle, daughter of Mr. John N. Pringle. The happy affair has been much talked of lately in society circles, and on all sides good wishes have been expressed for the happiness of our genial Chief Magistrate and his charming bride.

The wedding took place at the residence of Mr. R. Bogle, corner of North Front and Earle streets, the officiating minister being Rev. J. P. Wilson, B. A., pastor of Bridge St. Methodist Church.

The only attendant was a maid of honor, Miss Hattie Pringle, cousin of the bride.

The drawing-room, where the ceremony took place, was beautifully decorated with flowers, the happy couple standing, when the ceremony took place, in front of a bank of bridal roses and beneath a handsome floral bell.

The bride was superbly gowned in white silk eolienne, over white taffeta, trimmed with baby Irish lace. She wore the conventional veil and orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of white roses. The maid of honor was gowned in white silk mulle, over white silk taffeta, and carried a bouquet of pink and white roses.

At the conclusion of the ceremony a short reception was held and the wedding dejeuner served.

The groom's present to the bride was a pearl pendant, with gold chain, and to the maid of honor a pearl pin.

The wedding presents—as might have been expected, considering the popularity of both Mr. and Mrs. Sulman, were exceedingly numerous, rich and tasteful. Among them was a really magnificent fish set, pearl handled and gold inlaid, from the groom's colleagues in the City Council, and a handsome clock, the tribute of the salesladies in Mayor Sulman's store.

Guests were present from Montreal, Napanee, Chatham, London, Vancouver, Toronto and Los Angeles, Calif.

Mayor Sulman and his bride will leave on the 5 o'clock train for the west. Their wedding tour will include visits to the principal cities in the Eastern States.

The good wishes of a host of friends, among whom The Intelligencer begs to be counted, will follow them.

An Interesting Masonic Function.

The officers and members of Eureka Lodge, No. 283, G.R.C., A.F. and A.M., held a gala night last evening in honor of the approaching marriage of their Worshipful Master, Wor. Bro Mayor Sulman. Besides a large number of their own members being present, there were also many visitors from the sister lodges.

After the regular work of the evening was finished Wor. Bro. Lt.-Col. P. H. Hambly, who is the oldest past master of the lodge, in the most pleasing manner presented Wor. Bro. Sulman with a beautiful solid gold past master's jewel, as a small token of the esteem in which he is held by the brethren of his lodge.

Wor. Bro. Sulman, who was taken by surprise, in a few well-chosen words thanked the brethren for their appreciation of his efforts on behalf of his lodge.

Congratulatory addresses were delivered by R. W. Bro. Lt.-Col. W. N. Ponton, D.D.G.M. of Prince Edward District No. 13, R. W. Bros. Lt.-Col. S. S. Lazier, A. McGinnis, Henry Pringle W. Lattimer, Wm. Webster, P.D.D.G.M.'s of the district, and a number of other brethren.

The lodge also presented the prospective bride with a handsome chair.

The members of Eureka Lodge, as well as all the Masons of Belleville, join in wishing Worshipful Bro. Sulman and his bride a long life of wedded bliss.

Estimable Young Lady Died Yesterday.

Miss Minnie E. McCormick, a young lady in her 21st year, passed away yesterday afternoon at the residence of her mother, on Great St. James street. Deceased had been ill for some months from lung trouble. She was a member of the Methodist Church, and a young lady who was esteemed by all who knew her. A year ago her father, Mr. Hugh McCormick, was killed at Hamilton. The mother will have the sympathy of many in the double affliction which she has been called upon to bear.

Middleman Who Sold Land to the International Railway.

Matthew Lodge, Close Friend of Hon. Mr. Emmerson, Minister of Railways and Canals, Got Lucky Option on Property at Moncton, Which Government Acquired at Enhanced Price For Railway Purposes.

Ottawa, June 14.—In the public accounts committee yesterday morning there was uncovered a remarkable case of "rake-off" in favor of Matthew Lodge of Moncton.

Mr. Lodge is a close personal friend of Mr. Emmerson. He has already been several times before the committee, having sold great quantities of supplies, including nails, leather belting, etc., to the Intercolonial. Indeed, he is said to be the middleman who has been supplying everything to the I. C. R. He is also the Mr. Lodge who was secretary of the New Brunswick Petroleum Co. Mr. Emmerson was president of the company and directed the manager of the I. C. R. to purchase his oil from that company.

The revelations yesterday concerned the recent purchase of real estate in Moncton for shops and yards for the I. C. R.

This land appears in the Auditor-General's report to have consisted of 18.88 acres, for which the department paid $18,000 to R. W. Hewson, barrister, of Moncton.

Mr. Hewson being called and sworn yesterday morning, said he negotiated sales of land to Mr. Matthew Lodge, which, in all, had cost Mr. Lodge $10,075 and which he, Mr. Lodge, turned over to the Government in three weeks for $18,000, a profit of $8,725.

IN THE HOUSE

Ottawa, June 14.—The House yesterday afternoon considered Mr. Oliver's bill to amend the Immigration Act. One section permits a head tax of two dollars to be levied by the Governor-In-Council upon every immigrant entering Canada.

Replying to Mr. Ames, Mr. Oliver stated that H. P. Brown of Great Falls, Montana (occupation unknown) had been granted an irrevocable grazing lease for 60,000 acres. The lease was dated March 10, 1905, under order of council Dec. 24, 1903. The rental paid was $650 in August, 1905, and $557 on March 15, 1906, by the Galaway Horse and Cattle Co. An assignment of the lease was made by H. P. Brown to this company and sent to the department by Mr. Adamson (Humboldt). An assignment has been registered from the Galaway Horse and Cattle Co. to John Cowdry MacLeod.

Beginning next Tuesday the House will meet at 11 a.m. instead of 3 p.m.

THEIR NIGHT OFF.

Commoners Will Be Given One Night Free Each Week.

Ottawa, June 14.—An important change is proposed with regard to the sittings of the House. The members in future sessions will probably have every Wednesday night free from Parliamentary duties. This is the practice in England. The need for at least one night's release from the chamber is much felt, as under existing conditions there is not an evening for social functions. In order to bring about this, the House would meet at noon Wednesday and put in three extra hours, the average length of a night sitting.

An informal discussion on this took place yesterday among Sir Wilfrid, Mr. Borden, Mr. Haggart, and Mr. Marcil, Deputy Speaker, and the proposal met with their approval.

G. T. R. Railway Bill Reported.

Ottawa, June 14.—The Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Co.'s bill was again considered at the railway committee yesterday. The bill was reported, after being, in all, some five days before the committee.

FILLED IN SIGNED CHEQUES.

Messenger In Marine Dept. At Ottawa Said to Have Profited.

Ottawa, June 14.—A sensation developed in the Marine and Fisheries Department yesterday when it was learned that a book of Government cheques on the Bank of Montreal, signed in blank, had been abstracted by a messenger named Thos. Corcoran, who incidentally has left the capital for parts unknown.

It is known that three of the cheques were filled out, and cashed to the amount of $180. The signature being genuine, the bank was entirely justified in cashing the cheques.

It is rumored that the loss is far in excess of the amount above stated, but the department and bank alike refuse to make any statement.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, June 13.—(Special.)—Receipts were 600 cattle, 50 milch cows, 2000 calves, 500 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 50 young pigs. The market for hogs was easier and prices declined 10c per 100 lbs., owing to increased supplies. At the reduction the demand was good and sales of selected lots were made at $7.80 to $7.90 per 100 lbs., weighed off the cars.

The butchers were present in large numbers, but were in no hurry to buy, as the supplies were in excess of the demand, and prices had a downward tendency all round. There was also a considerable drop in the prices of milch cows. Prime beeves sold at 5c to 5¼c per lb.; pretty good animals, 4c to 4¾c; common stock, 2½c to 3¾c. Milch cows sold at $25 to $55 each; only very good milkers brought over $50. Good calves sold at $4 to $8 each, and the others at $1.30 to $3.50 each. Shippers paid 4½c per lb. for good, large sheep, and the butchers paid 3½c to 4½c. Lambs sold at $3 to $5 each; only a few choice ones brought over $4.50, while good lots sold at $4. Store hogs sold at $5 to $10 each, and the young pigs at $2 to $3.50 each.

WITNESS WASN'T PRESENT.

So Insurance Commission Adjourned For the Day.

Toronto, June 14.—The officers of the Home Life Association were present with their books and papers, ready to supply any information required by the insurance committee yesterday, but owing to the absence of the former manager, A. J. Pattison, the adjournment was made until to-day at the request of Mr. Shepley.

"The Fellow That Looks Like Me."

Kingston, June 14.—The trial of Charles Schacher of Montreal for complicity in the $3,000 fur robbery at John McKay's in this city in November is proceeding. The defence alleges that Abraham Schacher, a brother, now out of the country, was the person implicated, that he bears a wonderful resemblance to the prisoner, and that, in reality Charles, on the night of the robbery, was playing cards in a house in Montreal.

Jury Was Lenient.

Brockville, June 14.—At the general sessions yesterday James Langley was found guilty of committing an assault on Lily E. Airey, aged 17, and Judge Reynolds sentenced him to 18 months at hard labor in the Central Prison. The recommendation of the jury for mercy saved him from being lashed.

London, June 14.—(C. A. P.)—Hon. Edward Blake has resigned his seat on the public accounts committee in the Commons.

COMPREHENSIVE UNION

Presbyterians Embrace Both Anglicans and Baptist.

General Assembly at London Votes For the Union Resolution and Carries It by 156 to 8, and Afterwards Carries It Unanimously — Several Amendments Proposed and Voted Down—Alexander Warden Is Treasurer.

London, June 14.—At the Presbyterian General Assembly yesterday morning, Rev. R. Macbeth of Paris introduced an amendment, when the church union debate resumed, the purpose of which was to prevent the report of the committee being sent to the congregations at the present stage.

Dr. Herdman, Calgary, said there was a widespread feeling in the west that union should not be proceeded with.

Rev. J. F. Dustan said it would create internecine strife and civil war. (Derisive laughter.) There was no necessity to send the report to the churches; they could get all the information needed from the press. To submit the question to the people now would not only be useless, but injurious.

The amendment was rejected by 111 votes to 57.

Dr. W. H. E. McInnes, Kingston, moved that not only should the reports be sent to presbyteries, sessions and congregations, but they should be requested to offer suggestions on the points submitted. The motion was lost.

Union Motion Passes.

The original resolution, which seeks a comprehensive union including both Anglicans and Baptists, was put to the assembly and was accepted, 156 voting for the resolution and 8 against.

In reference to the proposal to invite in the Anglican and Baptist churches, Principal McLaren, Toronto, was in favor of giving the negotiations a wider range, but he did not think it was in harmony with what was due to the other churches to do this without consulting them.

He moved that the union committee be instructed to obtain from the negotiating churches their opinion as to its practicability and desirability before taking any further step in that direction.

After discussion, Dr. McLaren's motion was rejected.

The original resolution that the Anglicans and Baptists be invited most cordially to take part in the negotiations for union was unanimously carried.

The moderator was appointed a member of the union committee in the room of the late Dr. Warden.

On the recommendation of the committee the assembly appointed Alexander Warden of Toronto to the office of treasurer, and Dr. Somerville joint clerk to the assembly.

Church Funds on Call.

At the afternoon session Rev. Dr. Scrimger of Montreal moved that the report of the committee appointing Alex. Warden as treasurer be reconsidered. He got no seconder. He charged that within the year the Presbyterian Church had had $173,900 out on call loans to Osborne & Francis, brokers, of Toronto. This fact had been brought to the attention of the advisory board by Alex. Warden, and the board had recalled the loans. There were also loans to Dominion Coal Co. for $5,000, for which $4,959 was paid. A loan on a mortgage for $2,425 and on another for $5,000.

The board was comprised of Lieut.-Governor Clark, Robert Kilgour and Hamilton Cassels.

Several reports were moved and adopted. The assembly expects to finish up by Friday morning.

Leaves the Ministry.

Toronto, June 14.—The second ministerial session of the Methodist conference opened at 10 o'clock yesterday morning. One hundred and six minister answering to their names. The case of Rev. A. E. Henderson, whose connection with industrial enterprises recently led to considerable unfavorable criticism from both the ministerial brotherhood and the laity, was taken up. After brief debate Mr. Henderson rose and requested the privilege of withdrawing from the Methodist Church, and tendered his parchment of ordination, not desiring standing as a member or any credentials. The conference, on the recommendation of the district meeting, granted Mr. Henderson's request. The Rev. A. E. Henderson thereby retires from the Methodist conference without "credentials of standing" and thus closes an unhappy incident in the annals of the ministry.

Four Students Drown.

Bangor, Me., June 14.—Four boys, members of the graduating class of the Brewer High School, were drowned by the upsetting of a sailboat on Hymes Pond Tuesday. They were Norman Herrick, aged 17, of South Brewer; Winfield Brown, 17; Lamont Parker, 18, and Lawrence Aiken, 19, all of North Brewer.

Electric Light Plant Burned.

Rossland, B. C., June 14.—The Trail electric light plant, owned by the Consolidated Mining and Development Co., caught fire at 3 o'clock Tuesday morning and was burned to the ground. The fire is supposed to have originated from a short circuit. The loss is $18,000, fully covered by insurance.

Declines Laurier's Offer.

Quebec, June 14.—Hon. A. Turgeon, Provincial Minister of Lands and Forests, has returned from Ottawa and informed his friends that he had refused the Solicitor-Generalship of Canada.

Entertainment of Delegates.

London, June 14.—(C.A.P.)—The festivities in connection with the colonial delegates to the Congress of Chambers of Commerce will be similar to those at last visit.

Bambaata Dead?

Eshowe, Natal, June 14.—It is reported that Chief Bambaata, the leader of the rebellious Zulus, has died of the wounds he received in the fight with Col. Mackenzie's force on Sunday last.

DEATH'S TRUCE IN SYNOD.

Bishop Sweetman's Announcement Interrupts Hon. S. H. Blake in Criticism of Dead Rector's Argument.

Toronto, June 14.—Rev. J. Pitt Lewis, rector of Grace Church, Elm street, and one of the most prominent and aggressive Anglican clergymen in the city, died with startling suddenness yesterday morning in his room at the Rossin House. Mr. Lewis was in good health Tuesday, and took a prominent part in the debates of the synod. He did not complain of feeling unwell yesterday morning and went to breakfast at his hotel as usual. He did not partake of anything, however, and evidently began to feel ill at the table. He started to go to his room, but fell when entering the elevator. Mr. Lewis was carried to his apartments, and Dr. Riordan came immediately, but no relief could be given to the reverend gentleman, who passed away at 10.26 o'clock. Death was due to heart failure.

Death's Truce in Synod.

Hon. Mr. Blake—I was not notified of the last meeting, and I think, as he was the principal opponent of the motion, that Mr. Lewis—

Bishop Sweatman—It is my duty to stop the proceedings. This moment a letter has been handed to me. The Rev. J. P. Lewis passed away at 10.25, just a few moments ago.

The news, so utterly unthought of, came upon the Synod as a stunning shock. For some minutes there was complete silence. Then Mr. Blake rose to speak again.

Mr. Blake spoke in praise of the painstaking efforts and earnest endeavors of the late Dr. Lewis on behalf of the Church. He then moved that the Synod adjourn until this morning. This was seconded by Mr. Hodgins, who also spoke in the highest terms of the deceased.

Sketch of His Life.

Rev. Joshua Pitt Lewis was born of Welsh parents, and brought up in the Methodist Church. He entered the ministry of that denomination, but in a few years joined the Anglican Church. After having held several small charges he was finally called from Chatham to take the rectorship of Grace Church, Toronto, his induction taking place on Oct. 8, 1878. During the twenty-seven years of his ministry there, Mr. Lewis has endeared himself to his large congregation. As a speaker he was known for his clearness of thought and the thoroughness with which he went into every subject. Besides his religious studies, Mr. Lewis devoted a great deal of time to scientific research, and traveled a great deal in eastern countries, notably Persia, India, Palestine and Egypt. Mr. Lewis celebrated his 25th anniversary as rector of Grace Church in 1903. Mr. Lewis was never married. He was about 70 years of age.

STROUDS

WAS SHOT FOR A BEAR.

B. C. Tragedy Which Has Extraordinary Pathetic Features.

Victoria, B. C., June 15.—James Redford, a well-known Alberni rancher, who was shot on Tuesday by Hotelkeeper Rollins in mistake, as Rollins declares, for a bear that he had wounded, died Wednesday after intense suffering.

He leaves a widow and seven children, the former being in a very serious condition, and daily expecting an eighth visit from the stork.

Letters from Alberni say that Rollins had been making a practice of out-of-season deer hunting and was so engaged when he shot his neighbo..

Balaclava Hero Dead.

Detroit, June 15.—Richard Yates, 77 years of age, is dead here. Mr. Yates was said to be the only living survivor in the United States of the famous charge of the Light Brigade at Balaclava.

Suicides at Brother's Home.

Woodstock, June 15.—With a shotgun, Samuel Cowan Wednesday night committed suicide at the home of his brother, John Cowan, near Bright. He had been in a melancholy and despondent state for some time. About 10.30 he told his brother he was going upstairs to take a bath. He went to his room and shortly afterwards the sound of a shotgun was heard. He shot himself in the head. Deceased lived in Montana, where he leaves a widow and family. He had been visiting his brother in Bright since June 1.

T. & N. O. Railway Profits.

Toronto, June 15.—The receipts of the T. & N. O. Railway continue to increase, the returns for April, as received by the Provincial Treasurer, being immensely gratifying. The gross receipts were $48,403.62, and the operating expenses $24,786.19, a net profit of $23,617.43, compared with $7,360 for April a year ago. For the four months, ending April, the net profits were $61,981.84. Last week about 11,000 passengers were carried.

Rain Helps the Crops.

Winnipeg, June 15.—The Canadian Pacific Railway crop report shows that the weather has been very favorable for grain growth during the past week. Heavy rains are reported from nearly all stations on the company's lines, and have done much to help along the growing crop. Early wheat at Chater has reached the height of 23 inches.

Stand Out Against Cut.

San Francisco, June 15.—Thirty-two insurance companies are standing out against the proposition which has been advanced by 60 of their associates in the underwriters' bureau, to order a cut of 25 cents right down the line and compel policyholders to accept 75 cents on the dollar.

General Assembly Concludes.

London, June 15.—At 10.20 last night the moderator, Dr. Falconer, pronounced the benediction and brought the thirty-second general assembly to a close.

An Israelitish Bomb-Thrower

Starts Massacre of His Countrymen at Bialistok, Russia.

Jews Killed and Wounded by the Hundreds—Bomb Was Thrown Into the Corpus Christi Procession, and Was Followed Up By a Jewish Fusilade With Revolvers—Then the Christians Attacked the Jews—The Outbreak Planned.

Bialistok, Russia, June 15.—A Jewish anarchist threw a bomb among the Corpus Christi procession which was in progress here yesterday and killed or wounded many persons.

In consequence the Christians attacked and massacred the Jews and demolished their shops.

Hundreds of persons were killed or wounded.

The bomb was thrown from the balcony of a house in Alexandrova street. A Russian clergyman named Fedoroff was among the killed by the explosion.

After the explosion the Jews began to fire with revolvers from the windows of the house into the crowd. Soldiers surrounded the house and fired two volleys into the windows.

Meanwhile the exasperated Christians attacked the Jewish stores in Alexandrova and Suraz streets, demolishing the fixtures and windows and throwing the goods into the gutters and beating and murdering the Jews.

A crowd of Jews fled to the railroad station pursued by the mob, which killed many of them there. Three Jews were thrown from second storey windows of the railroad station building.

The Jews are fleeing from Bialistok to the neighboring forests, and mobs are pursuing them. Detachments of dragoons have been sent out to protect the Jews.

Jews arriving here on trains have been dragged from the cars, and many of them have been murdered. Troops have cleared the railway station.

At 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon the disturbances still continued.

The Outbreaks Planned.

St. Petersburg, June 15.—(2.15 a.m.)—The latest despatches from Bialistok, which were received about midnight, report a situation of the utmost gravity.

The anti-Jewish outbreak there was still raging: fighting was in progress in the streets; firing was continuous; the best stores in the city had been sacked, and many were dead or wounded. Figures, however, were not given out, and probably the casualties are not known in Bialistok, owing to the continuance of the disorders.

Given Over to Slaughter.

Several members of Parliament last night received messages from Jewish correspondents at Bialistok, declaring that the police apparently had given over the Hebrew population to slaughter and pillage. These correspondents urged that the only hope was in an appeal to the Ministry of the Interior to interfere in their behalf. A delegation of deputies immediately called at the headquarters of the police department, where they were informed that all measures possible had been taken to stop excesses and restore order.

Stewart Found Guilty.

Owen Sound, June 15.—About four months ago Albert Stewart, 20 years of age, was arrested on the charge of shooting James Morrison. Stewart yesterday was tried by jury and found guilty. Judge Hatton will pronounce sentence to-day.

VILE CONDITIONS FOUND.

Chicago Inspector Sees Some Neill-Reynolds Charges Exemplified.

Chicago, June 15.—The sanitary bureau of the city health department yesterday discovered shockingly unclean conditions in one of the big packing plants at the stockyards—that of Nelson, Morris & Co.

The chief inspector, Perry L. Hedrick, with Inspector Archibald Dudley, made a personal tour of the huge plant, and they were unable to report as favorably upon it as they had upon the houses previously visited.

They saw a rat running over fresh meat.

They saw men spitting on the floors in the beef-killing rooms, over which entrals of the animals are dragged.

They saw unclean employes handling meats upon unclean tables.

They saw toilet rooms in a foul condition.

These insanitary conditions were reported as not true of all departments of the Morris plant, but they are specifically described and in a measure support the findings of the Neill-Reynolds inquiry.

Roosevelt Not Satisfied.

Washington, June 15. — President Roosevelt yesterday expressed entire disapproval of the new meat inspection bill as completed by the House committee on agriculture. The President declared that the bill was not at all adequate to meet the conditions.

Money For Anarchists.

Madrid, June 15.—According to the newspapers of this city, the Minister of the Interior declared Wednesday that the sum of $100,000 was lying in the Bank of Spain at the disposition of anarchists, and it is believed to have been deposited by their political supporters.

O'Donovan Rossa Back.

New York, June 15.—According to The Sun yesterday, O'Donovan Rossa who went to Ireland last November to become secretary of the Cork common council, came back with his family in the steamship Caronia, which arrived yesterday.

For 2-Cent Railway Fare.

Washington, D. C., June 15.—Representative Sherman of New York has introduced a bill providing that the passenger rate on all railroads in the United States doing an interstate business shall be 2 cents a mile, effective Jan. 1 next. The bill was referred to the committee on interstate and foreign commerce.

A Peculiar Memory Case.

Winnipeg, June 15.—Doctors at Rosthern are treating one of the most peculiar cases ever heard of in that district. The patient is G. Neudorf, who is suffering from concussion of the brain. When asked a question in the morning, he rationally answers it on the following evening.

Committed For Trial.

Toronto, June 15.—Robert E. Campbell, who held up a number of citizens in the name of the Toronto Press Club, was yesterday committed for trial on three charges of forgery. A few hours later he was brought before Judge Winchester and given his liberty on bail.

Session to End in July.

Kingston, June 15.—The Kingston Whig says definite information has been received that Parliament closes the first week in July, and the Sunday observance bill will not go through this session.

Summer Underwear comes in about now. We have every line that is shown this season all marked at most reasonable prices.

—Ellis' Spring needle underwear, summer weight, perfect fitting garment, good quality, each.. 75c

—Men's Balbriggan underwear, all sizes, the ideal garment for hot weather, each .... 38c and 50c

Ellis' & Watson's Combination Underwear $1.25 to $2.50

More men would wear Union Underwear if they knew the comfort of a one-piece garment. They are becoming more popular every day.

Perhaps the best recommendation is the fact that scarcely a man goes back to the two-piece underwear after buying Union Suits.

—Ellis' & Watson's Union Suits in summer weight .. .. $1.50 to $2.50

Men's Summer Shirts $1.00

—Men's Summer Shirts with soft and pleated fronts in light and dark patterns, all sizes, excellent value.. $1.00

Canadian Canned Meats.

The British Government was interrogated on Monday as to its disposition to favor the purchase of tinned meats from the colonies. No answer was returned. By which it is to be inferred that the subject has not yet been taken up or is still under "serious consideration."

If the British administration desires to do anything in that way, no doubt it will be thought the better course to do it and talk about it afterwards. Any proclamation of such an intention at the present crisis would be in effect a world-wide judgment of denunciation against the U. S. packing interest, which would be more adverse than the new German duties. Great Britain would not be so indiscreet as to pass so deep a censure on the trade of a friendly nation which is its greatest customer without the fullest and most convincing evidence.

In such an attitude toward the United States, Great Britain could well plead the example of the colonies and of the Canadian Government especially, which has framed its tariff to favor the importation of American "tinned meats." The remark is now heard in Canada, "no more of those foreign preserved meats for us until the charges against the packers are disproved." Up to recently those meats had large sale in this country. And it was a great and just grievance of our packers that the Dominion tariff favored their importation at the expense of home industry. They are admitted at a duty of 2c a pound, while the U. S. duty is 5c a pound. There is no reciprocity, but American exclusion, in this. With a fair and equal tariff, our packers would not and need not, complain. Their goods are of a quality to command success, and if they do not enter more largely into British and foreign trade it is because the supply of raw material is inadequate.

If it were discreet in a British statesman to discuss the question at all as between Canadian and American meats, upon a request to discriminate, it would be "up to" him to ask what the present Canadian Government has done in that matter. As a nearer neighbor he might reasonably expect from our Government some initiative measure that would give him a clew. But no such measure has followed upon the awful revelation made. The Laurier Government maintains the same low rate of duty on the meats which have been so strongly condemned, leaving it optional with the consumer as between the foreign and home product. The British statesman might well say if this suits Canada it should suit old England, at least until we see further. The consumer is after all the best judge of what food he wants after it has passed the port of inspection.

The Lord's Day Bill.

In certain religious circles the Lord's Day Bill, as reported by special committee to the House of Commons, seems to be regarded as an advance measure, to be commended as a long step in the direction of Sabbath observance. In the opinion of many, however, it is less exacting than the old Provincial Sunday law, which its purpose is to supersede. The Montreal Gazette observes that the general effect of the bill, as it is now drafted, if it becomes law, will be to extend the amount of work that can be legally done on Sundays. To the simple provision against working and trading on the first day of the week, is added various exceptions. The first and most indefinite exception, according to our contemporary's analysis, arises out of the division of jurisdiction between the federal and provincial legislative bodies. It is admitted that a legislature may have passed an act which will create an exception to Parliament's law. This would probably permit street railways to be operated seven days in the week, at any rate where they are now in existence and so privileged. What else it would permit local and legal knowledge would be required to say. Then there are in the bill itself eighteen clauses creating exceptions. They apply chiefly to transportation and industrial operations. They open a wide door, and one that it would be impracticable to keep shut. There are industrial processes which must be carried on continuously. There are classes of freight which would suffer by the delay of twenty-four hours in transportation to a market. Then there is the convenience of passengers on long journeys and on journeys which begin on Saturday and may not conclude till Sunday or later. There are railway tracks and yards to be kept clear, ships to be cared for, ferries to be operated, and so on. All these mean a large employment of labor on the day of rest, which it is sought to compensate the workers for in many cases by requiring that on some other day they shall be given a rest of 24 hours. This will apply to milkmen and domestic servants, among others. It is likely to be but little observed, if it is finally enacted.

The main point aimed at is rest from labor, and upon this there is general agreement, but the exceptions strew the path of the legislators with many a thorn. The bill is the result of conferences between the Minister of Justice and the Alliance, which is stronger in Ontario than elsewhere in the Dominion. At best it is a liberal compromise, but one which, from remarks dropped at the General Assembly of the Presbyterians, the Alliance is content to accept. Opposed to the bill is a pretty solid popular opinion in the sister province of Quebec, where the idea of recreation after mass is viewed with great liberality.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Where are you going to spend your vacation?

Probably depends on how much you have to spend, eh?

"A Cyclist for Years" writes: "I was glad to see you mention the question of allowing bicycles to be ridden on the walks in certain portions of this city. Of course, no one would think of advocating their being allowed on Front St., or any of the principal streets, but why not on the outlying residential streets, with the rule that every cyclist must, under penalty, dismount when he or she arrives within certain distance of a pedestrian? As things are at present, a man is allowed to push a wheelbarrow, with an iron-bound wheel, on the sidewalk, but of a man or woman ride a rubber-tired bicycle on the same walk he or she is liable to a fine. I would like to see the Council consider this matter."

A little warm weather now, to ripen the strawberries, would, as the sermon reports say, be "much appreciated."

Officials of a railroad running out of Chicago have ruled that passenger conductors must keep their trousers creased. Now to make the trainmen take lessons in voice culture.

That little English band, which played on the park yesterday afternoon, opened the eyes of a few budding musicians in this city.

An ocean liner just arrived at New York reports having killed a whale which was unable to get out of its way. Scorching at sea is getting to be as reckless as it is on land.

A doctor who told the American Medical Association about taking a pair of suspenders from a man's esophagus missed his calling. He ought to be the advance man for a circus.

A New York woman has set up a claim to ownership of the sun and demands that all the money in the world be paid her for its use. Just like a woman to claim the sun. A man would have wanted the daughter.

A man who was once pronounced dead by doctors will be married in a few days to a girl in Shamokin, Pa. Perhaps in a few days he'll be sorry the report was not true.

The Brockville Times thinks that town may get a swimming bath about the year 2000 A.D. We feel sorry for Brockville, if it has to wait so long as that. Belleville will have one in 1999.

That coping stone incident of yesterday has given rise to considerable conversation. It will be remembered that a coping stone, weighing about 125 pounds, fell from the third story of a Front St. building and just "hauled off" and missed a citizen by about 18 inches. Had it struck him—well, it would have been a case of "The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful."

"A miss is as good as a mile," of course, but it rather starts one thinking when he realizes that this is (so we are told) the third incident of this kind that has happened inside the last half year. That being the case, the novelty has worn off, and it is time the thing was stopped. Of course it adds a little spice to our humdrum existence to think that, in walking down our main aisle we may at any time feel the gentle tap of a coping stone on our knowledge box, but the average man would just as soon live the simple life and leave dodging coping stones to others.

It would appear that some kind of an inspection of coping stones is needed. We don't know whose department this matter comes under, but it seems to be up to somebody to move. It may seem unkind to thus advocate a thing which is directly adverse to the interests of our esteemed friends the undertakers, but who of us would like to be hit with a coping stone falling from a third storey? Or who would like to see one of his friends hit? It is possible, of course, that there would be little grieving if one—or possibly two—at present in this city were hit with a coping stone, but in cases of that kind it's always the wrong man who gets hit.

There seems to be little foundation for the story that the Ottawa Government is going to build the foundation for the new armory this summer. After the fishing season starts Mr. Hurley won't have any time to think about it, anyhow.

The man on the next block says he saw a cab stop yesterday afternoon and two splendidly attired young ladies get out. The first thing they did was to shake their pretty heads, and a lot of rice fell to the ground. Now, where do you suppose those girls had been?

They say the fog signals which were placed on the track yesterday, under the Mayor's train, refused to go off. At all events we didn't hear 'em.

O, GIRLS!

(The Khan.)

I'm a bride, O, girls, a bride,
Hither quick, and see me,
I'm a bride, I'm a bride, I'm a bride!
How'd you like to be me?
Fate—he's painted yellow—
Tried to twenty-three me.
But Cupid (dear old fellow!)
Came one night to see me.
O, Girls!

I'm a bride, I'm a bride, I'm a bride—
Hither quick to see me.
I'm a bride, I'm a bride, I'm a bride—
How'd you like to be me?
Here's roses white and red,
Here's roses pink and creamy,
Their odors yet unshed,
They're soft and sweet and dreamy.
O, Girls!

O' girls, the world is beamy:
Full of rays of light,
Crazy do not deem me:
I'm wild with sweet delight.
A little band of gold.
A kiss, a hug, did fee me:
Ladies, young and old,
How'd you like to be me?
O, girls, girls, girls.
Girls, girls, girls!
Girls, girls, girls, girls,
Girls, girls, girls!
Hither come and feel me.
His hoop of gold did fee me.
Here he comes to steal me—
How'd you like to be me?

The communication received by Col. Ponton from Mr. Joseph James, re water power on the Moira river, is full of valuable and highly interesting information. No other man in Hastings County, perhaps, is so well qualified to give it as Mr. James. It appears in another column, and is worthy an attentive perusal and future action on the part of all interested in cheap power in this city and county—a subject, by the way, in which all who have Belleville's interests at heart should be interested.

The longer Mr. A. B. Aylesworth, Minister of Justice, remains in Parliament, the more it becomes apparent that the electors who twice "turned him down" had a correct conception of the character of the man. His conduct in the House yesterday was worthy of a man who could promise the Trent canal terminus, or anything else, to gain votes.

Canned Meat Scandals Crop Up In London

YANKEE CANNERS HAVEN'T GOT IT ALL THEIR OWN WAY — A DISGUSTING TALE.

London, June 15.—(Special)—A Camberwell sanitary inspector has sent a report which declares that a firm engaged in manufacturing tinned "delicacies," such as potted chicken and tongue, had been making them out of old tinned meat which had been worked over and other materials added, under circumstances too loathsome to give in detail.

The inspector cites instances of meat from cows that died of disease finding its way into the London butcher shops, while all sorts of refuse and dirty scraps are put into the London-made sausages, he declares.

The inspector said that recently, in a jam factory, he found 900 pounds of dried raisins filled with ants and other insects, rotten apple pulp, orange peel, filthy macaroni and other refuse bought from grocers, all of which was being treated and made into jam.

Many London confectioners, he said, use rotten eggs in the manufacture of the delicacies.

DRUNK AND DISORDERLY.

Last night some young men were acting in a disorderly manner on Panter's park, west side of the river. An officer caught one of them, Samuel Thompson, and he was this morning fined $2. The names of the other parties have been secured and they will be summoned.

DOG CASES.

A number of cases against citizens who had neglected to take out licenses for their dogs were down for hearing to-day, but nearly all had taken out licenses since the summonses were issued. The cases were subsequently dismissed.

The Hack Tariff,

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Sir, — In view of the action of the hack and livery men's combine it may be well for them to read over the below tariff of charges, under which they obtain their license. I procured a copy of the City By-laws, as I considered the charge of 75c for three persons from the depot for about 1-4 mile an imposition. Clause 15 reads:

For each person under one-quarter of a mile	$ .15
For each person over one-quarter and under one-half mile	.20
Over one-half mile and to any distance in the city	.25
A 2-horse conveyance for first hour	1.00
Every subsequent hour	.75
A single horse conveyance for first hour	.65
Every subsequent hour	.50

Fractional parts of an hour in proportion and each vehicle to convey from one to four persons.

"TRAVELLER."

Entertained His Company

Capt. Barragar, of the Fifteenth Regiment, last evening entertained the members of his company at his residence on Hillside street. All the members were present and a most enjoyable time was spent in songs, speech-making, etc. Ice cream and other refreshments were served, and the popular host and his estimable wife did all in their power to make the boys enjoy themselves. Before the jolly party broke up a hearty vote of thanks was tendered Capt. and Mrs. Barragar for their kind hospitality, and cheers for the King and the Captain were heartily given.

Six Months in "2 in 1."

A Consulting Chemist Makes a Novel Experiment. An Unsolicited Letter that Explains Itself.

"I write to state that on account of your "2 in 1" Shoe Polish being criticised, and the charge made that it injured leather, I made this test as follows:

I mixed the contents of a box of "2 in 1" Shoe Polish, bought at a retail store from regular stock, with four ounces of water and into this mixture put a kid glove, and left the said glove in the mixture in a bottle from June 15th to December 15th, 1905—a full six months. I then took the glove out, washed it and examined it. The fine leather of the glove was not affected in the least. It was as pliable and soft as when new, and was not altered in condition, nor were the stitches affected in any way. This test, I consider, proves that "2 in 1" does not injure the finest leather.

I hereby state that these facts are correct and true.

J. M. WILLIAMS, Consulting Chemist,
Hamilton, Dec. 15th, 1905.

Many Women have Kidney Trouble and don't know it. They attribute their ill-health to "weakness." Dragging pains in the hips, backache, nervousness, tiredness, headaches—are more often caused by sick kidneys. If your kidneys are not well, the other delicate organs are disturbed and inflamed, bringing on the horrors of female weakness and the serious troubles often attending pregnancy.

The York Loan.

The Hamilton Herald has the following, which will be interesting to people in this city who may not yet have sent in their "books:"

The authority on which Ald. Gilbert made the announcement that a dividend would soon be paid by the York County Loan company was the following letter he received from R. Holmes Smith, the assignee: "We enclose you a list of the shareholders in Hamilton who have not yet sent in their books and certificates. To those who object to handing over their books and certificates, you might state that unless we receive both the books and certificates they will not be placed on the list of the shareholders for the dividend, which will be paid in the near future."

The Last Rites.

The funeral of the late ex-Ald. Cooper took place this afternoon from the family residence, Moira street, and was largely attended. Representatives were present from the City Council, Board of Health and Fire Department. The remains were taken to Christ Church, where the burial service of the Anglican Church was conducted by the Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave. The bearers were Messrs. S. R. Gorman, F. M. Clarke, J. N. Pringle, S. Burrows, E. G. Sills and Walter Alford.

A Narrow Escape.

A Consecon correspondent writes: "As Miss Rae Weeks, Miss Lillian Gordon and Miss Nellie Weeks were driving from Pleasant Bay to Consecon on Friday evening last they met an automobile coming up Consecon hill just as they came around the turn to descend the hill. As soon as their horse noticed the machine he turned around and upset the buggy and broke the top very badly, but Miss Nellie pluckily held onto the horse and prevented a runaway, in which the girls might have been badly injured. We are pleased to report no serious injuries."

Died at Chepstow

An elderly lady named Mrs. John Cummins died yesterday at Chepstow, Ont. Deceased was upwards of 80 years of age, and was a member of the Roman Catholic Church. Mrs. Cummins was the mother-in-law of Mr. J. W. McNab, of this city, and a cousin of Mr. Jas. Cummins, also of this city. These gentlemen have gone to Chepstow to attend the funeral.

Married in Manitoba

A very pretty but quiet wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Geo Addison, Green Ridge (formerly of Belleville) on June 6th, at one o'clock, when their niece, Miss Edith Amelia Post, was united in the bonds of holy matrimony to Mr. John Pott, Stuartburn. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. B. Chestnut, of Green Ridge. The bride was given away by her father, and looked charming in a dress of white silk organdie, trimmed with white valenciennes lace, insertion and orange blossoms, and carried a large bouquet of lilies of the valley. The bridesmaid was Miss Jane Pott, sister of the groom, who looked very pretty in a dress of sky blue nun's veiling, trimmed with lace, carrying a bouquet of lilies of the valley. Miss Lenora Froom, cousin of the bride, did the duties of maid of honor and looked very pretty in a dainty dress of white, with bouquet of violets. The happy groom was ably supported by Mr. John Dingman, of Napanee, Ont. After the ceremony was performed and the congratulations given, the guests, upwards of fifty, sat down to a sumptuous dinner prepared by the hostess. The bride received many useful and beautiful presents, which showed the high esteem in which she was held. The bride and groom left for their new home in Planky Plain, Stuartburn, amid a shower of rice and good wishes.

SUNDAY AT THE FARM.

On Sunday mornin's years ago, when but a little lad,
I used to come to salt the cows in this same field with dad.
The little clouds that floated round I thought were bits of wool;
The sky was blue as 'tis to-day and calm and beautiful.

Now dad is gone and mother, too; they lie up on the hill,
Just by that clump of poplar trees, beyond the old red mill.
For time has kept a-creepin' on, and you and I are men,
And little Bobbie thinks the thoughts that I was thinkin' then.

And now I come out here and set me down a spell,
Where rustlin' leaves and wavin' grain seem whisperin', "All is well."
I wish that all who'd like to feel their dead is safe from harm
Could come out here and spend with me a Sunday on the farm.

Very few people lose their minds because their neighbors lose their money.

VICTORIA FALLS.

Called "the Most Beautiful Gem of the Earth's Scenery."

The Zambezi river, carrying a huge volume of water two miles in width, as it reaches the western borders of Rhodesia precipitates itself into a cavernous gorge and thus traverses the northern plains of the country.

This great drop in the river has produced "the most beautiful gem of the earth's scenery," the Victoria falls. Almost twice as broad as Niagara and two and a half times as high, an immense mass of water rolls over its edge to precipitate itself in magnificent splendor 400 sheer feet into the narrow canyon below.

Undeterred, the Rhodesian engineers, without detracting from the natural beauty of the surroundings, threw across the canyon a splendid 650 foot cantalever bridge and thus opened the way to Tanganyika, to Uganda, to Cairo.

This bridge, the greatest railway engineering triumph of Africa, deserves more than passing notice. It consists of a central span weighing approximately 1,000 tons, 500 feet in length and 30 feet wide. The steel work is of rolled steel weighing 490 pounds to the cubic foot. The end posts of the bridge are over 100 feet long. The pull on the anchorage apparatus is about 400 tons.

The contract for the construction was obtained by an English firm of bridge builders—the contract time fifty-five weeks. The work of erection was carried on from both banks, the material being taken across the river by means of an aerial electric railway. The electrical conveyor of this cable way was capable of dealing with a ten ton load at a lifting speed of twenty feet per minute and a traversing speed of 300 feet a minute.

An initial difficulty in the construction of the bridge was the securing of a firm foundation, and owing to the crumbling nature of the bank a much greater quantity of concrete was necessary than estimated.

The construction was happily unattended by accidents of a serious nature, though a few slight accidents to body work and the replacing from England of one piece of steel work were recorded. In spite of these delays the bridge was linked up at 7 a. m. on April 1, 1905, or exactly forty-eight hours earlier than had been estimated a year before.—Lieutenant Colonel Sir Percy Girouard in Scribner's.

Cured Him.

"I wish my husband would not stay out at night," said the little woman.

"Cure him," said her companion, "as a woman I know cured her husband, who used to stay out every night. One night he came in very late, or, rather, very early, about 3 o'clock in the morning. He came home very quietly. In fact, he took off his shoes on the front doorstep. Then he unlocked the door and went cautiously and slowly upstairs on tiptoe, holding his breath. But light was streaming through the keyhole of the door of the bedroom. With a sigh, he paused. Then he opened the door and entered. His wife stood by the bureau fully dressed.

"'I didn't expect you'd be sitting up for me, my dear,' he said.

"'I haven't been," she said. 'I just came in myself.'"

Presence of Mind.

Mme. Rachel, the great actress, was resting alone in her dressing room one night preparatory to going on the stage when a man suddenly entered and, drawing a dagger, said he was going to kill her if she did not at once consent to marry him. The actress saw at a glance that the man was mad and meant what he said. So with the utmost coolness she replied: "Certainly I will marry you. I wish nothing better. Come with me to the priest at once. I have had him come here for the purpose." She took his arm, and they went out together—to where there was assistance, of course, and the man was immediately put under arrest.

Deduction by Analogy.

"Mamma, I's got a stomach ache," said Nellie Bly, six years old.

"That's because you've been without lunch. It's because your stomach is empty. You would feel better if you had something in it."

That afternoon the pastor called and in the course of conversation remarked that he had been suffering all day with a very severe headache.

"That's because it is empty," said Nellie. "You'd feel much better if you had something in it."

Time For Weaning.

"I trust your honor will excuse me this time," said a habitual drunkard at the police court. "It is my misfortune—I am a child of genius."

"And what is your age?" questioned the magistrate.

"Forty-two years."

"Then it is time you were weaned. You'll have to do ten days away from the bottle."

Such a Temper.

His Wife—But I don't think, George, that you ought to object to mamma. Why, just think, if it hadn't been for her you would never have had me! Her Husband—Huh! Don't try to excuse her by saying that. You make me hate her worse than ever.

Doing Their Best.

"Didn't I understand you to say they keep a servant girl?"

"Certainly not. I said they try to. As soon as one goes they get another."

Speech is too often not, as the Frenchman defined it, the art of concealing thought, but of quite stifling and suspending thought, so that there is none to conceal.—Carlyle.

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness," she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can re-paper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how. The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

A St. John, N. B., pastor advances the theory that young men are driven to crime because they are not sufficiently paid, and he cited the case as an illustration of a young man who handled large sums of money, and who was paid $35 per month. If the reverend gentleman would investigate, says the Montreal Gazette, he would be surprised to learn that in the great majority of the defalcations of young men, the fault arises from indulgence in things which any young man can only indulge in at his own risk. It is a question of morals, not money, and no amount of the latter can ever make the former what they should be. A single man of good morals could live with comfort in St. John on $35 per month; a young man of defective morals would not be likely to do any better on $350 than on $35.

The Montreal Gazette has declared its belief that a good deal of the meat trades agitation was "sensational" and "shrieking." To this the St. John's News made a warm retort, demanding if it were sensational for General Miles to declare that 5000 soldiers of the United States lost their lives during the Spanish-American war from eating embalmed beef supplied to them from the packing houses. To this the Gazette finds a ready answer. It looked up the official records and found that the total number of deaths from disease during the war was 4,680, or 320 less than the estimate of General Miles. When the ordinary death rate is deducted, and the number of deaths due to such causes as bad water, it seems to be quite possible to convict General Miles of exaggeration.

The button-in-the-back waist appears to be the cause of no end of trouble to the ladies. The Whirl of Society writer of the Chicago Inter-Ocean notes a protest against the fashion and adds; —"Where are the women reformers? Truly, here is a field worthy of their best efforts. How many of us have been shocked, let alone horrified, at exhibitions resulting from the very uncertain fasteners of these feminine articles of wear-apparel. And how many more husbands have adopted the use of words never before in their vocabulary since the introduction of these back loops and microscopic buttonholes. Besides, when husbands are not around and no maid or other feminine creatures are available, the elevator boy or anybody at all, so I am told, is pressed into service. Out in Kenilworth there is a young couple who have been going through tortures from inefficient and ever varying domestic service. The husband thought he had a way out. "We will hire a Jap," he said. "One can do as much as three maids, I am told, and it will be well done." "But who will button my waists?" asked his wife That settled it. Then unsatisfactory maids were retained."

MAJOR MOODIE TESTIFIES.

Commander of the Arctic Before the Parliamentary Committee—The Fur and Friday Fish Stories.

Ottawa, June 15.—Major Moodie, commandant of the "Arctic" expedition, was called before the enquiry committee yesterday and questioned by F. F. Pardee as to the sort of requisitions by which supplies were got from the hold. Major Moodie said the steward made weekly requisitions, which the purser copied, and which he himself authorized. From these requisitions monthly reports were made up. The first of each month the steward was given charge of what was estimated as a month's supplies. Major Moodie said that anything issued to patrol parties or parties leaving the ship for any purpose was shown on special requisition.

Edward Carvell wanted an explanation of the statement made by Steward Duchesney as to the purchase of furs and their transfer to the Neptune.

"My explanation is that there is not a word of truth in it," said Major Moodie, who declared that the furs all came through the Arctic and were not in the Mounted Police storehouse. A few furs were sold at cost as souvenirs to men who were going back north.

Afterwards Major Moodie said that some packages of deerskin boots were taken on the Neptune for the use of men at the police stations.

No Trading With Indians.

Major Moodie said there was no rule against trading by the Northwest Mounted Police, but there was in the Indian Act. But, properly speaking, they did not trade, they paid for work done in kind, as money would be no use to these people. He disputed the allegation of Duchesney that he had his knife out for the French-Canadians. Indeed, one of them he had recommended to be promoted to second mate. As to the bill-of-fare and there being no fish on Friday, Moodie said he had made it up himself, because he had asked the steward repeatedly to do so and he had always neglected it. He forgot about the fish on Friday. He understood also that Roman Catholics, when away on such a trip, where fish could not be got were allowed a special dispensation.

"But there were fish on board the Arctic," said Mr Bergeron.

The Friday Fish.

The major explained that he did not think they had enough to last the voyage. Mr. Bergeron could not understand why Major Moodie had had fish on the Wednesday instead of the Friday, and Moodie replied that it was simply a case of forgetfulness. St. Jean Baptiste day was not observed because he did not remember the date. For 27 years he had lived in the Northwest, and was very little in the east, so that he had no chance of becoming familiar with the date.

W. S. Mitchell of the Bovril Co. of Montreal produced the orders given the company for goods for the Arctic. The firm had supplied bovril and pemmican. The pemmican was beef dried and shredded, mixed with fat and currants and pressed. It would almost require an axe to cut it. The orders were 900 lbs. bovril, 10,000 pemmican, and 7,000 lbs. condensed meats.

Paid Too Much.

Mr. Mitchell said that when the cheque, which was for over $9,000, came from the Government, he found that Col. Gourdeau had sent $45.30 too much. He wrote Col. Gourdeau pointing out the mistake and offering to refund the money, but got no reply. However, the matter was again taken up about a week ago and the money had been refunded.

When he received the cheque it was mentioned that the payment was for "bovril, pemmican and freight." Receiving no reply from Col. Gourdeau he had charged the $45.30 to freight account. A more concentrated article had been sold to the Government than the standard bovril on the market, and so a higher price had been charged. Then, again, the order had to be filled so quickly that they had to work overtime to supply it. Mr. Mitchell said they had had a good deal of trouble to get paid by the Government. They had to wait a whole year. There had been no discussion at any time with the department as to a reduction on account of the size of the order.

Any One Can Spell Shakespeare.

One is not in danger of misspelling the word Shakespeare. Some one has discovered 4,000 ways, of which the following, as they actually appear in old documents, are examples; Shakspere, Shaxpere, Shakspire, Schaxper, Shakespere, Shagpere, Schakspeyr, Shaxespere, Shaxpur, Shaxper, Shaksper, Schackspeare, Saxpere, Shackespire, Shakespire, Shackespeare, Shakaspear, Shakspear, Shaxpeare, Shakspeere, Shaxpure, Shackspeyr, Shakspear, Schakesper, etc. If the chirography of Shakespeare himself is any authority twenty-two of these ways are correct.

A Nation of Sleepers.

"Rare slumberers are the Turks," declares a writer. "In the villages, at any rate, they will drop into the land of dreams on the slightest pretext and at the shortest notice. This habit has advantages, one being that the Turk does not at all mind being awakened in the dead of night, for the simple reason that he can go to sleep again the instant he wishes. When staying in very limited quarters I have often heard a member of the family get up and after searching about among his sleeping companions thoroughly rouse them, all to ask where his tobacco was or upon some equally slight excuse."

Enough Money.

Half a dozen brokers were discussing Russell Sage and his peculiarities when one of them told this story: The financier was once asked, "When does a man get enough money, Mr. Sage?" "When he gets $10,000 more," said Uncle Russell as he stopped at an apple stand for a moment. Then he passed on without buying.

PORTABLE VILLAGES.

Turcomans Move Their Houses From Place to Place.

The Turcomans, who live on the eastern shore of the Caspian sea, carry their villages about with them when they travel. As a tribe sets out on a journey every man packs his wooden house upon a camel, which the animal can easily carry, and when a spot is reached where he and his friends intend to remain for any great length of time the camels are unloaded and a village started which it takes about an hour or so to build.

It is to be remembered that the houses are real houses and not tents and that the settlement is not a camp, but a village. The traveling house of the Turcoman is a marvel of skill and ingenuity and is really much lighter, more portable and can be packed into a much smaller compass than any of the so called portable houses that are manufactured and sold in some parts of our country.

The frame is made of strong, light wood laths about an inch broad by three-quarters of an inch thick, crossing each other when set up in position at right angles about a foot apart and fastened at each crossing by the thongs of rawhide so as to be movable, and the whole framework may be opened or shut in the same manner as those toys for children that consist of a squad of wooden soldiers and will expand or close at will so as to form open or close columns.

One part or more made in this way and all inclosing a circle fifteen or twenty feet across form the skeleton of the walls and are firmly secured in place by bands of ropes made of hair or wool fastened round the end of each rod. From the upper ends of these rods similar rods bent near the wall and into something less than a right angle are so disposed that the longer portions slope to the center and, being tied with rope, form the roof.

Over this is thrown a covering of black felt, having in the center a large hole which answers both for a window and a chimney. Large pieces of the same coarse black felt are wrapped round the walls, and outside these, to keep all tight, is bound another frame of split reeds or canes or of some very light, tough wood bound closely together with strong cords.

Too much publicity spoils a good deed.

He who has no faith in himself is destined to become a successful failure.

The brave and fearless man manages to get there early and thus avoids the rush.

A wise man doesn't attempt to pull himself out of trouble with a corkscrew.

If a man is unable to stand prosperity he should sit down and give his wife a chance.

The suspicious man keeps one eye on his neighbor, but the wise man keeps both eyes on himself.

Church Pillars.

The joke of the vicar of Withycombe, Devon, at the Easter vestry as to his laggard churchwarden being not a "pillar" but a "buttress" of the church because he supported it outside reminds one, says a correspondent, of another joke of the same kind delivered from a London pulpit by the Rev. John McNeil. John was minister of the "Scotch church," Regent square, at the time and in his own homely way was driving his points home with telling effect. He suddenly paused, after exhorting his congregation to be workers, and then, with a twinkle in his eye, said, "You know, I always think of church members being divided into two classes—pillars and caterpillars."—London Chronicle.

When Making Fast the Flag Halyards

"Many a slender flagpole has been ruined," said a rigger, "by drawing the halyards down too snugly when making them fast after hauling down the flag. If this is done in dry weather and it comes on wet, the shrinking of the halyards thus drawn taut to start with may be enough to bend the pole, and if it should be left in that way long enough the pole would be permanently bent. Flag halyards when no flag is flying should be made fast with a little slack."

With a Home.

The great millionaire looked up impatiently.

"Well," he said, "what is it?"

"I desire, sir," the young man faltered, "to marry your daughter, provided"—

The other frowned.

"Provided what?"

"Just provided," murmured the youth.

Vocabularies.

The English language, according to a German statistician who has made a study of the comparative wealth of languages, heads the list with the enormous vocabulary of 260,000 words; German comes next, with 80,000 words; then Italian, with 75,000; French, 30,000; Turkish, 22,500, and Spanish, 20,000.

"Something Just as Good."

The pretty darling entered the bookstore. "I want to get 'Kidnapped,' by Mr. Stevenson," she said.

"Er—I think," replied the clerk—"I think I'd like that job myself."—Boston Transcript.

CULTIVATING THE CHILD.

How Any Trait May Be Fixed In a Normal Human Being.

There is not a single desirable attribute which, lacking in a plant, may not be bred into it. Choose what improvement you wish in a flower, a fruit or a tree, and by crossing, selection, cultivation and persistence you can fix this desirable trait irrevocably. Pick out any trait you want in your child, granted that he is a normal child, be it honesty, fairness, purity, lovableness, industry, thrift, what not. By surrounding this child with sunshine from the sky and your own heart, by giving the closest communion with nature, by feeding him well balanced, nutritious food, by giving him all that is implied in healthful environmental influences and by doing all in love you can thus cultivate in this child and fix there for all his life all of these traits—naturally not always to the full in all cases at the beginning of the work, for heredity will make itself felt first, and, as in the plant under improvement, there will be certain strong tendencies to reversion to former ancestral traits, but in the main with the normal child you can give him all these traits by patiently, persistently guiding him in these early formative years.

And, on the other side, give him foul air to breathe, keep him in a dusty factory or an unwholesome schoolroom or a crowded tenement up under the hot roof; keep him away from the sunshine, take away from him music and laughter and happy faces, cram his little brains with so called knowledge, all the more deceptive and dangerous because made so apparently adaptable to his young mind; let him have associates in his hours out of school, and at the age of ten you have fixed in him the opposite traits. He is on his way to the gallows. You have perhaps seen a prairie fire sweep through the tall grass across a plain. Nothing can stand before it; it must burn itself out. That is what happens when you let the weeds grow up in a child's life and then set fire to them by wrong environment.—Luther Burbank in Century.

THE GOLDFINCH.

Changes In Plumage That Are Puzzling to the Novice.

Most every one in America is acquainted with the goldfinch, but many people know the bird by the name of lettuce bird on account of its bright yellow color. Goldfinch is a very appropriate name, as the bright yellow of the male when in breeding plumage is like burnished gold. The female goldfinch is more modestly dressed than her mate. The changes in plumage of the male are very interesting and to the novice somewhat puzzling. Until the student becomes acquainted with the bird he may wonder why he sees no males during the winter. The truth is at this season the flocks of supposed female goldfinches are really of both sexes, the male bird having assumed in the previous fall, usually by the end of October, a plumage closely resembling that of the female and young bird of the year. The male retains this inconspicuous dress until late in February, when one can notice a gradual change taking place in some of the birds. This renewal of feathers is actively continued through March and April, and by the first of May our resplendent bird is with us again. The song period with the male goldfinch continues as long as he wears his gold and black livery, for it commences as early as the middle of March and ends late in August. Goldfinches are very cleanly in their habits and bathe frequently. Their nests are exquisite pieces of bird architecture, the inside being lined with the softest plant down. The mother bird is the builder, her handsome consort during the nest building time devoting most of his efforts to singing to cheer his industrious mate.

Grant's Presence of Mind.

An instance of great presence of mind was narrated by John Russell Young, says a writer in the Grand Magazine. Once during the civil war, when Grant was in subordinate command, he was reconnoitering alone near the enemy's lines. Suddenly he found himself confronted by one of the Confederates' pickets, who was for arresting him. "Sho! Sho!" said Grant, with the utmost coolness. "Can't you see I am reconnoitering in the enemy's uniform? Don't make a noise. I shall be back directly." And he walked away quietly until out of the picket's sight, then ran as nimbly as he could.

Dust In One's Eyes.

To "cast dust in one's eyes" perfectly explains itself. It is, however, interesting to know that Epaminondas at the battle of Tegea defeated the Spartans by masking his movements with a large body of cavalry. He caused the horsemen to gallop to and fro in front of the enemy in such a way as to raise a cloud of dust and so veiled the movements of his infantry and enabled them to take up a new and more advantageous position.

A Premier's Wit.

A woman once told Lord Palmerston that her maid, who had been with her in the Isle of Wight, objected to going thither again because the climate was not "embracing" enough. "What am I to do with such a woman?" she asked. "You had better take her to the Isle of Man next time," said Lord Palmerston.

Infrequent.

Kind Lady—I have nothing but some lobster salad and mince pie. You surely don't want that for your breakfast? Weary Walker—Oh, dis is me dinner, mum. I had me breakfast day before yesterday.

Winged time glides on insensibly and deceives us, and there is nothing more fleeting than years.—Ovid.

ASSUMING A VIRTUE.

What Can Be Done by Right Thinking and Self Control.

Zopyrus, the physiognomist, said, "Socrates' features showed that he was stupid, brutal, sensual and addicted to drunkenness." Socrates upheld the analysis by saying, "By nature I am addicted to all these sins, and they were only restrained and vanquished by the continual practice of virtue."

Emerson says in effect, "The virtue you would like to have, assume it as already yours, appropriate it, enter into the part and live the character just as the great actor is absorbed in the character of the part he plays." No matter how great your weakness or how much you may regret it, assume steadily and persistently its opposite until you acquire the habit of holding that thought or of living the thing not in its weakness, but in its wholeness, in its entirety. Hold the ideal of an efficient faculty or quality, not of a marred or deficient one. The way to reach or to attain to anything is to bend oneself toward it with all one's might, and we approximate it just in proportion to the intensity and the persistency of our effort to attain it.

If you are inclined to be very excitable and nervous, if you "fly all to pieces" over the least annoyance, do not waste your time regretting this weakness and telling everybody that you cannot help it. Just assume the calm, deliberate, quiet, balanced composure which characterizes your ideal person in that respect. Persuade yourself that you are not nervous or excitable, that you can control yourself, that you are well balanced, that you do not fly off on a tangent at every little annoyance. You will be amazed to see how the perpetual holding of this serene, calm, quiet attitude will help you to become like your thought.—Success.

CATCHING COLD.

Suggestions That May Keep One From the Doctor.

A person in good health, with fair play, easily resists cold, but when the health flags a little and liberties are taken with the stomach or with the nervous system a chill is easily taken and, according to the weak spot of the individual, assumes the form of a cold or pneumonia, or it may be jaundice. Of all causes of cold probably fatigue is one of the most efficient. A jaded man coming home at night from a long day's work, a growing youth losing two hours' sleep over evening parties two or three times a week or a young lady heavily "doing the season," young children overfed and with short allowance of sleep, are common instances of the victims of cold.

Luxury is favorable to chill taking. Very hot rooms, feather beds, soft chairs, create a sensitiveness that leads to catarrhs. It is not, after all, the cold that is so much to be feared as the antecedent conditions that give the attack a chance of doing harm. Some of the worst colds happen to those who do not leave their house or even their beds, and those who are most invulnerable are often those who are most exposed to changes of temperature and who by good sleep, cold bathing and regular habits preserve the tone of their nervous system and circulation.

Probably many chills are contracted at night or at the fag end of the day, when tired people get the equilibrium of their circulation disturbed by either overheated sitting rooms or underheated bedrooms and beds. This is especially the case with elderly people. In such cases the mischief is not always done instantaneously or in a single night. It often takes place insidiously, extending over days or even weeks.—London Lancet.

Fighting the Current.

Papua has swift streams well stocked with fish. An explorer tells of Papuan fresh water mullet which sometimes weigh as much as fifteen pounds. "These fish are wonderfully provided by nature with an appliance which helps them to combat the extraordinary currents. At one moment you will see them being swept down resistlessly, but suddenly they shoot off into the quieter water and attach themselves to the rocks by a strong sucker near the mouth. There they hang just outside the current, their tails moving gently with it, and when they have recovered their strength they make another dash through the swifter waters."

Observance of the Sabbath.

There was the minister of Tweedsmuir who on a certain Sabbath found a salmon stranded in shallow water and who, being unable conscientiously to take it out on such a day, built a hedge of stones around it and, returning on the morrow, claimed his prize. There was the old farmer who could not go to the kirk because he had neglected to shave on the Saturday night, and he would not profane the day by the use of any edged tool.

A True Fish Story.

Here is a fish story told by a British nobleman: An Irishman had caught a big pike. Noting a lump in its stomach, he cut it open. "As I cut it open there was a mighty rush and a flapping of wings, and away flew a wild duck, and when I looked inside there was a nest, with four eggs, and she had been afther sitting on that nest."

Shocking Precocity.

"What is the result," asked the teacher of the primary class in arithmetic, "when you put two and two together?"

"A kith," lisped the curly headed little girl in the front row.—Chicago Tribune.

There are many diversities of vice, but it is one never failing effect of it to live displeased and discontented.—Seneca.

PLANKING FOOD.

A Most Dainty, Healthy and Palatable Method of Cooking.

Planking means to bake or cook food on a plank in the oven or in front of a fire.

It is one of the daintiest, healthiest and most palatable methods of cooking. The plank contains an acid called a pyroligneous acid, and some of this is separated from the plank by the heat of the fire or oven and rises in vapor.

Then the oil which is in the meat or fish is tried out by heat and of course flows down upon the plank. Here it comes in contact with the pyroligneous acid being procured by the distillation of the wood, and, both being hot, a chemical union is formed, with the result that the nature of both oil and acid is changed into a gas which rises, meets the meat or fish and permeates it.

The hot cooking fish or meat easily absorbs this gas, and its properties are in the process chemically changed. In a way it has been "cured," with the result that it has a taste that is palatable and a relish that is appetizing.

Nearly all kinds of meat are improved in the process of planking. Chicken is delicious planked.

As far as fish is concerned no other method of cooking can equal it. Be sure that the plank will go into your oven.

Never wash the plank with soap and water. Sandpaper it, then rub it clean with salt and brown paper and put away in a clean bag until required again.—Pittsburg Press.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR FACE.

How to Treat It to Keep the Skin Fresh and Smooth.

If you want to keep wrinkles from coming wash your face with cold water and then wipe it over with diluted lemon juice. This hardens the skin. Soft, flabby skins may be greatly improved by the steady use of cold water and lemon juice, and the lemon pulp on the skin makes an excellent soap, removing liver spots as well as the grime of daily travel, says the Waverly Magazine.

Hot water should be employed for delicate skins with great care, as it will destroy the elasticity of the muscles. An occasional liberal use of hot water for cleansing, followed with very cold, until the face glows with the reaction, may be beneficial, but should never be given oftener than once a fortnight.

The best dermatologists say much harm is done to the face by indiscriminate and ignorant massage. Massage wrongly given may stretch the muscles and make them flabby. It is a good thing when done as it should be, but how and when it should be given one should learn from a specialist. Very seldom two skins require the same treatment, and what benefits one may do another harm.

Sea salt makes most skins firm. A lady in her forties who has not a wrinkle says it is because she has never gone to bed without first washing her face in cold water and then wiping it with rose water and glycerin.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Do not bathe the body for at least an hour after meals.

The juice of lemon is excellent as a gargle for sore throat, but must not be swallowed.

To cure a ringworm apply a strong solution of borax and water three or four times a day and cover the place with the fine powder very often.

Hot water used both internally and externally is highly recommended by medical men as a cure for insomnia. Bathing the feet in hot water is said to be particularly efficacious.

For a simple cough cure roast a medium sized lemon. When hot through cut and press the juice upon three ounces of pulverized sugar. Take a spoonful whenever the cough is troublesome.

To make honey ointment take equal parts of honey and white flour and stir together with a little soft water, just enough to make a thick paste, solid, not liquid. This is one of the good old fashioned remedies for sores and boils.

Don't Stoop.

The whole secret of standing and walking erect consists in keeping the chin well away from the breast. This throws the head upward and backward, and the shoulders will naturally settle backward and in their true position. Those who stoop in walking generally look downward. The proper way is to look straight ahead, upon the same level with the eyes, or if inclined to stoop until that tendency is overcome look rather above than below the level. Mountaineers are said to be as "straight as an arrow," and the reason is because they are obliged to look upward so much. It is simply impossible to stoop in walking if this rule is practiced. All round shouldered persons carry the chin near the breast and pointed downward. Take warning in time and heed this advice, for a bad habit is more easily prevented than cured. The habit of stooping when one walks or stands is a bad habit and especially hard to cure.

How to Wash Butter.

Butter should be washed if pastry is to be of the best, so as to remove salt and buttermilk. Scald an earthen bowl with hot water, then chill with cold water. Heat the palms of the hands in hot water, then chill them in cold water. By following these directions the butter will not adhere to the bowl or the hands. Wash the butter in the bowl by working with the hands until soft and waxy, having the bowl under a cold water faucet and allowing the water to run. Remove from the bowl and pat and fold until no water flies.—Miss Farmer in Woman's Home Companion.

BANKS IN A FIRE CITY

THE PRESSING NEED OF MONEY IN A STRICKEN COMMUNITY.

Experience of a Chicago Financial House In 1871—Greed of Depositors and How It Showed Itself—An Unexpected Proposition.

Whenever a great fire devastates a large city the first effort of those concerned with the work of restoration is to get the banks open so that the pressing needs of a homeless population may be cared for. At such times business is done on a strictly cash basis, and everything sells at a premium. The consequence is an extraordinary demand for hand to hand money, since the merchant can use the poor man's dollar to better advantage than the rich man's credit in buying supplies to replenish his flame emptied warehouse.

The struggle that ensues to obtain all the cash in sight is full of human interest. It has its picturesque features. On Monday, Oct. 10, 1871, when all Chicago trudged downtown to see what was left of the city, great crowds besieged the banks. Some men were crying, others talked incoherently, and everybody seemed half dazed. An officer of one of Chicago's greatest banks, who fought his way through the smoldering embers to the white marble hall which surrounded his vault, gave the following description of what occurred:

"Although the iron door of the vault had been somewhat expanded by heat, I found that the combination worked perfectly. That reassured me, and after hunting about the debris I fished out one or two iron crowbars and by wedging them in finally opened the vault door. The inclosure smelled smoky, but I soon found that the cash was all right, and so were our books. That made me feel good, and I got down to work in short order. The first thing I did was to look at the balance sheet and see what our exact resources were. A glance showed me that by collecting what was due from out of town creditors the bank could pay everything it owed and declare a 10 per cent dividend besides, even if it lost every dollar due from its Chicago clients. That was all I wanted to know.

"On leaving the vault I saw four men waiting for me in what had been the cashier's office. They were among our largest depositors, and I knew well enough what they wanted. They were of very different types—one a shrewd money lender who had $30,000 to his credit on our books, another was a school treasurer in an outlying district who would have been ruined had we not been able to pay him $25,000, a third was an out of town banker with $150,000 to the credit of his institution in our bank, and the fourth was a man who has since become one of Chicago's greatest capitalists and who had always professed his sincere friendship for me. It was a trying ordeal and one calculated to make each of my visitors show the real stuff that was in him. As events proved, this did not take long.

"The little money lender grabbed me first. With a strange little wink he forced me one side and said in a half whisper, 'Do you know how much I have in your bank?'

"I said, 'Yes, about $30,000.'

"'Well, I will give you $6,000 if you will give me the cash right away.'

"'I won't do that,' said I. 'Your money is all right, but you will have to wait a week for it until we get in shape again.'

"'What,' he fairly gasped, 'do you decline $6,000? That is a good deal of money in a city that has gone to destruction.'

"I answered no, that I would not, and told him in plain English what I thought of him. I said: 'I am not knave enough to take your bribe and give you an unfair advantage over the other depositors, and I am not fool enough to do it, because I know as soon as you discover the bank paid its claims within a week you would sue me for the $6,000. Get out of here right away.'"

"That was the last of him. He took his money when the week was out and kept clear of the bank after that. Then the school treasurer came to me with a straightforward story of how his bondsmen were anxious to know how he stood. When I told him that his money was safe and that he would not lose a cent he burst into tears, saying the news was too good to be true. The out of town banker was also very nice, saying that he did not care to withdraw his money so long as he knew it was safe. Then the man who has since grown enormously wealthy accosted me with the remark that he had come down to see how things stood. That gave me a chance to test him, so I said brusquely:

"'You know how things are as well as I do. Can't you see the position we are in?' 'Oh, yes, yes,' he answered hastily. 'I don't care about the fire. We are all in the same fix. But I want to know how you stand personally. Have you plenty of ready cash? You cannot get credit these days, so if you need anything from the grocer's you want hard cash. I brought you a little'—

"With that the man threw open his coat, dived down into his pocket and dragged out a roll of bills as big as his hands could grasp. Then he straightened them out and divided them into equal piles, retaining one himself and handing me the other. He was dreadfully in earnest, but I told him I could not accept the money and that I thought I could manage without it. He assured me that whatever he had would always be at my disposal. That man has always been one of my best friends."

His Compliment.

"What a lovely morning," he said.

"It is a perfect morning," she replied.

"True," he said. "I haven't seen anything this morning that isn't perfect." And he looked her straight in the face. Then she blushed.

SPYING OUT THE LAND.

Legislative Excursion Makes a Three Days' Trip Through New Ontario—The End of Steel.

"The end of steel" on the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway was reached by the Legislative excursion party on Thursday, May 31. The special train on which the party reached New Liskeard lay there, and the excursionists, or most of them—for a few preferred the side trip on Lake Temiskaming—embarked on lighter cars drawn by a construction engine, the property of Mr. A. R. Macdonell, the contractor, who has some 1,500 men at work on the second section of the road. For a number of miles the track passes through flat country, part of the great clay region, heavily timbered, it is true, but settlement is progressing, and the clearings along the track prove that the land is capable of being converted into good farm land. Later, rock is encountered, and some heavy work has been entailed in laying the track here; then once more the clay country is reached. Steel is now laid 50 miles beyond New Liskeard and eight miles south of the height of land, and grading is completed for 30 miles more. There remains to complete the second section about 25 miles, which will bring the line to the Black River.

Something Yet to Conquer.

There for a time being the line will end, to be continued certainly to the junction with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and as certainly, in the not distant future, to James Bay. The first persons encountered at the end of steel besides the construction gangs were two prospectors, one a man well up in years, the other a mere youth, both carrying enormous packs and both full of the enthusiasm and hope regarding the possibilities of rich mineral discoveries which shall mean more Cobalts in the north. "There are minerals here," the excursionists were told as they stood at the end of steel. "Indications of iron have been more than once encountered of late. Some of the characteristics of the Cobalt field have been found. Who dare prophesy as to the mineral possibilities of this section of the country?"

Dinner In Construction Camp.

The talk at the end of steel, which is at a point where a wide ravine is being partly filled and partly trestled, turned naturally toward the future of the road. It must go on to James Bay was the general opinion, and the conversation on the subject was stimulated by the information of those who know the country that the train was within five miles of that section of the country where the waters flow from James Bay instead of toward it. At the end of steel the members of the party were the guests at a dinner given in the construction camp which bears the name of Boston by Mr. Macdonell, the contractor. It was an excellent meal; everyone enjoyed it. Appetites were keen because of the tramping around the party had done at the end of steel and in the bush alongside the track. It may surprise some readers—as it certainly surprised some of those on the excursion—to know that strawberries—ripe at that—were found in quantities in the bush, and they were tasty to the palate. Wild flowers were also found in abundance.

The line on the second section of the road, as far as it goes, is rough yet, as is to be expected, but the work is making excellent progress, and in a comparatively short time it will be as smooth, no doubt, as on the first section.

The Excursionists at Haileybury.

The party was welcomed at Haileybury by several decorated arches across the main street of the town bore streamers, with legends such as "We Welcome the Legislators to Haileybury," and "Haileybury Greets You." There was no formal program, the party contenting themselves with a walk around the streets and along the wharf, exchanging informal greetings with the townspeople, each of whom believes, as every resident of every town, village and hamlet in this northern country does, that his "burg" is the metropolis of New Ontario.

A Great Country.

Long before the train reached North Bay, and right on to the end of steel, and afterwards as they sailed over Lake Temagami, the excursionists, who visited this part of the country for the first time, were struck by the visible evidences of the timber wealth of the region, the sawmills, pine logs and pulpwood along the line and on the freight cars, and the great virgin stretches of pine timber on Temagami, telling their own story. In addition, the agricultural possibilities of the great fertile tract are past the theory stage, and the mineral wealth is beyond conception. It is a great country; perhaps the report that it was once referred to by one of Ontario's leading statesmen as "the land of the stunted poplar" is only a legend.

Remarkable Immigrants.

The Dominion Line steamer Ottawa and the C. P. R. steamer Lake Erie arrived at Quebec recently with over eighteen hundred immigrants between them, including twenty men and women of the Israelite community, en route to their farm establishments at Benton Harbor, Michigan. The men and women of this peculiar sect are a strange-looking people. Both sexes wear their hair long down their backs and present an appearance of comfort. Thos. Rowe, a meek, subdued individual, manager of the affairs of the community, was at the landing to meet the new-comers, and in conversation with a newspaper correspondent said the Israelites were founded in 1799, and represent the members of the ten lost tribes, and were now gathering at Benton Harbor, where they had purchased farm land and were engaged in agriculture until the time arrived that the stipulated number of the twelve tribes, in all one hundred and forty-four thousand, were got together, when they would proceed to Jerusalem to await the second coming of Christ in 1916, when the present world would end and new conditions prevail. Mr. Rowe said their form of worship was prayer within their own homes. They have a meeting house, but not for worship; it is only used to receive messengers from their chosen leader, Benjamin, and his wife Zury. All their interests are pooled, so that all are equal sharers of the common purse.

THE BOY FROM CALABOGIE.

He was twenty-one in April—forty inches round the chest,
  A soopler or a better boy we'll never see again—
And the way we cheered the lad when he started for the west.
  The town was like a holiday the time he took the train.
    At Calabogie!

"Are ye ever comin' back with the fortune, little Dan,
  From the place they say the money's like the leaves upon the tree?"
"If the minin' boss'll let me, as sure as I'm a man,
  The mother's Christmas turkey won't have to wait for me
    At Calabogie."

And the letters he was writin' to his mother from the west,
  Sure ev'rybody read them, and who could see the harm?
Tellin' how he'd keep the promise to come home and have a rest,
  And the money that was in them was enough to buy a farm
    At Calabogie.

What is it makes the fever leave the weak, and kills the strong?
  And who'd 'a thought our Dannie would ever come to this:
When the Sister had to raise him, and say, "It won't be long
  Till it's home, my lad, you're going to receive a mother's kiss
    At Calabogie."

So we met our little Dannie Christmas morning at the train,
  And we lifted up the long-box without a word to say.
Och! such a boy as Dannie we'll never see again,
  God forgive us, 'twasn't much of a merry Cristmas Day
    At Calabogie!

MR. JAMES DUNSMUIR.

New Governor of British Columbia Is Wealthy, But Unassuming.

The Victoria, B. C., correspondent of The Toronto News says: The appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia of Mr. James Dunsmuir is another illustration of the fact that in politics, as in other matters of life, it is the unexpected which happens. The new appointee, unlike his late father, has no aptitude for politics is not even a clubman, tolerates society only for the pleasure his wife and daughters derive therefrom, and will probably rebel when required to don a court uniform. More, he has always been regarded as a Conservative in politics, although rumor says that to protect his vast interests he frequently considered it advisable to contribute to the campaign funds of both parties.

He had a brief experience of politics, but his impractability as a party man may be judged from a story common enough about the corridors a session or two ago, that his Attorney-General had to inveigle him out of the House during a debate on a Government measure, so heartily did he concur in the arguments of one of the Opposition speakers. He himself makes no secret of his disgust with the inner workings of politics as revealed at Cabinet councils. "I wanted to do business," he told the writer once, "but at every meeting of the Council the whole time was consumed in discussing whether or not to appoint certain men to certain positions. I was sick of the whole thing."

A year ago, when his appointment was suggested, the people of the Province laughed and scouted the idea. Somehow since that time public opinion has veered, and the selection is now looked upon by a great number, if not by the majority, as a natural and proper one. It is a recognition of the great part of the first of the house of Dunsmuir played in the early industrial history of this province, and of the manner in which his son has endeavored to carry out his wishes and ideas.

Will Entertain Royally.

But the principal reason why he was chosen for the post was doubtless his great wealth and the impression among the party leaders that he would entertain on a lavish scale. There have been deep mutterings for some time over the cautious way in which the incumbents of gubernatorial office have consulted their financial resources in the matter of dispensing the hospitalities of the office. There has been a clamor for someone who would entertain royally. There is no doubt Mr. Dunsmuir will do this. There is also little doubt that it was to permit his family to do this that he consented to incur the (to him) irksome duties of the office. Of his family he is exceedingly proud. Most of them are abroad, one as the wife of a military officer in India, another as a naval officer's wife in England, three daughters in Leipsic and one in France while the youngest son is at the Loretto in Edinburgh.

In his personal life Mr. Dunsmuir is admirable. His beautiful home on Victoria Arm is one of the beauty spots of a city famous for its scenic charms. There is no worthy charity, benevolence or enterprise, scientific or practical, which does not make heavy claims on his support. Although a millionaire coal miner he is extremely good to his employes both in the matter of accommodation and pay. He is extremely temperate, his only indulgence being in a good pipe. He is 56 years of age.

A Brutal Toronto Teamster.

With a vicious flick of his whip a big, brawny teamster let the end of the lash writhe through the air and the end just caught the tail of a little spaniel at which it was aimed. With a howl of pain the canine yelped down a lane, leaving a small, bleeding, sausage-like piece of flesh on the sidewalk. The whip-lash had cut the end of the dog's tail off!

It all happened in a second, says The Toronto Star, and in another second the dog had disappeared. Two well-dressed women who were just behind the injured animal shuddered as they saw the bleeding remnant and said something regarding the S. P. C. A. as they looked daggers at the teamster, who was guffawing over his "joke."

Mr. Northrup's Speech

ON THE NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) tells us frankly that there is no difference between such a company as this and the Canadian Pacific Railway, he says: Who knows the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway he cries? If I were about to enter into a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway would I think of asking who the shareholders were? What are we to think of a defence such as that from a minister of the Crown? Must there not be an utter absence of all right, of all evidence, of all justice or sense of justice, when a minister will calmly compare such a company as this with the Canadian Pacific Railway? If the minister does not know the difference I will tell him. If this Government chooses to enter into a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway they need not have the slightest anxiety in the world but that the Canadian Pacific Railway can be made to carry out its contract. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a list of officers whose names he who runs may read. The Canadian Pacific Railway has a charter of incorporation found on the statute-book of our country: it has a list of shareholders which any man can find. There is no secrecy and the Canadian Pacific Railway has assets which make it a matter of utter indifference who are the officers, shareholders or directors may be. Surely there is a difference between a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway or a corporation like the Bank of England, and a contract with a nebulous myth like this organization called the North Atlantic Trading Company, an organization which solemnly describes itself as a body corporate, in November, 1902, and signs itself with a corporate seal and the name of its secretary and all the time there was no such organization. Surely the Minister of the Interior can see the distinction between these two companies. Then the minister tried, I think, rather to draw a herring across the scent, by referring to the immigration results under the old and the present Government. I do not intend to be dragged off into that discussion. I simply ask him to consider the effect of some of his own figures. According to his own figures, in 1896, the Conservative party spent $120,000 in immigration. Out of that $6,710 was spent on immigration from continental Europe. According to his own figures we spent $6,710 and got 4,451 immigrants from continental Europe: $1.50 a head, was all it cost. Was that not a better scheme than the scheme in force to-day? And was there no difference in the state of this country in 1896, when world-wide depression clouded every civilized land and the conditions in the last few years, when there has been prosperity here and all the world over, and yet at that time we spent only $6,710 and got 4,451 immigrants from continental Europe. What did we do in 1904-5? We spent $972,000 in immigration, and of that we spent, according to his own figures (I am not committing myself to figures I may wish to attack later on) $86,967 on European immigration. We got, so he says, 37,255 immigrants from continental Europe in consequence. I am afraid if we have had 37,255 immigrants from continental Europe to Manitoba and the west, and we paid $5 a head we will find that we have not got off for $86,967. I take the minister's figures and I ask him this, can he maintain the stand in this House and give all the credit as he and my predecessor in the debate do, to the Sifton bargain with the North Atlantic Trading Company, for filling all the Northwest when according to the figures given out of $972,000 only $86,000 went to fill up the Northwest. What about the other $972,000 less $86,000? What about the $886,967 spent on behalf of immigration? Had that no effect? Surely the minister must think the people of this country blind that all he has to do is to draw a herring across the scent and the people will forget issues such as the present, which it will be well for the Government to consider and take warning by ere it be, for them, too late. The Minister of the Interior in this debate said that the policy of the Liberal party and the Conservative party was the same. I think I answered that this afternoon. The gentleman who spoke this afternoon said that the policy of the Conservatives and that of the Reform party were the same, both along the lines of this question we are discussing and the question of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company which he tried to drag in. I decline to wander from this discussion and assure the hon. gentleman he will have plenty of opportunity to ventilate his views on the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company question before the session is much older.

AS SMOOTH AS A BILLIARD TABLE.

Your comfort on a railway journey very largely depends upon the roadbed of the route you select. No matter how luxurious the coaches, or how much personal attention you receive from the employees, you cannot be comfortable if jolted and jarred by a poor and irregular roadbed. On the Lake Shore Railway no expense has been spared to make a roadbed as nearly perfect as the most skilful engineering could build, and as a result, throughout the entire length and breadth of the system the right of way is as smooth as a billiard table. No jolts or jars, nor dust nor dirt. This perfection of service extends throughout the entire system. Lake Shore trains are the most luxurious, they are equipped with every comfort and convenience and are run at highest speed and in safety. They run on time. For your own sake you should see that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." Write for full information about rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O., or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

CHATTERTON.

Mr. S. Sine and staff of men have completed the road work.

Mr Walter Scott is spending the week in Millbridge.

Mrs. Augustus Moore spent Sunday last in Prince Edward, the guests of their son John.

Mr. John Vanwaters late of San Francisco, is spending a few days under the parental roof.

The Misses Bishop, of Belleville, spent the 24th with their aunt, Mrs. Morden, of this place.

We intend holding our annual Sunday school picnic on June 22nd at Oak Hill Lake. A good time is expected.

Owing to the heavy dew that accompanied the frost on Monday and Tuesday evenings, not much damage was done.

Strawberries are here again. The crop promises to be fair.

We are pleased to note that Mr. Dean Sine has improved considerably and is thinking about going to the Northwest for the benefit of his health.

Under a Fly's Wing.

One of the Nuremberg toymakers inclosed in a cherry stone which was exhibited at the French Crystal palace a plan of Sevastopol, a railway station and the "Messiah" of Klopstock. In more remote times an account is given of an ivory chariot, constructed by Mermecides, which was so small that a fly could cover it with his wing; also a ship of the same material which could be hidden under the wing of a bee. Pliny, too, tells us that Homer's "Iliad," with its 15,000 verses, was written in so small a space as to be contained in a nutshell, while Ælian mentions an artist who wrote a distich in letters of gold which he inclosed in the rind of a kernel of corn. But the Harlein manuscript mentions a greater curiosity than any of the above, it being nothing more or less than the Bible written by one Peter Bales, a chancery clerk, in so small a book that it could be inclosed in the shell of an English walnut.

Handle Work With Gloves.

"I hope," said the woman who was ordering a pair of slippers made of flowered satin, "that you will tell your workman to wash his hands before he begins to make these up."

"Wash his hands!" repeated the clerk. "Why, madam, he never will touch these with his bare hands!"

Then the clerk explained that all workmen employed in making slippers of light colors worked with white gloves on.

"Try to keep them clean!" he continued. "I should say they did. They try so hard that they change their white gloves three times a day." Which is not so fantastic as it may seem, for if a shoemaker soils material of this kind the expense to him of replacing the material, to say nothing of the loss of his time, makes it worth his while to work in gloves and keep them clean at that.

The Smelt.

It is the opinion of the true gourmet that of all marine pan fish there is none to compare with the smelt (Osmerus mordax). This primary rank is its own by reason of its delicacy and delicious flavor, and when fried a light brown in very fine breadcrumbs and served with melted butter there is none that disputes its pre-eminence. Its delightful flavor, however, as well as its peculiar odor, is evanescent. Like the mackerel, it cannot be too fresh. It is from its odor that the smelt derives not only its familiar but Latin name, an odor so suggestive of sliced cucumbers that if its presence be manifested only to the sense of smell people are often deluded into such supposition. This odor is not marked except in the freshly caught fish and disappears in the cooking, giving place, however, to a fitting resurrection of the smelt to an olfactory sense still more savory and delightful.

Over the Transom.

Two well known Portland (Me.) men, L. J. Carney and Thomas L. King, roomed together at the Preble House, in that city. One evening Mr. Carney retired before Mr. King, and the latter, on arriving rather late at the room, found the door locked, the key on the inside and his friend snoring loudly. After repeatedly pounding on the door and awakening the other guests he succeeded in arousing his roommate. Mr. Carney jumped out of bed and after climbing on to a chair managed after considerable trouble to force open the transom. Then he passed the key out to King, but sleepily said he was awfully sorry for locking him out. But King felt more than satisfied, as he roared at the ridiculous performance of his half awake roommate.

A Curious Fact.

A man who had determined to kill himself went down to the river to commit suicide, and when he began to write a final message to his wife he could think of nothing to say except that some butter which he had ordered would be found at a certain grocery. His message bears out a certain fact discovered by realists—that in the supreme and soul terrifying moments of life the most ridiculous and trivial things often come uppermost in the mind.

Two Guides to Happiness.

Here are a couple of guides to happiness which some wise person has discovered: "For a fit of passion take a walk in the open air. You may then speak to the wind without hurting any person or proclaiming yourself to be a simpleton. For a fit of idleness count the tickings of a clock. Do this for one hour, and you will be glad to pull off your coat and go to work like a man."

Greek's Worship of Lightning.

The Greeks were so much afraid of lightning that they worshiped it. They endeavored to avert its malignant influence by hissing and whistling at it. In places which had suffered by it altars were erected and oblations made to avert the anger of the gods, after which no one dared to touch or approach them.

Acting Under Orders.

"I should like to go to your party above all things," Mrs. Lapsling was saying, "but the doctor says I must remain exclusive for a week more. I am troubled with a slight prevarication of the left lung."

Posterity.

The contemporary mind may in rare cases be taken by storm, but posterity never. The tribunal of the present is accessible to influence; that of the future is incorrupt.—Gladstone.

Laws can discover sin, but not remove it.—Milton.

WOMAN'S WORLD

A UNIQUE RECORD.

Mrs. Emma J. Yocum Has Assisted at Over Seven Hundred Funerals.

To have officiated, either by singing or conducting the services, at over 700 funerals is the probably unique record held by a Pennsylvania woman. She is Mrs. Emma J. Yocum, who resides on the forty acre farm connected with St. Michael's Union church—Lutheran and Reformed—in Berks county, fifteen miles north of Reading, Pa. Probably the best known person in that section, Mrs. Yocum is organist, choir leader and sexton of the church which is used by two congregations. She is a pleasant faced, cheerful woman, whose presence is always comforting in a house of mourning.

"Taking part in the service at funerals has always seemed natural to me," Mrs. Yocum stated recently. "I helped my husband, John S. Yocum, an organist and choirmaster, during his lifetime and after his death I followed in his footsteps. I've become accustomed to it, and I have always regarded it as a calling for which I was peculiarly fitted."

MRS. EMMA J. YOCUM.

The hard work on the farm connected with St. Michael's church is performed by a man, but Mrs. Yocum manages the property. She rings the church bell every Sunday and from April 1 to Nov. 1 is required to ring it every day at 11 a. m. to notify the neighboring farmers at work in the fields of the approach of the dinner hour. Every Sunday she and her two daughters are found in the choir loft. One of the daughters plays the organ, while the mother leads in the singing. Mrs. Yocum has a voice of unusual charm, but it is at funerals that she has demonstrated her greatest usefulness.

The members of St. Michael's are widely scattered, some living ten miles from the church. Should a death occur Mrs. Yocum is immediately informed. On the day of the funeral she drives early to the home of the deceased. There the first services are held. Mrs. Yocum leads the choir and then joins the cortege to the church, occupying one of the first carriages. At the grave Mrs. Yocum's splendid voice is again heard.

The Reformed pastor of St. Michael's church lives sixteen miles away and the Lutheran pastor half that distance. In case of the deaths of children the services of a minister are not always considered necessary, and it is then that Mrs. Yocum conducts the religious ceremonies at the grave, while the daughters furnish the music. Mrs. Yocum is never deterred by the weather, and, no matter how severe the winter storms, she never fails to make the trip to a house of death.—Philadelphia North American.

The True Woman.

The qualities which constitute the true woman are many and varied, writes Mary Holloway Bergen, and lie within the casket of her soul like bright gems, sparkling with rare, intrinsic beauty. Unaffected simplicity sits as a brilliant crown upon her brow, virtue clothes her in snowy white and charity throws a silvery sheen around her, her footsteps glide in the rosy paths of truth, and justice and kindness strew her way with beautiful flowers. Gentleness lures her on, and she stands before the world an ideal embodiment of all the graces.

To be a true woman is to conquer every malicious thought and fill the mind with earnest endeavors to take up the rough and tangled threads of life and weave them into a beautiful cloth of gold. Patience, perseverance and well directed thought pave the way to success. The true woman is the concentrated essence of all that is pure and sweet in God's great laboratory.

Her nature is attuned to the songs of angels, and, though her feet may through necessity and environment tread the lowly paths of earth, her spirit stands ever "a peri at the garden gate."

The true woman is a godsend to earth, and her influence is infinite. As mother, wife, daughter, sister, friend, how great and unexcelled is she! Her very presence seems a panacea for all ills, and her kind words and soothing tones vibrate through the cells of many aching hearts, giving new life, new energy, new determination to buckle on the armor and go forth to the battle again.

False and True Pride.

Few things are more pathetic than to witness the pains and care which many young women, earning but small incomes, devote to copying the dress of their richer sisters. It is pathetic because it evidences, in most cases, a stubborn determination to win and to ignore disadvantages.

The average American working girl would count it a disgrace to be attired in anything which did not conform to the prevailing mode. If a black ribbon in the hair or a bunch of maline at the throat be prescribed, these she will have. Too often these fripperies are secured at the cost of bodily nourishment. One may easily figure out in too many cases that such and such adornments were purchased by economy as to lunches and car fare.

One is tempted to inquire, Where will it end, this latter day passion for dress, scarcely excusable in the rich and so painfully detrimental to the poor?

Far be it from us to discourage any form of laudable ambition, but surely the most ordinary common sense dictates that one whose entire income is but $5 or $6 weekly cannot afford the style of dress affected by her whose allowance of pin money amounts to five times as much. Professional women recognize the impossibility of successfully competing with their fashionable sister. Why should other wage earners ignore it? This prevailing tendency to ape the manners of the rich is surely one to be lamented.

Healthful Sleeping Rooms.

The bedroom is what its name implies, says a medical authority—a place of repose—and everything about it should be conducive to the one purpose of obtaining rest. Everything in it should be simple, immaculate and easily kept so. The floors of such rooms should be covered with matting or should be oiled and rugs placed beside the bed. The paper on the walls should be quiet and subdued. If to make the windows uniform with those in other rooms of the house curtains are necessary, they should be as simple as possible, for drapery is an abomination and should be entirely dispensed with in a sickroom. Pictures, garnish furniture and articles not absolutely necessary to the occupant should have no place here. Above everything, the bedroom should be flooded with sunshine for at least one hour in the day and an abundance of fresh air admitted at all times. The sleeper should not be exposed to a draft, but by a judicious arrangement of screens between the open windows this may be avoided.

Folding the Arms.

"Folding the arms across the chest has long been associated with a proud and self confident, not to say aggressive, bearing," remarked a physician the other day, "but in reality there are neither physical nor moral grounds for this association of ideas. Folding the arms tends to pull the shoulders forward, flatten the chest and impair healthy breathing. If you fold your arms often enough you will inevitably get round shouldered and stick the head out in front, than which nothing could well be more ungainly or less impressive. Folding the arms behind the back is quite another proposition. It tends to chest expansion, a straight neck and a flat, straight back and is one of the best of the gentle calisthenic exercises in which women can indulge with safety and profit."

Saving Baby's Dresses.

Mothers who are making short clothes for their little ones would do well to remember that, once having begun, the baby keeps on growing every day. A box plait in the back of the little dress, to be let out as the dress grows smaller, will be found a great convenience. Use only fine lace, like valenciennes, for these little dresses and no heavy lace or embroidery. India or Victoria lawn and nainsook are the best materials, and a very useful garment is the creeping apron, made of dark colored gingham or denim.

The Oven.

Have the inside of the oven kept scrupulously clean. Wash the entire inside of the oven, not forgetting the roof, at least once a week. Remove the shelves and door before commencing and scrape off any burned substance with an old knife. Let the oven be kept open till quite dry and all smell of soap passed off. A spoke brush kept for this purpose is very useful.

Loose Knife Handles.

Loose knife handles are quite easily mended. Take the handle off, mix together three parts resin and one of bath brick. Nearly fill the handle with this, heat the steel beyond the blade till nearly redhot, insert in the handle and press down into place. It will be as firm as when new.

White Silk Handkerchiefs.

To clean white silk handkerchiefs wash with a lather made of boiled soap and warm water and rinse thoroughly, adding a little methylated spirit to the last rinsing water. This will give brightness to the silk, which should be ironed while it is slightly damp.

When taking water for drinking from the pipes always let it run for a few minutes before filling the carafe. Water which has remained for some time in a pipe is often injurious to the health.

Should a chimney refuse to draw and the stove smoke, tie a rope to a flat iron and drop it down the chimney. It makes a hole through the soot.

To remove pimples from the face dissolve in the juice of half a lemon a little common salt and apply the mixture on a piece of linen.

Some babies are partial to warm water and others to cold; if one is refused, try the other.

THE GIRL AT THE Y

By SEWARD W. HOPKINS

Copyright, 1905, by K. A. Whitehead

The up express was due to pass at 1 o'clock, but it did not stop. Graham would not have been in the office at all, only he had some money in the safe and had received orders by wire to sleep in the station that night.

He did not know how much there was. It had come in a sealed package, locked in a small pouch. He knew it was pay day on the new branch then building on the 1st, and this was the 31st.

"Why can't they send a pay car?" asked Graham of himself.

"Too confounded mean," he muttered.

The hours dragged slowly, but Graham found some solace in thinking of Miss Delaine.

Miss Delaine was from Chicago. She was visiting the daughter of Silas Jones, whom she had met at school.

Miss Jones was tall, big and strong; Miss Delaine was dainty.

Miss Jones, with the advantage of her boarding school years, dressed well; Miss Delaine dressed better.

Graham had suddenly felt a peculiar sensation when Miss Delaine got off the local at Naomi. He knew that Silas was going to have company. He had no idea the company was built more on the fleeting vision plan than any other.

"If Silas don't feed that girl up he will be all out of company," Graham had said. "She's almost gone now."

Graham was a husky fellow and had been at Naomi two months when Miss Delaine appeared. As Graham boarded with Silas he had an opportunity to study her well.

"No more turkey hunts while she's here," he grumbled to himself.

Miss Delaine took the grumble out of him when she proposed a shoot, and the three went to the scrubs, and Miss Delaine brought down five to his three and Miss Jones one.

Miss Delaine proved to have more get up and get in her diminutive body than Graham acknowledged in his five feet ten. She could box big Miss Jones all over the barn floor; she could climb a cherry tree in a light summer frock and come down as neat as she went up; she could swim better than Miss Jones and dive as deep as Graham.

She could play the most charming waltzes and sing the prettiest songs. She had not been at Naomi two weeks before she was singing in the choir, and Graham made the harrowing discovery that he sang bass.

So on this night Graham consoled himself by thinking gloomy thoughts about Miss Delaine.

"I'd be a fool to ask her and a brute to expect her to accept if I did ask." He said this with almost a groan. "Why couldn't it have been Fan?" Fan was Miss Jones. "But, no; she'll marry Larkins, and if Miss Delaine was poor I'd marry her."

He knew she was rich. She had often spoken about "our railroad." James Delaine was president of the Q. and B.

Disconsolate, he smoked his pipe. He wondered how much money there was in the safe. He knew the payroll must be long.

He had read last Sunday's paper a dozen times and gone off to sleep and nearly fallen off the chair which he had tilted back. He had left the door open for air. The night was warm.

"Hello there, young feller!" came a voice. He turned toward the door and looked into the barrel of a big revolver.

"Hold up your hands!"

"Er—I am agent here," stammered Graham.

"Oh, we know that. You keep yer mouth shut. We'll do the rest."

"I won't submit to robbery, if that is what you mean," said Graham.

"Robbery, eh? Won't submit, eh? Well, young feller, ye don't look much like a fool. Under the circumstances I wouldn't advise yer to be one even if ye do know how. I've got two partners here, and the first yawp out of ye will mean a game o' shootin' big. Now, Jim."

Another fellow came in and went through Graham's pockets.

"Now, young feller," said the leader after Jim had deposited an express revolver on the table, "just tell us the combination to that safe."

"I refuse."

"What did I say about bein' a fool? Say, I'll give you three minutes to make up your mind. You'll either give us the combination or I'll put a hole through you. Now, one."

Graham was silent.

Jim was working at the safe. The third came in and grinned at the picture Graham made.

"Pretty boy," he said.

"Three."

Graham opened his mouth to speak.

"Ain't no use sayin' anything unless it's the combination."

"Aw, kill him. We can blow open the safe."

Graham knew that these men meant business. They would as soon take a life as eat. He could see his revolver lying where Jim had placed it.

If only he could divert the leader's attention while he grabbed his own revolver he would take a chance. Graham was no coward. He fixed his eyes on the door, nodding to some imaginary person behind the leader. The bandit laughed.

"See that, Bill? He don't know how old that trick is. Young feller, that trick was old before you were born. Give us another."

"It is no trick!" shouted Graham. "I am not afraid of you, but don't let that bear in here."

He looked frightened. The one called Bill looked. Graham had moved a few steps forward.

"Are you goin' to open that safe?"

"I tell you to shoot him," said Bill. "He's tried to fool us twice. No bear outside."

Graham could see the desperado growing blacker. He knew that after he had opened the safe for them they would shoot him to prevent identification. It had been done many times before.

He resolved to sell his life fighting rather than yielding. He suddenly darted toward his revolver, but the leader was too quick. He had been expecting that. The revolver was simply a lure. He fired, and Graham fell with a bullet in his side.

"Now, hang you, if you want a show for your life give us the combination."

Graham was gasping. He was waiting for the next shot that would kill him.

Suddenly there was a sharp crack—the smashing of glass—another—and another. The leader was down, with a bullet in his heart, shot through the back. Jim lay writhing near the safe. Bill had pitched forward and was grasping the side for support. Then an apparition appeared at the door.

A bit of a girl stood there, her face white, a rifle in her hands. She was so small she looked like a child. Graham saw her.

"You—you, Miss Delaine—at half past 1? How—how"—

She calmly gazed at the result of her lightning work.

"To tell you the truth, I was afraid and came here to sleep. After you left"—she was examining his wound while she spoke—"Charley Jones came over on horseback and said Mr. Jones' brother was dying. I was out in the orchard, and they could not find me and thought probably I was with you. I returned to the house and could not get in. I had left my key in the house. I managed to get a window open and went in that way, but I was afraid to go to sleep. I could sit up without fear, because I always feel safe with my rifle. But I was dead tired after the dance last night, and I wanted to sleep. I thought I'd risk the talk and come here. It was nearest. I heard the shot and knew you were in trouble. I ran and got here just in time. Can you run the sender?"

"I guess so," he said feebly.

"Wire to order that express to stop here." She even knew the stations.

Graham dragged himself to the table, got his call and clicked off the message.

At 2 the express came roaring and rumbling in.

"What the mischief's the row here?" bawled a heavy voice, and a powerful man in a silk hat and black frock coat stood with mouth agape while a fraction of what would make a fair sized girl slid, unconscious, to the floor.

"Nan, my girl, here?" said the big man. "Here, tell Hawkins to come here." Hawkins was Mr. Delaine's private secretary and an operator.

"Hawkins, get Burns and stay here till relieved by a new man. This man won't come back. He'll either go to jail or the head of a division. Get Nan into the stateroom. Get a doctor. There must be one on the train Get a woman to take care of Nan. Take this man—his name is Graham—into the coach. Guard that safe as well as I think Graham has. There is a pack of money in there. Evans said he feared a holdup, and I sent the money yesterday with orders for Graham to stay all night. But what I don't understand is what—what Nan—at this time of night"—

It was not many hours before the whole story was told.

"Well," said Mr. Delaine, "you have told a good story, but I know a better one. I'll tell it when I see the result of Graham's injuries."

"Yes, I know one as good as yours, but it won't be time to tell it until yours is told. And, papa, won't you be surprised?"

"Um—not a lot," said the president.

• • • • • • • •

The other two stories were told. Graham is now second vice president, which was Delaine's story, and Nan is his wife, which was Nan's. Now Miss Jones goes to see Mrs. Graham and travels in a private Pullman with the second vice presidential guardianship for her safety.

Plowing With Oxen.

There can be little doubt that the ox was the earliest beast employed for the plow. A white bull and a white cow were yoked together to draw the furrow for making the walls of Rome. Greeks and Romans employed oxen in plowing; asses only for sandy soils. When the plowman had finished his day's labor he turned the instrument upside down, and the oxen went home dragging its tail and handle over the surface of the ground, a scene described by Horace.

The yoking together of ox and ass was expressly forbidden by the law of Moses and is made the ground of a ludicrous comparison by Plautus. Ulysses, when he feigned madness in order to avoid going on the Trojan expedition, plowed with an ox and a horse together.

The North Star.

The north star is exactly in line with the poles of the earth—that is to say, it is exactly north of the earth—which is the reason why its position with reference to us does not change by the revolution of the earth upon its axis. The reason its position does not seem to change by the annual revolution of the earth around the sun is that it is so many billions of miles away that the difference in direction from different points of the earth's orbit is imperceptible.

Board Of Trade Makes Recommendation About Post Office--Water Power

A regular monthly meeting of the Board of Trade was called for last evening and seven members responded to the call. When the meeting was called to order, Col. Ponton, vice-president, took the chair, those present being Messrs. Walter Alford, C. M. Stork, W. J. McCamon, J. A. McKee, and W. H. Lingham. Mr. H. Carre was in attendance in the early part of the evening, but left.

THE LOCAL POST OFFICE.

The chairman regretted that the attendance of members was not larger, as there were matters of importance down for discussion, namely fire insurance rates, water power and the Belleville post office. In speaking of the latter subject he said that there was one matter which might be brought to the attention of the postmaster here and that was the necessity of having every letter received here bear the post office stamp as to its date of arrival. It was an important matter that all letters should receive the Government record of arrival which is the local stamp bearing date and time. Sometimes letters were received which did not have the stamp upon them

Messrs. C. M. Stork and W. J. McCamon endorsed the remarks of the chairman, and it was decided that the secretary should notify the postmaster in regard to this.

No discussion took place upon the fire insurance rates.

THE POWER PROBLEM.

Col Ponton then read the following communication from Mr. Joseph James of Actinolite in reference to the river Moira water power:

"The Saw Log Driving Acts and that act dealing exclusively with the Moira River and its tributaries need to be amended so as to permit of the whole of the water being saved, and used exclusively for power purposes. There is not enough water to serve both for the driving of logs and for power purposes.

The small quantity of timber now remaining on the limits served by Moira waters can be marketed by other methods than driving, and at about as small a cost.

No logs pass through Queensboro this (1966) spring, none came through Moira Lake, and the total drive this spring on the Scootamatta is only about one-third or one-quarter of what came down in previous years.

There is only one lumber firm now operating on Moira waters; in years gone by there were several.

(See separate statement giving location of present lumbermen's dams, also a statement of water power, sites on Moira waters.)

With the repeal or amendment of the acts now affecting Moira waters, there should be a commission established, or the power vested in the Hydro-Electric Commission should be extended so that they could deal with the matter. They now have an engineering staff at their disposal, or in some other way, the Government ought to retain the powers now possessed over these waters, and also the power to acquire such of the dams as are necessary for the storage of water in the Moira water shed

The commission should be given power to divert the flow of certain lakes, the waters of which now go to waste. To do this would not cause injury or damage to any person or to any vested rights. That it would be practical to save and to utilize the waters here referred to depends on the results to be shown by a thorough survey of the water shed

The commission to do the work required on the Moira should have power to work in both Hastings and Addington counties, and perhaps also in Renfrew county.

In the opinion of men who have talked over this matter, the whole work could be done, as we have been accustomed to do such work at a cost not exceeding $20,000 This does not include cost of survey. Much depends on what would have to be paid for the lots on which dams are now erected and should not cost much, and new concrete or stone dams could be built in their place as required, but the outlay to build all dams of concrete or stone need not be incurred for some years.

It would be impossible for any private person or corporation to deal with the owners of these lumbermen's dams with the same advantage and as good results as could be attained by the Provincial Government undertaking the matter; and from the standpoint of Government control of the selling price of power derived from water, it would be fatal for the storage of Moira waters to pass into private or corporation ownership.

The Moira presents the only water power supply in Eastern Ontario open to the Provincial Government's absolute control. Great as are the water powers on the Trent, the Dominion Government has certain rights that must needs, more or less, interfere with the development of water power until such time as the requirements of the Trent Valley Canal are defined. Such being the case, the importance of even the moderate amount of power to be obtained from the Moira is increased.

The close connection between the science of forestry and the flow of water is now better understood, even in our country, than it was a few years ago, and it would be well if the Government does intend to preserve the present flow of water in the Moira, that all further lumbering operations, on the usual lines, and common practice, be prohibited at the head waters of the Moira. The flow of water, as at present, is worth more in dollars for power purposes than is the total value of the logs floated on it. As to the value of the water to the whole country for other purposes, such as health, moisture, etc., it can only be estimated by a comparison of our country with those in which a total destruction of all the forest has been allowed or has taken place. We need not expect the results arising from a total destruction of the forest to be different in Ontario from what it has been elsewhere. The water flow of the Moira is not now as serviceable nor as permanent as it was in years gone by; about as much water comes down, but it comes in floods and rushes, doing damage instead of serving useful purposes.

Many dollars for many years have been paid into the Provincial Treasury by lumbermen for timber taken out of Hastings County, and these operations have been continued for so long a time that the storage of water naturally resulting from a forest growth has been ruined; this, consequently, has nearly ruined the water powers on the Moira. It is now only "a square deal" for the Government to provide an artificial storage for the water.

It is not necessary to say anything about the advantages that accrue to a manufacturer who can provide himself with motive power at a less cost than does his competitor. The manufacturer may move his factory, to the locality of cheap power. Not so the mining man: he must needs do his work at his mine, and the mines of Hastings district have never, nor can ever, be worked to the best advantage or at such a profit as should be made from mining if the motive power required has to be obtained from fuel. For the mining man in the Hastings district it is the cheapest power or nothing, and the very cheapest power can be developed on the Moira if the Governments will it to be.

It will be seen that the conditions surrounding the question of the development of water powers on the Moira present features not dealt with fully in any report yet issued by the Provincial Government, and the matter, unless taken on the principle that the welfare of one part of the province tends to the welfare of the whole, is one of comparatively local interest. A few power sites are made good in Addington County, but the great bulk of the development would be in Hastings County, with the City of Belleville the largest beneficiary. For this reason it is necessary that the localities interested should make special efforts to lay before the Provincial Government and press the reasonable claims for improvements required on the River Moira and its tributaries.

Plants in Hastings County are now burning coal that cost laid down much above $5.00 per ton.

In plants of moderate size a consumption of 5 lbs. of coal per H. P. per hour is fair average. Practice, large up-to-date plants may run on 3 lbs., but many plants go up to 7 or 8 lbs.

The highest cash value of the drives of logs that now prevent all further development of water power on Moira water is NOT 25 per cent. of the value of the water for power purposes, and the 4900 H.P. now reported could be largely increased by the development of latent possibilities.

Power from coal at $5.00 per ton is to a manufacturer not an impossible proposition, but to the man that attempts to mine and treat the low grade gold and arsenical ores that exist in large quantities in Hastings County it is impossible, and what is more it is unnecessary that he should have to use any fuel for the production of motive power, with the large number of water power sites close at hand, capable of being amply provided for by nature to do the work the country requires to have done. It remains now to take advantage of the natural facilities for doing the work to be done in this district, work that can only be done at a sufficient profit by developing to their fullest extent the power sites on Moira waters.

The Board on motion then adjourned until the regular meeting night in September.

The Rolling Mills.

EVERYTHING NOW IN APPLE PIE ORDER — PRACTICAL MEN COMING NEXT WEEK.

A representative of The Intelligencer this morning paid a visit to the rolling mills, and was greatly impressed with what he saw. Messrs. Wardrope and Clowes received him very courteously, and it was ascertained that things in the mills are now in "apple pie" order. The machinery has been thoroughly overhauled, a large amount of scrap is on hand and has been prepared for the furnaces, and, in short, the rolling mills are now all ready to roll.

Next week four of Montreal's leading practical iron men will be here to take charge of operations, and they will bring with them whatever skilled labor is required which cannot be obtained in this city.

A problem which faces the rolling mills management is: How are they going to house their staff when it comes? People in this city who own vacant houses, which can be made habitable, should take this matter into consideration. There are, not far from the mills, terraces which could be made into flats, and an investment of this kind should certainly prove profitable.

The Intelligencer business office will close at 5 p.m. on Saturdays—other days at 6 p.m.

Double Drowning Near Bridgewater.

The Tweed News gives the following account of the deplorable accident which was reported in these columns yesterday:

"A very sad accident happened about seven o'clock on Wednesday morning as a result of which John Brill, of Potter Settlement, and Thomas Farrell, of Tyendinaga lost their lives. The accident occurred at the point where the old Toronto and Ottawa railway crosses the Moira River above Bridgewater. At this place there is a fall of several feet and below is the usual turbulent rapid. The water at the fall is divided into two streams by a huge rock in the centre. On this rock a large hemlock log was lodged and it was in attempting to free it that these two lives were sacrificed. A boat containing four men,—Henry Smith, Fred Fairman, and John Malyea, of Belleville, and Thos. Farrell, of Tyendinaga, were being let down to the log by means of a rope held by five other men on a small pier or island about a hundred feet above the fall. In some manner the boat partially filled with water when it reached the fall and it was carried down the rapids. The occupants were thrown into the water and also carried down with the current. John Brill, one of the men on the island, was pulled into the water by the rope attached to the boat and was swept over the fall and down the rapids. In an instant Henry Vaness, one of the others on the island, jumped into a boat which was drawn up on the pier and struck out over the fall and through the rapids to rescue, if possible, those who were in such great danger. All passed through the rapids safely excepting Brill and Farrell; who disappeared from sight and were drowned. One of the men in the boat could not swim but hung to the rope attached and was finally rescued from the upturned boat. The others made their way to shore safely or were rescued.

"Brill leaves a wife and seven children, the youngest only three months old, to mourn their loss. Farrell was unmarried. Up to the hour of going to press the bodies had not been recovered."

KILLS NINE, WOUNDS 40

Terrific Naphtha Explosion on a British Steamer.

Barrel of the Stuff in Hold of the Haverford Blows Up With Terrible Results—Stevedores Were in the Act of Loosening the Hatches When the Explosion Occurred—Dock Resembled the Floor of a Charnel House.

Liverpool, June 15.—Nine men were instantly killed and about 40 were wounded as the result of a terrific explosion yesterday morning on board the British steamer Haverford of the International Navigation Co. The vessel, which is commanded by Capt. Lielson, arrived here Wednesday from Philadelphia, landed her passengers and proceeded to Hiskisson dock early yesterday, in order to unload.

The stevedores were in the act of loosening the hatches when the explosion occurred. It blew off the hatches, rent the docks and hurled dead and wounded men in all directions. Several bodies were dismembered and the dock resembled the floor of a charnel house. The explosion, which, according to rumor, was caused by an infernal machine, was followed by the outbreak of fire. The cargo, consisting of linseed oil cake, in hold No. 2, and hold No. 3, was soon blazing fiercely.

After two hours' hard fight the firemen obtained the mastery of the flames.

Later it was said that the disaster on board the Haverford was apparently caused by the explosion of a barrel of naphtha.

Warship Sinks Steamer.

Amsterdam, Holland, June 15.—The Dutch warship Piet-Heim arrived at Nieawedlep and reported having been in collision with the Belgian steamer Meuse off Haak's lightship. The Meuse sank and her captain and eleven of her crew were drowned.

Takes Fit; Is Drowned.

Kingston, June 15.—A lad aged 14, a son of Archibald O'Neil, Sydenham street, was in bathing yesterday afternoon in Cataraqui Bay, when he took a fit in the water and was drowned.

Woman Burned to Death.

St. Stephen, N. B., June 15.—A fatality occurred here yesterday morning in a fire which destroyed the farmhouses of Joseph McLay. Mrs. McLay, his wife, 70 years of age, was burned to death. She went into the burning building, presumably for a pail of water. The charred bones of Mrs. McLay were found some hours later. Several cows, pigs and horses were also burned to death.

Hurled From Bridge.

Quebec, June 15.—Knocked off his feet by a passing steam engine, while engaged on the superstructural work of the Quebec Bridge, James Hughes was hurled from the lofty structure and dashed to instant death on the rocks underneath. Hughes was about 44 years of age and a native of Dundee, Scotland, where he leaves a wife and family.

Falls Thirty Feet; May Die.

Stratford, June 15.—W. R. Cowley narrowly escaped being killed. With a man named Hill he was working on a new house. Cowley stepped on a board projecting from a building, and it overbalanced, and both he and Hill fell. Hill managed to cling to the building, but Cowley fell 30 feet among a pile of bricks. It is believed he will recover.

CENSURE MR. CINQMARS.

Premier's Motion Condemns La Presse Correspondent—Says Language He Used Could Not Be Tolerated.

Ottawa, June 15.—It was a few moments after 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon when the sergeant-at-arms announced to the Speaker that Mr. Cinqmars, correspondent for La Presse, was at the bar. The House was filled and the galleries were crowded, but there were few manifestations of applause.

The offending article, read last week in French, was read yesterday afternoon in English. Then the questions were asked and answers given that established authorship.

Wanted Basis of Charges.

Mr. Foster did not rest his case at this point. Instead, he asked another question, to this effect: "Mr. Cinqmars, will you please state what basis your charges against me had in anything that I said or did during this session of Parliament?"

Mr. Aylesworth objected. He moved an amendment eliminating the phrase "during this session of Parliament."

After much discussion, on division the amendment was lost, yeas 82, nays 48. It was a party vote except Mr. Galliher, who voted against the amendment.

A Rambling Defence.

Mr. Cinqmars made a rambling defence, which he read with considerable vigor, first in French and then in English. He cited what he considered to be offensive references to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mgr. Sbarretti in speeches made by Mr. Foster during the debate on the autonomy bills. He quoted some resolutions passed in New Brunswick declaring war on Quebec, but it did not appear that Mr. Foster was responsible for them.

He stated that at Renfrew, Ont., in the campaign of 1896 Mr. Foster had said: "Would it not be a disgrace and a shame to have at the head of this fair Dominion of ours a Frenchman, and a Roman Catholic at that?"

Mr. Foster denied the Renfrew speech, and, on motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the defendant was ordered to withdraw from the chamber, but to remain within call until the House should determine just what to do with him.

Mr. Ross (Yale-Cariboo) as a newspaper man protested against any effort to establish a censorship of the press. He moved "that this House do not proceed to the orders of the day."

Sir Wilfrid Is Just.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said the press of this country must understand that it was subject to Parliament. However antiquated the law might be it was the law undoubtedly. He would therefore move an amendment that the article in La Presse be censured and that Mr. Cinqmars be recalled to the bar and that this decision be then communicated to him. Personally the Premier believed that the charges against Mr. Foster might not be without foundation; but to use such terms as "liar" and "hypocrite" passed all bounds and could not be tolerated.

R. L. Borden agreed with the Premier. He read numerous authorities. Any libel or insult against a member was contempt of Parliament. This proceeding was not directed against Mr. Cinqmars as a member of the press gallery. Parliament could reach out and punish any man in Canada who published insulting and libelous statements respecting members of the House.

The End of It.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's motion carried, and in a few moments the prisoner reappeared at the bar of the House.

For several moments there was great disorder; the majority of the Liberal members applauding noisily. When order was restored, Mr. Speaker said:

"Mr. Cinqmars, I am instructed to inform you that the House considers that your article in La Presse has passed the bounds of legitimate criticism, and that you have incurred the censure of the House."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier then moved that Mr. Cinqmars be discharged from further attendance. The motion carried without dissent.

The Liberals again applauded loudly as the journalist made his farewell bow and departed.

Sandwich Fillings.

Out of a hundred sandwich fillings the following are unusual: Equal parts of chicken and ham finely mixed and seasoned with curry powder; minced tongue and hard boiled eggs, seasoned with mustard; minced hard boiled eggs, one sardine to every three, seasoned with lemon juice; water cress chopped fine, seasoned with salt and pepper and chopped hard boiled eggs; equal parts of minced ham and celery mixed with mayonnaise; cold roast chicken and cold cooked oysters chopped fine; cold corned beef and green peppers minced; cold mutton chopped fine and moistened with mint sauce; cream cheese and bar-le-duc mixed to a paste.

Escaloped Calf's Head.

Escaloped calf's head may be made from the pieces of meat left over from calf's head soup. Place a layer in the bottom of the baking dish, then a layer of tomatoes, then a sprinkling of breadcrumbs, half a teaspoonful of celery seed, a layer of chopped parsley and a dusting of pepper; then another layer of meat, tomato, breadcrumbs and so on until the dish is filled, having the last layer breadcrumbs. Put over the top a tablespoonful of butter cut into bits. Bake in a moderate oven thirty minutes.

An Old Ice Chest.

A writer in the House Beautiful describes the conversion of an old ice chest into a useful piece of hall furniture. "The possibilities of an old icebox, the kind that opens from the top, are wonderful. I sawed the legs off mine, put rollers on and, after scrubbing, stained it weathered oak. I put on black iron strap hinges and a big padlock, then took the zinc lining out and relined with green picture matting and had a handsome chest for my hall."

Brought Down the House.

Critic—I hear that the new man's acting brought down the house. Manager—Yes, it did. In one week it brought down the house from 800 to 10 people and the attendants.

In the Doctor's Waiting Room.

REPORT THE REJECTED

Insurance Officers Kept Posted by Their Association.

In the Absence of Mr. Pattison, Royal Insurance Commission Is Informed of the Workings of the Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association, Limited — Mr. Thomas Bradshaw Tells Why It Wanted a Status.

Toronto, June 15.—A. J. Pattison, former manager of the Home Life Insurance Co., did not show up before the Insurance Commission yesterday, and so to put in the time Mr. Shepley called Mr. Thomas Bradshaw, secretary of the Life Officers' Association.

Before Mr. Bradshaw took the stand, H. S. Osler explained to the commission that his client, Mr. Pattison, had not known that he was wanted to give evidence. He was engaged in construction work on his railroad and could not appear this week, but would come later when called on.

The commission adjourned yesterday to meet next Wednesday at 10.30 a. m.

Life Officers' Association.

Mr. Bradshaw outlined in detail the objects and constitution of the Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association, Limited. It took an active part in all subjects relative to life companies, adjusted premium rates, sent deputations to Ottawa and watched all insurance legislation. The association was formed in 1894 by A. E. Ramsay and W. McCabe.

The companies in this are: British Empire, Canada, Confederation, Dominion, Excelsior, Federal, Great Western, Imperial, London, London & Lancashire, Manufactures', Northern, Royal Victoria, Standard, Temperance & General. The association consists of the managers, assistant managers, secretaries and actuaries of the regular Canadian and British life insurance companies now members of the association, and all officers of the same standing in Canadian, British or United States companies, must hereafter be admitted to the association by resolution at a regular meeting after notice—the right to vote being limited to the officer of each company highest in rank, who may be present at any meeting. The membership fee is $15.

The object is: "To advance the interests of life insurance companies in Canada by promoting uniformity of practice among them in matters of general administration, by watching over all legislative measures, bearing upon life insurance, and by affording opportunity for consultation and co-operation in all matters affecting the common interests of the companies represented in the association."

The companies report all the rejected applicants to a central bureau in Boston, with reasons for rejection attached. Some agents get applicants examined even before their applications are sent in, and some people get themselves examined, thinking they may avoid being put on the "bad risk" list if unfit; but the companies send in all the reports they can get, whether the actual applications are made or not.

Sometimes, by reason of this information, a company may know that an applicant is making a misleading statement, which will nullify his policy. But they never, according to Mr. Bradshaw, take the risk under the circumstances. Litigation was not regarded as "good business."

Why It Wanted a Status.

Secretary Bradshaw said that the association asked for letters patent because it wanted to start a journal and to secure funds and letters patent would give the organization a status.

"What is the object of the association in endeavoring to obtain that status?" was asked.

"The companies feel they would be more free to work with the Dominion and Ontario Governments to secure desirable legislation; it was felt that would be a bond of sympathy between the Government and the association, the same as there is now between the Government and the Canadian Bankers' Association.

Mr. Bradshaw advocated uniform legislation by the provinces throughout the Dominion, on some phases of insurance. The Life Officers' Association had discussed this, but had not done anything definitely toward securing it.

The association had taken a part in the assessment acts of British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec, and in connection with a clause relating to the age of the assured in the act in Nova Scotia.

License Fees.

Mr. Tilley then read a memo. prepared by Mr. Bradshaw, showing the rate of license fees and of tax of licenses for the Dominion of Canada.

The fees paid for the maintenance of the Insurance Department by the Imperial Life for 1904 was $226.13, for 1905 $261.18. The total amount paid by the Imperial for taxation last year was $7,226.26. An estimate of taxes paid by the life companies doing business in Canada in one year could be put at $270,000.

"Mr. Tilley spent a good deal of time in going over the minutes of the Officers' Association.

What Agents Could Tell.

Commissioner Kent in a speech before the close of the session laid down the law on the treatment of the policyholder by the manager and officers. The policyholder had not only been sat on, but had at times received even worse treatment. The managers will let them go so far and no farther.

The commissioner also thought that each company controlled their expenses, and every time expenses went up the agent was to blame and his salary must be cut.

"It's a wonder to me that no agents have appeared before the commission." They could give a good idea of the inner workings and before the commission adjourns we will hear from the agents as to what they think.

Must Buy French Securities.

Paris, June 15.—A decree relative to the regulation of life insurance companies under the new law was published in The Official Journal yesterday. One article provides that foreign companies shall have a delay of five years, in which to replace their present securities by French state, departmental or communal securities.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, June 14.—Receipts of live stock, as reported by the railways, since Tuesday were 105 carloads, composed of 1665 cattle, 1543 hogs, 741 sheep and lambs, 329 calves and 15 horses.

Exporters.

The best exporters sold at about the same prices as were reported on Tuesday. Prices ranged from $4.80 to $5.15, with one load at $5.20, and 1 prime lot of 6 steers, 1450 lbs., at $5.20. The bulk of the shipping cattle sold around $5. Export bulls sold at $3.75 to $4.25 per cwt.

Butchers.

Choice picked lots of butchers' sold at $4.80 to $4.95 per cwt.; loads of good at $4.50 to $4.70; medium, $4.25 to $4.40; common at $4 to $4.15; cows at $3 to $4 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Harry Murby reports a fair trade in stockers and feeders at last week's quotations. Mr. Murby bought 350 stockers and feeders at following prices: Short-keeps, 1100 to 1200 lbs., at $4.50 to $4.75; good steers, 900 to 1050 lbs., at $4 to $4.25; good steers, 800 to 900 lbs., at $3.90 to $4.10; light stockers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, $3 to $3.25; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Milch Cows.

Between 50 and 60 milch cows and springers were offered. There was an active trade, owing to there being some Montreal buyers on the market. Good to prime cows fetched high prices. Prices ranged all the way from $30 to $65 each. Good to choice sold at $50 to $65 each; medium, $40 to $45; common at $30 to $35.

Veal Calves.

The delivery of veal calves being large, prices for the common to medium classes were easier, while good to prime veals sold at about steady quotations. Good calves sold at $5 to $6 per cwt.; medium at $4 to $4.50; common at $3.50 per cwt. Extra prime new milk-fed veals might bring $6.50, but there are few of these coming forward.

Sheep and Lambs.

Trade in sheep and lambs was steady, lambs being inclined to be firm. Export ewes, $4.25 to $4.50; bucks, $3.50 to $3.75; spring lambs, at $3 to $6 each, with one or two lots at $6.25 each.

Hogs.

There was a fair delivery of hogs. Mr. Harris stated he was paying the same prices to-day, but after this date quotations would be 15c per cwt. lower, that is $7.25 for selects and $7 for lights and fats.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

Fire Destroys Big Mill.

Nakusp, B. C., June 15.—Fire yesterday in the sawmill of the Yale Columbia Lumber Co., totally destroyed their plant and entire stock of lumber in the yards. The loss on plant is about $25,000. The yards contained nearly 2,000,000 feet. The whole is covered by insurance, but the amount is unknown. Between 50 and 60 men were employed at the mill.

Natives Attack British Officers.

Cairo, Egypt, June 15.—Captain S. C. Bull of the Sixth (Inniskilling) Dragoons was killed, and four other British officers were bodly injured by natives near Tantab Wednesday. The affair appears to be the outcome of the recent pan-Islamic campaign, carried on during the Anglo-Turkish dispute over the Tabah boundary.

True Bill From Grand Jury.

St. Catharines, June 15.—The grand jury in the Court of General Sessions at Welland has found a true bill against Geo. W. Clark, manager of the Ontario Silver Plating Co., charged with selling goods with a fraudulent trademark. The defendant was given till Saturday to prepare for trial.

Companies Sent 'Frisco Messages by Mail Instead of by Telegraph.

San Francisco, June 16.—A sensational arraignment of the Western Union Telegraph Co. is contained in the report of the special committee of the grand jury which investigated the charge that telegraph companies accepted thousands of messages in the days immediately following the fire which were sent by mail and messenger. This report, which was adopted by the grand jury, says, in part:

"The evidence of the postoffice officials is that more than half of these telegrams were addressed to points in the burned district. It is estimated by your committee that at least $1,000,000 was collected from all parts of the United States and Europe by the telegraph companies for messages which were not transmitted by telegraph, and your committee has not been able to find that the telegraph company has contributed one cent toward the relief fund.

"Your committee would recommend an indictment of officials, but for that section of the law which requires evidence of the false obtaining of a sum of over $50 to make it a felony."

Attention is called to the fact that the senders of messages which were handled in this way are by law, entitled to the return of the tolls and $50 liquidated damages for each message. The report recommends that the evidence be laid before the Federal grand jury and sent to President Roosevelt.

Earthquake at 'Frisco.

San Francisco, June 16.—A severe earthquake was felt here at 9.41 p. m. It lasted about 5 seconds. It was probably not heavy enough to do damage, but possibly it may have caused some of the ruined walls to fall.

Death Of Ministers.

Country's Rejoinder to Refusal to Abolish Death Penalty.

M. Alladin's Open Roast on the Rostrum—Russian Press Is Profoundly Pessimistic Over Thursday's Events In Lower House of Parliament—Disorders Break Out With Greater Fury At Bialistok—80 Jews Killed.

St. Petersburg, June 16.—Disorders appear to have broken out at Bialistok yesterday afternoon with even greater fury than characterized Thursday's riots. No despatches were received last night direct from Bialistok, where the telegraph office is closed, but semi-official messages from Grodno and Minsk report that the excesses were started again yesterday by the throwing of several bombs. The crowds, according to these despatches, then opened fire on the police, which the troops replied to, and there was a constant interchange of shots between Jews from their houses and the soldiers from the streets.

A mob of peasants armed with clubs, scythes, etc., who had found their way into the city Thursday, was participating in the rioting.

Minister Interpolated.

M. Sheftel, a member of Parliament from Ekaterinoslav, accompanied by several members of the Lower House from the Jewish Pale, called on M. Stolypin, the Minister of the Interior, yesterday regarding the anti-Jewish outbreak at Bialistok. They were informed by his aide-de-camp that order had been restored, and that about ten persons had been killed, but that the Ministry had no information as to the number of wounded.

Subsequently M. Sheftel and his colleagues drafted interpellations for presentation in the Lower House demanding to know what measures are being taken to prevent the destruction of the lives and property of Jews throughout the empire.

M. Sheftel's interpellation was presented yesterday afternoon, and the House accepted it unanimously with amendments making it urgent and providing for the despatch of a Parliamentary commission to Bialistok to investigate the affairs.

Hold Government Responsible.

A series of speakers held the Government directly responsible for the outbreak, declaring that the anti-Jewish hatred of the Russian masses was fiction, except when fomented by the authorities, and asserting that outbreaks never occurred except on their incitation or with their connivance.

The press is unanimous in its profound pessimism over Thursday's events in the Lower House of Parliament.

M. Alladin, leader of the peasant-workmen group, openly boasted from the rostrum Thursday that the death of the Ministers would be the country's rejoinder to the Government's refusal to abolish the death penalty.

Some of the paper believe that Thursday's events definitely foreshadow the Government's intention to dissolve Parliament. It is significant that The Novoe Vramya, hitherto a thick and thin supporter of the Government, is silent.

Thirty Jews Killed.

Bialistok, Russia, June 16.—So far as can be ascertained thirty Jews were killed during Thursday's outbreak here. The hospitals are filled with wounded, but it is impossible to ascertain the correct number of the casualties, as many of the injured are hidden in private houses. All the Jewish shops on the four principal streets were sacked. Military and police patrols now guard the streets, and no civilians are allowed to leave their houses. A sort of armed truce has been established pending the complete restoration of order.

Flour Mills Burning.

Tula, European Russia, June 16.—The flour mills and grain warehouses here are burning.

Agitation at Moscow.

Moscow, June 16.—The agitation among the workmen here is general, and the strike is in full progress. Largely attended meetings of a revolutionary character are held nightly in the industrial sections and big demonstrations are made in front of the prisons. In the resolutions adopted support is pledged to Parliament only so long as it persists in its fight against the bureaucracy.

Peasants Taking Lands.

Tver, Russia, June 16.—Cossacks and dragoons have been despatched to two districts near here where the peasants, losing patience at the inaction of Parliament, are taking possession of lands.

Mohilev, Russia, June 16.—The proprietor of an estate in this vicinity who refused to distribute his land to the peasants has been killed.

Novgorod, Russia, June 16.—Several proprietors of estates in this province have been beaten and driven off by the peasants.

Halifax Is Ahead.

London, June 16.—(C. A. P.)—Col. Jocelyn, commandant of the School of Gunnery at Shoeburyness, in his report on the firing of the Royal Garrison Artillery, says of the companies abroad carrying out practice, the best was the 93th company, at Halifax, with an average of 549.

New Trial For Dreyfus.

Paris, June 16.—The Supreme Court yesterday began consideration of the results of the enquiry which has been going on for the past twenty-seven months relative to granting Alfred Dreyfus another trial. A decision is expected at the end of the month.

Divorce Is Refused.

Ottawa, June 16.—The bill granting divorce to Eileen Mary MacIntosh, wife of Charles St. Lawrence MacIntosh, of Ottawa, was thrown out by 13 for to 18 against it in the private bills committee yesterday.

Trent Valley Boat Damaged.

Bobcaygeon, June 16.—The steamer Manita of the Trent Valley Navigation Co.'s line was badly damaged by fire yesterday morning, supposed to have originated from a spark from the boiler.

Pictures For the Fair.

Toronto, June 16.—The following pictures will be loaned by the art gallery of the Corporation of London, Eng., to the Toronto Fair: "Fording the River; Showery Weather," by John Constable, R. A.; "George Herbert at Bemerton," by William Dyce, R. A.; "Cardinal Wolsey Going in Procession to Westminster Hall," by Sir John Gilbert, R. A.; "The Churchyard at Bettwys-y-Coed," by B. W. Leader, R. A.

It May Be Dr. Osler.

Toronto, June 16.—It is rumored here that Dr. Wm. Osler, regius professor at Oxford University, has been offered the presidency of the University of Toronto, and that only the matter of salary and a few minor conditions stand between his acceptance of the post.

Should the Assessment Rolls Be Published?

Readers of The Intelligencer will remember that this paper has, on several occasions, advocated the publication of the Assessment rolls. This course is now being advocated in many places, where it is urged that publicity would ensure a fair assessment, would tend to create a feeling of security, and would often remove an idea that some ratepayers were being treated more leniently than others. The Windsor Record makes some very sensible remarks on this matter, which we herewith reproduce:

"Complaints are constantly current as to alleged inequalities in the city's assessment, and the Record is furnished with several examples that apparently support the contention.

"Some time ago it was again suggested in these columns that the assessment roll be published in the same form as the voters' list. The people paying taxes are entitled to this information, and in some towns and cities it is so furnished.

"There is no other way to allay discontent, and, it may be, suspicion, that for some reason the assessment is not fairly equitable.

"The position of the assessment officer is one of much difficulty and it must be remembered that Mr. Black, like his critics, is only human. The Record has full confidence not only in his skill but the integrity of Mr. Black, and believe that when the very best is done it would be impossible to produce an assessment that would please even a minority of the people concerned.

"Many cases of assessment have to be considered by themselves, and all the modifying circumstances must be known before an exact judgment could be formed as to the equity of the case.

"The data in possession of The Record are intended to reflect on the methods of the assessor, and that hard-worked official would be placed in a much more comfortable relation to the people he serves if the particulars of his work were accessible in some tabular form in book or newspaper."

It is just possible there may be more truth than poetry in the following, which is from the Colborne Express; "While the modern system of school work may be deficient in some respects, and no doubt the tendency is to take on more work and too many branches of study for the pupil to master thoroughly in the time the average boy or girl is allowed for schooling, yet there is a fault on the part of parents which is persistently left out of account in the argument of the critic. The pupils, especially in the higher grades, are allowed to spend the nights during the week in various amusements which distract their minds from school work, and the loss of sleep incapacitates them for good work during school hours."

HERPICIDE'S MISSION.

It Takes Away the Dread of Birthdays.

Nothing is more annoying to men and women of middle age than to see those unmistakable signs of age—thin hair and grayness — approaching. But science has discovered that these conditions are no longer "unmistakable" evidences of old age, for the dandruff germ theory proves that even very young people may suffer hair loss, while those fortunate enough to escape the ravages of the scalp germ, retain their abundant locks to a ripe old age. Newbro's Herpicide kills the dandruff germ and removes the risk of appearing old before your time Save your hair and your feelings, by using the genuine Herpicide.

The short sermon season now being "in our midst," the following story seems apropos. It is told by a clergyman not a thousand miles from Belleville;

"I preached a funeral sermon at one time, and spoke longer than was my custom.

"The undertaker was a man of nervous temperament, and as the afternoon was going he began to be anxious to be on the way to the cemetery. He finally whispered to one of my members; 'Does your minister always preach as long as that at a funeral?'

"'Well,' said the brother, 'that is a good sermon.'

"'Yes,' said the undertaker, 'the sermon is all right, and I believe in the resurrection, but I am afraid if he does not stop pretty soon I will not get this man buried in time.'"

Mr. C. M. Stork, at the Board of Trade meeting the other night, said this city would never have an efficient post office service till it was put back on the civil service system. Then the clerks would have possible promotion as an inducement to remain in their positions and try to improve in their work.

That is what this great family journal has been saying all along. Under a Conservative Government the Belleville post office was under the Civil Service system. The office was degraded and the service spoiled—or at all events, rendered less efficient—by the Grits. We are glad to see our esteemed fellow-citizen, Mr. Stork, acknowledge the corn. Perhaps, if a few more Liberal gentlemen would follow his example, and state the facts plainly, there might be a possibility of the old status of the office being restored. But so long as Liberal gentlemen allow their party prejudices to continue to keep them from seeing what is as plain as a pike staff, why things will go on as they are, no doubt.

Talking on the above matter this morning, a Liberal gentleman said; "I told the party managers in this city, when they first spoke of degrading the office, and taking away its civil service standing, that they were making a mistake. Their cry was 'economy,' and it would be all right if economy was practiced throughout the rest of Canada. But is it? The Government spends money like water in some places, and starves us. What good does it do a Grit like me to see his party in power when he is denied even a semblance of justice? For my part I do not believe the local office will be properly run until the old system is restored. I am told that, at present, a young fellow goes into the office at, say, $200 per year. The Postmaster promises him a raise of $100 the next year. The next year comes and the P. M. says he is sorry, but he will not be able to give him the advance promised, and, of course, the clerk is dissatisfied, and perhaps leaves. Anyhow, his efficiency is not increased. Such a system, I contend, is wrong. No man should be allowed to run a Government institution as though it were his own private business. The office should be under Civil Service rules, and then we can look for a proper service, and, I believe, not till then."

It is "Beautiful Belleville" now, all right enough. Have you noticed how much the looks of the city have been improved lately by the new verandahs and boulevards? It's really wonderful how they have added to the appearance of certain streets. One would travel a long way nowadays before he came across a prettier place than Belleville.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Who Would Be a Methodist Preacher?

Christian Guardian: Yes, who, indeed—when he knows all that it implies? We guarantee that there has not been a man in the whole long list of itinerants since the days of Wesley, but has got low enough down in spirit to ask himself that question at least once or twice. Many of us are asking it nearly every day, though, strangely enough, we do not wonder so much for ourselves as for the other fellows, whose troubles and losses and crosses we see sometimes plainer than we see their joys and compensations. Yes, we look and wonder and cry out in astonishment, "Who would be a Methodist preacher?"

First, there is the biennial or triennial or quadrennial moving. Oh, the packing and unpacking of trunks and boxes and barrels, what a nightmare it has become! Each time one thinks he will plan better, and be more systematic, but each year the dread of it somehow grows greater and the realization more nerve-racking. It is only a few poor things at most that the itinerant has in his modern "furnished" parsonage—until he comes to pick them out of their present surroundings and move them to and adjust them in their new ones, and then he finds they are neither few nor small. And, experienced veteran of the trail though he soon becomes, the thought of "moving year" is one that he does not cherish oftener than he has to.

And then, of course, he would like to have his home like any other man, with all his home things about him. Some one has said that it is impossible to make a real home in a great city, because the noisy and impertinent outside world crowds in so close upon the home-makers. Be that as it may, a home in which one cannot have all his "own things" about him, and which has to be broken up every few years, is robbed of some things that are to many people its dearest accessories.

And what of the worry? Worry about nearly everything under heaven. Worry for want of money. Come, you Methodist preacher that has never had to pull and stretch and scheme and plot to make the two ends come together, stand forth, for we would like to see you; you are a rare creature among the sons of Methodism. And the worry over cantankerous and quarrelling members and officials. The Lord has many queer and troublesome children, and he allows some of them—we doubt if he puts them there—to attain to positions of responsibility in the church. Truly there is no sitting at ease in Zion where they are. And the fault-finders — their name seems legion. Those who want more and better preaching, those who want more and better pastoral work, and those who want—they know not what, only it is something that, with the present failing and mortal race of preachers, is simply impossible. And the lack of appreciation — how that has brought you, my brother preacher, down into the depths, and wrung from your very soul the bitterest tears that mortal man may shed!

And what shall we say of the burden of responsibility. "The burden of souls"—that is no imaginary thing, as every honest minister of the Gospel knows. The burden of leading and guiding and teaching and admonishing—how heavy a one it is only they that feel it know. And no one feels it more than the man who is called to the itinerant ministry of Methodism. In the face of that responsibility who would be a Methodist preacher? Yes, who indeed!

And yet men press into the ranks year after year. And as the years go on, and duties and obligations multiply, they still stay at the task, in the face, it may be, of many tempting calls aside. And sometimes we look into the faces of the old veterans of fifty years or more as they tell the story of their struggles and their triumphs, and we catch therein a light that never yet was seen on sea or land. There must surely be another side to the life even of the Methodist preacher!

And truly there is. Of course, the parsonage home was not ideally perfect. It lacked many things. But there was always food enough and raiment suitable, and the great Dispenser had a most wonderful and marvellous and unaccountable way of more than making good what to the outward and uninitiated eye seemed lacking. Of course, there was worry, but, then, what life has it not, and how often did your Lord and Master call you to forget it all as he pressed to your lips some great brimming cup of joy? Of course, men did not always understand or appreciate, but, then, you remember that Sunday night when as you preached the Word your lips seemed touched with the fire of heaven, and your heart burned with the message that he had given you, and as you came out and began your long drive home to the parsonage, you looked up into the face of God's stars, and you saw him smile upon you, and how small a matter it seemed then whether man praised or blamed you.

Or you remember that other time when you went into the chamber of death. There lay one who in a few hours would step out upon the great unknown, and as you took his hand in yours, he looked up into your face with the glory light in his eye, and said, "Brother, it was you that first led me to the Saviour that is now so precious." And you went out and brushed a tear away, and with a shout that all the devils in hell could not check, you cried, "Praise the Lord, who would not be a Methodist preacher?"

Yes, there is another side to the shield and as you look at it, how gloriously it shines. No earthly comforts and blessings! Why, yes, they are about you without number. A thousand homes are yours instead of one, for every one that despises you there are a hundred that honor and love you; every hardship that comes brings with it some comfort or blessing. And then there is the consciousness of duty done, of noble achievement for God and for humanity, the knowledge that the Master rejoices in that the kingdom is brought nigher through your service and faithfulness. Yes, who would not be a Methodist minister?

A Great Stamp Forgery.

The most colossal stamp forgery on record entailed the successful swindling of collectors throughout Europe in 1889. One day the French papers announced that King Marie I. of Sedang, an island in the vicinity of China, was coming to Paris. As it happened, this self created monarch was an ex-officer of the French navy, and his appearance in Paris created considerable sensation. As soon as his majesty had been duly "advertised" sets of seven different postage stamps marked "Sedang" and bearing three half moons appeared, and so great was the demand for them that in less than a month they realized 1,000 francs each. Not until the king and his ministers had reaped fat fortunes in this manner was it discovered that the whole thing was a hoax and the stamps consequently worthless.

What's the good of keeping from him
Any good things you may see,
That will lift his load of labor
Like Rocky Mountain Tea.

There is nothing more pleasing than praise if it is honest and you believe you have earned it.

LITTLE BELL BIOGRAPHIES

C Bach

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH was born in 1685 and died in 1750, aged 65. From childhood he grew up, as all should grow, in an atmosphere of good music in the home. He made such rapid progress in his music lessons that he soon knew more, could play better and compose better than all his teachers.

Bach is the greatest musician that ever lived. He was the inventor; all who came after him were followers or imitators. He wrote nearly 1,000 compositions, founded modern orchestral music, perfected organ methods and choral composition, discovered most of the methods in instrumental composition, rearranged the 24 scales, making it possible to play in every key, and established the chief principles of modern piano playing. No one can hope to become even a good concert pianist who has not first mastered Bach's Inventions, Well-tempered Clavier and Fugues.

To practice or play on Bach had only the clavichord, an instrument small in dimensions, limited in scale, thin and weak in tone as a mandolin, and poor in construction as an old-fashioned melodeon.

He had no such beautiful and marvellous instrument as

The Bell Piano

But seated at the sweet, rich, pure toned Bell Art Piano, with its greatest of modern improvements—THE ILLIMITABLE REPEATING ACTION—Bach would have brought forth music lovelier than any the world has yet heard. To all musicians the great Schumann's advice, had he lived in our day, would undoubtedly have been "Make Bach and the Bell Piano your daily bread."

The full series of "Little Bell Biographies" in booklet form, illustrated, will be mailed free on request by

The Bell Piano & Organ Co., Limited, Guelph, Ont.

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness.' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how, The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

TIMELY TOPICS.

A DAY IN JUNE.

And what is so rare as a day in June?
Then, if ever, come perfect days.
Then heaven tries earth if it be in tune
And over it softly her warm ear lays;
Whether we look or whether we listen,
We hear life murmur or see it
glisten;
Every clod feels a stir of might An instinct within it that reaches and towers
And groping blindly above it for light
Climbs to a soul in grass and flowers;
The flush of life may well be seen
Thrilling back over hills and valleys;
The cowslip startles over meadows
green,
The buttercups catches the sun in its chalice
And there's never a leaf or a blade too mean
To be some happy creature's palace;
The little bird sits at his door in the sun
Atilt like a blossom among the leaves
And pets his illumined being o'er run
With the deluge of summer it receives;
His mate feels the eggs beneath her wings
And the heart in her dumb breast
flutters and sings.
He sings to the wide world and she to her nest
In the nice ear of nature which song is the best?
—James Russell Lowell.

Our neighbors to the south are these days, keeping pretty close "tab" on Canada, and the following, from the Cleveland, O., Leader, makes interesting and pleasant reading for patriotic Canadians;

"In the nine months ending March 31st the number of immigrants who entered the Dominion of Canada from the United States was 30,971. That is at the rate of over 41,000 a year.

"In the same period Canada received 54,678 immigrants from the British Isles and other parts of Europe. A year's immigration, at the same monthly rate, would be 73,000 in round figures.

"It will be seen that the total emigration to the Dominion is likely to exceed 114,000 for the year ending June 30. The figures for the latest months are so large that it will probably reach 150,000. It certainly cannot fall below 125,000.

"The population of Canada is equal to about 7 per cent. of the inhabitants of the United States. If this country received as many immigrants in proportion to its population as Canada it would have to dispose of about 1,750,000 this year, which is far beyond the possibilities.

"But population is not the best gauge of the need of immigration. Area often counts more, and Canada has plenty of room. The rapid growth of the Dominion is natural, sound and likely to continue for many years."

Three hundred and twenty-five British war vessels, with 65,000 men, are at present mobilized in the English Channel for mimic warfare, the greatest aggregation of fighting ships ever assembled. The Blue, consisting of 90 warships without torpedo boats or submarines, constituting the enemy, is commanded by Vice-Admiral Sir William May, and the Red, the home defence fleet, composed of 235 vessels, including 66 torpedo boats and sub-marines, is in charge of Admirals Sir Arthur Wilson and Lord Charles Beresford. For the first time, army officers are being placed on the warships to help them the better to learn how naval problems bear on army ones.

Desperate Struggle For Life of an Unknown Man.

Seen After He Struck White Horse Rapids His Boat Overturned and He Was Thrown Into the Water—Made No Headway, Although He Struggled Desperately—His Agonized Face and Arms Waving Were Seen by Three.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 16.—An unknown man was carried over the Horseshoe Falls yesterday morning.

About 9 o'clock he was seen by Archie McEachren, a hack-driver, and two gentlemen who were in his carriage. They were at the head of Goat Island, and in sight of the point where the river divides, one current setting in towards the American falls and the other towards the Horseshoe. They say the man came down the river in a boat, but soon after he struck the White Horse Rapids the boat overturned and he was thrown into the water. He was trying to direct his course so that he would land at the head of one of the islands, but was too far to the west when his boat capsized. The current which sets across the river for the Horseshoe Falls above the Three Sisters Islands caught him, and then he had no chance.

A Desperate Struggle.

He struggled desperately with the waves, but made no headway, and was soon smothered in the foam of the rapids. He passed within two hundred feet of the outer point of the group of islands, and the men on shore could see his agonized face, and his arms waving in an appeal for succor, which no earthly power could afford. All the description they can give is that the man was dressed in black clothes.

It is impossible to get any news of anyone missing from the upper river. No one is missing in Chippawa, nor any boats out. It is possible that the man started from Lasalle or Tonawanda, on the American side. Very likely he was fishing and was carried down the river by the smooth but swift current, as many have been before, till he was beyond aid before he realized his peril.

Steps In Hole, Drowns.

Lindsay, June 16.—Last evening, about 6.30, John Stevens, 17 years of age, was drowned while bathing in the Scugog River, opposite Carew's lumber mill here. He could not swim, and when he stepped in a hole he was drowned.

Boy Fell With Elevator.

Brockville, June 16.—One of the elevator carriages in the James Smart foundry gave away yesterday morning through the breaking of a cable and fell over twenty feet. Albert Bates, a lad operating it, was carried to the bottom with a thud. His body bounced off, and striking the floor painful injuries were inflicted. His lower limbs were fractured. He is still suffering from spinal shock, and his condition is regarded with some alarm.

Farmer Badly Hurt.

Stratford, June 16.—James Gloyne, farmer, living in Downie, was working a traction engine and stepped upon the fly-wheel, not knowing the power was on, with the result that he was thrown several feet in the air, alighting with terrific force. He received severe internal injuries, but will recover.

Killed In British Columbia.

Cornwall, June 16.—James Adams, son of John Adams of Glenwater, was killed in a mine at Silverton, B. C., on Wednesday evening. He was 28 years of age and had been in British Columbia about five years. The remains are being brought home.

Two Men Injured.

Kingston, June 16.—William Weir, a switchman at Collins' Bay, was struck by a freight train yesterday morning. His right thigh was fractured, his left gashed and a wound was made in his groin. He is in the general hospital here.

W. Mundy while at work on a hay press at Selby got caught in the machinery, had his left leg broken and received other injuries.

Three Lives Lost In Fire.

Syracuse, N. Y., June 16.—Joseph Leroy, Richard Hinch and Lewis Holden of Fulton lost their lives yesterday in a fire at the Allen Excelsior and Butter Tub Works in that city.

Coal Mines Closed.

Pittsburg, June 16.—The mines of the Connell, Creighton, McFetridge and McKean Coal Companies, in the neighborhood of Tarentum, Pa., closed down yesterday on account of the refusal of the operators to pay the Pittsburg scale. Pickets have been stationed about the mines, but no trouble is expected. About 1,000 men are idle.

Bambaata Is Dead.

Durban, Natal, June 16.—It is now definitely known that the rebel chief, Bambaata, the cause of all the recent trouble, was killed in the fighting which occurred June 10. His death had previously been reported and denied, but his body has been fully identified. The revolt is now expected to speedily die out.

Perhaps Erin Passenger.

Detroit, June 16.—The body of a woman, supposed to be that of the unknown woman passenger on the Canadian steamer Erin, recently sunk in St. Clair River, was picked up at Cherry Beach Thursday by a fisherman.

Synod Extends Recognition.

Toronto, June 16.—With a cordial recognition of the declaration of the Presbyterian General Assembly in favor of organic church union, the annual meeting of the Anglican Synod of Toronto Diocese came to an end last night.

Too Decomposed For Recognition.

Sandwich, June 16.—The badly decomposed body of a man was pulled from the river yesterday. It had been in the water so long that identification was impossible. It may be one of the victims of the Erin disaster.

The Two Vanrevels

CHAPTER I.

It was long ago, in the days when men sighed when they fell in love, when people danced by candle and lamp, and did dance, too, instead of solemnly gliding about; in that mellow time so long ago when the young were romantic and summer was roses and wine, old Carewe brought his lovely daughter home from the convent to wreck the hearts of the youth of Rouen.

That was not a far journey; only an afternoon's drive through the woods and by the river in an April long ago, Miss Betty's harp carefully strapped behind the great lumbering carriage, her guitar on the front seat half buried under a mound of bouquets and oddly shaped little bundles, farewell gifts of her comrades and the good sisters. In her left hand she clutched a small lace handkerchief, with which she now and then touched her eyes, brimmed with the parting from Sister Cecilia, Sister Mary Basilede, the old stone steps and all the girls, but for every time that she lifted the dainty kerchief to brush away the edge of a tear she took a deep breath of the western woodland air and smiled at least twice, for the years of strict inclosure within St. Mary's walls and still gardens were finished and done with, and at last the many colored world flashed and danced in a mystery before her. This mystery was brilliant to the convent girl because it contained men. She was eager to behold it.

They rumbled into town after sunset in the fair twilight, the dogs barking before them, and every one would have been surprised to know that Tom Vanrevel, instead of Mr. Crailey Gray, was the first to see her. By the merest accident Tom was strolling near the Carewe place at the time, and when the carriage swung into the gates, with rattle and clink and clouds of dust at the finish, it was not too soon lost behind the shrubbery and trees for Tom to catch something more than a glimpse of a gray skirt behind a mound of flowers and of a charming face with parted lips and dark eyes beneath the scuttle of an enormous bonnet. It happened—perhaps it is more accurate to say that Tom thought it happened—that she was just clearing away her veil when he turned to look. She blushed suddenly—so much was not to be mistaken—and the eyes that met his were remarkable for other reasons than the sheer loveliness of them, in that, even in the one flash of them he caught, they meant so many things at one time. But, above all, these eyes were fully conscious of Tom Vanrevel.

Without realizing what he did Mr. Vanrevel stopped short. He had been swinging a walking stick, which, describing a brief arc, remained poised halfway in its descent. There was only that one glance between them, and the carriage disappeared, leaving a scent of spring flowers in the air.

The young man was left standing on the wooden pavement in the midst of a great loneliness, yet enveloped in the afterglow, his soul roseate, his being quavering, his expression, like his cane, instantaneously arrested. With such promptitude and finish was he disposed of that had Miss Carewe been aware of his name and the condition wrought in him by the single stroke she could have sought only the terse Richard of England for a like executive ability: "Off with his head! So much for Vanrevel!"

She had lifted a slender hand to the fluttering veil, a hand in a white glove with a small lace gauntlet at the wrist. This gesture was the final divinity of the radiant vision which remained with the dazed young man as he went down the street, and it may have been three-quarters of an hour later when the background of the picture became vivid to him—a carefully dressed gentleman with heavy brows and a handsome high nose, who sat stiffly upright beside the girl, his very bright eyes quite as conscious of the stricken pedestrian as were hers; vastly different, however, in this—that they glittered—nay, almost bristled—with hostility, while every polished button of his blue coat seemed to reflect their malignancy and to dart little echoing shafts of venom at Mr. Vanrevel.

Tom was dismayed by the acuteness of his perception that a man who does not speak to you has no right to have a daughter like the lady in the carriage, and, the moment of this realization occurring as he sat making a poor pretense to eat his evening meal at the Rouen House, he dropped his fork rattling upon his plate and leaned back, staring at nothing, a proceeding of which his table mate, Mr. William Cummings, the editor of the Rouen Journal, was too busy over his river bass to take note.

"Have you heard what's new in town?" asked Cummings presently, looking up.

"No," said Tom truthfully, for he had seen what was new, but not heard it.

"Old Carewe's brought his daughter home. Fanchon Bareaud was with her at St. Mary's until last year, and Fanchon says she's not only a great beauty, but a great dear."

"Ah!" rejoined the other with masterly indifference. "Dare say—dare say."

"No wonder you're not interested," said Cummings cheerfully, returning to the discussion of his bass. "The old villain will take precious good care you don't come near her."

Mr. Vanrevel already possessed a profound conviction to the same effect. Robert Meilhac Carewe was known not only as the wealthiest citizen of Rouen, but also as its heartiest and most steadfast hater; and, although there were only 5,000 or 6,000 inhabitants, neither was a small distinction, for Rouen was ranked in those easy days as a wealthy town, even as it was called an old town, proud of its age and its riches and bitter in its politics, of course. The French had built a fort there soon after La Salle's last voyage and, as Crailey Gray said, had settled the place, and had then been settled themselves by the pioneer militia. After the Revolution, Carolinians and Virginians had come by way of Tennessee and Kentucky, while the adventurous countrymen from Connecticut, traveling thither to sell, remained to buy—and then sell—when the country was in its teens. In course of time the little trading post of the northwest territory had grown to be the leading center of elegance and culture in the Ohio valley—at least they said so in Rouen.

Robert Carewe was Rouen's magnate, commercially and socially and, until an upstart young lawyer named Vanrevel struck into his power with a broadax, politically. The wharfs were Carewe's; the warehouses that stood by the river and the line of packets which plied upon it were his. Half the town was his, and in Rouen this meant that he was possessed of the middle justice, the high and the low. His mother was a Frenchwoman, and in those days, when to go abroad was a ponderous and venturesome undertaking, the fact that he had spent most of his youth in the French capital wrought a certain glamour about him, for to the American Paris was Europe, and it lay shimmering on the far horizon of every imagination, a golden city.

Mr. Carewe lived in an old fashioned house on the broad, quiet, shady street which bore his name. There was a wide lawn in front, shadowy under elm and locust trees and bounded by thick shrubberies. A long garden, fair with roses and hollyhocks, lay outside the library windows—an old time garden, with fine gravel paths and green arbors, drowsed over in summer time by the bees, while overhead the locust rasped his rusty cadences the livelong day, and a faraway sounding love note from the high branches brought to mind the line, like an old refrain:

> The voice of the turtle was heard in the land.

Between the garden and the carriage gates there was a fountain where a bronze boy with the dropsy (but not minding it) lived in a perpetual bath from a green goblet held over his head. Near by a stone sundial gleamed against a clump of lilac bushes, and it was upon this spot that the white kitten introduced Thomas Vanrevel to Miss Carewe.

Upon the morning after her arrival, having finished her pianoforte practice, touched her harp twice and arpeggioed the "Spanish Fandango" on her guitar, Miss Betty read two paragraphs of "Gilbert" (for she was profoundly determined to pursue her tasks with diligence), but, the open windows disclosing a world all sunshine and green leaves, she threw the book aside with a good conscience and danced out to the garden. There, coming upon a fuzzy white ball rolling into itself spirally on a lazy pathway, she pounced at it, whereupon the thing uncurled with lightning swiftness and fled, more like a streak than a kitten, down the drive, through the open gates and into the street, Miss Betty in full cry.

Across the way there chanced to be strolling a young lady in blue, accompanied by a gentleman whose leisurely gait gave no indication of the maneuvering he had done to hasten their walk into its present direction. He was apparently thirty or thirty-one, tall, very straight, dark, smooth shaved, his eyes keen, deep set and thoughtful, and his high white hat, white satin cravat and careful collar were evidence of an elaboration of toilet somewhat unusual in Rouen for the morning. Also he was carrying a pair of white gloves in his hand and dangled a slender ebony cane from his wrist. The flying kitten headed toward the couple when, with a celerity only to be accounted for on the theory that his eye had been fixed on the Carewe gateway for some time previous to this sudden apparition, the gentleman leaped in front of the fugitive.

The kitten attempted a dodge to pass; the gentleman was there before it. The kitten feinted; the gentleman was altogether too much on the spot. Immediately, and just as Miss Carewe, flushed and glowing, ran into the street, the small animal doubled, evaded Miss Betty's frantic clutch, re-entered the gateway and attempted a disappearance into the lilac bushes instead of going around them, only to find itself, for a fatal two seconds, in difficulties with the close set thicket of stems.

In regard to the extraordinary agility of which the pursuing gentleman was capable, it is enough to say that he caught the cat. He emerged from the lilacs, holding it in one hand, his gloves and white hat in the other, and presented himself before Miss Betty with a breathlessness not entirely attributable to his exertions.

For a moment, as she came running toward him and he met her flashing look, bright with laughter and recognition and haste, he stammered. A thrill nothing less than delirious sent the blood up behind his brown cheeks, for he saw that she, too, knew that this was the second time their eyes had met.

He could not speak at once, but when he could, "Permit me, madam," he said solemnly, offering the captive, "to restore your kitten."

An agitated kitten should not be detained by clasping its waist, and already the conqueror was paying for his victory. There ensued a final outrageous squirm of despair. Two frantic claws, extended, drew one long red mark across the stranger's wrist and another down the back of his hand to the knuckles. They were good, hearty scratches, and the blood followed the artist's lines rapidly, but of this the young man took no note, for he knew that he was about to hear Miss Carewe's voice for the first time.

"They say the best way to hold them," he observed, "is by the scruff of the neck."

Beholding his wounds, suffered in her cause, she gave a pitying cry that made his heart leap with the richness and sweetness of it. Catching the kitten from him, she dropped it to the ground in such wise as to prove nature's foresight most kind in cushioning the feet of cats.

"Ah, I didn't want it that much!"

"A cat in the hand is worth two nightingales in the bush," he said boldly and laughed. "I would shed more blood than that!"

Miss Betty blushed like a southern dawn and started back from him. From the convent but yesterday—and she had taken a man's hand in both of hers!

It was to this tableau that the lady in blue entered, following the hunt through the gates, where she stopped with a discomposed countenance. At once, however, she advanced and, with a cry of greeting, enveloped Miss Betty in a brief embrace, to the relief of the latter's confusion. It was Fanchon Bareaud, now two years emancipated from St. Mary's and far gone in taffeta. With her lusterful light hair, absent blue eyes and her gentle voice, as small and pretty as her face and figure, it was not too difficult to justify Crailey Gray's characterization of her as one of those winsome baggages who had made an air of feminine helplessness the fashion of the day.

"I'm so glad—glad!" exclaimed Betty. "You were just coming to see me, weren't you? My father is in the library. Let me"—

Miss Bareaud drew back. "No, no," she interrupted hastily and with evident perturbation; "I—we must be on our way immediately." She threw a glance at the gentleman, which let him know that she now comprehended his gloves and why their stroll had trended toward Carewe street. "Come at once," she commanded him quickly in an undertone.

"But now that you're here," said Miss Betty, wondering very much why he was not presented to her, "won't you wait and let me gather a nosegay for you? Our pansies and violets"—

"I could help," the gentleman suggested, with the look of a lame dog at Miss Bareaud. "I have been considered useful about a garden."

"Fool!" Betty did not hear the word that came from Miss Bareaud's closed teeth, though she was mightily surprised at the visible agitation of her schoolmate, for the latter's face was pale and excited. And Miss Carewe's amazement was complete when Fanchon, without more words, cavalierly

"I didn't want it that much!"

BABY ALWAYS WELL

"I have nothing but good words to say for Baby's Own Tablets," says Mrs A. Dupuis, of Comber, Ont., and she adds: "Since I began using the Tablets my little boy has not had an hour of sickness, and now at the age of eight months he weighs twenty-three pounds. I feel safe now with Baby's Own Tablets in the house, for I know that I have a medicine that will promptly cure all the minor ills from which babies suffer. I would advise all mothers and nurses to use Baby's Own Tablets for their little ones." These are strong words, but thousands of other mothers speak just as strongly in favor of this medicine. This Proves that Corrugation Gives One-Third More Heating Surface

A string laid close over a corrugated surface covers a distance one third greater than when stretched over the same surface flat. The Happy Thought Range has a corrugated oven-lining, exclusively its own patent, and the above simple experiment proves that such corrugation gives one third more heating surface to the oven. That's one reason why the does its work one third more thoroughly, one third more quickly, and with one third less fuel expense than any other stove. Every Happy Thought burns coal or wood.

THE TRANSFIGURATION—GOLDEN TEXT IS: "THIS IS MY BELOVED SON; HEAR HIM."

HISTORICAL SETTING.

Time—Autumn of A.D. 29, a week after the last lesson.

Place—One of the spurs of Mt. Hermon, in the vicinity of Caesarea Philippi.

Place in the Life of Christ—The last half of the third year of His ministry. The complement to Peter's confession, furnishing a new assurance that Jesus was the Messiah.

I. The Prayer Path to the Mount of Vision.—V. 28. Phillips Brooks, in his sermon on the transfiguration, pictures a traveller bound on a long journey to a distant city. At the very beginning of the journey, from a high hill, the traveller plainly sees the spires of the faraway city flashing in the sun, and feasts his eye upon the vision. The road at once descends, and "loses sight of the city. It plunges into forests. It sounds the depths in which flow the dark waters which the sun never touches. But yet it never forgets the city which it saw from the hilltop." The vision draws the traveller on, and when at last he reaches the city, "it is not strange to him, because of the prophecy of it which has been in his heart ever since he saw it from the hill." Such a vision the transfiguration became to the disciples, and to all the world, drawing us on to the heavenly city.

28. About an eight days. Matthew and Mark say six days, not counting as Luke did, the parts of days before and after the six entire days. After these sayings. The prophecy of Christ's crucifixion, which must have filled the disciples with a gloom from which the glorious transfiguration led them out. He took Peter and John and James. Those same "pillars" of the young church (Gal. 2: 9) whom he permitted to witness the raising of Jairus' daughter and the struggle in Gethsemane. This was no arbitrary choice. "To him that hath shall be given." These three were the most ready scholars in Christ's school, capable of being advanced to the higher studies. Witnesses were needed: too many would detract from the prayers of our Lord which usually were solitary; and those were chosen that would make the best use of the privilege, the others being left (Mark 9: 14: Luke 9, 37) at the foot of the mountain. Went up into a mountain. Matthew says, "a high mountain apart,"—"by themselves," says Mark. A tradition coming down from the fourth century, says that the mountain was Tabor.

There is no excuse for gloomy lives. Every day we may leave the valley of toil and sorrow, leap up the mount of prayer, and from its summit gain a vision of Christ that will transfigure all our living.

What follows is the most important revelation ever given men as to the nature and precise circumstances of the next life.

29. Matthew and Mark says "he was transfigured before them." The verb implies a change not merely in outward appearance, but in something deeper; it was the divine nature of Jesus shining forth, so that the fashion of his countenance was altered. "His face did shine as the sun," says Matthew.

Illustrations. The stained glass windows of a cathedral, seen from without, are dull and ugly till, at night, the interior is lighted; then they are ablaze with royal colors. Such are the exquisite lamp shades of Favrile glass, that require the electric bulb within to bring out their lovely hues.

And his raiment was white and glistening. "White as the light," (Matthew); "So as no fuller on earth can whiten them," (Mark.) White "as snow" (Mark) some manuscripts read, as if the writer had in mind a comparison with the snow-capped peaks of Mt. Hermon. This vision is one of the few glimpses of the beauty of heaven, and assures us that the Creator, who has made this world so lovely, has made the next world lovelier still.

30. There talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias (Elijah). The power to recognize them was granted with the power to see them. In the same way St. Paul recognized Ananias in a vision, although he had not previously known him (Acts 9: 12.) It was especially fitting that these should appear, because (1) Moses represented the law, and he had established the sacrifices prefiguring Christ's atoning death, while Elijah represented the prophets, who had foretold that death so plainly. (2) Both Moses and Elijah, like Christ, "had endured a natural fast of forty days and nights; both had been on the holy mount in the visions of God." (3) Both were peculiar in their passing from earth, Moses receiving the mysterious burial and speedy resurrection (Duet. 34: 6: Jude 9), and Elijah not dying at all (2 Kings, 2: 11.)

31. Who appeared in glory. With radiant bodies and garments: somewhat like Jesus. And spake of his decease. Which he should accomplish at Jerusalem. By being crucified, as he had just prophesied to his disciples. (1) This conversation with those two great souls, with whom Christ must often have discussed the matter before coming to earth, was doubtless a comfort to our Lord in his loneliness. It would allay whatever doubts of his mission may have been aroused by his imprisoning humanity, and would send him confidently on to the cross. (2) For the disciples, the conversation would strengthen their faith in Christ, it would show them the necessity of the crucifixion, and would increase their belief in Christ's resurrection. (3) For ourselves, this glimpse of celestial converse may remind us of the friendships with the great and good that are open to us in heaven, and that there, amid all the glorious themes of conversation, we shall find no subject more delightful than what our Saviour did for us on Calvary.

35. The conversation was closed by the descent of a bright cloud, like the Shekinah of old, that veiled, while it revealed so far as human eyes could look upon it, the supreme glory of the Father. It was like the pillar of cloud and fire in the wilderness, the shining cloud on Mount Sinai, the dazzling cloud that once filled the tabernacle and the temple. Peter, in after years, recalled it as "the excellent glory" (2 Peter, 1; 17). And there came a voice out of the cloud. The same voice that had spoken at Christ's baptism in nearly the same words, and was to speak again near the close of Christ's ministry. Saying, This is my beloved Son. Matthew adds, "in whom I am well pleased." This would be the highest possible confirmation of the disciples' faith for the dark days that followed, while for Christ it was an assurance far superior to any that Moses or Elijah could give. Hear Him. This is the law of heaven: love and obedience. This utterance from the opening heaven shows us the only way thither—recognize Christ as the beloved Son of God, and in glad submission do His slightest will. The more we are moved by this wonderful revelation of the life of heaven, the more earnestly should we seek to have Christ in our hearts and lives.

Considering the different ways in which the disciples bore themselves in this experience, we shall see how we also treat our heavenly visions.

First, drowsiness. 32. Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep. This implies that it was a night scene. The celestial visitants are supposed to arrive when the disciples are asleep. They fell asleep while their Master prayed, as at Gethsemane. And when they were awake. "But having remained awake" in spite of this sleepiness would be the common meaning of the word; but perhaps here it means "having become thoroughly awake." They saw His glory. The light which radiated from him would banish the last traces of slumber. How impossible it is that any but a true history would insert such particulars as are contained in verses 32, 33!

Second, Tarrying With the Vision. 33. As they departed from Him, in an impulsive effort to detain them, Peter, always the quick and outspoken disciple, said unto Jesus: "Master, it is good for us to be here." True, indeed, so far. Peter, James and John must have been greatly blessed by the experience, their faith strengthened, their insight deepened, their outlook broadened. But Peter did not stop there. Let us make three tabernacles. Booths, woven from the branches or bushes, such as those in which the Jews lived during the Feast of Tabernacles. They must have shelter, if they were to remain there. Not knowing what he said. Not realizing the folly of his suggestion. "Not knowing that the spectacle on Calvary was to be more transcendent and divine than that of Hermon; not knowing that the old was passing and all things becoming new; not knowing that Jesus was not to die with Moses and Elijah on either side, but between two thieves.

Third, Fear. 34. They feared as they entered into the cloud. It was not therefore an ordinary mountain cloud, such as is common on Hermon. They were terrified still more by the great voice from the cloud, so that they fell on their face and were sore afraid. Jesus had to come and touch them, and say: "Arise, and be not afraid," And venturing, not to arise, but merely to open their eyes, they saw that the mysterious vision has departed.

Fourth, Silence. 36. They kept it close, and told no man in those days. Why did they not tell the wonderful story at once to everyone? Because (1) Jesus had commanded them not to speak of it, till after His resurrection (Matthew). This was because (2) the disciples were not prepared to tell about it; they were too ignorant, as they showed by the questions they asked at once about the resurrection (Mark 9, 9-13.) Also (3) the people were not ready to receive the story; they would think it a mere invention. Christ's resurrection was the only light in which the meaning of the event could be read.

Fifth, Using the Vision (Luke 9: 37-43: Mark 9: 14-29). On the following morning descending the mountain to the nine disciples, they found a crowd around them, and the scribes exulting over their failure to cure a demoniac boy. By a single stern sentence Jesus drove the demon out, adding privately to the chagrined disciples, when they asked the reason for their failure: "This kind can come out by nothing, save by prayer." It was his mountain communication which he had utilized, and which enabled him to work the miracle.

An Inquiring Age.

People are not quite so liable to "open their mouths and shut their eyes" as they used to be, and in nothing does this hold good more than in the matter of medicines. Most people like to have some idea what is contained in the preparation they are advised to take.

Probably that is one reason why FERROL has so rapidly gained the favor and confidence of the public as well as of the physicians.

FERROL

the original and only combination of Cod Liver Oil, Iron and Phosphorus, is absolutely unequalled for the cure of Consumption and all pulmonary diseases, Bronchitis, Croup, Whooping Cough, Chronic Coughs and Colds, Anaemia, Insomnia, Neuralgia and Chronic Rheumatism, General Debility and all Nervous affections.

FERROL is easy to take in all seasons of the year, easy to digest and you know what you take.

FERROL is not a patent mystery. The formula is freely published. It is prescribed by the best Physicians. It is endorsed by the most eminent Medical Journals. It is used in prominent Hospitals, Sanitariums, etc.

Free to You, My Sister

Free to You and Every Sister Woman Suffering from Woman's Ailments

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from woman's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand woman's sufferings. What we women know from experience we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish Discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial, and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book "WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER," with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young.

To mothers or daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhoea, Green Sickness and painful or irregular menstruation in young ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality, who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases, and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days treatment is yours, also the book. Write to-day, as you may not see this offer again. Address

(THE PURE FOOD)

Absolute Cleanliness Free.

It costs us twice as much to have Orange Meat absolutely clean—and does not cost YOU a penny extra. We need not be half as particular as we are—and save lots of money. Only—Orange Meat would not be the delicious delicacy—the brain and body building food it is—if we were not so insistent on cleanliness.

After the wheat comes into our grain elevators from the steamers, it goes into huge vats, filled with pure water. Here the wheat is thoroughly "scrubbed" until every tiny grain is "clean as a new pin."

Then, it's washed once more with fresh water "just to make sure." These extra washings—extra machinery—all mean extra expense to us. But they certainly help to make ORANGE MEAT extra good.

Here's what one Mother in Sterling says about it:—

Orange Meat

"After seeing advertisements of Orange Meat and its healthful qualities, we decided to try it. During the last six months, it has been continually in our house and we have used between 70 and 100 packages. My husband and children prefer Orange Meat to all foods we have tried."

Orange Meat weighs 1/3 more than any other package. At all grocers—15c. and 25c. 15c. package contains a coupon, good for new premiums. 25c. size holds 2½ times the quantity of 15c. size. Write "Orange Meat, Kingston," for new premium catalogue.

Synod of Ontario

CONCLUDED ITS SESSIONS YESTERDAY AFTERNOON — THE QUESTION OF FEDERATION.

Kingston, June 15. — The Synod of the Diocese of Ontario concluded its sessions this afternoon.

This amendment to the Act respecting the property of religious institutions was adopted; 'The consent of the bishop and the executive committee shall not be given for the sale of a disused church unless and until due provision shall have been made for the secularization of the building and its adjuncts to the satisfaction of the archdeacon and the rural dean.'

A new canon provides where vacancies occur for the election of both secretaries by the synod and that a layman may be elected financial secretary.

There was much opposition manifested to the request of Provost Macklem for an expression of opinion as to Trinity federating with 'Varsity Lieut.-Colonel Halliwell claimed the Church of England had missed its opportunity to found a strong church college. They allowed their own Trinity College to drift away. It was time the Church of England woke up, and realized the condition of things.

'If,' said Col. Halliwell, 'I was to suggest a million dollar memorial to the late Bishop Strachan, in the shape of a fine university, every member of synod would hold up both hands for it, and there is no reason why the Anglican Church should not raise that amount of money. But we are sitting by and watching the memorial that Bishop Strachan erected himself to be wiped away.'

Bishop Mills said that by federation Trinity had lost caste, position and influence, and it was impossible for her to regain her old position. All the bishops were willing that Trinity should now move to Queen's Park, Toronto. The synod had no information to enable it to give an intelligent vote, and the consideration of the report stands over until next session.

The mission grants this year are:

$100 each—Wolfe Island, Edwardsburg.

$150 each—Marmora, Shannonville, Tweed.

$200 each — Lansdowne, Front, Ernestown, Wellington.

$250 each—Pittsburgh, Augusta.

$300 each—Loughboro, Marysburgh, Selby, Westport, Mallorytown.

$350 each—Parham, Sharbot Lake.

$400 each—Bancroft, Clarendon and Palmerston, Coe Hill, Bannockburn, Maynooth.

Special grants—Oxford Mills, $135; Marlbank, $100; Wolfe Island, $50; Glen Miller, $50; Loughboro, $50. For past year's care of mission of Maynooth, Rev. J. C. Dixon was voted $100, and to Rev. C. J. Young, for care of Millbridge, $50. The committee ordered the grant to be withheld from two missions which had neglected annual parochial collections.

Fire at Rossmore

Yesterday afternoon a frame dwelling situated at Rossmore, Prince Edward County, was destroyed by fire. It was occupied by Mr. Clarence Moon, and at the time no person was at home. The greater portion of the contents were saved, but in a somewhat damaged condition: How the fire originated is not known. The building was the property of Mr. Ed. Naylor, who is not residing in this vicinity. The insurance, if any, could not be ascertained.

The Ontario Deaf Mute Association

OPENS ITS TENTH BIENNIAL CONVENTION IN THIS CITY THIS MORNING.

The Ontario Deaf Mute Association, formed twenty years ago of the old graduates of the Ontario Institution for the Deaf, that they might, by assembling in convention, be of mutual benefit to one another, meets this year within the walls of their Alma Mater,

These biennial conferences are eagerly looked forward to by the members, and are always largely attended by graduates from all parts of the province; and when two years ago, at the convention in London an invitation was given in the name of the Provincial Secretary under whose charge the instruction of the Deaf then was, to meet in 1906 at the Institution where they received their education, the invitations from other places could scarcely be considered, so great was the desire to meet again in the old familiar place by the shores of the Bay of Quinte.

These conventions have been held at Grimsby Park, London, Toronto, Brantford, Hamilton and other places, and it is a notable fact that wherever they have been held, the members spurn the idea of being billeted upon friends, preferring rather to maintain the independence which pays its own way, and to display the manliness inculcated by their early education.

The officers of the Association are elected at every convention, and those for the past term, who will preside at this convention are;

Hon President — R. Mathison, Belleville.

President—R. C. Slater, Toronto.

1st Vice-President — Geo Reeves, Toronto.

2nd Vice-President—A. S. Waggoner, Hamilton.

Secretary—Wm. Nurse, Belleville.

Treasurer—A. W. Mason, Toronto.

Interpreters — Mrs. J. R. Byrne, Toronto; G. F. Stewart, W. J. Campbell, Belleville.

With this list of officers it is safe to assume that the Convention of 1906, will be equally as profitable and full of interest as those of the nine which have preceded it.

The business of the Ontario Deaf-Mute Association conventions is managed entirely by the Deaf themselves, indeed no others are eligible for membership, and the earnestness of debate and the interest manifested by those who do not take part in the discussions are evidences of the value which they derive from those opportunities of comparing the experiences which they had had, and the lessons they have learned from them.

But the whole time is not given up to business. Old friends thus meeting, spend as much time as can be spared, in social intercourse, and at this time, so we are told, Dan Cupid is often a welcome associate and is held in great respect by the members. We hear also that he is polishing up his bow and arrows and intends to be present throughout the entire time of this Convention, which holds its opening session this (Saturday) evening at 7.30 o'clock.

WELL RID OF HER.

CALLOUS WIFE GETS DIVORCE BECAUSE HUSBAND HAS CONSUMPTION.

Los Angeles, June 15.—That tuberculosis is sufficient ground for divorce in California was decided in the Superior Court here yesterday, when Judge Bordwell granted Mrs. Charlotte T. Scammell, a decree because her husband is suffering from that disease.

Charlotte Boyle was at one time socially prominent in San Francisco, and Charles T. Scammell, a real estate man of Los Angeles, won her heart. Before their marriage, she says, on several occasions she asked her prospective husband if he was perfectly sound and healthy, and received every assurance that he was free from disease,

Royal Commission Will Meet Here.

On Tuesday afternoon next, the Royal Commission recently appointed by the Ontario Government to consider matters in regard to power and lighting for municipalities, will meet in the Court House here. The hour of meeting will be 2 o'clock. The object of the Commission's visit to this city, we are told, is to consider a request that the city be allowed to issue debentures to raise $25,000 to extend the gas system, and for other purposes.

This Commission, our informant says, has the power to give authority to a municipality to pass money by-laws without either submitting them to the ratepayers or the Lieut.-Governor-in-Council.

Certain of the aldermen to-day expressed surprise when they heard that the Commission was coming here It was strange, they thought, that the matter could be arranged without the knowledge of members of the Council, let alone the ratepayers. Such, we are informed, is the case, however.

Rather a Small Bit of Business.

A story is told us which shows that, somewhere in this city, there exists a man or woman whose soul is rather small. It appears that, for some time past, one of the school principals in this city has been assisting, in his own time, some Fourth Book pupils who desire to perfect themselves, as much as possible, for the Entrance exams. No charge was made, or thought of, but the pupils, in their gratitude, were levying a small tax on themselves with the object of presenting the obliging teacher with an easy chair. A day or two ago the teacher in question received an anonymous letter, forbidding him to accept any testimonial from the pupils whom he had obliged, and threatening, in case he did so, to report the matter to the Board of Education. The pupils, whose designs have thus been frustrated, are expressing their opinions of the anonymous correspondent in unmeasured terms.

A Stirling Wedding.

A very pleasant event took place at the R. C. Church, Stirling, on Wednesday morning, June 6th, when Miss Annie Kerby, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Kerby, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony, to Mr. Thos. McGrath, Stirling. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father McKiernan.

The bride was charmingly attired in pearl grey crepe de chene over white silk, with hat to match. She was accompanied by her sister, Miss Priscilla, who was dressed in white dotted Swiss mislin and white hat. The groom was assisted by his cousin, Mr. Dennis McGrath, Marmora. Mendelssohn's wedding march was charmingly played by Miss Lena Lagrow.

After nuptial high mass, the party returned to the home of the bride's parents, West Huntingdon, where the wedding dinner awaited them and a pleasant afternoon was spent. In the evening tea was served to about one hundred relatives and friends, in the new wagon house which was beautifully decorated with evergreens and flowers. A very enjoyable time was spent throughout the remainder of the evening and night, in music and dancing. The bride received a numerous array of costly, and valuable presents, which showed in what high esteem she is held. After the guests had departed the happy couple left for their future home near Stirling, where a host of friends wish them a long and happy wedded life

Special Meeting Of Council.

A special meeting of the City Council will be held next Monday afternoon, for the purpose of passing two by-laws and transacting general business. The by-laws are relating to the issuing of debentures to extend the gas service and one for local improvement.

PRISONER WITH THE PULL.

Warden Gilmour Says It's Time to Take Off the Gloves.

Toronto, June 16.—A vigorous attack was made on the parole system of dealing with convicts at a conference in the Parliament Buildings yesterday of Government officials and ladies and gentlemen prominent in the work of reclaiming the fallen members of society. Warden Gilmour of the Central Prison made the allegation that it was "pull" that counted in securing release from prison on parole, and that the reforming influence of the system depended on the character of the officials who administered the law.

The warden, in his attack on the system, remarked that it was time to "take the gloves off." He and others had interviewed three Ministers of Justice. From one Minister, Sir Oliver Mowat, he received a scathing rebuke for daring to suggest the introduction of American ideas.

Going Out to Get Even.

He had known prisoners to leave "the Central," saying, "Good-bye, I'm going out to get even." He had not very strong hopes of the reformation of a man who went into the prison under the age of 25, and he believed the man over that age had the better chance of becoming a useful member of society. Under the B. N. A. Act, he explained, the only man who could grant a parole was the Minister of Justice, and the warden believed that there should be a probation board, which could make a recommendation. The ticket-of-leave system gave the pull to the man who had the money to hire a costly lawyer. "Why, I had a man in the prison who cracked his fingers, saying he had the pull. And, he had the pull, which he exercised, and was released," said the doctor.

Legislator Expelled.

Boston, June 16.—The expulsion of Representative Frank G. Gethro of Boston from the Massachusetts House of Representatives is recommended in the report made public yesterday by the House committee on rules which has been investigating charges of bribery during the present session. The committee also recommends that Representative Simon Swig of Taunton be censured.

Strikers Are Winning.

Toronto, June 16.—W. J. McGuire & Co., electrical contractors on the Traders' Bank Building, have agreed with the electrical workers at 35 cents per hour yesterday, and their 22 men go back on the job. The O'Connor Electric Co. have also signed the agreement, which leaves about 150 men still out.

FUNERAL OF SIR HECTOR.

Quebec, June 16.—The funeral of Sir Hector Langevin took place at 9.15 o'clock yesterday morning to the basilica, with great pomp. The interior of the sacred edifice had been magnificently draped, the decorations being the most lavish since the funeral of the late Cardinal Taschereau.

The remains were accompanied to the church by hundreds of old friends and admirers of the late distinguished statesman. Among those who attended were: Sir L. A. Jette, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec; Sir C. A. P. Pelletier, chief justice; F. Langelier, Sir Adolphe Caron, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Senator Jules Tessier, Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Hon. E. J. Flynn, ex-chief justice; A. B. Douthier, Hon. Lomer Gouin, Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec; F. D. Monk, M. P.

In the absence of His Grace, Archbishop Begin, Mgr. Marois, V. G., officiated. The remains were interred in the Hotel Dieu Chapel.

The Real Simon Pure.

"The real simon pure" is one of those phrases which every one understands and not one in a hundred could account for. Simon Pure was a Pennsylvania Quaker in Mrs. Centlivre's "A Bold Stroke For a Wife," produced at Drury Lane theater, London, in February, 1718. One Colonel Feignwell passes himself off as Simon and wins the heart of a Bristol heiress, Miss Lovely, after which the real Simon Pure turns up.

CINQMARS, BOOMERANG

Rumors Why Sir Wilfrid Threw Him to the Lions.

Did the Premier Threaten to Resign if the Quebec Members Voted Against Him? — Something Was Said Between 6 and 8 o'Clock Thursday Which Caused the Premier to Support Hon. Geo. E. Foster.

Ottawa, June 16.—Rumors of all kinds are flying about to explain why M. Cinqmars aws thrown to the lions Thursday. Followed as it was by the abrupt turn-down of the Minister of Justice in the Brothier case, it is difficult to see how Mr. Aylesworth can save his face, except by resignation.

Quebec Liberals are, of course, incensed, but not more so than some of the far western members.

It is claimed that Sir Wilfrid Laurier retreated on account of a threat to summon the owner of La Presse. There are reasons why the Government prefers to have that ownership remain a mystery.

One thing is certain, something was said or done between 6 and 8 o'clock Thursday night with the result that Cinqmars was put to the sword, although the Premier in substance endorsed and repeated the concrete charges of his abusive publications.

Threatened to Resign.

Ottawa, June 16.—(Toronto News Special.)—The impression prevailed yesterday morning that Sir Wilfrid Laurier faced a sharp little crisis Thursday over the Cinqmars case.

As the debate went on it got abroad in the Government ranks that the Premier had decided to support Mr. Foster, and there was intense indignation, especially among the Quebec Liberals. A hurried caucus of French-Canadian members and one or two others, it is understood, was held, and it was decided to see the Premier, and inform him of their determination to support Mr. Cinqmars.

This was done, but Sir Wilfrid Laurier was not to be coerced.

The threat had no effect at all on the Premier beyond making him more than ever determined to persevere in his course. His reply was that if they voted against his resolution he would resign and appeal to the country.

WHAT WOULD ANSWER BE?

A Disallowed Query to the Doctor of the "Arctic" Expedition.

Ottawa, June 16.—Before the "Arctic" committee yesterday afternoon, Dr. Flood said that only one tribe of Esquimaux came on board the Arctic. Another tribe went on board the U. S. whaler Era. Only the women danced, as a rule. Mr. Northrup asked if the Esquimaux women went on board ship at night on occasions other than the dances, but R. S. Macpherson, who was in the chair, disallowed the question.

As regards the champagne, Dr. Flood said it had only been given out at first for medical purposes, but it was afterwards used for christening "Laurier Cape" and "Prefontaine Bay."

The medical appliances which had been purchased were still at Sorel, he said. Some of the medical supplies had been left for the mounted police.

The witness said it was almost a necessity to have natives around a vessel in the north. Particularly for a whaler, it was desirable to have them, for they knew the waters better than the white men. He said, in reply to Mr. Carvell, that they found the natives extremely honest.

H. H. Weeks of Newport, N. S. purser on board the Arctic, said his duties at Quebec were to check the goods as they were received at the ship. The pads on which he jotted down the supplies were handed over to the Government.

Mr. Bennett pointed out that he had signed for goods which had been placed on board before he arrived.

Mr. Weeks replied that his superior officer, Captain Bernier, had said the goods had come, and told him to sign. There were invoices for goods amounting to $11,129, which he had signed under these conditions. He could not swear to quantities, though he believed the different varieties were on board.

FIELDING'S FAIR WARNING.

Insurance Bills Subject to Changes Following Commission's Report.

Ottawa, June 16.—When the committee on banking and commerce met yesterday to consider an act to incorporate the Sterling Life Assurance Co., Hon. W. S. Fielding made an announcement in regard to the policy of the Government as affecting insurance bills. The Finance Minister said that owing to the enquiry which was now being made into insurance he intended asking Parliament to make whatever bills were passed this session subject to any general legislation that may be found necessary as a result of the investigation.

"I think it is best to take the course," said Mr. Fielding, "than to prevent the bills going through. I will make a statement in Parliament to this effect. It will not do for these companies, which we are chartering this session, to come here, and say that they have certain rights which will not make them come under whatever general legislation may be found necessary."

The Sterling Life Assurance bill was then reported.

Penitentiary Revision.

Ottawa, June 16.—Mr. Lennox (S. Simcoe) pressed his bill in the House yesterday respecting the judges of provincial courts. It forbids the judges to act as arbitrators.

Mr. Aylesworth opined that the bill, as drawn, would add nothing to the law of last session.

The greater part of the afternoon was consumed in discussing Mr. Aylesworth's bill respecting penitentiaries. It seeks to modify and revise the existing statutes relating to the various penitentiaries.

At the evening session the House passed the penitentiaries bill and considered at length the provisions of the Immigration Act. The proposed head tax of $2 received some attention. Mr. Oliver intimated that he would bring down legislation at a later date in the shape of a separate bill.

Mr. Oliver has amended his Forest Reserve Act so as to bring the timber berths heretofore granted under better control of the Government.

The Railway Committee.

Ottawa, June 16.—The first bill considered by the Commons railway committee yesterday was an application for renewal of the charter rights of Southern Central Pacific Railway, that was given the right three years ago to build from Vancouver to Hudson Bay. The measure was held over till the next meeting.

A bill to incorporate the Cobalt Range Railway, which is promoted by the Lake Temiskaming Co., was then reported. The company is given the right to build a 75-mile line from Haileybury southerly to connect with the present terminus of the Lake Temiskaming Colonization Railway.

The James' Bay Railway Co. (Mackenzie & Mann) asked power to build from the main line connecting with Key Inlet on Georgian Bay, and for power also to follow the west instead of the east side of Lake Wanipitei.

Mr. Moore, secretary of the James' Bay Co., explained that it had been found impossible to get a suitable grade through Sudbury. Mr. McCool insisted that Mackenzie & Mann's promise should be kept by compelling them to build a loop. Mr. Moore opposed this, and was upheld by the committee.

IN THE SENATE.

Ottawa, June 16.—In the Senate yesterday, on motion for the third reading of a bill to incorporate the Pacific & Eastern Railway Co., a line from Victoria, B. C., to Fort Churchill, on Hudson Bay, Senator McMullen moved in amendment that the portion of the line from Edmonton to Fort Churchill should be dropped. After some discussion, the amendment was defeated by 23 to 17.

Premier Whitney In Hamilton.

Hamilton, June 16.—Premier Whitney was in the city last evening, and made announcement that the Government would remove the Ontario Normal College to Toronto and establish a Normal school here in its place. The Premier came to the city to open the Twentieth Century Club house. Mr. Whitney was presented with a golden key to the club. Mr. Whitney reviewed the Government, and expressed the hope that it would continue to act so that it would merit the confidence of the people. J. P. Downey, M. P. P., Guelph; Hon. J. S. Hendrie, Henry Carscallen, K. C., M. P. P., and J. J. Scott, K. C., also spoke.

Sue For Smoke Damages.

Winnipeg, Man., June 16.—Seven property owners of Mayfair avenue have entered action for $5,000 damages each from the Winnipeg Street Railway on account of the smoke nuisance and noises in the operation of the company's power plant. They have also asked for an injunction against the company.

Two Conservatives Unopposed.

London, June 16.—Former Colonial Secretary Lyttelton and Sir Frederick Banburn have been elected to the House of Commons unopposed for the vacancies in the representation of St. George's and the City of London, respectively, caused by the resignations of Heneage Legge and Sir Edward Clarke.

Lock Type Is Chosen.

Washington, June 16.—The House has adopted the lock type for the Panama Canal by a vote of 110 to 36, and appropriated $25,000,000 to continue work on the canal.

Fruit-a-tives

OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS"

Fruit-a-tives will cure the worst case of Chronic Constipation and Biliousness.

Because Fruit-a-tives are the true liver tonic. They strengthen and invigorate the liver—make the liver give up enough bile to move the bowels regularly. The bile is nature's laxative.

Fruit-a-tives are the finest Kidney and Bladder Remedy in the world.

Fruit-a-tives reduce inflammation and congestion—relieve the over-supply of blood—enable the kidneys to rid the system of waste—and thus prevent the formation of uric acid. Fruit-a-tives take away that pain in the back—and quickly cure irritated Bladder.

Fruit-a-tives completely cure Headaches and Rheumatism.

Headaches and Rheumatism both mean poisoned blood. Either the skin, kidneys or bowels are not ridding the system of waste matter. Fruit-a-tives invigorate and strengthen these organs—start up healthy, normal action—rid the system of poisons—and purify and enrich the blood. That means, away with Headaches and Rheumatism.

Fruit-a-tives are the ideal tonic for everyone.

Fruit-a-tives build up strength, invigorate. They sharpen the appetite—steady the nerves—enable one to sleep well—and keep the whole system in perfect health. They are fruit juices, concentrated and combined with tonics and internal antiseptics.

STROUDS

A Somewhat Startling Revelation.

London, June 18.—The report of Dr. Thomas, the medical officer of the borough of Stepney, to the local Government board shows that his department during the past five years has destroyed over a ton of rotten tinned foods daily at the Stepney wharves. These, he add, were not American goods. The medical officer says he found New Zealand raspberries treated with sulphur in order to preserve them. On their arrival in England the raspberries were soaked in aniline bath to restore their color."

Girl Gets $12,500 For Her Scalp.

Rochester, June 18.—Sarah Stewart, aged 20 years, who was scalped by her hair becoming wound in a shaft at the factory of Yawman & Erbe, recovered after the skin of a Newfoundland dog had been grafted on her skull, and she had spent nearly a year in the hospital. She sued the owners of the factory for $50,000 damages, and the proprietors have compromised by paying the girl $12,500 and doctors' fees.

Port Arthur Election Case.

Toronto, June 18.—The Court of Appeal on Saturday dismissed the appeal as to charges of corrupt practices in the Port Arthur and Rainy River provincial election petition. On scrutiny the rulings of trial judges were reversed in part. Scrutiny is to be resumed and proceeded with, the petitioner to pay costs of and occasioned by corrupt practices. Other costs reserved for trial. No costs of appeal.

REVOLUTION IN GUATEMALA.

President Cabrera Takes Mean Revenge on Rebel Leader's Family.

Mexico City, June 18.—Private advices from Salvador brings news collected in Guatemala by the intelligence department of the revolutionists.

President Cabrera is charged with having caused the coffee estate of Gen. Barillas to be burned, and have driven Senora Barillas to the mountains with a few faithful attendants.

Gen. Toledo has his army in a strong position in Southern Guatemala, where he is receiving recruits and preparing for his advance on Guatemala City. His troops are promptly paid.

Refugees from Guatemala bring news of a widespread reign of terror since the revolution began.

Serious Fighting.

Panama, via Galveston, Texas, June 18.—Despatches from Guatemala say that serious fighting has taken place at Monguay, near Lake Guya. The insurgents occupied a strong position on a mountain, but lacked artillery. The Government forces bombarded them for three days, when the insurgents retired. Fighting was confined to points adjoining the Salvador border. The Government has 3,500 troops there and good artillery.

Robbed in Peterboro' Park.

Peterboro', June 18.—John McGee, of Omemee, was robbed in Central Park in broad daylight Saturday afternoon. Two men held him up and relieved him of $85 in cash and a gold watch. The culprits escaped.

Fined For The Fraud.

County Judge Wells Regrets Canada's Lenient Law.

In Fining Ontario Silver Plate Co. $600, $150 Each On Four Counts, For Illegally Stamping Cutlery, Judge Declares the Act as Bad as That of a Chartered Bank Issuing Counterfeit Notes to Its Costumers.

St. Catharines, June 18.—The case against George H. Clark, the manager of the Ontario Silver Plating Co. of Niagara Falls, was called before County Judge Wells in the Welland County general sessions of the peace Saturday morning. The defendant pleaded "not guilty" to a charge of conspiracy to defraud, and the Crown offered no evidence and the judge dismissed him.

The Plating company was indicted on four separate charges—one of manufacturing goods for the purpose of defrauding the general public and three of having disposed of the goods illegally stamped. A plea of guilty on each count was received and a fine of $150 for each, making the total $600, was imposed.

Judge Is Severe.

Before passing judgment, His Honor took occasion to make some very strong comments upon the case before him.

He contrasted the difference between the fraudulent marking of goods and movements toward the better observance of Sunday and license acts, the former being termed the most vulgar, disgusting and degrading thing for men to perform, and stated that the greatest curse of the present day was that men would sacrifice their character, their integrity and their souls for the gaining of a few paltry, miserable dollars.

Continuing, His Honor said that preachers of the Gospel should cease talking of laws that are not laws in men's hearts, and preach according to the principles of integrity.

The effect would be felt throughout the land.

Furthermore, he expressed the belief that the laws should be changed to conform more with those of the United States, where officials and companies found guilty of having knowledge of illegal acts can be punished by imprisonment.

In Canada nothing more serious than the imposition of a fine is permitted.

He drew a parallel between the action of a company putting out goods wrongfully marked and that of a chartered bank issuing counterfeit money to its patrons.

$43,900 For Ellen Terry.

London, June 18.—A dinner was given at the Hotel Cecil last night in honor of Ellen Terry. The 200 guests included persons prominent in the theatrical world. It was announced that the total sum realized for the Terry jubilee fund, including the receipts from the benefit performance at Drury Lane Theatre and subscriptions, amounts to $43,920.

FARMER USED A RIFLE.

C. P. R. Contractor Who Defied Him Gets Bullet In Side.

Bracebridge, June 18.—John Kilty, of Foote's Bay, is in jail here, charged with shooting with intent to do bodily harm to William Scott, a C. P. R. contractor, engaged on construction work near here and on Kilty's farm.

Kilty forbade Scott crossing a certain part of his farm, and when the work was continued according to plans, Kilty went to his home and returned with a rifle, with which he deliberately shot Scott. The bullet pierced Scott's side and for some time he was in a precarious condition, but he is now considered out of danger.

Kilty will appear before Judge Mahaffy for trial.

CORONATION FESTIVITIES.

Trondhjem Converted From Fisher Village to Capital.

Christiania, June 18.—Trondhjem, a city of fishers, was yesterday a capital. Many of those who will participate in the coronation of King Haakon have already swelled the population, and others are crowding north by steamers and trains.

The gaiety over the confirmation of the country's new independence will reach its full tide Tuesday, when King Haakon, Queen Maud and the baby Crown Prince Olaf reach Trondhjem. All over the country floats the flag of Norway—the white bordered blue cross upon a field of red—testifying to the fealty of the people.

THOUSANDS HONOR SEDDON.

In Spite of Late Hour, Gather to Witness Arrival of Casket.

Wellington, N. Z., June 18.—The steamer Owestry Grange, bearing the body of Premier Seddon, who died on board the vessel shortly after it left Sydney, June 10, for New Zealand, arrived here at 11 o'clock Saturday night.

Despite the lateness of the hour thousands of persons were at the wharf and witnessed the landing of the casket.

Yesterday the body was lying in state in the Parliament Building.

The funeral will take place here next Thursday.

REVOLUTION IS CRUSHED.

Bambaata's Followers All Killed—Sigananda's Sons Surrender.

Durban, Natal, June 18.—Two of the Chief Sigananda's sons have surrendered to the Natalian forces, and nearly all of Chief Bambaata's followers were killed in the recent fighting.

Col. Mackenzie of the Natalian contingent has given the rebels, who are leaderless and scattered, far and wide, until June 19 to surrender, saying that otherwise they will be shot if captured.

Earl Grey's Son Weds.

London, June 18.—Two of England's leading families were united Saturday afternoon by the marriage at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, of Viscount Hawick, eldest son of Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada, to Lady Mabel Palmer, only daughter of the Earl of Selborne, high commissioner for South Africa.

Japan Won't Pay.

Tokio, June 18.—The Nichi Nichi reports that the Government recently received a detailed statement of the cost of the quartering of the Japanese prisoners in Russia during the war and declines to settle on the ground of the exorbitance of the charges. The negotiation of the matter is likely to prove difficult.

A Lumber Fire.

Quebec, June 18.—A despatch from Chicoutimi says that fire broke out here at 6 o'clock last evening on Prye Bros.' wharf and before it was gotten under control about 75,000 feet of deals were consumed. About 60,000 feet were thrown in the water, but most, if not all, of this will be recovered.

The Proposed Tax On Immigrants.

The Government in a bill revising the immigration laws is seeking power to impose a tax of $2 a head on all immigrants arriving in Canada. The inspiration for this comes from the statute books of the United States In looking to Washington, however, says the Montreal Gazette, the Ministers at Ottawa forget the lessons of logic. They have been spending hundreds of thousands of dollars a year in inducing immigrants to come to Canada. They are even now asking hundreds of thousands more to spend for a like purpose They are paying steamship and railway agents $5 a head for all the immigrants of certain classes they send from Europe to Canada. To maintain these conditions and to tax the immigrants sent in under them $2 a head would be about as ridiculous a state of affairs as was ever created by a circumlocution administration looking for useless means of spending money and annoying the public. Before the Government puts a head tax on people coming into the country it should stop paying a bounty on them, and also stop its immigration encouragement propaganda, It is doubtful if it is well to do this yet, though the time is evidently coming when the movement of European peoples this way will give the country all the immigrants it can care for without any outside expenditure. In the United States this time has arrived. It took many years of work by interested agencies, however, to create the conditions that now exist. It has taken years of work to bring about the present situation in Canada. It will not be well to do anything to change it or to discourage the inflow that is necessary to the development of the country's resources and the expansion of its trade. There is evidently growing up in some parts a feeling of hostility to new comers to the country. It is not sensible nor creditable. It seems to have its origin with those who study the undesirables and in the process forget the profitable classes. Their view is too narrow. There should be nothing done to discourage even the poorest of immigrants if they come free from objectionable disease and under circumstances that indicate they are willing to be workers. It was their kind that made Canada what it is.

TIMELY TOPICS.

What is so rare as a fine day in June?

Many estimable pew-holders were entitled to rain checks yesterday.

"I thank The Intelligencer for its plain statements about the post office on Saturday," said a Liberal gentleman this morning. "I think it is about time all our citizens united to bring about a betterment of conditions. I am a Grit, and have always been one, but my party prejudices will not make me say black is white."

As showing how the present modus operandi works, the statement of one of the post office clerks is apropos; "I have not been in the post office many years," he says, "but since I have been there I have helped to break in nine men." That's the way it goes. Just about as soon as the boys get proficient they find and accept a position at better wages. No one can blame them. The fault lies in the system, which does not pay them living wages, wages which are sufficient inducement to them to stay with their jobs. As a consequence, green hands are continually finding their way into the local office, and its efficiency naturally suffers.

The worst feature in the matter is that those Liberals whose recommendations to the Government would have weight — the party managers—shut their eyes to the true state of affairs, and Belleville continues to be deprived of the service to which it is justly entitled. No wonder some of our Grit fellow-citizens, whose eyes are not blinded by politics or self-interest, find this state of affairs rather irksome.

LOOK OUT, BOYS!

(Toronto Star.)

Yes, ladies, this is June. As for the men, don't mind them a bit. Just you go ahead and marry them — in spite of their screams.

Keep cool, or, at all events, keep as cool as possible. The weather man is going to have his own way whether you like it or not.

This must be the silly season. A contemporary wants to know the following: "If a grass widow marries a grass widower, are the kids grass hoppers?"

A scientific sharp named Professor Merriam says that the ichtysaun existed on earth for eight million years. Perhaps the ichtysaun made a noise like one of those autos some people have in Belleville, which you can hear for half a mile and smell for double that distance.

Up at the Hospital lot on Saturday afternoon a lot of people were sitting round watching a game of baseball. Suddenly the windlass which hoists the stone for St. Michael's tower started to work. "Hello!" said one facetious gentleman, "here comes Mr. Blank with his auto." And everybody laughed

'Tis said that the young King of Spain is now suffering from melancholia. He must be a foolish man. Surely his next winter's coal is all in and paid for.

Lord Kitchener is reported as saying that it will soon be necessary for Great Britain to fight Russia. One would think that, just at present, Russia had trouble enough, without Kitch trying to add to it.

The organization of a club in Waterbury, Conn., to suppress profanity affords proof of a natural desire to make that town celebrated for something besides watches.

It appears that the apples that make the best pies are to be painfully scarce. This is sad news at a time when even pies made of the best apples are none too good.

Those eloquent flashes of silence which you hear from the direction of Trenton these days come from the D. and D. Institution, where the Deaf Mutes Association is holding its tenth biennial convention. Here's hoping the delegates may enjoy their visit, and that their stay may be pleasant and profitable,

'Tis said the Sultan of Zulu will only use his automobile in the evening and then refuses to travel faster than four miles an hour. A steam roller was what the Sultan should have bought.

King Peter of Servia is reported to be threatened with nervous prostration. Owing to the fact that he went into it deliberately and was able before he became a monarch to live without working, we refuse to extend any sympathy to Pete. One need feel no sorrow for a man who has been gold-bricked after he had just gold-bricked somebody else.

A Massachusetts woman has been serving bologna sausage to her husband until his patience failed him He has secured a separation. Ladies who can see nothing but bologna on wash day might pin this on their dusting caps.

Those who saw the Forty-ninth leave for Cobourg this morning will gladly bear testimony that the following strictures, from the Dundas Star, do not apply to this portion of Ontario, whether they do to others or not; "There is no question that a little more commonsense should be exercised in accepting volunteers to go to the annual camps. The sole object of the recruiting officers for the past few years seems to be to get the respective companies up to full strength, utterly regardless of the character of the men who "enlist." This kind of thing is bringing the militia of Canada into bad repute, and costing the country a lot of money. It is disgraceful that the commanding officers should take youths under age, and drunken men who have to be carted to the station simply to fill up companies. Better drill half the men, or even a quarter of the number, annually, than to make a farce of the whole thing by accepting all the riff-raffs, and spending the country's money in paying men who simply go on the annual jamboree in government clothes."

This is the ninety-first anniversary of the Battle of Waterloo, that historic occasion when, if we remember rightly, the Iron Duke did not say "Up Guards, and at 'em."

The Municipal Commission, which meets in this city to-morrow afternoon, will be composed of Messrs. Leitch, of Cornwall; Milne, of Hamilton, and Ingram, of St. Thomas. The commission will investigate the standing and circumstances connected with the local gas works and the proposed issuance of $25,000 debentures to extend the same. The Council, we are told, will to-night, at a special meeting, probably pass a by-law looking to the issuance of the said debentures, which will be passed upon to-morrow afternoon by the Municipal commission, and which, should it be favorably considered, will become law at once. Should it not be favorably considered by the commission the matter will be dead unless submitted to the ratepayers.

Bay of Quinte W.M.S.

Port Hope, June 16. — The convention of the Bay of Quinte branch of the Women's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church, was concluded on Thursday.

The election of organizers and officers resulted as follows; President, Mrs. Platt; Vice-Presidents, Mrs. (Rev.) Locke, Mrs. Gibson, Mrs. Campbell; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Copeland; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Wilson; Superintendent of Systematic Giving, Mrs. (Rev.) Real; Auditor, Mrs. A. G. Vermilyea. Organizers — Belleville District, Mrs. Levi Massey; Brighton District, Mrs. Winterbourne; Bowmanville District, Miss Jones; Whitby, Mrs. Dynes; Cannington, Miss Cornish; Lindsay, Mrs. Mulligan; Peterboro, Mrs Kilgour; Cobourg, Mrs. Walker; Napanee, Mrs. Gibson and Mrs. Rose: Campbellford, Mrs. Harrison; Madoc, Mrs. Harrison.

It was pointed out by the Corresponding Secretary that the Toronto branch had promised to raise $2,000 towards the rebuilding of Kilamot Home in British Columbia, and a resolution was carried that each delegate pledge herself to ask her auxiliary to become responsible for a donation toward this work.

An invitation from Picton for the next branch meeting to be held there was accepted,

Chess Master Dead.

H. N. PILLSBURY WAS ONE OF GREATEST PLAYERS EVER PLAYERS.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 17.—Harry Nelson Pillsbury, the chess master, died here to-day of apoplexy after an illness of many months. Pillsbury was born Dec. 5, 1872, at Somerville, Mass.

Pillsbury learned the rudiments of chess when a boy in Boston. His first notable vistory was over John F. Barry, of Boston, in 1891. Other victories made him one of the quartet of the then most famous players named to compete at St. Petersburg—Lasker, Steinitz, Tschigorin and Pillsbury. His score with the world champion, Lasker, was 3 1-2 to 2 1-2.

In 1897 Pillsbury won from Showalter the American chess championship, which he confirmed by a second match with Showalter in 1898.

Pillsbury showed his chess genius not alone by match and tournament play. At blindfolded chess, it is said, his record has never been equaled. At Moscow he played 22 games without sight of the boards, and at Philadelphia 20 games, which feat he repeated at Vienna.

LOST HER WAY.

LONELY DEATH OF A FARMER'S WIFE IN THE GREAT WEST.

Broadview, Sask., June 16.—Word has just reached here of the tragic death of Mrs. Harry Long, who, with her husband and two children, left Broadview a little over a year ago to take up a homestead at Hirzel, in Yorkton district. After seeding this spring, Mr. Long was obliged to accept a situation with a Grand Trunk Pacific survey party. This necessitated his being from home for long intervals, and Mrs. Long had to look after the cows in his absence. On the evening of May 29 she went out as usual to fetch them, lost her way and never returned.

She was not found until five days afterwards, when her body was discovered accidentally, quite near the home of a German neighbor, and within a mile of her own home. These neighbors had heard her cries, but had thought it was some boys driving cows and paid no attention. How the children, aged six and four, lived through these long, dreary days, almost without food of any kind, is a miracle.

A Silence Cure For Nervous Women

London, June 17.—The silence cure is now prescribed for nervous women. It consists in setting apart one hour of the day in which the patient must not utter a word.

A well-known nerve specialist says: "The woman with nerves talks twice as quickly as her more phlegmatic sister. If nervous women can be induced to hold their tongues and allow not only the body but the brain to rest for an hour a day, we shall hear less about neuralgia and nervous breakdown."

The silence cure is advocated as a preservative of beauty as well as of nerves, as it is calculated to delay the advent of wrinkles.

Dowie Got a Million a Year.

Chicago, June 17. — Impressive scenes marked the testimony of John Alexander Dowie in Judge Landy's court when the Zion Church leader reasserted his place as First Apostle.

The aged Zionist declared that when he was at the height of his power in Zion City collections in his church ran from $500,000 to $1,000,000 a year.

"I am the First Apostle of the Lord Jesus, the Christ, not the Church," said the witness, shaking his heavy white beard defiantly, and with a return of his old time vigor.

LAKE SHORE SPIRIT.

Throughout the entire length and breadth of the great Lake Shore Railway System there is a spirit of co-operation and personal responsibility on the part of employees from the highest to the lowest that is reflected in every detail of the road's operation. The traveller feels that the great army of trained workers have his welfare and comfort at heart as much as though he were the only patron of the road. This spirit—the Lake Shore spirit—is one of the features that have made this line so popular among experienced travellers. Comfort, speed, safety and punctuality here have reached their highest development. Write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O.; or, W. J. Lynch, Pass'gr Traffic Mgr., Chicago, and tell the agent to have your ticket read "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway."

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

BASEBALL.

Park Nine Beat the Foundrymen.

On Saturday afternoon, on the hospital lot, an interesting game of baseball was played between the Park Nine and the Marsh & Henthorne nine. A large number of spectators were present and witnessed the game, which proved to be close and at the finish rather exciting. In the first innings the Park Nine obtained a decided lead by securing three runs, and they were able throughout the game to keep the lead, winning by a score of 6 to 5. The battery for the winners was Smith and Boland, and for the losers Palos and Tuite. Both batteries did good work. The Park Nine appeared to have the advantage in the field, but this was perhaps owing to the fact that some of the Foundry nine did not seem to exert themselves very much. These teams are very evenly matched and a return match will no doubt attract many spectators. During the game two umpires were called into service, namely, T. Cornell and K. Sanford, the latter finishing the game. The players and their positions were as follows:

Foundry—Tuite, c.; Pepper, 2nd b.; Palos, p.; Bawden, l.f.; Watkins, 1st b.; Connell, 3rd b.; Brennan, s.s.; Draycott, r.f.; Hunter, c.f.

Park Nine—Boland, c.; Phillips, l. f.; Weir, c.f.; Smith, p.; Cordon, s.s; Cornell, 3rd b.; Thomas, r.f.; French, 2nd b.; Burgoyne, 1st b.

FOOTBALL.

Trentons Were Outplayed.

A game of football was played on the D. & D. grounds on Saturday between the Belleville Business College and the Trenton Rovers. The Trentons were completely outplayed from start to finish, the game ending with a score of 2 to 0 in favor of the College. Both teams desire to thank Mr. Mathison, Superintendent of the D. and D. Institution, for the use of the grounds. The College team lined up as follows:

Goal—Chown.

Backs—Maddin, Wheeler.

Half-Backs — Henault, Stephens, Chapman.

Forwards—Gibson, Tucker, Sly, Lobsinger, Goddard.

SPORTING NOTES.

Lacrosse results on Saturday: Torontos 6, Nationals 4; Montreal 4, Cornwall 2.

In the Trent Valley Baseball League, Campbellford beat Norwood by 3 to 2 on Saturday.

It looks as though nearly every little village can have a representative baseball nine except Belleville. What's the matter with our boys? It did not used to be this way.

The Cheese Board.

There was an excellent attendance at the Cheese Board on Saturday, and all the regular buyers were represented.

The boardings were large, no less than 4,340 boxes being offered. Of this only 100 boxes were white.

The sales were: Hodgson Bros., 305 at 11c and 120 at 10 7-8c; Thos. Watkin, 315 at 11c; Grant, 310 at 11c and 110 at 10 7-8c; W. J. Magrath & Co., 330 at 10 15-16c; Mark Sprague, 375 at 10 7-8c; Lovell & Christmas, 690 at 10 7-8c; J. C. Ayer, 200 at 10 7-8c; J. C. Warrington, 225 at 10 7-8c.

When the Board adjourned there were still 1260 unsold, but these were later disposed of on the curb at 10 7-8c and 10 15-16c.

Nine hundred and thirty boxes sold at to-day's best price — 11c, which is a cent and a half a pound better than the best price of the same date last year.

There was keen competition on Saturday till 10 7-8c was reached, then the buyers pulled in their horns a bit.

The offerings last year at this date were 3700 boxes, against 4340 on Saturday.

The large offerings on Saturday are explained by the fact that the pasture at present is par excellence, and that everything is being shipped, not a box, it is said, being held back.

Dealers here look for lower prices before long, and very few of them were anxious to touch to-day's highest figures.

HAROLD.

Mrs. Runnells and family; also Mr. Caleb Lloyd, attended the funeral of Miss McCormick last Friday at Belleville.

Mr. Harry Heath, while helping a neighbor with a stone bee, was accidentally struck with a stone and severely cut about the eye, but at present is doing nicely.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordineer, of Belleville, and daughter, spent a couple of days here last week the guests of Mr and Mrs. Jas. Bailey.

Miss Alice Scott and Mr. Everett Fox, of Stirling, spent a few days visiting friends in Eldorado.

Mr. Caleb Lloyd's house caught on fire but fortunately was discovered in time to save the building. About $150 damage was done to the building. The fire originated from the chimney.

Messrs. B. and S. Hamilton, of Sidney, paid a flying call at J. Bailey's last week.

Mr. Urbane Heath, who has been confined to the house with rheumatism, is slowly improving.

Mrs. Cyrus Lloyd, who has been ill, is much improved.

Mr. S. Innes left last week for Manitoba.

Mr. Stapley has returned to his home in the Northwest, after spending some time here renewing old friendships.

1000 ISLANDS AND ROCHESTER.

Commencing May 29th, Str. North King will leave Belleville Sundays at 3.20 a.m. for Picton, Kingston and 1000 Islands points. Returning will leave at 11.35 p.m. for Rochester. m23-tf

A CLEANLY AGE.

Twentieth Century Ideas Incline Toward Sanitation and Preventatives.

Nowadays scientists believe that in cleanliness lies the secret of prevention of disease.

To prevent a disease, remove the cause.

Just as unclean habits breed many diseases, so careless habits will breed dandruff. Improper use of another's brushes, combs, etc., will surely cause dandruff, and, in time, will just as surely cause baldness.

It's microbic infection, nothing more nor less.

Newbro's Herpicide kills the dandruff germ, and causes hair to grow luxuriantly. Herpicide is absolutely free from grease or other injurious substances.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Married in Oshawa.

An Oshawa wedding in which a number of our citizens are interested took place on Saturday last, when Miss Edna Louise, youngest daughter of the late Thomas Conant, was married to Dr. William H. Walton-Ball, of Maplethrope, Toronto. They were married by the Rev. Dr. Shorey, of Oshawa, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Cobb, rector of St. Mark's, Port Hope. Mrs. Walton-Ball is a niece of Mrs. (Dr.) Caldwell, of this city, and has frequently visited here.

NOTICE.

The Ontario Railway and Municipal Board will meet at the Court House, Belleville, Tuesday, June 19th, 1906, for the purpose of hearing evidence as to whether a By-law of the municipal Council of the Corporation of the City of Belleville, for the construction of Gas mains on Cedar street west from West Bridge street, 450 feet; Forin street from Ann street to Charles street; Foster avenue from Pine street to connect with main on Foster avenue; West Bridge street from Sinclair street to Yeomans street; Pine street from Charles street to Bleecker avenue, and on Bleecker avenue from Pine street to Railway Station street; Albion street, north from Pine street 450 feet; Everett street from Bridge street to Catherine street; Emily street from Bleecker avenue to Bettes street, on Bettes street from Emily street to Brassey street and on Brassey street east 250 feet; South Ann street from Dundas street north 300 feet to present connection; Ridley street from North Front street to Grier street and on Grier street from Ridley street to College street; and the construction of services from these and other mains and for relaying the mains on Catherine street and Victoria avenue, and for the purchasing of 400 slot or prepayment meters, and for the construction of a Gas Holder of 60,000 cubic feet capacity, and for the issue of 30 year debentures for same, should be approved.

Any persons wishing to tender evidence opposing any of the above improvements or extensions are requested to send their names to the City Solicitor and arrangements will be made to enable them to tender such evidence.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Holloway Street.

"A Mother's Devotion," was the topic discussed yesterday morning by the pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch. His text was from St. Matthew, 15th chapter and a portion of the 28th verse:

"O Woman, great is thy faith!"

During the service Mr. M. C. Gordon, in fine voice, rendered a solo entitled, "Looking This Way."

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

Congregations were not large in the above church yesterday, owing to the inclement weather. At the evening service the Rector, Rev. Mr. Hubly preached one of the best sermons ever delivered by him in this city, being the third in the course of sermons being preached by him on "Divine Propulsion." Last night's subject was "The I Must of the Preacher." The duty of the preacher, the Rev. gentleman said, was to preach the faith of Jesus Christ as found in the Bible. A preacher who taught or preached anything else was not doing his duty. During the offertory the choir sang a decidedly tuneful anthem, solos being sweetly taken by Misses L. Standish and L. Hubly. During the service the hymn for those in peril on the sea was sung, two members of the congregation, Mrs. E. J. Dunnet and Miss Izzie Dunnet, now being on the Atlantic. Preparations are now being made for the approaching visit of Bishop Fallows, who will hold confirmation services in Emmanuel Church on Thursday evening, June 28.

Tabernacle.

Owing to illness, the pastor, Rev. Geo. Brown, was yesterday unable to occupy the pulpit of this church. In the morning the Rev. Eli Bowerman preached, and in the evening Rev. R. Hatchett, Superintendent of the African Methodist Churches, filled the pulpit. His sermon was much appreciated by those present. His subject was "The Great Salvationist," and the text was from Hebrews, 2nd chapter and a portion of the 3rd verse:

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation?"

The Rev. gentleman, in his opening remarks, said that Christ was the world's greatest salvationist. It cost the Son of God His life on the cross on Mount Calvary, in order that salvation might be secured for all mankind. This is the greatest and costliest gift ever offered to mankind, and how many there are who will not receive it, although it is freely offered. The Rev. gentleman spoke feelingly of the trial of the Saviour, of His agony in the garden and of His betrayal and crucifixion. In concluding he made an earnest appeal for all to accept the precious gift of salvation.

Miss M. Stork, during the service, sang, very feelingly, a solo entitled, "Be at Rest."

St. Andrew's.

The pastor, Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, officiated at both services yesterday. In the evening his text was from Hebrews, 4th chapter and a portion of the 15th verse:

"But was in all points tempted like we are, yet without sin."

During the service Miss Norah Lazier sang "O Happy Day," in fine voice.

St. Michael's.

At first mass yesterday morning, fifty children received their First Communion. Mrs. James Grant, in excellent voice, sang "O Lord, I am not Worthy." At High Mass Rev. Father Twomey preached a thoughtful and scholarly sermon, and Mr. Halstead, of Winnipeg, sang a fine solo during the offertory.

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness,' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how, The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

TIMELY TOPICS.

A JUNE MORNING.

(Bayard Taylor.)

Oh! have you not seen on some morning in June,
When the flowers were in tears and the forest in tune,
When the billows of morn broke bright on the air,
On the breast of the brightest some star clinging there?
Some sentinel star not ready to set,
Forgetting to wane, and watching there yet?

How you gazed on that vision of beauty the while,
How it wavered till torn by the light of God's smile,
How it passed though the portals of pearl like a bride,
How it paled as it passed and the morning star died?
The sky was all blushes; the lark was all bliss,
And the prayer of your heart was; "Be my ending like this."

So my beautiful dove passed away from life's even;
So the blush of her being was blended with Heaven;
So the bird of my bosom fluttered up in the dawn,
A window was open, my darling was gone,
A truant from tears, from time and from sin,
For the angel on watch took the wanderer in.

And when I shall hear the new song that she sings,
I shall know her again, notwithstanding her wings,
By these eyes full of Heaven; by the light of her hair,
And the smile she wore here she will surely wear there.

The season for hot weather stories has arrived. Here's a good one; "The crew of the American ship John A. Briggs, which has arrived at New York, 157 days from Port Blakeley, said that in the Pacific the vessel began to steer wildly and describe circles. After investigation it was found that strakes of green planking, which had been put on astern, had sprouted pine branches, some of them ten feet long, and these had thrown the lumber ship off her proper course. "All hands went over side and sawed off the growth," said the oldest sailorman. "Then the old hooker found her course." Capt. Jensen, however, had made no mention of this accident in his log."

The Quebec Telegraph gives the following excellent advice: The summer has opened with its usual long and sombre chapter of drowning accidents. Several lives have already been lost that with due precaution should have been preserved and that might even have remained unimperilled. Nearly all of these fatalities are due to a lack of early education; the victims never learned to swim. Swimming ought to be in the experience of every one. Not only does it insure the ability to preserve the swimmer's life in certain emergencies, but it may be the means of saving the lives of others. It is, moreover, a healthy exercise; hence it is a life preservative in a wide sense and in those instances where accident or injury are not threatened. The drowning accidents at our summer resorts where people who cannot swim suffer themselves to be led into too deep water, or are pitched into the lake or river by the malign hoodlum who rocks the boat, could never, or seldom, occur if the bathers would practise a few of the swimming strokes before they ventured beyond their depth, for swimming is quickly and easily learned and the one who is conscious of his ability to keep afloat for a few minutes is less apt to lose his head in an emergency than is one who may fall overboard even in shallow water and close to shore. We teach cooking, dancing, sewing, even a little spelling in our public schools, but swimming might be included in the curriculum with advantage.

Ancient Roses.

Flinders Petrie, the archaeologist, while excavating among some ancient Egyptian tombs, found a wreath of roses which had been bound into a garland and buried with the dead thousands of years ago. M. Crepin, the botanist and microscopist, made a careful examination of this queer find and prepared a paper on it which he read before the Royal society of Belgium. From this paper it appears that in places where the flowers were matted together they still retained their color as well as a very faint odor. The species to which they belong is now extinct, but a rose resembling them in several particulars is still grown in Egypt and Abyssinia.

"A Bare Bodkin."

"Bare" means "mere" as well as "naked," and I cannot doubt that by "bare bodkin" Shakespeare meant "mere bodkin," the point of the passage being with how contemptibly small an instrument we could, if we chose, put an end to life and all its bother. "Bare" probably was used instead of "mere" for the sake of effective alliteration. (Cf. with Hamlet's "bare bodkin;" Richard II.'s "little pin," III, 2, 169.) For "bare" in the sense of "mere" I need cite only "bare imagination of a feast."—London Notes and Queries.

A Tragic Capture.

One of the most industrious of the man thieves who recruited the famous regiment of giants for King Frederick William of Prussia was Baron Hompesch, whose many successes led him once to cast covetous eyes upon a very lengthy joiner. He ordered of the joiner a chest or cupboard which should be as long and broad as the worker himself. In due course the baron called round. The cupboard had been finished, but he protested that it was too small. This the carpenter denied and laid himself within it as proof of its dimensions. No sooner had he done so than servants of the baron clapped down the lid and had the giant prisoner. They carted him off to the court, but when the lid was opened instead of a giant there rolled out a corpse. The man had been stifled. In his anger the king sentenced the baron to death, but reprieved him when he wanted more giants.

News Speed In South Africa.

When Lord Wolseley during the Ashanti war crossed the Prah he found a white cord stretched from tree to tree along his route. It was a native fetich, copied from the British telegraph wire, which was believed to possess some sovereign magic virtue. But the native has his mysteries of his own, which the white man often proves unable to fathom. It is said that no one can understand how it happens that with such marvelous celerity news has traveled across the whole of South Africa. During the South African war, except where the telegraph was in operation, native news was always days ahead of official. The relief of Mafeking is said to have been known next day in Zululand and also 700 miles away in the heart of Cape Colony. Signals by fire and drum, messages conveyed by runners or cried from hilltop to hilltop, do not explain speed such as this.

After an all night session with the boys a husband wended his way home, arriving there at about 5 a. m. He found his wife waiting for him in the dining room, the confusion of furniture indicating that she had been having an unhappy time.

"This is a nice time for you to be coming home," snapped the wife.

"Yes," admitted the erring husband. "It's a lovely morning."

"I haven't slept a wink this blessed night," with a severe look.

"Neither have I," said the husband.

IN ANGLO-SAXON NAMES

NOVELIST'S GREAT CHARACTER AND SCENES FROM BIBLE.

STORY WRITER'S CONFESSION

High Spiritual Encouragement in the Dramatic Story of the Queen of Sheba in the Court of Wise King Solomon—"The One-Half of the Greatness of Thy Wisdom Was Not Told Me."

Los Angeles, Cal., June 17.—In the dramatic story of the Queen of Sheba's experience in the court of the wise King the preacher finds a lesson of high spiritual encouragement. The text is II. Chronicles ix, 6, "The one-half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me."

It is amazing to find how much the incidents and the thrilling scenes of the Bible are reproduced under other names in the literary masterpieces of the present day. Like the huge trees of the Mariposa grove, which anchored their roots in the soil centuries ago and have lately had tacked upon their bark the names of "Grant," "Lee," "Washington," "Dewey" or "Roosevelt," these old Bible scenes have been rechristened with modern names. But they still remain the same old scenes as the Mariposa trees remain the same old trees, no matter what signboards have been nailed upon their sides. Furthermore, many of our greatest writers attribute the strength of their books to the fact that they have gone to the sacred writers to find their inspirations. "Most of my great characters and scenes have been drawn from Biblical lore," lately wrote an English novelist. "Some people may not recognize their antiquity because they are not Bible students. But these supposed creations of my brain lived thousands upon thousands of years ago, although I have dressed them up in modern clothes and given them Anglo-Saxon names." These are not the identical words of the noted English writer. I cannot remember his exact expression, but they convey his confession just the same.

Now we can find the scene of King Solomon as a young prince, choosing wisdom, reproduced in many different literary masterpieces. Alphonse Lamartine, the great French poet, who died in 1869, gave a beautiful description of it in his story of King Nimrod. The King had three sons. He offered to them three cases, the one of gold, the second of amber, the third of clay. The gold represented "empire," the amber "glory or fame," the third represented "wisdom from God." "Choose!" cried King Nimrod. "Choose!" And when the youngest son choose the case of clay King Nimrod said: "Thou hast chosen well. Thou hast chosen best of all, for the man who choose 'wisdom' shall wave the sceptre as well as mount the throne of fame."

We find the wonderful Bible character of young Solomon being reproduced in Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice." When the young Hebrew prince stands before God and says, "Give me now wisdom and knowledge that I may go out and come in before this people, for who can judge this people that is so great?" we seem to see Portia standing with her three caskets, the one of gold, the other of silver and the third of lead. Then we see the avaricious man reaching for the casket of gold. Then we see the selfish man reaching for the casket of silver. But lastly we see the true lover lifting up the casket of lead. And when Bassanio chose the leaden casket he won all that his heart could wish, for he won fame and honor besides wisdom and love. Thus, as Shakespeare and Lamartine have their heroes lift the vase of clay or the casket of lead, they say: "Well done! Well done, thou sagacious man! All success shall be thine." We seem to hear God speak to the young Prince Solomon these words when he chooses wisdom instead of gold, "Wisdom and knowledge is granted unto thee, and I will give thee riches and wealth and honor such as none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there be any after thee have the like." Thus the fame and riches of Solomon not only spread through his own country, but also to the farthest parts of the sea.

The scene changes. We are to-day standing in the Davidic capital. There is great excitement everywhere. The royal courtiers are riding every whither. The King's guards are marching to the city's gates. The whole capital is in gala day attire. "What is the matter?" you ask. "Why," says a courtier, halting his chariot, "do you not know that the beautiful Queen of Sheba from the great nation of the south is coming to visit our King? She has heard so much of the fame of Solomon's wealth and wisdom that she has come to test them with her own eyes and ears. Here she comes with her courtiers now. Make way there. Stand back. There is the King alighting to meet her. Are they not a glorious pair of rulers?" Was not this the welcome that was given to the Queen of Sheba when she came to prove Solomon with hard questions?

You know the rest of the story. After the Queen of Sheba had seen all and heard all and communed with Solomon all that was in her heart, she turned to him and said. "It was a true report which I heard in mine own land of thine acts and of thy wisdom." Yes, the reports of Solomon's wisdom were great, but they were not exaggerated. Indeed, they were understated. For after the Queen of Sheba had gone on enumerating what she had heard, she cries out in the words of my text, "The one-half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me." Now as the wisdom of King Solomon has always been used by the pulpit commentators as a symbol of God's wisdom, I thought to-day I would try to tell you in a humble way a little about that divine wisdom. Truly, like King Solomon's, God's wisdom is a wisdom which passeth all understanding.

King Solomon stands as the symbol of the "All Knowing One." He was the wisest of all men. The Bible distinctly declares it. Not only were all the secrets of the past ages to him an open book, but he was the reader of men's minds and the prober of the innermost secrets of their hearts before they had opened their lips to speak to him a word. You all know how the wisdom of King Solomon was first tested by the Queen of Sheba before she came to the Jerusalem capital to visit the wisest of all men. Legend tells us that she first sent a letter to Solomon by her ambassadors. Accompanying these ambassadors she sent 500 youths dressed as maidens and 500 maidens dressed as youths. Then she sent a chalice and a diamond intricately pierced. Then, writes Dr. Kitto, the letter was supposed to read thus: "As a true prophet thou will be able to separate the maidens from the boys, perforate the diamond and fill the goblet with water that hath not dropped from the clouds nor gushed forth from the earth beneath." Legend tells us further that King Solomon told the ambassadors the contents of the letter before it was opened. Then he solved the three riddles in the following way: First he placed a basin of water before each youth and maiden, and by the way they washed he was able to distinguish the boys from the girls. Second, he threaded the intricately pierced diamond by compelling a small worm to crawl through the crystal labyrinth, while there was tied to the body of the worm a small silken thread. Thirdly, he filled the gold goblet with water which had not fallen from the heavens above or gushed up from the waters beneath by driving a colt around and flanks were covered with foam and flanks were covered with goam and filled the goblet to the brim. These examples of the wisdom of Solomon may be only fables; but, whether they are fables or not, one fact we do know, and that is that the wisdom of King Solomon stands as a type of the all knowing wisdom, the wisdom of an omniscient, all seeing God.

Is it not a blessed satisfaction to you that God knows everything? The world for years may have been misjudging and condemning us, not because it is an unjust world at heart, but simply because its knowledge is so meager. How differently we would treat our own differently we would treat our own dear ones if we only knew the true conditions of their lives. I think the saddest remark I ever heard of any one making was by a dear member of my church. She was lying in bed about to die of a cancer. One day she looked up and said: "I wonder if God will ever forgive me for being irritable and faultfinding to my children? I sometimes think I was not to blame for being cross. I sometimes think that this cancer has been working upon me and undermining my system for years and years, and I did not know it, and my irritability was due to my sickness and not because my nature was naturally cross." Ah, yes, the world may not know the causes of our actions, but God knows. Is it not a blessed thought to you that God knows your every thought and your every deed and does not misinterpret your actions, as the world so often does. He knows all. Yes, all.

King Solomon, in the next place, was not a man of blood. He was not the central figure of sanguinary battlefields. His chief musical instinct was not the bugle to sound forth the clarion call to arms. He was the prince of peace. He was the creator and the developer of a nation's industries during an era when the sword was turned into a ploughshare and the spear into pruning hook. Like Moses bringing forth water from Horeb, King Solomon lifted his magic wand and struck the hard bowlders of national finance, and at once there gushed forth rivers of molten gold. Work, work, work, there seemed to be plenty of work in his kingdom. There was work for everybody and high wages and prosperity for all. As we wander to-day over the hillsides we find them covered with orchards. The trees are bending so low under the weight of the fruit that the branches have to be propped up. When we go down into the valleys we find them covered with the golden headed harvests. When we go down to the seashore we hear the "Yo, heave!" of the sailors whose ships have come from Tarshish. The busy marts are crowded with merchantmen. The fat, well fed cattle are upon a thousand hills. The long caravans, heavy laden with gold and silver and ivory and precious spices and silks and rare treasures of all sorts, are crossing the deserts from the east and the south. Ah, yes, never was there such an era of prosperity as that of the Solomonic reign. Read the ninth chapter of Kings and second chapter of Ecclesiastes if you would know what was the extent of that prosperity. "So I was great." That alludes not only to his own individual greatness, but also to the greatness of his people. "And increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem. Also my wisdom remained with me. And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them. I withheld not my heart from any joy, for my heart rejoiced in all my labor, and this was the portion of all my labor." Thus, my friends, as the harvests began to grow in the fields and the fruits began to ripen in the orchards and the gold and silver and the ivory and the precious stones and the silks were brought from foreign lands into the Hebrew capital on account of the wisdom of the King can we not feel that all our temporal prosperity is directly due to the great Prince of Peace, whom we call our Saviour, Jesus Christ?

But King Solomon not only stands as the divine type of a great and powerful King, a friend to the great and the powerful of his realm, but he is also the symbol of a just King, looking after the rights of the helpless and the weak. Solomon was not only willing to take by the hand the great King Hiram of Tyre and call him brother, but he was also willing to put his arm about the helpless, the friendless and the weak and say: "I am thy friend. I am thy protector." And no man, no woman, could be so poor and helpless but they could always come to him and find true justice.

You cannot understand what Solomonic justice means unless you in imagination go and see one of the Oriental rulers holding court in the Far East. Now, the eastern court was not like the western courts. The kings did not appoint certain judges to dispense justice, but on certain days they themselves went into a large open audience place as the great moguls of Delhi used to do. Perhaps I can best describe for you this audience place of King Solomon by describing for you the judgment hall of Akbar the Great as I saw it. This audience place, literally speaking, is no hall at all. The blue dome of heaven is its ceiling. The pillared columns of marble, which find their anchorage in the most exquisite of mosaic floors, merely lift themselves up for adornment and not to support any roof. This reception hall was once one mass of jewels and precious stones. These precious stones were not tossed together in heaps as an Italian hod carrier tumbles bricks into a pile. They were arranged in most exquisite designs with reference to size and color. There in jewels the artist pictured the plumage of the birds strutting about in the gardens and the colors of the flowers lifting up their red lips to be kissed by the setting sun and of the rainbows playing among the fountains. There in this wonderland was the peacock throne upon which Akbar the Great sat, which throne alone was supposed to be worth $15,000,000. It was in such an open hall of justice that King Solomon used to sit, and any one who wished could come direct to the King and get justice.

Let us for a little while enter the Jerusalem court to-day. The great Hebrew King has been hearing applicant after applicant. He begins to look weary with his work. No sooner is his last case finished than he turns sharply and say, "Who is next?" With that two women come forward. They are both immoral or bad women, yet each laid claim to a little boy as her own. What did King Solomon do? Did he say: "It makes no difference how this judgment goes. They are only social outcasts anyway?" Oh, no, that was not Solomon's way. He said to himself: "I must help the true mother. I must give her back her baby. So I must be sure and make a right decision. I can only do this by a subterfuge."

Then he turns in an indifferent way and says to the executioner: "Don't let us be bothered any more about this matter. Let us compromise the case. Cut the baby in two and give each claimant a half." The true mother at once falls on her knees and begins to beg for the life of her child. "Oh, my King, my King, my good King!" she said. "Save the life of my baby. Let this woman have the child if necessary, but save my baby alive." The other woman uttered not one word of protest. She merely turned and said: "All right. Let the King kill the child, that it be neither thine or mine." No sooner did she say this than at once in that open court Solomon, with flashing eyes, said: "Give the baby to the weeping woman. She is the true mother." Was judgment ever better rendered? Could a better illustration be presented to show how Christ is always the friend of the weak and the helpless?

Christ is such a Saviour that though we may come to him without a friend and reeking with sin as social lepers, though we may have sinned not only seven times, but seventy times seven, yet if we will only come in his dear name pleading for forgiveness at the cross he will forgive and he will save us. He will not only save one who comes pleading for mercy, but he will save all.

When we talk about King Solomon blessing his own people we also find Christ the Saviour of the Jew. When we find King Solomon welcoming the Queen of Sheba to his court we find Christ the Saviour of the Gentiles as well. Jesus did not simply come to be a Hebrew Christ. He came to be a world's Christ. Can you not find this symbol in the glorious welcome which the ruler of the Davidic capital gave to this beautiful, dusky Queen of the southland?

"Oh, what is the use of bothering with the Queen of Sheba?" I hear some of the Cabinet Ministers say to the King. "She is from a country way off to the south. We can never get any trade from her. If there was a canal cut through the Suez isthmus, that might be different. But all intercourse with that nation must come overland by camel back through regions infested with robbers. Why do we not turn and court the affections of those nearer at home?" "Ah," methinks I can hear the great King say, "if we can help any people we must help them all alike. All who will come to me I will help, whether they be Jews or Gentiles, whether they be whites or blacks, whether they be men or women. They shall all be treated alike." And so, standing amid swaying palms and the incense bearing servants and amid the bowing courtiers of the welcoming King, I learn that when we go forth to Christian work we are not to hem in our gospel invitations by any nationality or by any one social class. We must carry the gospel to all peoples of all climes.

Now comes the practical question. Are you and I willing to come to our Saviour King, as did the Queen of Sheba, who sat at the feet of King Solomon? Are we ready like this Queen of my text, to bring our priceless gifts? Are we ready to come and bow at the feet of Jesus and give to him the most priceless of gifts—namely, the gift of our earthly lives and of our eternal souls? Oh, my friends, if we continue much longer to loiter in the faroff country, do you believe we will ever be able to come and sit at the Master's feet in the new Jerusalem?

Immortal, traveling this road of death, where are thou going to spend eternity? Queen of the Land of Sin, wilt thou leave the far country and come and bow at King Solomon's feet in the Davidic capital? Down on thy knees, immortal! And then when thou hast uttered the publican's prayer thy King will lift thee and call thee his child and thy brow wilt wear a royal coronet. And then—what then? The glory of that moment no human lip may describe. The half of that eternal triumph has never been told and never will be told until, like the Queen of Sheba, we shall be welcomed in the heavenly capital. "Yea, the half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me."

Macaulay's Modesty.

Authors are not supposed to be particularly modest in regard to their works, and it is therefore worth while to quote a passage in a letter written by Macaulay to his German publisher, a letter which the present Baron Tauchnitz carefully preserves: "I have already received £20,000 from Messrs. Longmans. I am ashamed to think how many better writers have toiled all their lives without making a fifth part of that sum."

The Two Vanrevels

CHAPTER I.

IT was long ago, in the days when men sighed when they fell in love, when people danced by candle and lamp, and did dance, too, instead of solemnly gliding about; in that mellow time so long ago when the young were romantic and summer was roses and wine, old Carewe brought his lovely daughter home from the convent to wreck the hearts of the youth of Rouen.

That was not a far journey; only an afternoon's drive through the woods and by the river in an April long ago, Miss Betty's harp carefully strapped behind the great lumbering carriage, her guitar on the front seat half buried under a mound of bouquets and oddly shaped little bundles, farewell gifts of her comrades and the good sisters. In her left hand she clutched a small lace handkerchief, with which she now and then touched her eyes, brimmed with the parting from Sister Cecilia, Sister Mary Basilede, the old stone steps and all the girls, but for every time that she lifted the dainty kerchief to brush away the edge of a tear she took a deep breath of the western woodland air and smiled at least twice, for the years of strict inclosure within St. Mary's walls and still gardens were finished and done with, and at last the many colored world flashed and danced in a mystery before her. This mystery was brilliant to the convent girl because it contained men. She was eager to behold it.

They rumbled into town after sunset in the fair twilight, the dogs barking before them, and every one would have been surprised to know that Tom Vanrevel, instead of Mr. Crailey Gray, was the first to see her. By the merest accident Tom was strolling near the Carewe place at the time, and when the carriage swung into the gates, with rattle and clink and clouds of dust at the finish, it was not too soon lost behind the shrubbery and trees for Tom to catch something more than a glimpse of a gray skirt behind a mound of flowers and of a charming face with parted lips and dark eyes beneath the scuttle of an enormous bonnet. It happened—perhaps it is more accurate to say that Tom thought it happened—that she was just clearing away her veil when he turned to look. She blushed suddenly—so much was not to be mistaken—and the eyes that met his were remarkable for other reasons than the sheer loveliness of them, in that, even in the one flash of them he caught, they meant so many things at one time. But, above all, these eyes were fully conscious of Tom Vanrevel.

Without realizing what he did Mr. Vanrevel stopped short. He had been swinging a walking stick, which, describing a brief arc, remained poised halfway in its descent. There was only that one glance between them, and the carriage disappeared, leaving a scent of spring flowers in the air.

The young man was left standing on the wooden pavement in the midst of a great loneliness, yet enveloped in the afterglow, his soul roseate, his being quavering, his expression, like his cane, instantaneously arrested. With such promptitude and finish was he disposed of that had Miss Carewe been aware of his name and the condition wrought in him by the single stroke she could have sought only the terse Richard of England for a like executive ability: "Off with his head! So much for Vanrevel!"

She had lifted a slender hand to the fluttering veil, a hand in a white glove with a small lace gauntlet at the wrist. This gesture was the final divinity of the radiant vision which remained with the dazed young man as he went down the street, and it may have been three-quarters of an hour later when the background of the picture became vivid to him—a carefully dressed gentleman with heavy brows and a handsome high nose, who sat stiffly upright beside the girl, his very bright eyes quite as conscious of the stricken pedestrian as were hers; vastly different, however, in this—that they glittered—nay, almost bristled—with hostility, while every polished button of his blue coat seemed to reflect their malignancy and to dart little echoing shafts of venom at Mr. Vanrevel.

Tom was dismayed by the acuteness of his perception that a man who does not speak to you has no right to have a daughter like the lady in the carriage, and, the moment of this realization occurring as he sat making a poor pretense to eat his evening meal at the Rouen House, he dropped his fork rattling upon his plate and leaned back, staring at nothing, a proceeding of which his table mate, Mr. William Cummings, the editor of the Rouen Journal, was too busy over his river bass to take note.

"Have you heard what's new in town?" asked Cummings presently, looking up.

"No," said Tom truthfully, for he had seen what was new, but not heard it.

"Old Carewe's brought his daughter home. Fanchon Bareaud was with her at St. Mary's until last year, and Fanchon says she's not only a great beauty, but a great dear."

"Ah!" rejoined the other with masterly indifference. "Dare say—dare say."

"No wonder you're not interested," said Cummings cheerfully, returning to the discussion of his bass. "The old villain will take precious good care you don't come near her."

Mr. Vanrevel already possessed a profound conviction to the same effect. Robert Meilhac Carewe was known not only as the wealthiest citizen of Rouen, but also as its heartiest and most steadfast hater; and, although there were only 5,000 or 6,000 inhabitants, neither was a small distinction, for Rouen was ranked in those easy days as a wealthy town, even as it was called an old town, proud of its age and its riches and bitter in its politics, of course. The French had built a fort there soon after La Salle's last voyage and, as Crailey Gray said, had settled the place, and had then been settled themselves by the pioneer militia. After the Revolution, Carolinians and Virginians had come by way of Tennessee and Kentucky, while the adventurous countrymen from Connecticut, traveling thither to sell, remained to buy—and then sell—when the country was in its teens. In course of time the little trading post of the northwest territory had grown to be the leading center of elegance and culture in the Ohio valley—at least they said so in Rouen.

Robert Carewe was Rouen's magnate, commercially and socially and, until an upstart young lawyer named Vanrevel struck into his power with a broadax, politically. The wharfs were Carewe's; the warehouses that stood by the river and the line of packets which plied upon it were his. Half the town was his, and in Rouen this meant that he was possessed of the middle justice, the high and the low. His mother was a Frenchwoman, and in those days, when to go abroad was a ponderous and venturesome undertaking, the fact that he had spent most of his youth in the French capital wrought a certain glamour about him, for to the American Paris was Europe, and it lay shimmering on the far horizon of every imagination, a golden city.

Mr. Carewe lived in an old fashioned house on the broad, quiet, shady street which bore his name. There was a wide lawn in front, shadowy under elm and locust trees and bounded by thick shrubberies. A long garden, fair with roses and hollyhocks, lay outside the library windows—an old time garden, with fine gravel paths and green arbors, drowsed over in summer time by the bees, while overhead the locust rasped his rusty cadences the livelong day, and a faraway sounding love note from the high branches brought to mind the line, like an old refrain:

> The voice of the turtle was heard in the land.

Between the garden and the carriage gates there was a fountain where a bronze boy with the dropsy (but not minding it) lived in a perpetual bath from a green goblet held over his head. Near by a stone sundial gleamed against a clump of lilac bushes, and it was upon this spot that the white kitten introduced Thomas Vanrevel to Miss Carewe.

Upon the morning after her arrival, having finished her pianoforte practice, touched her harp twice and arpeggioed the "Spanish Fandango" on her guitar, Miss Betty read two paragraphs of "Gilbert" (for she was profoundly determined to pursue her tasks with diligence), but, the open windows disclosing a world all sunshine and green leaves, she threw the book aside with a good conscience and danced out to the garden. There, coming upon a fuzzy white ball rolling into itself spirally on a lazy pathway, she pounced at it, whereupon the thing uncurled with lightning swiftness and fled, more like a streak than a kitten, down the drive, through the open gates and into the street, Miss Betty in full cry.

Across the way there chanced to be strolling a young lady in blue, accompanied by a gentleman whose leisurely gait gave no indication of the maneuvering he had done to hasten their walk into its present direction. He was apparently thirty or thirty-one, tall, very straight, dark, smooth shaved, his eyes keen, deep set and thoughtful, and his high white hat, white satin cravat and careful collar were evidence of an elaboration of toilet somewhat unusual in Rouen for the morning. Also he was carrying a pair of white gloves in his hand and dangled a slender ebony cane from his wrist. The flying kitten headed toward the couple when, with a celerity only to be accounted for on the theory that his eye had been fixed on the Carewe gateway for some time previous to this sudden apparition, the gentleman leaped in front of the fugitive.

The kitten attempted a dodge to pass; the gentleman was there before it. The kitten feinted; the gentleman was altogether too much on the spot. Immediately, and just as Miss Carewe, flushed and glowing, ran into the street, the small animal doubled, evaded Miss Betty's frantic clutch, re-entered the gateway and attempted a disappearance into the lilac bushes instead of going around them, only to find itself, for a fatal two seconds, in difficulties with the close set thicket of stems.

In regard to the extraordinary agility of which the pursuing gentleman was capable, it is enough to say that he caught the cat. He emerged from the lilacs holding it in one hand, his gloves and white hat in the other, and presented himself before Miss Betty with a breathlessness not entirely attributable to his exertions.

For a moment, as she came running toward him and he met her flashing look, bright with laughter and recognition and haste, he stammered. A thrill nothing less than delirious sent the blood up behind his brown cheeks, for he saw that she, too, knew that this was the second time their eyes had met.

He could not speak at once, but when he could, "Permit me, madam," he said solemnly, offering the captive, "to restore your kitten."

An agitated kitten should not be detained by clasping its waist, and already the conqueror was paying for his victory. There ensued a final outrageous squirm of despair. Two frantic claws, extended, drew one long red mark across the stranger's wrist and another down the back of his hand to the knuckles. They were good, hearty scratches, and the blood followed the artist's lines rapidly, but of this the young man took no note, for he knew that he was about to hear Miss Carewe's voice for the first time.

"They say the best way to hold them," he observed, "is by the scruff of the neck."

Beholding his wounds, suffered in her cause, she gave a pitying cry that made his heart leap with the richness and sweetness of it. Catching the kitten from him, she dropped it to the ground in such wise as to prove nature's foresight most kind in cushioning the feet of cats.

"Ah, I didn't want it that much!"

"A cat in the hand is worth two nightingales in the bush," he said boldly and laughed. "I would shed more blood than that!"

Miss Betty blushed like a southern dawn and started back from him. From the convent but yesterday—and she had taken a man's hand in both of hers!

It was to this tableau that the lady in blue entered, following the hunt through the gates, where she stopped with a discomposed countenance. At once, however, she advanced and, with a cry of greeting, enveloped Miss Betty in a brief embrace, to the relief of the latter's confusion. It was Fanchon Bareaud, now two years emancipated from St. Mary's and far gone in taffeta. With her lusterful light hair, absent blue eyes and her gentle voice, as small and pretty as her face and figure, it was not too difficult to justify Crailey Gray's characterization of her as one of those winsome baggages who had made an air of feminine helplessness the fashion of the day.

"I'm so glad—glad!" exclaimed Betty. "You were just coming to see me, weren't you? My father is in the library. Let me"—

Miss Bareaud drew back. "No, no," she interrupted hastily and with evident perturbation; "I—we must be on our way immediately." She threw a glance at the gentleman, which let him know that she now comprehended his gloves and why their stroll had trended toward Carewe street. "Come at once," she commanded him quickly in an undertone.

"But now that you're here," said Miss Betty, wondering very much why he was not presented to her, "won't you wait and let me gather a nosegay for you? Our pansies and violets"—

"I could help," the gentleman suggested, with the look of a lame dog at Miss Bareaud. "I have been considered useful about a garden."

"Fool!" Betty did not hear the word that came from Miss Bareaud's closed teeth, though she was mightily surprised at the visible agitation of her schoolmate, for the latter's face was pale and excited. And Miss Carewe's amazement was complete when Fanchon, without more words, cavalierly seized the gentleman's arm and moved toward the street with him as rapidly as his perceptible reluctance to leave permitted. But at the gate Miss Bareaud turned and called back over her shoulder, as if remembering the necessity of offering an excuse for so remarkable a proceeding: "I shall come again very soon. Just now we are upon an errand of great importance. Good day!"

"I didn't want it that much!"

Miss Betty waved her hand, staring after them, her eyes large with wonder. She compressed her lips tightly. "Errand!" This was the friend of childhood's happy hour, and they had not met in two years!

"Errand!" She ran to the hedge, along the top of which a high white hat was now seen perambulating. She pressed down a loose branch and called in a tender voice to the stranger whom Fanchon had chosen should remain nameless:

"Be sure to put some salve on your hand!"

He made a bow which just missed being too low, but did miss it.

"It is there already," he said and, losing his courage after the bow, made his speech with so palpable a gasp before the last word that the dullest person in the world could have seen that he meant it.

Miss Betty disappeared.

There was a rigidity of expression about the gentle mouth of Fanchon Bareaud, which her companion did not enjoy, as they went on their way, each preserving an uneasy silence, until at her own door she turned sharply upon him. "Tom Vanrevel, I thought you were the steadiest—and now you've proved yourself the craziest—soul in Rouen!" she burst out. "And I couldn't say worse!"

"Why didn't you present me to her?" asked Vanrevel.

"Because I thought a man of your gallantry might prefer not to face a shotgun in the presence of ladies!"

"Pooh!"

"Pooh!" mimicked Miss Bareaud. "You can 'pooh' as much as you like, but if he had seen us from the window"— She covered her face with her hands for a moment, then dropped them and smiled upon him. "I understand perfectly to what I owe the pleasure of a stroll with you this morning, and your casual insistence on the shadiness of Carewe street!" He laughed nervously, but her smile vanished, and she continued: "Keep away, Tom. She is beautiful, and at St. Mary's I always thought she had spirit and wit too. I only hope Crailey won't see her before the wedding! But it isn't safe for you. Go along, now, and ask Crailey please to come at 3 this afternoon."

This message from Mr. Gray's betrothed was not all the ill starred Tom conveyed to his friend. Mr. Vanrevel was ordinarily esteemed a person of great reserve and discretion; nevertheless there was one man to whom he told everything, and from whom he had no secrets. He spent the noon hour in feeble attempts to describe to Crailey Gray the outward appearance of Miss Elizabeth Carewe—how she ran like a young Diana, what one felt upon hearing her voice, and he presented in himself an example exhibiting something of the cost of looking in her eyes. His conversation was more or less incoherent, but the effect of it was complete.

CHAPTER II.

DOES there exist an incredulous or jealous denizen of another portion of our country who, knowing that the room in the wooden cupola over Mr. Carewe's library was commonly alluded to by Rouen as the "tower chamber," will prove himself so sectionally prejudiced as to deny that the town was a veritable hotbed of literary interest or that Sir Walter Scott was ill appreciated there? Some of the men looked sly and others grinned at mention of this apartment, but the romantic were not lacking who spoke of it in whispers—how the lights sometimes shone there all night long and the gentlemen drove away, white faced, in the dawn. The cupola, rising above the library, overlooked the garden, and the house, save for that, was of a single story, with a low veranda running the length of its front. The windows of the library and of a row of bedrooms, one of which was Miss Betty's, lined the veranda steamboat fashion, the inner doors of these rooms all opening upon a long hall which bisected the house. The stairway leading to the room in the cupola rose in the library itself, while the bisecting hall afforded the only access to the library; hence the gossips, well acquainted with the geography of the place, conferred seriously together upon what effect Miss Betty's home coming would have in this connection, for any one going to the stairway must needs pass her door, and, what was more to the point, a party of gentlemen descending late from the mysterious turret might not be so quiet as they intended and the young lady sufficiently disturbed to inquire of her father what entertainment he provided that should keep his guests until 4 in the morning.

But at present it was with the opposite end of the house that the town was occupied, for there workmen were hammering and sawing and painting all day long, finishing the addition Mr. Carewe was building for his daughter's debut. This hammering disturbed Miss Betty, who had become almost as busy with the French revolution as with her mantua maker, for she had found in her father's library many books not for convent shelves, and she had become a Girondin.

She found memoirs, histories and tales of that delectable period, and for a week there was no meal in that house to which she sat down earlier than half an hour late. She had a rightful property interest in the revolution, her own great-uncle having been one of those who suffered, not, however, under the guillotine, for to Georges Meilhac appertained the rare distinction of death by accident on the day when the businesslike young Bonaparte played upon the mob with his cannon.

There were some yellow letters of this great-uncle's in a box which had belonged to her grandmother, a rich discovery for Miss Betty, who read and reread them with eager and excited eyes, living more in Paris with Georges and his friends than in Rouen with her father. Indeed, she had little else to do. Mr. Carewe was no comrade for her, by far the reverse. She seldom saw him, except at the table, when he sat with averted eyes and talked to her very little, and, while making elaborate preparation for her introduction to his friends (such was his phrase), he treated her with a perfunctory civility which made her wonder if her advent was altogether welcome to him, but when she noticed that his hair looked darker than usual about every fourth day she began to understand why he appeared ungrateful to her for growing up. He went out a great deal, though no visitors came to the house, for it was known that Mr. Carewe desired to present his daughter to no one until he presented her to all. Fanchon Bareaud, indeed, made one hurried and embarrassed call, evading Miss Betty's reference to the chevalier of the kitten with a dexterity too nimble to be thought unintentional. Miss Carewe was forbidden to return her friend's visit until after her debut, and Mr. Carewe explained that there were always some worthless young men hanging about Bareaud's, where, he did not add, they interfered with a worthy old one who desired to honor Fanchon's older sister, Virginia, with his attentions.

This was no great hardship for Miss Betty, as, since plunging into the revolution with her great-uncle, she had lost some curiosity concerning the men of today, doubting that they would show forth as heroic, as debonair, gay and tragic as he. He was the legendary hero of her childhood. She remembered her mother's stories of him perhaps more clearly than she remembered her mother, and one of the older sisters had known him in Paris and had talked of him at great length, giving the flavor of his dandyism and his beauty at first hand to his young relative.

In the library hung a small full length drawing of Georges, done in color by Miss Betty's grandmother, and this she carried to her own room and studied long and ardently until sometimes the man himself seemed to stand before her.

Miss Betty had an impression that her grandmother's art of portraiture would have been more sucessful with the profile than the "full face." Nevertheless, nothing could be more clearly indicated than that the hair of M. Meilhac was very yellow and his short, huge lapeled waistcoat white, striped with scarlet. An enormous cravat covered his chin; the heavy collar of his yellow coat rose behind his ears, while its tails fell to his ankles, and the tight trousers of white and yellow stripes were tied with white ribbons about the middle of the calf. He wore white stockings and gold buckled yellow shoes and on the back of his head a jauntily cocked black hat. Miss Betty innocently wondered why his letters did not speak of Petion, of Vergniaud or of Dumoriez, since in the historical novels which she read the hero's lot was inevitably linked with that of every one of importance in his generation. Yet Georges appeared to have been unacquainted with these personages. Robespierre being the only name of consequence mentioned in his letters, and then it appeared in much the same fashion practiced by her father in alluding to the governor of the state, who had the misfortune to be unpopular with Mr. Carewe. But this did not dim her great-uncle's luster in Miss Betty's eyes or lessen for her the pathetic romance of the smile he wore.

Beholding this smile, one remembered the end to which his light footsteps had led him, and it was unavoidable to picture him left lying in the empty street behind the heels of the flying crowd, carefully forming that same smile on his lips and taking much pride in passing with some small, cynical speech, murmured to himself, concerning the inutility of a gentleman's getting shot by his friends for merely being present to applaud them. So, fancying him thus with his yellow hair, his scarlet striped waistcoat and his tragedy, the young girl felt a share of family greatness or at least of picturesqueness descend to her, and she smiled sadly back upon the smile in the picture and dreamed about its original night after night.

Whether or no another figure, that of a dark young man in a white hat, with a white kitten etching his wrist in red, found place in her dreams at this period it is impossible to determine. She did not see him again. It is quite another thing, hazardous to venture, to state that he did not see her. At all events, it is certain that many people who had never beheld her were talking of her; that Rouen was full of contention concerning her beauty and her gift of music, for a song can be heard through an open window. And how did it happen that Crailey Gray knew that it was Miss Carewe's habit to stroll in her garden for half an hour or so each evening before retiring and that she went to mass every morning soon after sunrise? Crailey Gray never rose at or near sunrise in his life, though he sometimes beheld it from another point of view, as the end of the evening. It appears that some one must have told him.

One night when the moon lay white on the trees and housetops Miss Betty paused in her evening promenade and seated herself upon a bench on the borders of the garden, wrought upon by the tender incentive to sighs and melancholy which youth in loneliness finds in a loveliness of the earth, for what reason she could not have told, since she was without care or sorrow that she knew except the French revolution, yet tears shone upon the long lashes. She shook them off and looked up with a sudden odd consciousness. The next second she sprang to her feet with a gasp and a choked outcry, her hands pressed to her breast.

Ten paces in front of her a gap in the shrubbery where tall trees rose left a small radiant area of illumination like that of a limelight in a theater, its brilliancy intensified by the dark foliage behind. It was open to view only from the bench by which she stood, and appeared, indeed, like the stage of a little theater, a stage occupied by a bizarre figure. For, in the center of this shining patch, with the light strong on his face, was standing a fair haired young man dressed in a yellow coat, a scarlet and white striped waistcoast, wearing a jauntily cocked black hat on his head. And even to the last detail, the ribbon laces above the ankle and the gold buckled shoes, he was the sketch of Georges Meilhac sprung into life.

About this slender figure there hung a wan sweetness like a fine mist, almost an ethereality in that light; yet in the pale face lurked something reckless, something of the actor, too; and, though his smile was gentle and wistful, there was a twinkle behind it not seen at first, something amused and impish; a small surprise underneath, like a flea in a rose jar.

Fixed to the spot by this apparition, Miss Betty stood wildly staring, her straining eyelids showing the white above and below the large brown iris. Her breath came faster and deeper until between her parted lips it became vocal in a quick sound like a sob. At that he spoke.

"Forgive me!" The voice was low, vibrant and so exceedingly musical that he might have been accused of coolly selecting his best tone; and it became only sweeter when, even more softly, in a semiwhisper of almost crucial pleading, he said, "Ah, don't go away!"

"Don't come near!" she gasped.

In truth she could not go. She had been too vitally stirred. She began to tremble excessively and sank back upon the bench, motioning him away with vague gestures of her shaking hands.

This was more than the incroyable had counted upon and far from his desires. He started forward, with an exclamation.

"Don't come near!" she gasped. "Who are you? Go away!"

"Give me one second to explain," he began, but with the instant reassurance of this beginning she cut him off short, her fears dispelled by his commonplace. Nay, indignation displaced them so quickly that she fairly flashed up before him to her full height.

"You did not come in by the gate!" she cried. "What do you mean by coming here in that dress? What right have you in my garden?"

"Just one word," he begged quickly, but very gently. "You'd allow a street beggar that much!"

She stood before him panting and, as he thought, glorious in her flush of youth and anger. Tom Vanrevel had painted her incoherently, but richly in spite of that, his whole heart being in the portrait, and Crailey Gray had smiled at what he deemed the exaggeration of an ordinarily unimpressionable man who had fallen in love "at first sight," yet in the presence of the reality the incroyable decided that Tom's colors had been gray and humble.

"If you have anything to say for yourself, say it quickly!" said Miss Betty.

"You were singing a while ago," he answered somewhat huskily, "and I stopped on the street to listen; then I came here to be nearer. The spell of your voice"— He broke off abruptly to change the word. "The spell of the song came over me—it is my dearest favorite—so that I stood afterward in a sort of trance, only hearing again in the silence 'The stolen heart, like the gathered rose, will bloom but for a day!' I did not see you until you came to the bench. You must believe me. I would not have frightened you for anything in the world."

"Why are you wearing that dress?"

He laughed and pointed to where, behind him on the ground, lay a long gray cloak, upon which had been tossed a white mask. "I'm on my way to the masquerade," he answered, with an airy gesture. "I'm an incroyable, you see, and I had the costume made from my recollection of a sketch of your great-uncle. I saw it a long time ago in your library."

Miss Carewe's accustomed poise was quite recovered—indeed, she was astonished to discover a distinct trace of disappointment that the brilliant apparition must offer so tame an explanation. What he said was palpably the truth. There was a masquerade that night, she knew, at the Madrillons', a little way up Carewe street, and her father had gone an hour earlier, a blue domino over his arm.

The incroyable was a person of almost magical perceptiveness. He felt the let-down immediately and feared a failure. This would not do. The attitude of tension between them must be renewed at once. "You'll forgive me?" he began in a quickly impassioned tone. "It was only after you sang a dream possessed me, and"—

"I cannot stay to talk with you," Miss Betty interrupted and added with a straightforwardness which made him afraid she would prove lamentably direct, "I do not know you."

She turned toward the house, whereupon he gave a little pathetic exclamation of pleading in a voice that was masterly, being as sincere as it was musical, and he took a few leaning steps toward her, both hands outstretched.

"One moment more!" he cried as she turned again to him. "It may be the one chance of my life to speak with you. Don't deny me this. All the rest will meet you when the happy evening comes, will dance with you, talk with you, see you when they like, listen to you sing. I alone must hover about the gates or steal like a thief into your garden to hear you from a distance. Listen to me just this once for a moment."

"I cannot listen," she said firmly, and with a whisk of her skirts and a footfall on the gravel path she was gone. He stood dumfounded, poor comedian, having come to play the chief role, but to find the scene taken out of his hands.

CHAPTER III.

THOSE angels appointed to be guardians of the merry people of Rouen, poising one night between earth and stars, discovered a single brilliant and resonant spot, set in the midst of the dark, quiet town like a jeweled music box on a black cloth, for that night was the beginning of Miss Betty's famous career as the belle of Rouen and was the date from which strangers were to hear of her as "the beautiful Miss Carewe" until "beautiful" was left off, visitors to the town being supposed to have heard at least that much before they came.

There had been much discussion of her, though only one or two had caught glimpses of her, but most of the gallants appeared to agree with Crailey Gray, who aired his opinion in an exceedingly casual way at the little club on Main street. Mr. Gray held that when the daughter of a man as rich as Bob Carewe was heralded as a beauty the chances were that she would prove disappointing, and, for his part, he was not even interested enough to attend and investigate. So he was going down the river in a canoe and preferred the shyness of bass to that of a girl of eighteen just from the convent, he said. Tom Vanrevel was not present on the occasion of these remarks, and the general concurrence with Crailey may be suspected as a purely verbal one, since when the evening came two of the most enthusiastic dancers and lovemakers of the town, the handsome Tappingham Marsh and that doughty ex-dragoon and Indian fighter, stout old General Trumble, were upon the field before the enemy appeared—that is to say, they were in the new ballroom before their host; indeed, the musicians had not arrived, and Nelson, an aged negro servitor, was engaged in lighting the house.

The crafty pair had planned this early descent with a view to monopoly by right of priority in case the game proved worth the candle, and they were leaning effectively against the little railing about the musicians' platform when Mr. Carewe entered the room with his daughter on his arm.

She was in white touched with countless small lavender flowers. There were rows and rows of wonderful silk and lace flounces on her skirt, and her fan hung from a rope of great pearls. Ah, hideous, blue rough cloth of the convent, unforgotten, but laid aside forever, what a chrysalis you were!

Tappingham twitched his companion's sleeve, but the general was already posing, and neither heard the words of presentation, because Miss Betty gave each of them a quick look, then smiled upon them as they bowed. The slayers were prostrated before their prey. Never were lady killers more instantaneously tamed and subjugated by the power of the feminine eye. Will Cummings came in soon, and, almost upon his heels, Eugene Madrillon and young Frank Chenoweth. No others appeared for half an hour, and the five gentlemen looked at one another aside, each divining his own diplomacy in his fellow's eye, and each laboriously explaining to the others his own mistake in regard to the hour designated upon Mr. Carewe's cards of invitation. This small embarrassment, however, did not prevent General Trumble and young Mr. Chenoweth from coming to high words over Miss Carewe's little gilt filigree "programme" of dances.

It may be not untimely to remark also of these five redoubtable beaux that during the evening it occurred to every one of them to be glad that Crailey Gray was betrothed to Fanchon Bareaud, and that he was down on the Rouen river with a canoe, a rod and a tent. Nay, without more words, to declare the truth in regard to Crailey, they felt greater security in his absence from the field than in his betrothal. As Mr. Chenoweth, a youth as open as out of doors both in countenance and mind, observed plaintively to Tappingham Marsh in a corner, while they watched Miss Betty's lavender flowers miraculously swirling through a quadrille, "Crailey, you know—well, Crailey's been engaged before!" It was not Mr. Chenoweth's habit to disguise his apprehensions, and Crailey Gray would not fish for bass forever.

The same Chenoweth was he who, maddened by the general's triumphantly familiar way of toying with Miss Betty's fan between two dances, attempted to propose to her during the sunrise waltz. Having sung "Oh, believe me!" in her ear as loudly as he could, he expressed the wish, quite as loudly, "that this waltz might last for always!"

That was the seventh time it had been said to Betty during the night, and, though Mr. Chenoweth's predecessors had revealed their desires in a guise lacking this prodigious artlessness, she already possessed no novel acquaintance with the exclamation, but she made no comment. Her partner's style was not a stimulant to repartee. "It would be heaven," he amplified earnestly: "it would be heaven to dance

STORIES OF FORTUNES

ROMANTIC TALES OF UNCLAIMED MONEY WHICH ARRIVED.

Millions of Pounds Sterling Held in Trust by Government Which Are Due to Persons Who Have Dropped Out of Sight—Some Large Fortunes In the Concrete Which Were Literally Thrust Upon the Lucky Ones.

In novels people are often made to pick up fortunes out of a chance newspaper advertisement, and the incident is dismissed by the reader as growing out of the author's imagination. What, writes Sidney H. Preston in The News of the World of London, England, should cause surprise is that not only are fortunes thus obtained, but that millions of pounds sterling are held in trust by Government and other departments which are due to persons who have dropped out of sight, or for some reason fail to claim what is legally their own. Yet in some instances officials and others succeed in tracing the missing heirs, and fortunes of more or less value are literally thrust upon the lucky ones.

Only last week a tailor's cutter residing in Vienna received information through the American consulate that his uncle had died in America leaving him a fortune of no less than £2,400,000. The uncle, it appears, emigrated to New York, where he bought forest land, and afterwards became owner of a gold mine, from which accrued his fabulous wealth. His nephew was his sole heir.

An old man, apparently poverty-stricken, was found dead in bed last year. The police, on taking charge of two trunks which, so far as was known, were all deceased man possessed, found enclosed securities worth £80,000 and a bankbook showing a deposit of £17,000. There was also a will appointing an executor, with directions for him to hand over the £97,000 to the testator's sister, who resided in Dunfermline, Scotland, and who was entirely ignorant of her brother's wealth.

In 1888 a Sheffield joiner named Platts received news of a large fortune due to his wife. Many years ago Mrs. Platts' uncle left England and went to California. There he invested his savings in the purchase of land, which became very valuable, for much of it was built on. He died without making a will, and as he was unmarried his relatives were advertised for. Eventually, some of them were found at Birkenhead, and Mrs. Platt at Sheffield. The value of the estate was estimated at £4,000,000.

A pleasant surprise in the shape of a windfall befell Thomas McGuinness, an old man who lived at a colliery in Durham a few years ago. McGuinness received a letter from a firm of Sunderland solicitors enclosing a copy of a letter with documents received from their New York agents, by which it appeared that he and his brother were entitled to share in a sum of £1,000. The money was left by William McGuinness, their brother, who emigrated to New York, where he died about twenty years ago. The testator left his property to his wife, and on her death it was to be equally divided among his brothers. Edward McGuinness, who shared the money, was a mason's laborer.

Mr. Alexander Forbes of Aberdeen was bequeathed £500 and a magnificent medal for a life-saving act performed a long time since. While on a voyage from Australia to England, Forbes jumped overboard and saved the life of a Mrs. MacIntosh. Mr. Forbes was traced by an advertisement in a newspaper.

The mysterious disappearance, in 1888, of a journeyman printer at Versailles, who awoke one morning to learn that he was the happy possessor of a million sterling, bequeathed to him by an old gentleman whose life he had saved many years before, was the subject of considerable speculation. It transpired that besides the legatee's relatives and acquaintances, there were many persons who took the deepest interest in his fate. For, on the strength of the windfall, the journeyman printer had borrowed considerable sums of money, respecting which the minds of the lenders were greatly exercised. The judicial authorities were communicated with on the subject, with the result that diligent search was made for the missing man, but without success. Various theories prevailed as to the disappearance of the lucky legatee, the most popular being that the bank notes and gold he carried about him tempted some false friends to make away with him after a festive supper.

An elderly woman, named Grundy, died last year at Astley, South Lancashire. Her husband, a small farmer and gardener, upon examining a lumber-room after her death, found close upon £1,100, mostly in sovereigns and half-sovereigns, which had been hidden there by his careful wife.

It was mentioned in the Lancashire Chancery Court recently that several children, supposed to be tramping the country, were believed to be entitled to an estate worth £7,000. The vice-chancellor expressed his surprise that such windfalls were advertised in The London Gazette. He wondered how many tramps ever read The Gazette.

James Russel, a machinist, in humble circumstances, at Vancouver, in 1899, fell heir to $5,000,000, left him by a bachelor cousin. A London banker's advertisement was published in a Canadian local paper announcing that £1,000,000 was waiting for Russel and his wife, if they would communicate with the advertiser. Half-an-hour later, Russel appeared, in his working clothes, with the required marriage certificate, and when the proof was apparently found correct. Mrs. Russel, overcome with joy, fainted, and Russel spent the day in celebrating the advent of prospective fortune.

A man named Bernard Reilly died in Ireland in 1871, and, owing to the failure of charitable bequests mentioned in his will, and there being no known next of kin, over $6,000 was escheated to the Crown. A lady claimant, Mrs. Crawley, appeared in 1882, but failed to prove her claim. Quite recently it was discovered that an aunt of the claimant was alive on the date of Mr. Reilly's death, and would have been the next of kin. The aunt died intestate and without issue, and Mrs. Crawley, who was in poor circumstances, took out letters of administration. The Crown has handed her the money.

Canadian despatches received a year ago contained the intelligence that a Mrs. Madden of Cote St. Paul, a suburb of Montreal, had received information from Australia to the effect that she and another sister were sole heiresses to an estate worth £300,000 left by their uncle, Mr. Michael Conlan, formerly of Roscommon, Ireland, who recently died in Australia. Mrs. Madden, who is the wife of a stonemason, was formerly a Miss Conlan, and emigrated to Canada from Roscommon.

In view of the fact that from time to time claimants appear to the Blythe estate in America, it may be useful to record the fact that this case was disposed of by the American courts as far back as 1890. Mr. T. H. Blythe died intestate in San Francisco in 1883, leaving property worth $4,000,000. One hundred and ninety-seven claimants sought this prize, along twenty-two lines of descent. Among the number were the English families of Williams and Savage, and some Scotch gypsies, who traced Blythe's ancestry to Sir Walter Scott's Jean Gordon. The judgment of the courts awarded the bulk of the property to Miss Florence Blythe, who claimed the estate in the absence of any will, as the sole recognized and adopted child of the deceased. It was alleged that the Californian law, on sufficient evidence, allows such a claim, even against the next of kin.

James Crannis of Wymondham, Norfolk, late landlord of a village inn near Bury St. Edmunds, a few years ago was informed by a firm of solicitors that he was entitled to nearly £9,000 as next of kin to Robert Reeve, who left Wymondham in 1852, and who acquired wealth in Manitoba, ultimately retiring to New York. Mr. Reeve died in 1900, since which time the solicitors had been endeavoring to discover an heir to the property.

PASTE FOR ROYALTY.

Blazing Gems Themselves Are Really Stored In Vaults of King's Bankers.

The visitor to the Tower of London who is permitted to inspect the Crown Jewels seldom knows that a large proportion of the blazing gems are merely paste, and that, although the Tower might be considered a safe enough place, most of the famous stones are in reality stored in the vaults of the King's bankers, their places being taken by cleverly executed counterfeits in paste. The Koh-i-noor is never on exhibition, and some of the other stones are represented by proxy, though the famous ruby worn in his helmet by Henry when he invaded France, and which now blazes in the centre of the Maltese Cross in the crown made for Queen Victoria is shown.

It was the early custom to provide an ornate but inexpensive crown for the Queen Consort, and, though these circlets blaze with jewels, none of them are real. When Victoria was to be crowned Queen Regnant it was realized that it would never do to offer her paste, and a new crown was provided, for which stones were taken from the earlier masculine crowns.

With the exception of the Queen's crown and some few stones in other badges of royalty, the entire display is of paste, and yet shows the original stones, even the Imperial crown never having boasted real jewels.

Oddly enough, most of these paste jewels attract more appreciative comment than the few crowns set with genuine stones, and the sightseer goes on his way rejoicing or envious, according to his temperament, although any fashionable jeweler's store will display ten times the number of real precious stones.

Intrinsically the entire display is not worth more than a quarter of a million.

Some Irish Spirits.

In The Monthly Review Lady Gregory has collected a number of stories of the belief in spirits shown by the inhabitants of islands of the Irish coast. These spirits seem to swarm, and are but rarely friendly to ordinary mortals, who, we are told, unlike the dwellers in "far-off barbarous England," are not trying to recover their belief in this cloud of witnesses, for they have never lost touch with them—this is the way in which the spirits are referred to. And this is how the islanders account for the origin of the mysterious people: "Fallen angels they are said to be. God threw a third part of them into hell with Lucifer, and it was Michael who interceded for the rest. And then a third part were cast into the air, and a third in the land and sea. And here they are all about us, thick as grass." The stories that Lady Gregory has collected about these fallen angels are most tantalizing. They never seem to lead anywhere, and the most promising break off when we long to know the end. What, we wonder, happened to the girl who died, but returned to the curate with her spirit-lover to be married? The curate performed the ceremony, but nothing further is recorded. As a rule, the spirits merely play impish tricks, such as stealing sticks, for they are great fighters, and they are unimaginative enough to dress like ordinary people.

A Judicial Reproof.

A counsel in the middle of his cross-examination was handed a telegram. "Halloa!" he said as he read it, "So-and-so has won the Metropolitan stakes." "Mr. A——," said the judge severely, "it is very unseemly that in the course of solemn judicial proceedings, where a man's liberty and reputation are at stake, you should be talking of the winner of a horse race. Er—by the way, does the telegram say what was second and third?"—Tatler.

The Workhouse Organ.

Notwithstanding that they have twice been told by the local Government Board that they consider the price excessive, the Edmonton Board of Guardians has resolved to pay £235 for an organ for the new workhouse chapel. A quantity of hymn-books are also to be bought at half-a-crown each.

Queer Postal Address.

A letter from Cornwall has just been delivered in High Wycombe (Bucks) with the simple address: "To the Sawmill that cuts up large elm, High Wycombe."

A JOCULAR MONARCH.

Ivan the Terrible Had Cold Blooded Notions About Jesting.

Ivan the Terrible forgot neither his devotions nor his diversions. His palace alternately resounded with praying and carousing. For his pastime bears were brought from Novgorod. When from his window he perceived a group of citizens collected he let slip two or three of these ferocious animals, and his delight on beholding the flight of the terrified creatures, and especially on hearing the cries of the victims, was unbounded. His bursts of laughter were loud and long continued. To console those who were maimed for life he would sometimes send each of them a small piece of gold.

Another of his chief amusements was in the company of jesters, whose duty it was to divert him, especially before and after any executions, but they often paid dearly for an unseasonable joke.

Among these none was more distinguished than Prince Grosdef, who held a high rank at court.

The czar, being one day dissatisfied with a jest, poured over the prince's head the boiling contents of a soup basin. The agonized wretch prepared to retreat from the table, but the tyrant struck him with a knife, and he fell senseless to the floor. Dr. Arnolph was instantly called.

"Save my good servant!" cried the czar. "I have jested with him a little too hard."

"So hard," replied the other, "that only God and your majesty can restore him to life. He no longer breathes."

Ivan expressed his contempt, called the deceased favorite a dog and continued his amusements.

Another day, while he sat at table, the waywode of Staritza, Boris Titof, appeared, bowed to the ground and saluted him after the customary manner.

"God save thee, my dear waywode. Thou deservest a proof of my favor."

He seized a knife and cut off an ear. Titof thanked the czar for his gracious favor and wished him a happy reign.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF LOVE.

Love is kindly and deceitless.—Yeats.

Love can sun the realms of night.—Schiller.

They do not love that do not show their love.—Shakespeare.

Love's a thing that's never out of season.—Barry Cornwall.

He that shuts out love in turn shall be shut out by love.—Tennyson.

The greatest miracle of love is the cure of coquetry.—La Rochefoucauld.

Love is master of the wisest; it is only fools that defy him.—Thackeray.

Love never dies of starvation, but often of indigestion.—Ninon de l'Enclos.

The magic of first love is the ignorance that it can ever end.—Beaconsfield.

Man's love is of man's life a thing apart; 'tis woman's whole existence.—Byron.

It is impossible to love a second time when we have once really ceased to love.—La Rochefoucauld.

Bulow's Wonderful Memory.

Bulow had a wonderful memory, as was evidenced by his astonishing feat of memorizing Kiel's concerto, which the man who wrote it could not accompany without notes. His accuracy was almost infallible. He was once rehearsing a composition of Liszt's for orchestra in that composer's presence without notes. Liszt interrupted to say that a certain note should have been played piano. "No," replied Bulow, "it is sforzando." "Look and see," persisted the composer. The score was produced. Bulow was right. How everybody did applaud! In the excitement one of the brass wind players lost his place. "Look for a b flat in your part," said Bulow, still without his notes. "Five measures farther on I wish to begin."

The Word "Asphalt."

Of deceitful ancestry is the word "asphalt." Apparently it means "not slippery." The Greeks themselves were tempted to derive "asphaltos" from "a," not, and "sphallo," make to fall or slip. However, the word is really of unknown barbarian origin—Phoenician, some say. Asphalt was in use very early in history. It is said to have been the slime with which the infant Moses' ark of bulrushes was daubed and which the builders of the tower of Babel used instead of mortar.

Butchery In War.

In one of the Du Guesclin's victories so many English were taken captive that even the humblest soldier among the French had one or more prisoners. The victors, however, fell to quarreling, and, ill feeling becoming rife in the French army in consequence of these quarrels over the prisoners, Du Guesclin ordered all the captives to be butchered, and the brutal order was carried out.

A Cautious Lover.

A correspondent of the London Globe tells of a gilded youth who left instructions at a jeweler's shop for the inscription of an engagement ring he had just bought. He wanted it inscribed, "From Bertie to Maud." As he left he turned back and added as an afterthought, "I shouldn't—ah—cut 'Maud' too deep, don't you know."

Close.

She—Do you know I've induced my husband to give up cigars? He—Is that so? Well, I've known him for seven years, and I never saw him give up one.

It is the privilege of posterity to set matters right between those antagonists who by their rivalry for greatness divided a whole age.—Addison.

Clothes of the Hour

To be of the world—a part of it, a man must be in step with the times.

Clothes are one of the most important factors in the make up of the Twentieth Century Man.

With the traditions and customs, to which so many makers of Clothes for Men still cling, we have no concern.

We're Clothiers Of To-day

In our Spring and Summer Suits are incorporated every knack, vagary and trend of fashion in Single and Double Breasted Models.

The fabrics are new and come in a diversity of color schemes and weaves. Smooth surface and undressed Worsteds, Cheviots in plain or fancy designs, Cassimeres in new tones and effects.

Suits, $5,6, 8, 10, 12 to $20

Men's Toggery

We've oftentimes shown exceptional and unusually fine lines of Men's Haberdashery, but we're confident that our display this spring eclipses all our previous efforts.

MANY OF OUR STYLES ARE EXCLUSIVE

It matters not what you may want in the way of Shirts, Ties, Collars, Gloves, Underwear, Hosiery, Hats or Caps, we can fill your mind's eye and please your purse.

QUITE A ROMANCE.

ENGLISH GIRL FINDS FIANCE IN KINGSTON.

Whig, Through an accident to E. Hill, a young Englishman, whereby he broke his arm while playing football in the cricket field about two weeks ago, a pretty romance, then in the bud, was nipped as about to burst into bloom. The young man had come to Canada, and prospered. Employed in the Locomotive Works, he proved such an efficient worker that had the accident not occurred, he would have been promoted to higher work on a larger machine. His prosperity had caused him to send for his love of his younger days, in his native town, Manchester, England. She crossed the wide Atlantic and travelled to the good old limestone city, full of expectancy to enter her future home with her husband.

On arrival here, a week ago, it was to find her husband-to-be on a far from firm financial basis, and unable to work. The marriage had to be postponed, and the bride-to-be is now working in the cotton mill, popular and a general favorite with all her girl associates. The culmination of this happy little love affair will be quietly watched.

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

"I suffered for five years with kidney and liver trouble, which caused severe pains across the back and a blinding headache. I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga Tenn. To be had at Templeton rug Store.

The Ontario Deaf Mute Association.

"CANED" MR. MATHISON AND "WATCHED" MR. NURSE ON SATURDAY NIGHT.

The Convention of the Ontario Deaf-Mute Association, now in session at the Institution, promises to be the largest and perhaps the most interesting in its history. On Saturday evening the gaily decorated dining-room was almost filled when those who had already arrived sat down to supper. After supper, for a short time, the members were busy, indeed, hunting up old friends, and the warm hand-clasp and kind enquiries manifest the interest they hold for each other, and the pleasure they derive from these biennial opportunities for meeting again.

At 8.15 o'clock all gathered in the assembly room, when the Convention was formally opened with prayer by Mr. Nasmith, of Toronto, who, though one of Toronto's busy men, takes such an interest in the deaf that he never fails to be present on these occasions, and, indeed, no convention would seem to be complete without his presence.

Superintendent Mathison, the honorary president of the Association, in a short speech, redolent with the humor for which he is noted on these occasions, welcomed the members of the Association to the Institution, and expressed the hope that through their deliberations they might accomplish much that would be helpful to themselves, so that when they again separated they might feel that inspiration which has always followed similar meetings, and that they might feel that it was good to have been here.

After the Superintendent's welcome, the President of the Association requested Mr. Mathison to remain on the platform, when Mr. McIntosh read an address recounting the great interest he, Mr. Mathison, had taken in the deaf during the past 27 years, not only while they were students at the Institution, but after their school days had passed. These many kindnesses they had appreciated, and wishing to show the esteem in which he was held by the deaf who had been the recipients of his kindness, called upon Miss Johnston, the winner of the Gold Medal this year, to present Mr. Mathison with a beautiful gold-headed cane bearing the inscription:

"Presented to R. Mathison by the members of the Ontario Deaf-Mute Association — Belleville, June 16th, 1906."

The use of the orthodox expression for such an occasion — "The recipient was taken completely by surprise" — is not at all out of place here, for those who know the ability of the deaf to "keep mum" say that not one hint of their intention could have reached the Superintendent. His surprise was manifest to all, and in his remarks made in acknowledgment of the pleasure the incident gave him, one could easily see, that his chief gratification was that his life-work for the advancement of the deaf, bore fruit in the lives and hearts of those in whose interest he had labored. He thanked them most heartily for their kind remembrance, bearing tribute at the same time to the able assistance he had had from the teachers and officers of the Institution, without which, he confessed, he could have done little or nothing.

Mr. Nurse was then requested to leave the Secretary's desk and to take a place on the platform. This, however, he did reluctantly, as between himself and the President of the convention there has long been a friendly rivalry for the honor of being the one to work off the hugest joke on the other. Mr. Slater got it this time, however. He asked Mr. Reeves to read an address to Mr. Nurse, who has been secretary of the Association for many years. The address recounted the valuable services he had rendered the Association for such a length of time, during which he had spared nothing that was at his disposal to further the interests of the Association or of those connected with it. The President then called forward Miss Myrtle Mason, the young daughter of one of the oldest members of the Association, who presented Mr. Nurse with a case containing a beautiful gold watch, with two gold pieces of money filling the space on either side of the stem. Mr. Nurse had, as a member of the Association, known of the intended presentation to Mr. Mathison, and was, therefore, all the more surprised that he had not been able in some way to catch a hint of what was coming to himself. He thanked the donors and expressed the pleasure that he had himself received from the members of the Association while a co-laborer with them; and also his determination to continue to do all that he could to advance the efficiency of the Association.

The address of the President, which followed, expressed the delight he had at seeing such a great number of old friends attending the convention at its opening session. He felt, too, that it was a great pleasure to themselves to meet so many friends in the place where they had spent their happy school days. Since the last meeting of the Association changes which affected the deaf had come about. The charge of the Institution had been transferred from the Department of the Provincial Secretary, which as they knew, had under its care the direction of the affairs of prisons, asylums, etc., to the Department of the Minister of Education. This change the deaf welcomed gladly, for their alma mater now took its true place among the educational institutions of the province. Again, the hearing public were beginning to acknowledge that the education which the deaf received was such as fitted them to take their place side-by-side with their hearing brethren in the battle of life, and the Post Office Department had opened its doors to those of the deaf who were able to pass the required civil service examination. Several of the members present had been able to take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded by this department of the Dominion Government. The changes that had been made found the deaf ever ready and fitted by their education, to take advantage of them and he hoped that Mr. Mathison and his able assistants would long live and occupy their present positions, that the good work that was being done might be continued into the far future.

The President in his address, recounted, too, the changes that had taken place in the scope of the work of the Association. It had been greatly extended since its inception 20 years ago, and now dealt with all questions that were of interest to the deaf of the province. This was no doubt a great incentive to attend these conventions and he was glad indeed to see so many who manifested by their presence here the interest they took in what was being done. He hoped that this convention of the members of the association might be both pleasant and profitable, and that when they became again scattered over the province they might be able to carry into their life's work that which they had gained from the experiences of others, and that all should be able to carry away with them pleasant recollections of this 10th biennial gathering.

After the various committees had been struck, the convention adjourned to meet on Sabbath morning.

SABBATH SERVICES.

In the morning there was an early prayer meeting of Christian workers, in which deep interest was manifested by those present. During the day there were three services—morning, afternoon and evening, at which addresses were given by Mr. Elliott, Mr. Nurse, Mr. Reeves and Mr. Coleman. The hymns were led by Miss E. Elliott, Mrs. Waggoner, Miss Johnston, Miss Gray, Miss Waters, Mrs. Moore and Mr. Nurse. The sign language of the deaf is admirably adapted to giving expression to the spirit of the hymns rendered, but especial mention should be made of the rendition of "Safe in the arms of Jesus," by Mrs. Waggoner and Mr. Nurse. The following led in prayer at the services during the day; Mr. Nurse, Mr. Fraser, Mr. Roberts, Mr. Grant and Mr. Elliott, while the Scripture lessons were read by Mr. Fraser.

These services were entered into most heartily by all, and will, no doubt, prove a blessing to many. While those who live in centres of populated districts have their regular Sabbath services, there are many who rarely see a religious service conducted in the sign language, and it was easily seen at these Sabbath services how enjoyable they were to them, by the intense interest manifested.

There are now over 200 members of the Association present.

Yesterday morning the R. C. members of the convention attended Mass at St. Michael's, where they were given a most cordial welcome by Rev. Fr. Twomey and the congregation. Although it was a busy day for the pastor, he having just held First Communion for the children of the parish whom he addressed at length and invested with the Scapular, he would not allow these good deaf-mutes to go without a word of greeting and encouragement. Addressing himself specially to the silent ones, he praised them for being at church which showed their faith. No doubt they were all glad to come back to their alma mater where they had been taught to be good children and good citizens. They, too, would be pleased to see their old teacher and friend, Prof. Denys, who had instructed them in their religion. Whilst he met some of them for the first time, he did not consider himself a stranger, for, as a priest he had their welfare at heart and entreated them wherever they went to always be faithful to the lessons they had received. Though silent were their lips, they with confidence, could address their petitions to the Heavenly Father who saw their hearts and would surely hear them. These words, so graciously and affectionately spoken, seemed deeply to impress all present.

Disorderly Boys.

At about 9 o'clock last evening the police were called to the wharf, it being reported that a number of boys were about the docks and acting in a very disorderly manner. As was expected, all was quiet upon the officer's arrival. The names of some of the boys were secured and in all probability they will be called upon to answer to their conduct before the Magistrate.

Choked to Death by Piece of Meat.

Kingston, Ont., June 17.—Through a piece of meat sticking in his throat, John Kane, a sailor, choked while eating supper in Walker's restaurant, Princess street, last evening. Efforts were made to dislodge the meat but these failed. A doctor was summoned, but before he arrived the sailor was dead.

Deceased lived in Montreal, during the winter, and was engaged as a wheelsman around these parts in the summer. He was about 60 years of age and well known in marine circles.

"Tommies" Left for Camp This Morning.

GALLANT FORTY-NINTH WILL LEARN THEIR FACINGS AT COBOURG DURING THE NEXT TWELVE DAYS.

The Forty-Ninth Regiment, which is composed of eight companies from various parts of Hastings County, left this morning for Cobourg, where they will be in camp for the next twelve days.

The camp gives promise of being not only larger than in former years, but of also being a pleasant outing for the boys.

Some companies of the 49th met in the city this morning, and at 11.30 boarded the special train for Cobourg.

The Forty-Ninth will be up to full strength, and had two bands when they left the city this morning, namely, a brass and bugle band. In the former band will be a number of the members of the I.O.O.F. band of this city; also a number of members of the Madoc and Trenton bands.

Following are the officers and various companies composing the Forty-Ninth Regiment;

ALLEGED FRAUD.

Wesley Deshane was charged that he did, during the month of March and April, by means of false and fraudulent representation, obtain from James Shappee the sum of $425. As some of the parties were not prepared for trial the case was adjourned until Friday.

ALLEGED ASSAULT.

Awilda Babcock charged Mrs. Mountenoy with assaulting her. The evidence was very conflicting in the case, which was in progress this afternoon. Mr. Carnew for the plaintiff, and Mr. O'Flynn for the defendant.

Aftermath of the Lloyd Murder Trial

Some of the witnesses at the Lloyd murder trial, held at the last Assizes in this city, were in town on Saturday. Discussing the case, one of them said it was freely reported in the district where old Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd used to live, that Adam Lloyd had become mentally deranged since the trial. He is living with his son, in or near Detroit, and is, it is said, so unbalanced mentally that it is unsafe to leave him alone.

BURNS TO WATER'S EDGE

Gasoline Launch Lady Grey Blows Up in Toronto.

Owner Hurled From Wheel to Stern, and With Another Man Has An Exciting Few Minutes, But Escape With Their Lives—Contents of Oil Tank Blazed Fiercely Spread Over the Water.

Toronto, June 18.—The explosion of a ten-gallon tank of gasoline caused the burning of the new $1,000 launch, Lady Grey, owned by Henry Larkin, contractor and builder, of Sunnyside, in the bay Saturday night. No lives were lost.

The incident occurred about 8.30, just as the Lady Grey was opposite the Canoe Club and heading for Hanlan's.

Mr. Larkin was forward at the wheel. He heard a slight explosion at the engine and turned to look that way, when he received a violent shock from behind, which threw him over the engine and landed him all in a heap at the stern. The boat was then completely enveloped in flames.

Engineer Angus Todd called out "Jump!" and ducked into the water. Mr. Larkin didn't jump, but rushed to the bow, grabbed the heaving buoy and started back through the flames to the stern. He was going to use the heaving buoy as a life-preserver, but the big "war canoe" came up opportunely and he stepped in.

Todd in the meantime caught the rear of a small canoe and was landed at the dock.

The force of the explosion blew her stern off and other wise wrecked her before the flames completed her destruction. Mr. Larkin was rescued by another canoe.

The Crew Is Safe.

Victoria, B. C., June 18.—The arrival at Quillayute of Capt. Maloney of the burned gasoline schooner Argus, with Mrs. Maloney, and all of the crew, minimizes the importance of the latest marine disaster of the northwest Pacific. The destruction of the vessel occurred through an explosion of gasoline.

Sacrifices Life to Duty.

Glace Bay, June 18.—John Colbert, of Dominion Mine No. 2, met with a fatal accident Saturday afternoon. He tended Sydney and Glace Bay crossing where electric and banking station roads cross at right angles. He had placed the frogs for an electric car to pass when he noticed three runaway cars coming down the grade. To avoid a smashup he removed the frogs, but was run over before he could get away. Both legs were terribly mangled. He died yesterday.

Small Boy Drowns.

Smith's Falls, June 18.—A drowning occurred Saturday afternoon. Several small boys went in swimming in the cut near McCreary's locks, when one of them, the 11-year-old son of James Bigford, got out of his depth, and was drowned.

Woman and Man Drown.

Montreal, June 18.—Emile Picotte and Mrs. Yvonne Gagnon were drowned in the St. Lawrence opposite Dominion Park yesterday afternoon by the upsetting of a rowboat, in which, at the time, were Picotte, Mrs. Gagnon and a man named Mooney. As soon as the boat upset the woman disappeared, but the two men held on to the boat, and a party put out to their assistance. Picotte, however, was overcome by exhaustion, and sank before he could be rescued.

Babe Drowns in Cistern.

Stratford, June 18.—The two-year-old son of John Kergus of Listowel fell into a cistern and was drowned.

Sailor Chokes to Death.

Kingston, June 18.—Saturday evening at 7 o'clock John Kane choked to death while swallowing a piece of beefsteak in Walker's restaurant. The piece was so firmly in the gullet that all efforts to get it up or down were unavailing, and the man died in a few minutes. The deceased was 70 years of age, and was an old sailor.

37 Firemen Overcome.

St. Paul, Minn., June 18.—The six-storey Ryan annex building was gutted by fire yesterday. The damage to the building and stocks of the occupants is $450,000. Several firemen were cut by flying glass, and thirty-seven were overcome by heat and smoke. All of them will recover, with the possible exception of Lieut. Edwards.

Ground Alive With Cement.

Easton, Pa., June 18.—Lloyd Butz, 18 years of age, fell into a mill at the plant of the Alpha Cement Co., at Martin's Creek, Saturday afternoon, and was ground to pieces alive.

Big Mine Afire.

Elpaso, Texas, June 18.—Word has been received from Santa Eulalie, a mining camp in Chihuahua, Mexico, 300 miles from here, that Buelo Tierra mine is afire, and that seven men are known to have been asphyxiated.

WASHOUTS CAUSE WRECKS.

Flooded Tracks in New York State Stall Trains.

Ballston, N. Y., June 18.—Relief trains which were sent to the assistance of a Boston & Maine Railroad passenger train, wrecked near Schuylerville Saturday, are stalled several miles from the scene of the wreck. There are several washouts on the line.

The passenger train, which was due to reach Saratoga at 6.40 a. m. Saturday was ditched in a washout. Martin Welch, the fireman, jumped when the engine left the rails and was badly hurt.

None of the passengers were injured.

20th Century Flyer Wrecked.

Buffalo, June 18—The Twentieth Century Flyer on the Lake Shore Railway, was wrecked near West Seneca, two miles west of here, yesterday. The wreck was a bad one, and it is considered miraculous that no one was killed. One day coach and five sleepers were badly smashed. There were 67 passengers on the train. All of them were badly shaken up and a few slightly bruised.

Big Steamers Collide.

Detroit, June 18.—The 318-foot steamer Manchester of Milwaukee is reported to have been damaged on Lake Huron, in a collision with the steamer Steel King. The collision occurred off Harbor Beach in a fog. The Manchester was beached at Harbor Beach, and it is thought she will be able to proceed under temporary repairs when she has been lightened of enough cargo to raise her 5 feet.

Ocean Liner Aground.

Whitehall, Mich., June 18.—The steamer Georgie of the Goodrich Line, ran aground during a fog Saturday, on the shore of White Lake, while en route from Chicago to Whitehall. The passengers are in no danger, but it may be difficult to release the vessel.

Jap Transport Strikes Mine.

Tokio, June 18.—The Japanese transport Toyotomi struck a mine Thursday evening when 24 miles off Joshin, Corea, and sank immediately. Fifty of the crew are missing.

Another Death.

Liverpool, Eng., June 18.—There was another death Saturday afternoon as the result of the explosion on June 14 on board the steamer Haverford, bringing the total deaths to eleven. Several others of those injured are in a serious condition.

SHIP BLOWN OUT TO SEA.

Hurricane Does Much Damage Off the Newfoundland Coast.

St. John's, Nfld., June 18.—A furious hurricane has been raging along the Newfoundland coast during the past 48 hours, causing serious damage to shipping. Two vessels, with fourteen men on board, have blown out to sea. Tugs have been sent in quest of them. Several vessels have been driven ashore. An enormous amount of fishing gear has been destroyed.

It is feared the gale has wrought havoc among the trawling fleet off the Grand Banks.

CASTRO GOES BACK.

Will Resume the Presidency of Venezuela on July 5.

Washington, June 18—President Castro will resume the presidency of Venezuela July 5.

The State Department Saturday received a despatch by way of Willemstad announcing that on June 11 President Castro declared this intention to Vice-President Gomez and a delegation that visited him at La Victoria and requested him to resume the Presidency.

INSURANCE CONCERNS WARNED.

Companies Must Pay Up or Move Away From California.

San Francisco, June 18.—In the name of the City of San Francisco and the State of California, a demand has been made on 61 insurance companies that are accused of endeavoring to dodge their obligations for full settlement with the people of San Francisco who lost property by fire in April.

A telegram, signed by Mayor Schmitz and Governor Pardee, has been sent to the home offices of the 61 companies that voted in Oakland to cut all payments of losses 25 per cent. The telegram is a warning to the concerns addressed that they must deal fairly and honestly with the San Francisco public, or be driven from California. Before the message was sent, it was submitted to Insurance Commissioner Wolfe, who gave it his approval.

Canadian Wins Honors.

Oxford, June 18.—The Oxford University Gazette, among the list of those receiving degrees, records that at the last Hebdomadal councils of the university the degree of B. A. was conferred upon Irving Earle Robertson of Brasenose College and of Toronto, Canada (in absence). The recipient of the degree is the youngest son of J. Ross Robertson of Toronto.

Talked All Day.

Washington, D. C., June 18.—The Senate spent the entire day Saturday debating the bill to incorporate a ship canal connecting Lake Erie with the Ohio River and again adjourned without action on it.

Jumps in Front of Car.

Chicago, June 18.—In full view of crowds of men and women, Harvey H. Henderson, a civil engineer, committed suicide at 2.15 o'clock Saturday afternoon under most dramatic circumstances. He plunged headlong from the platform of the elevated station at Dearborn and Van Buren streets, and was crushed to death under the wheels of a south side train.

Wellman Off For the Pole.

Antwerp, June 18.—The Walter Wellman Arctic expedition sailed Saturday on the steamship Frigga for Arendal, Norway, taking with it the airship in which the attempt to reach the North Pole is to be made. The total number of men in the expedition is thirty-five, but only five, including Wellman, will make the balloon trip.

Girl Drowns Herself

Peterboro, June 18.—Alice Corbman, daughter of Stephen H. Corbman, Aylmer street, left her home yesterday morning about 7 o'clock, and going to the Otonabee River, a short distance away, deliberately threw herself in. The body was recovered a few hours later. She was 22 years of age, and melancholy.

Abruzzi Climbing Ruwenzori.

Milan, June 18.—A telegram from Uganda, Central Africa, says that the Duke of Abruzzi and his expedition have begun to climb the Ruwenzori Range. He had reached, the despatch says, a height of 14,365 feet on June 8. He rested there before attempting the highest peak.

Montreal Athlete Suicides.

Montreal, June 18.—A sensational tragedy occurred yesterday, when Charles S. McFeat, an employe of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and a young man well-known in athletic circles, blew his brains out with a revolver at 3 Prospect avenue, Westmount.

The Penalty.

Minneapolis, June 18.—Dr. Jacob F. Force, former president of the Northwestern National Life Insurance Co., of this city, was Saturday sentenced to serve three and a half years in state prison. The charge was grand larceny.

BIALISTOK NOW QUIET

Christians Calmed by the Governor and the Clergy.

Denied the Evil Rumors That the Disorders Were Caused by the Wanton Throwing of Bombs by Jewish Revolutionists—The General Situation Grows Grim and the Country is Ripe For Revolution.

St. Petersburg, June 18.—The pitiable affair at Bialistok apparently has burned itself out. No further bloodshed was reported yesterday, and no more is expected, even by the Radicals, who are satisfied that the authorities are now in control and will do everything possible to prevent a renewal of the excesses. This confidence is based on the action of the Governor of Grodno, who is hated and distructed by the bureaucrats, and who, after investigating the situation at Bialistok, took the unprecedented step, in order to stop the spread of the massacres, of telegraphing the authorities of all towns within the Jewish pale, denying the alleged official reports that the disorders were due to the wanton throwing of bombs at a Christian procession by Jewish revolutionists.

This measure, aided by the Catholic clergy, who yesterday throughout Russian Poland, addressed their congregations, imploring them not to believe reports spread broadcast for the purpose of stirring up bloody excesses, was efficacious in calming the agitated spirits among the Christian population. The Catholics of Warsaw canceled a great religious procession which was to have been held yesterday in order to avoid the chance of a conflict.

Grows Grim.

The general situation, however, is hourly growing more disquieting, and the country seems to be on the verge of another gigantic upheaval. In St. Petersburg and Moscow, the populace is greatly excited, and nothing is talked of except a general political strike, which would bring the Government to its knees. The proletarian leaders, who have been preparing for months for a blow, believe the moment has come to strike; that the agrarian troubles now are sufficiently extended, and that the disorders in the army are rife. The Government has openly refused to accede to the demands of Parliament, and a rupture is imminent there.

Victims Number Hundreds.

London, June 18.—The Times St. Petersburg correspondent cables this morning: It is difficult to estimate the number of victims. The total is placed at several hundred, and according to one account six hundred Jews were killed or wounded. Whole families were murdered and their bodies thrown out of the windows. The hospitals soon were overcrowded and the wounded had to be sent to neighboring towns. Six thousand Jews are said to have taken refuge in the forests. Continuous butchery lasted for eight hours, and neither soldiers nor police interfered. Five infantry regiments, one of dragoons, with artillery, and a strong force of mounted police had been concentrated in the town. The troops appear to have done nothing the first day except patrol the streets, firing at random at fugitives or into houses. The second day, when many streets were in flames, they seem to have done nothing to help the fire brigade, which abstained under the pretext that the houses contained explosives.

Attack Military.

Warsaw, June 18.—A band of 30 revolutionists Saturday attacked a branch postoffice which was guarded by a small detachment of military, killing several of the soldiers and wounding two of them. One of the wounded soldiers succeeded in escaping and summoned help. After a further fight the band was driven off, but seven of its members were captured.

A second sergeant of police was killed in the streets here Saturday, and a policeman and a soldier were wounded.

Fear Peasant Uprising.

Odessa, June 18.—Instructions have been issued to the effect that all the infantry regiments and army reserve men in the southern and southwestern provinces are to be temporarily placed on a "home war footing," in view of the possibility of the peasants rising against the nobles. The Cossacks are to be mobilized into flying brigades.

An Organized Slaughter.

London, June 18.—The Daily Telegraph this morning prints a telegram received in London from Helsingfors. It is dated Sunday afternoon and is signed by M. Vinaver and four other Jewish members of the Russian Parliament—Mm. Brando, Schosberg, Katzenelson and Lewin. The telegram say:

"The outbreak at Bialistok clearly was the beginning of an organized massacre, similar to the bloody October days. Only energetic intervention can prevent a terrible catastrophe. Peril is imminent. Appeal to all influences to help us."

Czar to Tempt Fate.

St. Petersburg, June 18.—The Associated Press is reliably informed that Emperor Nicholas has definitely decided to declare a recess of Parliament June 28, and that his majesty and the royal family will immediately thereafter leave on a cruise of the Finnish fiords on board the imperial yacht Standard, which is being fitted out for that purpose.

Such a decision seems to tempt fate, for if it is executed it will be almost certain to be the signal for an immediate and bloody struggle.

The group of toil as an outcome of its open declaration against a recess passed a resolution declaring that neither now nor in the near future can Parliament be recessed, that at no time will the members leave their posts, and that so long as the arbitrariness and outrages of the Government continue and the sufferings of the peasantry and workmen reign, Parliament must continue to work until it has achieved "A land of freedom" or exhausted all means to that end.

100 Killed or Hurt.

Vladivostock, June 18.—A passenger train was derailed at Progranitschnaia station on the Chinese Eastern Railroad yesterday, and 100 persons are road yesterday, and 100 persons were killed or injured.

STROUDS

Jockey's Parents Burned.

Cincinnati, Ohio, June 19.—Samuel Moreland and his wife, parents of Jockey Moreland, were probably fatally burned by gasoline at their home Sunday, while attempting to reach a roll of money hidden near the stove, which had exploded. The money was what remained of $500 sent them by their son to pay off a mortgage on their home. Jockey Moreland has been riding with great success on the racetracks around Toronto.

Battleships In Collision.

London, June 19.—The British battleship Ramillies was assisted back to Sheerness yesterday, having been in collision in the channel with the battleship Resolution. The latter was not damaged, but the former must be docked for necessary repairs, principally to her propellers. So far as known, the Ramillies is the only big ship crippled by collision during the week's manoeuvres.

Canal Bill Passes.

Washington, June 19.—After another day devoted largely to the Lake Erie & Ohio River Canal bill the Senate yesterday passed that measure with only eleven votes in the negative.

Imperial Service Medal.

Cornwall, June 19.—John Black of Iroquois has been presented with an Imperial service medal as a reward for 27 years' faithful service on the Iroquois lock.

Lieut.-Col. J. H. Beattie Dead.

Windsor, June 19.—Lieut.-Col. Joseph H. Beattie, aged 75 years, is dead of blood-poisoning. Col. Beattie was one of the pioneer residents of the city and was three times its mayor. His illness was due to a wound in the foot caused by a shoe nail.

Church Tower Falls.

Winnipeg, Man., June 19.—Owing to heavy rains which loosened foundation stones, the tower in New Broadway street Methodist Church collapsed yesterday morning. The church is nearing completion. Loss will be about $10,000.

Vote For Mutualization.

New York, June 19.—Stockholders of the Equitable Life Assurance Society yesterday, by a vote of 667 to 80, adopted the formal resolutions authorizing the amended charter, which provides for the mutualization of the society.

Damaged In Collision.

Brutality Most Hideous Marked Attack on Jews.

Bourse Gazette Correspondent Gives Vivid Description of the Awful Facts of the Bialistok Massacre—Hospitals are Filled With the Dead and Wounded—Bodies of the Slain Are Fearfully Mutilated.

St. Petersburg, June 19.—The embargo on news from Bialistok was lifted yesterday, and the Associated Press staff correspondent was for the first time allowed to telegraph directly from the sacked city a picture of the scene of ruin and desolation left in the wake of the mob. According to bulletins order was restored and maintained throughout the day.

The Awful Facts.

Horrible details have been sent out by the correspondents of The Bourse Gazette, who arrived at Bialistok in company with Deputy Stchepkin on Saturday. The correspondent says he was utterly unnerved by the sights he witnessed at the hospital.

"Merely saying that the corpses were mutilated," he writes, "fails to describe the awful facts. The faces of the dead have lost all human semblance, and the corpses simply are crushed masses of flesh and bone soaking in blood. It is impossible to conceive of such bestiality. The corpse of Teacher Apstein lay on the grass with the hands tied. In the face and eyes had been hammered three-inch nails.

"Rioters entered his house and, after bestial outrages, killed him thus and then murdered the rest of his family of seven. When the corpse arrived at the hospital it was also marked with bayonet thrusts.

"Beside the body of Apstein lay the corpse of a child of ten years, whose leg had been chopped off with an axe. Here also were the dead from the Schlachter home, where, according to witnesses, soldiers came and plundered the house and killed the wife, son and a neighbor's daughter and seriously wounded Schlachter and his two daughters.

Separated and Shot.

"I am told that soldiers entered the apartments of Lapidus Bros., which were crowded with persons who had fled from the streets for safety, and ordered the Christians to separate themselves from the Jews. A Christian student named Dikar protested and was killed on the spot. Then all of the Jews were shot.

"Some of the corpses were marked with fire. These had been brought from a burned tannery and showed bullet and bayonet marks. In one corner of the yard was a demented Jewess trying to cover the body of her husband, but her efforts were in vain as the pulpy flesh simply oozed from beneath its inadequate covering.

"From the wounded in the hospital, the correspondent heard many pitiable stories, all of the same general tenor. Here is the account of a badly-wounded merchant named Nevyazhiky:

"'I live in the suburbs. Learning of the program I tried to reach the town through the fields, but was intercepted by roughs. My brother was killed, my arm and leg were broken, my skull was fractured and I was stabbed twice in the side. I fainted from loss of blood and revived to find a soldier standing over me, who asked: "What, are you still alive, shall I bayonet you?" I begged him to spare my life. The roughs came again but spared me, saying: "He will die; let him suffer longer."'"

Loot and Murder.

The correspondent holds that the program undoubtedly was provoked, and attributes the responsibility to Police Lieut. Shermatieff, and say the distinctive characteristic of the outbreak, in which it differs from the excesses at Odessa, Kishinev, Gomel and Kiev, aside from bestiality, is the comparatively small amount of actual robbery committed. The participants seemingly were inspired by motives of murder and destruction. The correspondent declares that not only the soldiers, but their officers, also participated.

In the Wrecked City.

Bialistok, June 19.—The correspondent of the Associated Press yesterday found the story of the riot here written in large letters in the aspect of the streets, which were one continuous picture of arson and pillage.

The windows and doors of the Jewish houses were wide open, giving a view of their wrecked interiors, or were boarded up with the rude wooden shutters. Everywhere could be seen weeping women hunting for traces of killed or wounded relatives. The principal stores either were devastated wrecks or mere mounds of ashes, among which the wretched proprietors, last week rich, but now reduced to poverty, were wandering about weakly, endeavoring to ascertain the extent of their misfortunes.

In the Hospitals.

The scene at the Jewish Hospital, where the majority of the Jewish dead and most severely wounded were taken, was indescribably sickening. The grass plot outside the hospital was covered with mutilated and mangled corpses, arranged in two long rows. The wooden walk from the gate to the door, over which the bodies were carried, was stained with blood, and cobblestone pavement and roadway was spattered with gore.

The dead and wounded are still arriving. Many of them had been lying untouched in the streets for two or three days. The bodies of some of the severely wounded were frightfully bruised, broken and mangled.

The hospital attendants asserted that about 100 in all had been brought in and that many more remained outside Bialistok, where it was unsafe for Red Cross detachments to venture.

At the district hospital there were six dead persons, and eight or ten wounded. These were all Christians. These bodies were not mangled as were those of the Jews, whose hands, arms and legs were sometimes chopped off from mere wantonness.

Entertained by the Salters.

London, June 19.—(C. A. P.)—Lord Strathcona and the agents-general of other colonies were entertained at dinner last night by the Salters Co.

Poisoned by Canned Fish.

Hamilton, June 19.—A family named Nelson, 170 Macaulay street, were poisoned by eating canned fish last evening. The husband, Daniel Nelson, worked at the smelting works, and had to be taken home in an ambulance. At a late hour his condition was so alarming that he was hurried to the city hospital. The doctors have little hope of his recovery.

Two Girls Lost.

Moosejaw, June 19.—On May 7 two little daughters of E. Hoffman, Wood Mountain, went to bring home some horses. They have never been heard of since. Search parties so far have failed.

A Veteran of '37.

Brockville, June 19.—A veteran of the battle of the windmill, named R. E. Muttall, almost a life-long farmer of Leeds County, has passed away at the age of 92 years. Muttall leaves a large family.

A Poor Boy's Romance.

The Hamilton Spectator gives the following readable acount of how a little English immigrant boy advanced himself from the shelter of a Boys' Home to the presidency of a great theological university. It truly shows that, in the words of the old proverb, "there is no royal road to learning."

"About twenty-eight years ago there landed in Hamilton a family of immigrants from England, poor in pocket, but rich in the number of children. The father and mother lived but a short time after arriving in Hamilton, and the children were thrown upon the charity of the world to care for them, as none were old enough to help the younger members of the family. Through the providence of an All-wise Being, Albert Bigelow, who was a dealer in crockery, china and glassware, in the block between James and Hughson street, on the south side of King street, had provided in his will that $21,000 of his estate should be devoted to the building of the Boys' Home in this city. The two younger boys of the English emigrants were placed in this home, and the older children were provided with good homes, where they were clothed and educated, giving as a return such labor as they were able to perform. But it is to one of the younger boys this article refers to—Francis George Barnes. For two or three years the little English lad enjoyed the care and protection of the home and received the rudiments of an education. There, as is the custom, he was placed with a good family away from Hamilton—for it is not the policy of the managers to locate the children in Hamilton—where he remained till his term of apprenticeship ended. Young Barnes was ambitious to be educated, and he made good use of every hour when not engaged at work for the man with whom he lived. He drifted out to the Western States, where he worked during the summer months for money to keep him during the winter, when he attended school. With such a spirit and energy the outcome was certain, that the child of the English emigrants, whose first years were spent in the Boys' Home at Hamilton, would make his way into the world. Young Barnes entered a western college, from which he graduated with the honors of his class, and then entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was called to a professorship in one of the western Methodist colleges, and was in time elevated to the presidency.

"A year ago he was called to the presidency of the Wesleyan university at Bloomington, Illinois, and yesterday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, George Francis Barnes, B.A., D. D., was duly inaugurated and installed in the high office of president of one of the best Methodist universities in the state of Illinois. He is a man of high educational ability, and by eminent scholarship has earned the honorary degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Doctor of Divinity. The little English orphan and homeless boy of twenty-eight years ago, to-day stands as the president of a university from whose halls have graduated men eminent as scholars, in the learned professions, and as statesmen. He has not forgotten the home which gave him shelter in his childhood, for he keeps in touch with Mrs. Mary Shaw, the matron of the home, by frequent correspondence. This week she received from Bloomington, Illinois, an invitation to attend the commencement exercises of Wesleyan university and the installation yesterday afternoon of President George Francis Barnes, B.A., D.D. A grateful tribute is due to the memory of Albert Bigelow, the founder of the Boys' Home."

Considerable comment is heard, these days, on the state of affairs alleged to be existing at the wharf some of these evenings when boats come in or go out. It is said that the language and conduct of some young hoodlums who live in that vicinity is disgraceful in the extreme, and that respectable ladies and children, who are waiting for boats, have to suffer in silence. Something should be done to mitigate the nuisance. If the police cannot deal with it some other plan should be adopted to stop it. Not only is it offensive to respectable people of this city who have to patronize the wharf, but it gives the city a bad name among the travelling public who use the boats. It should be stopped, and stopped hard.

ADVERTISING.

One of the Many Marvels of This Progressive Age.

Among the many marvels of this marvelous age there is none more striking and none more characteristic than the art of advertising as developed in modern times. We talk much about the wonders of the telephone and the phonograph, about the astonishing expansion of railroads and telegraphy, but here we have an industry as remarkable for its extension and as wide and varied in its applications as anything of man's device in any era of the world's history. When there is brought into consideration the vast amount of money expended in advertising in our day, the novel and ingenius methods employed and the expert skill and artistic talent engaged in the business, one may begin to realize what a wide field has been opened here for some of the highest and most useful forms of human endeavor.

With all its abuses—and they are not a few—it remains true that advertising is one of the greatest of popular educators and one of the chief promoters of human happiness and prosperity, and there are yet many ways in which it may be extended to the still greater benefit of the world. No good reason exists why the churches, the Sunday schools, the missionary societies and other agencies of good should not advertise far more than they do and thus add to the membership and their power in the community. To set their advantages, aims and benefits before the public in a proper way and form would involve no loss of dignity or prestige, while it would almost certainly widen their influence.

The time must come, too, when the absurd code which prohibits physicians and other professional classes from advertising themselves must be abolished. There is nothing but a sentiment to prevent it and a very weak sentiment at that. It should be no more infra dig for a physician or a lawyer to seek patients or clients through the medium of print than it is for teachers, insurance men, real estate dealers or the members of any other honorable trade or calling.

British Army Red Tape.

A letter of instruction said to have been sent to a British army officer, who reported that Private Blank had lost his greatcoat, runs as follows: "The calculation of the value of a lost greatcoat should be made by deducting the value when worn out from the value when new, as given in article 75, 1865, clothing warrant, dividing the remainder by the number of months the garment should wear, multiplying the quoltant by the number of months the garment has actually been worn and subtracting the sum thus obtained from the total value of the new greatcoat. The balance is the amount that should be charged."

A Sort of No Man's Land.

Australia's least known and least developed section is the northern territory. It is a sort of no man's land. Its capital, Palmerston, contains more Chinese than Caucasians and is the only place in greater Britain where the Mongolian is the master and the white man the servant. The climate is very trying to whites, and the aboriginal blacks are of a fierce and sanguinary disposition. Vast herds of buffalo, the descendants of a few experimentally liberated a century ago, roam over the plains, and the place will some day, it is believed, be a sportsman's paradise.

MONDAY'S DOINGS—THE OFFICERS ELECTED—TWO FINE ADDRESSES.

On Monday morning, after the session was opened with prayer by Mr. Campbell, Mr. Mathison read letters from some of the old graduates of the Institution, in which they regretted their inability to attend the convention, and expressing the hope that all would have an enjoyable and profitable time.

This was succeeded by an address from Mr. Denys, as follows:

THOUGHT AND TOIL.

Friends,—To offer to you, in company with our Principal and others, at least one word of greeting and encouragement in this, the old school, is a pleasure I would fain forfeit. A tree is known by its fruit. A laborer of many years in the culture field of the deaf in this province, to behold the glad harvest gathered here to-day is a joy to which your prosperity and evident contentment add price and value. An eastern potentate once boasted that among the fifteen hundred braves who composed the bodyguard, not one but had killed a lion, could be seen! Mr. Mathison is a trifle less sanguinary in his ambition. To him, that you should, one and all, have been able

To grasp the skirts of happy chance
And breast the blows of circumstance, making barriers serve the purpose of your rising among your fellowmen, is honor enough for the school of which he is head. A cultured woman once was asked if she ever wrote a book. Yes, I am writing two, she replied, on one I have been engaged twelve years and on the other, six years—my two children, they are my life work. We, of this Institution, not only have a larger family than this good lady, but obstacles to overcome from which presumably her own sons were free. However, as we know, it is fight makes victory valuable, and the harder the struggle the more glorious the triumph. History is full of instances where decision alone conquered conditions. Byron, Scott, Parkman, Pope and a host of other famous men were hampered by physical failings. It is almost ludicrous to read of Sydney Smith, who once wrote, "I have gout, asthma and seven other maladies, but am otherwise very well!" The loftiest trees ever spring heavenward among the rocks, and there are few obstacles but will yield to stern determination. In this intense age, therefore, to dream ourselves into prominence is out of the question. He must think and toil and be up and doing who would win. And as gloom is the measure of the light, the manner in which you have grappled with knowledge and the perplexing problem of life is to us who know the difficulties in the way, a cause of unceasing wonderment and admiration. Nogi before 203-Metre Hill would fain compare with our silent little men laying siege to the frowning citadel of idiomatic English! As for you who have wrung victory from fate and cast credit upon yourselves and this Institution, your example will be to others an inspiration and a help. That this convention may open still wider the door of possibility and achievement we fervently pray. Those of our graduates who lately entered the public service have shown themselves the peers of their speaking associates, thus amply justifying their selection. And as there is something even more precious than material advancement, we shall never, I am sure, lose sight of our higher destiny. May, then, Fortune light your path along the years to come and Hope speak success to all whose lives we, in the measure of our strength, have endeavored to soften, improve and brighten!

HONORARY PRESIDENT
R. Mathison, Belleville.

PRESIDENT,
George Reeves, Toronto.

After dinner the convention photo was taken on the lawn in front of the Institution, whence all repaired to the campus, where a well-arranged programme of sports was run off. The entries were keenly contested and showed that on the old ground the old desire for past victories had lost none of its intensity.

The names of the winners are:

100 yards dash, for men—Fred Terrill, Angus R. Quick.

50 yards race, for ladies—Ruby McGregor, Myrtle Mason.

50 yards race, for Dr. Palmer's old boys—C. J. Staley, R. Scissons.

50 yards race, for Dr. Palmer's old girls—Mrs. H. Mason.

Throwing ball, ladies—Mrs. A. S. Waggoner, Miss M. O'Neill.

50 yards race for married men—Wm. A. O'Rourke, Alfred Gray.

Throwing ball; men—Charlie Ford, Angus R. Quick.

Wide jump—E. Crough, 16 ft. 1 in.; F. Terrill, 15 ft. 11 in.

Hop, step and jump—J. E. Crough, 35 ft. 8 in.; Robt. Ensminger, 33 ft. 9 1-2 in.

Putting 25 lb. shot—W. O'Rourke, 19 ft. 4 in.; L. Charbonneau, 19 ft. 2 1-2 in.

Football match—East of Toronto vs. West of Toronto, resulted in a draw, 0 to 0.

Tug of war—Dr. Palmer's old boys vs. R. Mathison's old boys; won by the latter.

Children's race, 25 yards—Clarence Ryan, Wilmot Goulds.

Tug of war—Married ladies vs. single ladies; won by the latter.

THE NEW OFFICERS.

At the evening session the election of officers resulted as follows:

Hon. President—R. Mathison, M.A., Belleville.
President—G. W. Reeves, Toronto.
1st Vice-President—A. S. Waggoner, Hamilton.
2nd Vice-President—H. W. Roberts, Toronto.
Secretary—Wm. Nurse, Belleville.

VICE-PRESIDENT,
A. S. Waggoner, Hamilton.

Treasurer—A. W. Mason, Toronto.
Interpreters—W. J. Campbell, G. F. Stewart.

The evening session was closed by speeches from the newly-elected officers, followed by a recitation by Mrs. Moore and Miss Elliott, entitled "Arouse, Ye, Brave Canadians."

PROF. COLEMAN'S ADDRESS.

We have been requested to publish Mr. Coleman's address, given yesterday and append it herewith:

Subject—"The Spirit of the Age."

At the fall of our first parents, labor was imposed upon them and their seed as a punishment. It was a curse, and the fiat: "By the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," was accepted as a dire final infliction. When Christ came, conditions changed, and what had been a curse, was now a blessing. He honored and dignified labor by Himself becoming a laborer and performing the daily task. In the present age, men, by their acts, reject the teachings and example of Christ, and look upon labor as still the primal curse. Thus, by their leaving God and righteousness out of the question and adopting the principle of the greatest amount of gain from the minimum amount of labor, we discover the underlying cause of all the social and economic disturbances of the age, hence the unrest, the strife, the greed, the hatred and violence. Labor is the foundation of all progress. Hand labor and brain labor are indispensable and inter-dependent. Where a man labors he gives out something that is part of himself and which is his own. What he receives in return for his labor is called wages. Wages must be equivalent to the labor rendered. Here is found the root of untold misery and suffering, first; Inadequate returns for labor performed; and second, unjust demands for more than labor's value. Result, on the one hand, sweat shops, child labor demoralization, loss of virtue, suicide; on the other, strikes, destruction of property, conflict and murder. Are the present conditions to continue? Let us not lose faith in God; the forces for right and justice are working and will overcome the forces of wickedness. It is not in the present age alone that greed, injustice and idolatry have reigned. The prophet Isaiah gives a graphic yet solemn picture of the "combine" and worship of gold and silver. He represents Jehovah as saying; "So the carpenter encourageth the goldsmith, and he that smootheth with the hammer, him that smiteth the anvil, saying of the soldering: It is good; and he fasteneth it with nails, that it should not be moved. But thou, Isreal, art my servant. Fear not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God. I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." What is the lesson here for us? We are an integral part of the community. We cannot escape the responsibilty. Let us faithfully perform the work, howsoever humble, that God has allotted to us. He is not a respector of persons. Let us teach our children the inestimable value of true character—to avoid all shams, pretences and self-conceit. Let us always strive to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our Lord.

2ND VICE-PRESIDENT,
H. W. Roberts, Toronto.

Sunlight For All the Leaves.

The telegraph plant of India has a method all its own for catching the sunshine. Each of its leaves is composed of three leaflets. The larger terminal one erects itself during the day and turns sharply down at night, while the other two smaller leaflets move constantly day and night, describing complete circles with a peculiar jerking motion like the second hand of a watch. Occasionally they rest for a period and then go on again, thus bringing every part of every leaf to the full action of the sunlight.

Mere Trifles.

"Folks all well this morning, Tommy?" asked a friend of the family.

"Yes'm," replied Tommy.

"I am glad to hear it. The last time I heard from them your papa was suffering from rheumatic gout and your mamma had neuralgia."

"Oh, yes, they've still got 'em. I thought you meant was any of us sick."

The Gentleman.

It is possible for every man to assume an elegant manner, but the true gentleman is nature's own nobleman, who never forgets to be polite to every one, and it is as easy to discern the assumed from the innate good breeding as it is to distinguish paste from diamonds.—Dickens.

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness,' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house."

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how. The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

NAVAL DISCIPLINE.

Punishments That Are Meted Out to British Sailors.

For infraction of regulations some curious punishments are meted out in the English navy. It is an everyday occurrence, says London Tit-Bits, to see half a dozen sailors lined up on deck facing the paint-work, holding their hammocks on their shoulders. At first the hammock isn't heavy, but after an hour or so it drags on one's shoulders like lead. Besides, it is not at all entertaining to stare fixedly at a square foot of painted woodwork for an hour or more at a time.

Another punishment that Jack despises is bailing with a spoon. He is placed upon the deck, with two large wooden buckets, one filled with water and the other empty. With a spoon he must dip all the water from one bucket and transfer it to the other, being, meanwhile, the butt of his comrades' jests and jeers.

Sometimes a delinquent is made to walk slowly backward and forward along the deck, nursing in his arms a six inch projectile, weighing a little over 100 pounds. Once a sailor, who laughed at the stammering speech of his commander, was made to stand upon the forebridge, in full view of the ship's crew, and laugh for an hour and a half.

Spitting upon the deck of a man-of-war is strictly prohibited. Cuspidors are placed at intervals along the deck, and these must be used. Upon some ships, when a sailor is caught spitting upon the deck, a small tub is strapped to his chest, and he is made to wear it. Any one who chooses may use this walking receptacle. The offender thus punished rarely repeats his offense.

A POTTERY TOWN.

Chingtechen Is Unlike Any Other Place In China.

For at least 900 years the town Chingtechen, in China, has been devoted to the making of pottery. Everything in Chingtechen belongs to the porcelain and earthenware industry. The houses are for the most part built of fragments either of old kilns or of the fire clay covers in which the porcelain is stacked during firing. The river bank is for miles covered with a deep stratum of broken chinaware and chips of fire clay, and the greater part of the town and several square miles of the surrounding country are built over or composed of a similar deposit.

Chingtechen is unlike anything else in China. The forms, the color, the materials used in the buildings, the atmosphere, are reminiscent of the poorer parts of a civilized industrial center. There are 104 large pottery kilns in the town. The greater part are in use only for a short season in the summer. During this busy season the population of Chingtechen rises to about 400,000 souls, but of this total nearly half are laborers drawn from a wide area of country, who come for the season, live in rows of barracklike sheds and do not bring their families with them.

Visitors to Chingtechen pass along street after street where every shop is occupied by men, women and children, all engaged in the designing, molding, painting or distributing of pottery. The river bank is crowded for three miles by junks either landing material and fuel or shipping the finished product.

Maund and Maunder.

Neither maund, a basket, nor maunder, to whine or grumble, is obsolete. Both are still in common use in South Notts and Leicestershire, at any rate. The former is used only, however, of a particular kind of basket, used for carrying butter to market. The basket is nearly square in shape and has two lids opening from the middle part, where the handle is, and it is called the "butter mawn" (maund). Maunder is usually heard in such sentences as "What are you maundering at?" A Northumbrian will say, "He's a maundering old fool," when the man of whom he is speaking strings words together in a senseless sort of way somewhat akin to maudling.—London Notes and Queries.

The Color of the Ermine.

It is a popular idea that the ermine sheds its brown summer coat and that on the approach of winter a covering of snowy white fur takes its place. This was a natural conclusion, as a possibility of a change in the color of the fur had not occurred to scientists. Experiments, however, have been made, and the brown coated ermine has been placed in a very low temperature. Almost immediately a change was visible in the color of the fur, and without shedding the creature became snowy white.

Smiles.

There are many kinds of smiles, each having a distinct character. Some announce goodness and sweetness; others betray sarcasm, bitterness and pride; some soften the countenance by their languishing tenderness; others brighten by their spiritual vivacity.—Lavater.

Threats.

I consider it a mark of great prudence in a man to abstain from threats or any contemptuous expressions, for neither of these weaken the enemy, but threats make him more cautious, and the other excites his hatred and a desire to revenge himself.—Machiavelli.

Too Sweet.

Mrs. Beach—Here is a letter from Charles. Mr. Beach—Read it. Mrs. Beach (reading)—My dearest, darlingest mother. Mr. Beach—Great heavens! The scoundrel needs more money.

He Was the Limit.

Gladys—Yes, she is going to take him for better or worse. Don't you think she is foolish? Dolly—No; he couldn't be worse!—New York Press.

Great Ideas.

A great idea is usually original to more than one discoverer. Great ideas come when the world needs them. They surround the world's ignorance and press for admission.—A. Phelps.

Those are wise who through error pass on to truth; those are fools who hold fast to error.—Ruckert.

The left side of the face is usually considered by artists to be more beautiful than the right.

TIMELY TOPICS.

WHEN WE GROW OLD,

(British Weekly.)

The tallest lilies droop at eventide,
The sweetest roses fall from off the stem;
The rarest things on earth cannot abide,
And we are passing, too, away like them—
We're growing old!

We had our dreams, those rosy dreams of youth!
They faded, and 'twas well. This after-prime
Hath brought us fuller hopes; and yet, forsooth,
We drop a tear now in his later time,
To think we're old.

We smile at those poor fancies of the past—
A saddened smile, almost akin to pain;
Those high desires, those purposes so vast—
Ah! our poor hearts! They cannot come again!
We're growing old!

Old? Well, the heavens are old; this earth is too;
Old wine is best; maturest fruit most sweet;
Much have we lost; more gained, although 'tis true
We tread life's way with most uncertain feet—
We're growing old!

We move along, and scatter as we pace
Soft graces, tender hopes on every hand;
At last, with gray-streaked hair and hollow face,
We step across the boundary of the land
Where none are old.

Rev. Dr. Torrey, the famous evangelist who is now holding forth at Ottawa, is giving "society" there much to think about. In one of his recent discourses, he severely denounced fashionable gambling, saying; "Everyone who gambles and wins is a thief; everyone who gambles and loses is a fool.' So he who gambles is either a thief or a fool," he asserted when he touched on the commandment against theft. He continued; "I don't know how it is here; but I know how it is in England, and how it is getting to be in the States, how it is becoming the fashion for 'respectable' people to turn their homes into gambling hells; for women to become adepts at bridge and invite young professional men for week-ends and swindle them out of all their money. There has been tragedy after tragedy in what is called 'high society' of unsuspecting girls inveigled into bridge parties supposing they are not playing for money, and when the night is over they are required to settle, and there has been more than one suicide, and more than one case, sadder, if possible, than suicide as the result. I want to say that any woman—I care not how high her social position—who has card parties for money in her home, is running a gambling den just as low in the sight of God and more dangerous than the vilest gambling hell in any city, and she is no better than a common low-down thief,"

TWO ACCIDENTS AT GALT.

Workmen Are Badly Injured—Painful, But Not Fatal.

Galt, June 19.—At the Goldie-McCulloch Co.'s works yesterday morning. Arthur Runnacles was soaping the belt operating an emery stone, when his left arm became caught and was ground about the pulley with terrific force. His injuries consist of two fractures of the left arm, below the elbow. The muscles of the left arm were also terribly torn and mangled.

Another serious accident occurred a few minutes before noon in the James Warnock Co., Limited, works, when George Tarlin was struck by a piece from a grindstone, which burst while revolving at a rapid rate. The broken stone broke his left leg below the knee, besides severely cutting his head and injuring his shoulder. He will probably recover.

Two Accidents.

Welland, June 19.—W. McKenney, a farmer of Crowland, was kicked by a horse yesterday morning and had his arm broken.

George Schram, a plumber, fell about 18 feet from McCoomb's building here yesterday afternoon and received serious injuries.

Commercial Traveler Hurt.

Peterboro, June 19.—Sunday a commercial traveler from Halifax was brought to the city in an unconscious condition. He was found wandering in a swamp near Indian River Station, where it was learned that he jumped from the train at noon Saturday. He is now in the Nicholls Hospital here.

One-Armed Man Drowns.

Thorold, June 19.—A one-armed teamster, named George Step, while engaged in washing a carriage, fell into the old Welland Canal here yesterday afternoon and was drowned. He was about 35 years of age.

Drowned While Canoeing.

Knowlton, Que., June 19.—Two young men, named Fay and Kennedy, were drowned here Sunday while canoeing in Brome Lake. Kennedy's body has been found.

Farmer's Bad Accident.

Aylmer, June 19.—Samuel Pound met with what may prove a fatal accident at the residence of his son, Gus Pound, east of Aylmer. Mr. Pound was coming out of the doorway and did not notice that the steps had been removed, the result being that he fell from the doorstep. His left leg was fractured in three places, his skull was fractured and it is feared he is injured internally.

Killed by Train.

Ottawa, June 19.—A man, whose remains were found on the C.P.R. tracks near Stittsville yesterday morning, is believed to have been George Thompson, aged 27, formerly of Glasgow, Scotland, who immigrated here a short time ago.

Victoria, B. C., June 19.—S. S. Taylor, K. C., of Nelson, a former prominent Manitoban, has been suspended from practice.

THEY KNOW IT

Thousands of people know that the ordinary remedies for piles—ointments, suppositories and appliances—will not cure.

The best of them only bring passing relief.

Dr. Leonhardt's Hem-Roid is a tablet taken internally that removes the cause of Piles, hence the cure is permanent. Every package sold carries a guarantee with it.

It is perfectly harmless. $1. All dealers, or The Wilson-Fyle Co., Limited, Niagara Falls, Ont.

Superstitions of Farmers.

Farmers "stick to the moon" in regard to planting corn and other crops. Some of them will not under any circumstances plant corn on moonlight nights, claiming that corn planted then will produce a tall stalk with a short ear. Others just as successfully plant when they are ready, when nights are dark or moonlight, as the case may be. Other notions are indulged in, such as throwing the cobs in running water to keep corn from firing. Some farmers would under no consideration burn pinder hulls, the seed of which is to be used for planting. They must be scattered along a path or highway, to be trodden upon in order to secure a good crop. Green butter bean hulls must be thrown in a road after being shelled for table use from day to day to insure a good crop the following season.

The doctrine of the survival of the fittest doesn't appeal to those who get left.

The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of "The Gentleman From Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

with you forever—on a desert isle where the others couldn't come!" he finished with sudden acerbity as his eye caught the general's.

He proceeded, and only the cessation of the music aided Miss Carewe in stopping the declaration before it was altogether out, and at that point Frank's own father came to her rescue, though in a fashion little saving of her confusion. The elder Chenoweth was one of the gallant and kindly southern colony that made it natural for Rouen always to speak of Miss Carewe as Miss Betty. He was a handsome old fellow, whose hair, long mustache and imperial were as white as he was proud of them, a Virginian with the admirable southern fearlessness of being thought sentimental. Mounting a chair with complete dignity, he proposed the health of his young hostess. He made a speech of some length, pronouncing himself quite as hopelessly in love with his old friend's daughter as all could see his own son was, and wishing her long life and prosperity, with many allusions to fragrant bowers and the muses.

It made Miss Betty happy, but it was rather trying, too, for she could only stand with downcast eyes before them all, trembling a little, and receiving a mixed impression of Mr. Chenoweth's remarks, catching fragments here and there. As the old gentleman finished, Fanchon Bareaud, kissing her hand to Betty, began to sing, and they all joined in, lifting their glasses to the blushing and happy girl clinging to her father's arm:

"Thou wouldst still be adored as this moment thou art.
Let thy loveliness fade as it will,
And around the dear ruin each wish of my heart
Would intwine itself verdantly still."

They were happy people who had not learned to be self conscious enough to fear doing a pretty thing openly without mocking themselves for it, and it was a brave circle they made about Betty Carewe, the charming faces of the women and their fine furbelows, handsome men and tall, all so gay, so cheerily smiling and yet so earnest in their welcome to her. No one was afraid to "let out" his voice; their song went full and strong over the waking town, and when it was finished the ball was over too.

The veranda and the path to the gate became like tropic gardens, the fair colors of the women's dresses, ballooning in the early breeze, making the place seem strewn with giant blossoms. They all went away at the same time, those in carriages calling farewells to each other and to the little processions departing on foot in different directions to homes near by. The sound of the voices and laughter drew away, slowly died out altogether, and the silence of the street was strange and unfamiliar to Betty. She went to the hedge and watched the musicians, who were the last to go, until they passed from sight—little black toilsome figures, carrying grotesque black boxes. While she could still see them it seemed to her that her ball was not quite over, and she wished to hold the least speck of it as long as she could, but when they had disappeared she faced the truth with a deep sigh. The long, glorious night was finished indeed.

What she needed now was another girl. The two would have gone to Betty's room and danced it all over again until noon, but she had only her father. She found him contentedly smoking a cigar upon the veranda, so she seated herself timidly, nevertheless with a hopeful glance at him, on the steps at his feet, and as she did so he looked down upon her with something more akin to geniality than anything she had ever seen in his eye before. They did not know each other very well, and she often doubted that they would ever become intimate. This morning, for the first time, she was conscious of a sense of warmth and gratitude toward him. The elaborate fashion in which he had introduced her to his friends made it appear possible that he liked her, for he had forgotten nothing, and to remember everything in this case was to be lavish, which has often the appearance of generosity.

Proposed the health of his young hostess.

And yet there had been a lack. Some small thing she had missed, though she was not entirely sure that she identified it. But the lack had not been in her father or in anything he had done. Then, too, there was something so unexpectedly human and pleasant in his not going to bed at once, but remaining to smoke on the veranda at this hour that she gave him credit for a little of her own excitement, innocently fancying that he also might feel the need of a companion with whom to talk over the brilliant passages of the night. And a moment ensued when she debated taking his hand. She was too soon glad that her intuition forbade the demonstration.

"It was all so beautiful, papa," she said timidly. "I have no way to tell you how I thank you."

"You may do that," he replied evenly, with no unkindness, with no kindness either, in the level of his tone, "by never dancing again more than twice with one man in one evening."

"I think I should much prefer not myself," she returned, lifting her head to face him gravely. "I believe if I cared to dance more than once with one I should like to dance all of them with him."

Mr. Carewe frowned. "I trust that you discovered none last night whom you wished to honor with your entire programme."

"No," she laughed, "not last night."

Her father tossed away his cigar abruptly. "Is it too much to hope," he inquired, "that when you discover a gentleman with whom you desire to waltz all night you will omit to mention the fact to him?"

There was a brief flash of her eye as she recalled her impulse to take his hand, but she immediately looked at him with such complete seriousness that he feared his irony had been thrown away.

"I'll remember not to mention it," she answered. "I'll tell him you told me not to."

"I think you may retire now," said Mr. Carewe sharply.

She rose from the steps, went to the door, then turned at the threshold. "Were all your friends here, papa?"

"Do you think that every ninny who gabbled in my house last night was my friend?" he said angrily. "There was one friend of mine, Mrs. Tanberry, who wasn't here because she is out of town, but I do not imagine that you are inquiring about women. You mean was every unmarried male idiot who could afford a swallowtailed coat and a clean pair of gloves cavorting about the place? Yes, miss, they were all here except two, and one of those is a fool, the other a knave."

"Can't I know the fool?" she asked eagerly.

"I rejoice to find them so rare in your experience!" he retorted. "This one is out of town, though I have no doubt you will see him sufficiently often when he returns. His name is Crailey Gray, and he is to marry Fanchon Bareaud—if he remembers!"

"And the knave?"

"Is one!" Carewe shut his teeth with a venomous snap, and his whole face reddened suddenly. "I'll mention this fellow once—now," he said, speaking each word with emphasis. "His name is Vanrevel. You see that gate, you see the line of my property there. The man himself as well as every other person in the town remembers well that the last time I spoke to him it was to tell him that if he ever set foot on ground of mine I'd shoot him down, and he knows, and they all know, I shall keep my word! Elsewhere I told him that for the sake of public peace I should ignore him. I do. You will see him everywhere, but it will not be difficult. No one will have the hardihood to present him to my daughter. The quarrel between us"— Mr. Carewe broke off for a moment, his hands clinching the arms of his chair, while he swallowed with difficulty, as though he choked upon some acrid bolus, and he was so strongly agitated by his own mention of his enemy that he controlled himself by a painful effort of his will. "The quarrel between us is political—and personal. You will remember."

"I shall remember," she answered in a rather frightened voice.

It was long before she fell asleep. "I alone must hover about the gates or steal into your garden like a thief," the incroyable had said. "The last time I spoke to him it was to tell him that if he ever set foot on ground of mine I'd shoot him down!" had been her father's declaration. And Mr. Carewe had spoken with the most undeniable air of meaning what he said. Yet she knew that the incroyable would come again.

Also, with hot cheeks pressed into her pillow, Miss Betty had identified the young man in the white hat, that dark person whose hand she had far too impetuously seized in both of hers. Aha! It was this gentleman who looked into people's eyes and stammered so sincerely over a pretty speech that you almost believed him; it was he who was to marry Fanchon Bareaud, "if he remembers!" No wonder Fanchon had been in such a hurry to get him away. "If he remembers!" Such was that young man's character, was it? Miss Carewe laughed aloud to her pillow, for was one to guess the reason also of his not having come to her ball? Had the poor man been commanded to be "out of town?"

Then, remembering the piquant and generous face of Fanchon, Betty clinched her fingers tightly and crushed the imp who had suggested the unworthy thought, crushed him to a wretched pulp and threw him out of the window. He immediately sneaked in by the back way, for, in spite of her victory, she still felt a little sorry for poor Fanchon.

CHAPTER IV.

IF it be true that love is the great incentive to the useless arts, the number of gentlemen who became poets for the sake of Miss Betty Carewe need not be considered extraordinary. Of all that was written of her dancing, Tom Vanrevel's lines, "I Danced With Her Beneath the Lights" (which he certainly had not done when he wrote them), were perhaps next to Crailey Gray's in merit, though Tom burned his rhymes after reading them to Crailey.

As Crailey Gray never danced with Miss Carewe, it is somewhat singular that she should have been the inspiration of his swinging verses in waltz measure, "Heartstrings on a Violin," the sense of which was that when a violin had played for her dancing the instrument should be shattered as wineglasses are after a great toast. However, no one except the author himself knew that Betty was the subject, for Crailey certainly did not mention it to Miss Bareaud nor to his best friend, Vanrevel.

It was to some degree a strange comradeship between these two young men; their tastes led them so often in opposite directions. They had rooms together over their offices in the "Madrillon block" on Main street, and the lights shone late from their windows every night in the year. Sometimes that would mean only that the two friends were talking, for they never reached a silent intimacy, but, even after several years of companionship, were rarely seen together when not in interested, often eager, conversation, so that people wondered what in the world they still found to say to each other. But many a night the late shining lamp meant that Tom sat alone, with a brief or a book, or wooed the lorn hours with his magical guitar, for he never went to bed until the other came home. And if daylight came without Crailey, Vanrevel would go out, yawning mightily, to look for him, and when there was no finding him Tom would come back sleepless to the day's work.

To the vision of the lookers on in Rouen, quiet souls who hovered along the walls at merrymakings and cheerfully counted themselves spectators at the play, Crailey Gray held the center of the stage and was the chief comedian of the place. Wit, poet and scapegrace, the small society sometimes seemed the mere background set for his performances, spectacles which he also enjoyed, and from the best seat in the house, for he was not content as the actor, but must be the prince in the box as well.

His friendship for Tom Vanrevel was in a measure that of the vine for the oak. He was full of levities at Tom's expense, which the other bore with a grin of sympathetic comprehension or at long intervals returned upon Crailey with devastating effect. Vanrevel was the one steadying thing in his life and at the same time the only one of the young men upon whom he did not have an almost mesmeric influence. In good truth, Crailey was the ringleader in all the deviltries of the town and had been so long in the habit of following every impulse, no matter how mad, that he enjoyed an almost perfect immunity from condemnation, and, whatever his deeds, Rouen had learned to say with a chuckle that it was "only Crailey Gray again."

Now and then he would spend several days in the offices of Gray & Vanrevel, attorneys and counselors at law, wearing an air of unassailable virtue, though he did not far overstate the case when he said, "Tom does all the work and gives me all the money not to bother him when he's getting up a case."

The working member of the firm got up cases to notable effect, and few lawyers in the state enjoyed having Tom Vanrevel on the other side. There was nothing about him of the floridity prevalent at that time; he withered "oratory" before the court; he was the foe of jury pathos, and, despising noise and the habitual voice dip at the end of a sentence, was nevertheless at times an almost fearfully effective orator. So by degrees the firm of Gray & Vanrevel, young as it was and in spite of the idle apprentice, had grown to be the most prosperous in the district. For this eminence Crailey was never accused of assuming the credit. Nor did he ever miss an opportunity of making known how much he owed to his partner. What he owed, in brief, was everything. How well Vanrevel worked was demonstrated every day, but how hard he worked only Crailey knew. The latter had grown to depend upon him for even his political beliefs and lightly followed his partner into abolitionism, though that was to risk unpopularity, bitter hatred and worse. Fortunately on certain occasions Vanrevel had made himself, if not his creed, respected, at least so far that there was no longer danger of mob violence for an abolitionist in Rouen. He was a cool headed young man ordinarily and possessed of an elusive forcefulness not to be trifled with, though he was a quiet man and had what they called a "fine manner," and, not in the latter, but in his dress, there was an echo of the beau, which afforded Mr. Gray a point of attack for sallies of wit.

These two young men were members of a cheerful band who feasted, laughed, wrangled over politics, danced, made love and sang terrible chords on summer evenings together, as young men will. Will Cummings, editor of the Rouen Journal, was one of these, a tall, sallow man, very thin, very awkward and very gentle. Mr. Cummings proved himself always ready with a loud and friendly laugh for the poorest joke in the world, his countenance shining with such kindness that no one ever had the heart to reproach him with the evils of his journalistic performances or for the things he broke when he danced. Another was Tappingham Marsh, an exceedingly handsome person, somewhat languid in appearance, dainty in manner with women, offhand with men, almost as reckless as Crailey and often the latter's companion and assistant in dissipation. Young Francis Chenoweth never failed to follow both into whatever they planned. He was short and pink, and the uptilt of his nose was coherent with the appealing earnestness which was habitual with him. Eugene Madrillon was the sixth of these intimates, a dark man, whose Latin eyes and color advertised his French ancestry as plainly as his emotionless mouth and lack of gesture betrayed the mingling of another strain.

All these and others of the town were wont to "talk politics" a great deal at the little club on Main street, and all were apt to fall foul of Tom Vanrevel or Crailey Gray before the end of any discussion. For those were the days when they twisted the lion's tail in vehement and bitter earnest, when the eagle screamed in mixed figures, when few men knew how to talk and many orated, when party strife was savagely personal, when tolerance was called the "pure fire of patriotism," when criticism of the existing order of things surely incurred fiery anathema and black invective, and brave was he, indeed, who dared to hint that his country as a whole and politically did lack some two or three particular virtues and that the first step toward obtaining them would be to help it to realize their absence.

This latter point of view was that of the firm of Gray & Vanrevel, which was a unit in such matters. Crailey did most of the talking, quite beautifully, too, and both had to stand against odds in many a sour argument, for they were not only abolitionists, but opposed the attitude of their country in its difficulty with Mexico, and, in common wih other men of the time who took their stand, they had to grow accustomed to being called disloyal traitors, foreign toadies, malignants and traducers of the flag. Tom had long been used to epithets of this sort, suffering their sting in quiet, and was glad when he could keep Crailey out of worse employment than standing firm for an unpopular belief.

Sang terrible chords on summer evenings.

There was one place to which Vanrevel, seeking his friend and partner when the latter did not come home at night, could not go. This was the tower chamber, and it was in that mysterious apartment of the Carewe cupola that Crailey was apt to be deeply occupied when he remained away until daylight. Strange as it appears, Mr. Gray maintained peculiar relations of intimacy with Robert Carewe in spite of the feud between Carewe and his own best friend. This intimacy, which did not necessarily imply any mutual fondness, though Crailey seemed to dislike nobody, was betokened by a furtive understanding of a sort between them. They held brief, earnest conversations on the street or in corners when they met at other people's houses, always speaking in voices too low to be overheard, and they exercised a mysterious symbolism, somewhat in the manner of fellow members of a secret society. They had been observed to communicate across crowded rooms by lifted eyebrow, nod of head or a surreptitious turn of the wrist, so that those who observed them knew that a question had been asked and answered.

It was noticed also that there were five other initiates to this masonry—Eugene Madrillon, the elder Chenoweth, General Trumble, Tappingham Marsh and Jefferson Bareaud. Thus on the afternoon following Miss Betty's introduction to Rouen's favorite sons and daughters Mr. Carewe, driving down Main street, held up one forefinger to Madrillon as he saw the young man turning in at the club. Eugene nodded gravely and as he went in, discovering Marsh, the general and others listening to Mr. Gray's explanation of his return from the river with no fish, stealthily held up one finger in his turn. Trumble replied with a wink, Tappingham nodded, but Crailey

Best Kidney Remedy Known To Science

For pain in the back—scanty urine—highly colored urine—irritated bladder—irregular bowels—bad stomach—there is nothing that will bring such quick relief and so certain a cure as FRUIT-A-TIVES.

These marvelous tablets are nature's natural remedy for irritated or weakened kidneys. They act directly on the kidneys—soothe the irritated membranes—clean, heal and strengthen the organs—and help them to new vigor with their work.

Often kidney trouble is not due to any organic defect in the kidneys. If the bowels are constipated—if the skin does not throw off the tissue waste of the body—then these impurities are carried to the kidneys. In a vain endeavor to rid the system of impurities, the kidneys are overworked—the blood vessels are dilated—the nerves inflamed. That causes a host of kidney troubles.

Fruit-a-tives

not only heal and strengthen the kidneys but they also increase the action of the skin, and act directly on the liver, thus curing the constipation.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are the natural and logical cure for all kidney troubles. They are made of fruit and tonics—are pleasant to take—and a guaranteed cure when faithfully used.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

THE SWINE INDUSTRY IN ONTARIO.

A bulletin upon this subject has been prepared by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, which contains information of an instructive and suggestive character.

The following questions were sent to several thousand carefully selected correspondents, and from the replies received, a report is given in detail by counties, together with a summary for the Province as a whole:

1. What breeds, grades or crosses of hogs appear to be most popular in your district?

2. Has there been any general tendency to change from one breed or type of hog to another during the last two or three years?

3. If there has been any change in the kind of hogs fed, please describe the nature of the change?

4. Are grade sires used in your district?

5. What is the general feeling among farmers in your section as to the hog production this year? Do they show a disposition to increase their output and to what extent?

6. About how many breeding sows were kept by the average farmer of your section in 1904? How many in 1905? How many this season?

7. What is the average number of pigs to reach weaning age in spring litters this year? Has the percentage of loss been greater than usual?

8. How will the delivery of hogs between now and September 1 compare with that of 1904 and 1905?

9. What do you consider the average cost of production of bacon hogs fitted for market. (a) summer feeding; (b) winter feeding?

BREEDS. — The Yorkshire is the most popular breed. In 33 out of the 42 counties reporting it gets first choice, and in 7 others it is a tie with some other breed for first place. Berkshires come next in favor followed by Tamworths and Chester Whites in the order named. Duroc Jerseys and Poland Chinas receive but little mention outside of the counties of Essex and Kent.

CROSSES. — While many crosses are used, the most popular is that between the Yorkshire and the Berkshire. In the western portion of the Province there is a tendency to use the Berkshire more than formerly in crossing, while in the eastern half the trend is more toward the use of the Yorkshires.

SIRES. — Pure-bred sires are used almost entirely in twenty-five per cent. of the counties, while grade sires are used to a limited extent in fifty-five per cent. of the counties; while in a few sections grade sires are still used almost entirely. The district taking in the Northwestern peninsula will be found to be freer from the use of grade sires than any other section of the Province, although there are individual counties elsewhere from which reports are just as favorable. Grade sires appear to be in most use in the more eastern counties.

PRODUCTION. — The general tendency throughout the Province is to increase production slightly. In many of the eastern counties it has been the custom for farmers to depend upon breeders in their locality for their supply of young pigs for feeding, and it has been noted that the demand this spring considerably exceeds the supply, the breeders who usually sell their pigs retaining them on account of the good price of hogs. Considerable caution, however, is observed among many individual breeders and feeders not to go into the business too extensively, for fear that over-production might bring prices down to an unprofitable point.

BREEDING SOWS. — The number of breeding sows was decreased considerably in 1905 and 1904, while 1906 shows an increase in the number compared with both 1905 and 1904. Comparing 1906 with 1905, thirty-five counties report increases, while only two counties report decreases, and five counties no change in the number of sows. Reports indicate that the eastern part of the province is relatively increasing production much more rapidly than is being done in Western Ontario. In all parts of the province the demand for brood sows appears to exceed the supply.

LITTERS. — The percentage of loss of young pigs is greater than usual in a large proportion of the counties, which will have its effect upon the fall deliveries. The average number of pigs in spring litters reaching the weaning age is estimated at 7.61, as compared with a normal litter of 7.77 pigs at weaning time.

COST OF FEEDING. — The average cost of summer feeding is placed at $4.51 per cwt., and of winter feeding, $5.38 per cwt. In very few cases, however, do correspondents state definitely that the figures given are the result of actual experiments, but where these are reported it is almost invariably noticed that the cost of both summer and winter feeding is considerably below the figures already mentioned. A number of correspondents, especially in Western Ontario, state that with comfortable quarters and roots the cost of feeding is no greater in winter than in summer.

SABLE ISLAND PONIES.

For the visitor to Sable Island, lying about ninety miles southeast of Halifax, one of the most interesting features is the ponies, which roam wild. The ancestors of these ponies were probably the horses brought by the Rev. Mr. de Mercier, an American, who went there in 1710, and left by him to shift for themselves after his departure. Those horses were doubtless of large size, but constant exposure and poor food have reduced their descendants to small ponies. They have large, ill-set heads, small eyes, often blue in color, thick joints, long, sweeping tails; one by actual measurement was three yards long, and thick, shaggy manes and forelocks. The predominating colors are bay, with black mane and tail, and chestnut, with light mane and tail. There are a few blacks, but no grays or whites. Attempt has been made by the introduction of thoroughbred horses to breed ponies of larger size and better shape, and this has met with considerable success.

Until the last few years the coarse grass and wild pea vine found on the island have been their only food. This was sufficient in summer, but in winter, when all plant life was hidden under snow and ice, the poor ponies were unable to penetrate the covering with their teeth, worn down by constant nibbling in the coarse sand, and many of them died from starvation. Many also succumbed to exposure, their only protection from the cold, winter winds being their shaggy coats and the gulches and hollows between the sand dunes, where they huddled together for warmth, the colts always in the centre and the horses on the outside.

An attempt was made to lessen the deaths by starvation and exposure by herding the animals in barns, but they did not take kindly to this benevolence and escaped as fast as they were caught. Shelter sheds have now been erected at various places, forty or fifty feet long and eight feet high, containing racks of hay. The ponies are willing to resort to these places in time of storm or cold, and the death rate has been perceptibly reduced in consequence.

When the government first took possession of the island in the early part of the last century, the ponies numbered from seven hundred to eight hundred, but at the present time the number is only about 80 or 100. Some of them have been broken to harness and are used to patrol the island, haul supplies, etc., but the majority roam in gangs of eight or twenty ponies each, as of old. Each gang is headed by a vicious stallion, so jealous of his rights of leadership that as soon as any member of his gang reaches the age of two years he drives him out. If the exile returns to his former companions a fierce battle ensues, and the younger one is usually beaten and sent off once more to found a gang of his own.

The pasturage of each gang is well defined, and woe to the horse which feeds outside his proper limits. He is sat upon by those into whose precincts he has strayed, and is driven away with much fierceness. If ponies are intermixed and driven miles away from their pasture grounds, the following morning will find them peacefully feeding on the grounds from which they were taken.

The ponies are timid and very curious, and they will cautiously approach a new and strange object until their curiosity is satisfied, and then turn heel and gallop away. If a stranger approaches a gang the leader by a shrill cry will gather in the mares and foals, and begin a slow retreat, he himself taking the place of danger at the rear, facing the foe.

Several times a year supplies are brought to the island from Halifax by a government steamer, and on the midsummer trip a cargo of ponies is usually taken back to be sold, partly for revenue and partly in order to reduce the number which must subsist the next winter on the island's resources. When the steamer appears the ponies are coralled and those selected for export are thrown upon their backs and their legs tied together, and in this helpless condition they are placed in surfboats and taken aboard the steamer. When they arrive in Halifax they are tied in an enclosure at the wharf, where they remain for several days, to accustom them to the noise and confusion of their new surroundings. They look peaceful enough as they stand there, but let a prospective purchaser approach too close and he is laid on his back by a quick, vicious kick. When the ponies are sold and led away they make a final vigorous fight for freedom, lasting sometimes for hours. After their submission, however, they become valuable horses.—New York Tribune.

The world is full of people who are in constant misery from the racking pains of rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago and kindred diseases. They would give any money to get relief, but having tried various remedies and been disappointed they have become discouraged and sceptical of all remedies. Does this describe your case? If it does, let us tell you that there is a cure for your trouble, a remedy that will not disappoint you. It is Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. It never disappoints. As its name implies, it goes straight to the bone, or joint, the seat of the disease, scatters the poisonous acid, relaxes the stiffened joints, allays the inflammation and effects a sure and speedy cure. It gives comfort where there was misery, a fact for which we have hundreds of letters from those who have been sufferers. This oil is for internal and external use and while it is a great and never-failing remedy for rheumatism, lame back, etc., it is also good for other kinds of inflammation, such as croup, bronchitis and quinsy. It is the most remarkable remedy of the age and should be in every home. Sold by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle or sent by mail prepaid by The Tuck Bone Oil Co., Limited, Smith's Falls. Money returned if not satisfied.

FROM MISERY TO COMFORT.

NIP IT IN THE BUD.

First Appearance of Dandruff a Forerunner of Future Baldness.

That such is the case has been conclusively proven by scientific research. Prof. Unna, the noted European skin specialist, declares that dandruff is the burrowed-up cuticle of the scalp, caused by parasites destroying the vitality in the hair bulb. The hair becomes lifeless, and, in time, falls out. This can be prevented.

Newbro's Herpicide kills the dandruff germ, and restores the hair to its natural softness and abundancy. Herpicide is now used by thousands of people—all satisfied that it is the most wonderful hair preparation on the market to-day.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

THE VETERINARIAN.

Abortion.—Trotting-bred mare, 18 years old, aborted April 18 at the end of the ninth month, from no known cause. Foal was dead but of normal size and well formed. Two years ago she aborted at the end of the sixth month. Last year she was not in foal. Previous to this she raised a colt some ten years ago. Has been used carefully at light farm work the past winter, but otherwise no special precaution taken to prevent abortion. Was advised to feed a drug called "black haw," but did not. What are my chances of getting a living colt from her if I breed her again and feed the drug? Where can it be obtained? When should it be fed, and how much? If there is a reasonable chance of getting a live colt I am anxious to do so on account of the pedigree of the mare. —B. (Would try her again if she is a desirable mare to breed from, and use anti-abortion medicine. Any druggist can get fluid extract of black haw for you if he does not keep it in stock.)

Swelling. — Horse six years old has slight swelling on right hind leg below the hock; may be the beginning of a curb. Kindly let me know what I shall use. (Have hind feet shod with heel calks three-fourths of an inch long; no toe calk. Apply blister to the enlargement.

THE SUMMER CARE OF SHEEP.

In summer the sheep thrive on pasture where there is plenty of room and good feeding. The shepherd, however, who thinks that because his flock is safe in pasture he need give them no attention until fall will find himself in possession of a lot of diseased and unprofitable sheep in a few years, and his farm infested with germs.

Most of the trouble will be from internal parasites. In our country there are only two or three species which cause much trouble; among these the twisted stomach worm is far the worst. This lives in the fourth stomach of the ewe, and she carries it through the winter, even though she shows no signs of it in her condition. In the spring and summer the worms "ripen" and pass away, and right here the danger lies, because the little worms hatch in shallow pools or on the moist grass close to the ground, and are taken in by the young lambs in feeding and drinking.

The stomach worm has done more to discourage sheep raising than all other causes put together. The symptoms of the presence of the stomach worms are—the wool appears lusterless and does not spring out when pressed by the hand; the red veins about and in the eyes seem pale; the skin on parting the wool, will be found to have lost its pinkness; a disordered digestion and a depraved appetite may follow. Before death there will be "black scours."

The best preventive is to separate the lambs from the ewes as soon as weaned, and put them into a fresh pasture which has not had sheep in it for a year. The mature sheep should have a change of pasture every two weeks. This will not be much trouble after the fences are once in place. Of course if a shepherd and dog attend the sheep, they will move to fresh grounds naturally. One of the best remedies, which has been successfully used is a one per cent. solution of coal tar creosote, made as follows: Coal tar creosote, 1 oz.; water, 99 oz. (6 pints and 3 oz.) This dose given is usually, for lambs 4 to 12 months old, 2 to 4 oz.; for yearlings and above, 3 to 5 oz. Be careful not to get the liquid into the lungs, or the animal may die in a few moments.

Before the flock goes to pasture, be sure to trim and shorten their feet. This can be more easily done after the sheep have been in wet grass for a day or so. Look out for foot-rot and foot-scab. There is often a distinction drawn by shepherds between these two ailments, although the latter is usually, if neglected, the forerunner of the former. There is an inflammation of the skin in the cleft of the hoof, which does not go in very deep, and yields quickly to an application of carbolic acid or coal-tar dip. The sheep sholud be kept on a dry footing for a short time

When the inflammation goes beneath the shell of the foot and gives out a watery, bad-smelling matter, it is real foot-rot, and should be carefully treated at once or it may spread to the rest of the flock. First pare away all the horn that hides the diseased surface, as the disease is of parasitic origin, the germ must be removed before a cure can be effected. When the diseased surface has been laid bare, wet it well with a strong solution of blue vitriol. Bind up the wound if the horn has been cut away much.

To prevent the spread of the trouble, make a trough six inches wide at the bottom and twelve at the top and ten feet long. Put this in front of the gate where the sheep will have to pass through it when leaving the yard every morning for a week. In the trough put a plain lime whitewash, with enough blue vitriol to give it a blue color.

Don't shear the sheep too close or they will suffer from the flies, and consequently be restless and poor in flesh.

A little attention to the comforts of the flock will make sheep raising both a pleasure and a financial success.

DRY FEED THE BEST.

The feed question has always been a more or less troublesome one. The main difficulty has been to avoid "bowel trouble" in the youngsters.

Years ago, we used to mix up a slop of corn meal, and then throw it around, a dab here and there, call the chicks and let them fight for it. To be sure, we raised a surprising number of healthy birds, but in telling our grandchildren about the good old way, I fear we omitted to tell of the large numbers that died from causes then unknown. The only natural and healthful way to feed animals of all kinds is to feed the grains, ground and otherwise, dry. In the case of poultry, the food should be fed in hoppers, and these should never be allowed to become empty.

Another point in favor of dry feeding is the great saving of time. Where the hoppers are made large enough, once a week will keep them filled. So in the case of the growing birds, which are presumably scattered about the fields in colony coops, the watering and moving of the coops would be the only daily work. In the winter, clover is placed in wire baskets where the fowls can reach it, instead of steaming it.

PROMPT CONNECTIONS.

There is one feature of the wonderful service over The Lake Shore Railway that particularly appeals to those who travel much. The schedule is so arranged that connections, where any are necessary, are made promptly and long waits and delays are avoided. This, taken in connection with the luxurious trains, perfect personal service, highest speed, safety and punctuality has made the Lake Shore the most popular line in America. Careful travellers see that their tickets read "Via Buffalo and the Lake Shore Railway." For full information concerning rates, routes and service address J. W. TOURNAMENTS AS THEY WERE.

How They Were Conducted In the Days of Henry VIII.

One of the events of the London season is to be a graphic representation of tilting as it was practiced in the times of Henry VIII. This inspiriting spectacle will form one of the displays at the military tournament to be held at Olympia, under the planning and direction of Viscount Dillon, keeper of the tower armories, and a famous expert in these and all kindred matters. The viscount, appropriately enough, contributes to The Pall Mall Magazine a bright and informing article, full of rare facts and illustrations, which goes far to clear away a number of our misconceptions as to what the art of tilting and jousting used to be.

The expression "a tournament" has, the viscount says, much changed in its significance from the days when such exercises and displays of warlike action were common. Young men who aspired to shine in the use of arms seized the occasion of the proclamation of a tournament to display not only their proficiency, but also their magnificence and ability to spend large sums of money in support of it. The tournament was, so far as those taking part in it were concerned, only for the rich, or at least for the proteges of the great.

Unfortunately for the interests of truth, the tournament has been seized on by the romancers and other artists and so disguised with fiction and fancy that the real thing is hardly to be recognized in such works as "Ivanhoe," or such displays as the Eglinton Tournament of 1839. While we find tournaments in the reigns of the first three Edwards, we also find a great number of prohibitions by those kings of these projected tournaments. The reason for these prohibitions is pretty clear. The assemblage of large bodies of people, some of them at least skilled in the profession of arms, could hardly be regarded with satisfaction by the authorities when the position of the crown was not as assured as it now is. And again, the call on the nobles and leaders of men for service in foreign wars would not allow of the expenditure of so much energy and money on what were displays of comparative personal power. Certainly during the great war with France we do find magnificent tournaments taking place, as at St. Inglevert, near Calais, where for the purpose safe-conducts were given to knights and others attending. Froissart has given us description of this meeting, and the splendidly illuminated manuscripts of his works (executed, of course, some eighty or a hundred years later) still present to us some of the glories of that tournament as treated by later artists.

To form some idea of the outfit of a knight for attending a tournament, we may refer to "Petit Jean de Saintre," where we find the following list of expenses: three knights with fourteen horses, nine squires with twenty-two horses, a chaplain and a chief herald with two horses; two drummers with ten horses, besides four powerful destriers ridden by pages with two grooms to each, two cooks with three horses, a courier, a shoeing smith and an armorer with four horses, four pack-horses for himself, and four more for his company, and twelve for his household besides and for his maitre d' hotel—in all eighty-nine horses. These, with three or more rich suits of clothes for the different exercises of the tournament, and the necessary varieties of armor for horse and foot combats, and banners and standards, not to mention his weapons, were a handsome allowance for one who was not a rich noble but a simple "ecuyer tranchant" to the king. It should, however, be noted that all this kit was provided by a lady of the court whose protege Petit Jean was, and whose colors and devices he wore and celebrated.

As to the Queen of Beauty, who figures in "Ivanhoe," and who was reproduced at Eglinton; she is entirely an invention, and in the accounts of real tournaments she does not appear.

HOW THE POOR LIVE.

Grim Figures That Give a Peep Behind the Scenes In London.

Vagrancy, it is not surprising to learn by the latest official London report, is increasing.

In 1882 "casuals" were being relieved at the rate of 6,000 to 7,000 nightly; in 1905 the number had increased to 11,312 to 13,516 every twenty-four hours.

Interesting figures concerning the method of living of the very poor and the inmates of common lodging-houses are given.

The cost of food, for instance, has been reduced to a minimum. Here is the daily menu of a dock laborer of fifty-one: Breakfast, tea 1-2d., sugar, 1-2d., toasted bread 1d.; no dinner; tea, five fresh herrings 2d., potatoes 2d., tea 1-2d., sugar 1-2d.; supper, fried fish 1d., potatoes 1d.; total 9d. Cost of bed 4d.; total 13d. Another lived for 9d. per day, 1-3rd share of meat 4d., potatoes 1d., potherbs 1d., sugar and tea 1d., composed the dinner; a pennyworth of bread formed the tea. The women were the most extravagant, the highest cost being 1s. 4 1-2d., which included steak and onions.

For clothes these poor occupants paid very little, as the following will show: Coat 3d., trousers 1d., waistcoat nil, shirt 4d., boots nil. This is what is called a "sample suit": Coat 8d., trousers 9d., shirt 3d., waistcoat 2d., socks 1d., boots 3d., cap 2 1-2d. A woman's outfit costs 3s to 4s. 6d.

Risked His Life For His Hounds.

To save his three hounds, Mr. Corbet, Master of the South Cheshire Hounds, plunged into a flooded stream, and was carried away by the torrent. He sank twice, and was then rescued by a horse dealer. Lord Gerald Grosvenor assisted in resuing and resuscitating the hounds.

Co-operative Ships Sold.

The Co-operative Wholesale Society, Ltd., has sold three of its ships to the Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co. They are the Liberty, Unity and Equity, which for some years past have been trading between Goole and Hamburg.

£5,000,000 a Year For Cabs.

A statistician has arrived at the conclusion that £5,000,000 is spent annually by the public of London on cabs. He also estimates that out of that great sum perhaps a million and a half represent overcharges.

QUAINT CEREMONIES.

Lord Strathcona Gives Caps to Guests to Wear at Service—Duke of Athol's Body Guard.

There are still one or two houses in England where quaint ceremonies of older days are strictly maintained. Lowther Castle, Penrith, is an instance in point. One picturesque incident always takes place every evening, even when the Earl and Countess are dining quite alone. Lord Lonsdale drinks first to "The King," next addressing Lady Lonsdale, to "The Ladies." He then sits down, and her ladyship, rising, proposes, with equal gravity, "The Gentlemen."

Lord and Lady Strathcona, when staying at their country castle, are also observers of a certain quaint custom. At the service which is held every morning in the private chapel no woman is allowed to be present with head uncovered. Should a visitor, unaware of the rule of the house, appear bareheaded, she is requested to don the regulation cap. There is the less excuse for the omission, as a white cap of the required description is always placed on the dressing table of each lady guest before her arrival.

There are still heads of old and wealthy Scottish families who would not on any account allow a billiard table to be placed in their houses. Among these may be mentioned Lord Mansfield. Though a good sportsman and devoted to country pursuits, especially curling, he will not have a billiard room fitted up in his magnificent old mansion, Scone Palace, Perthshire.

A curious custom in connection with the birth of an heir to the earldom of Carnarvon is still observed at Highclere Castle. The tradition of the family requires that on such an occasion 500 gallons of ale must be brewed, to be kept in one huge cask, which must remain unopened until the heir shall attain his majority. The last occasion of this observance was when little Lord Porchester was born in 1898. The ale was duly brewed, and a Newbury cooper constructed the cask from an oak grown on the Highclere estate. It was hooped with brass, and bears a coronet and inscription with the date, and also the name of the butler who was responsible for the brewing.

It is said that during the great battle of Blenheim a spaniel followed the Duke of Marlborough all day long close at heel, never leaving him until the tide of success had turned decisively in favor of the British arms. The duke took the dog home, and his duchess, the famous Sarah Churchill, cared for it until its death. This dog, the story goes, was the progenitor of the well-known Blenheim spaniels. Ever since that time it has been the custom in the Churchill family for each duke to present a Blenheim spaniel to his bride when she enters Blenheim Palace for the first time as mistress.

Those who for the first time visit Belvoir Castle, one of the seats of the Duke of Rutland, will witness with surprise a strange relic of medieval times. All night long a watchman paces the battlements with a halberd over his shoulder, and every hour calls aloud the time and the condition of the weather, exactly as the London "Charleys" of a century ago used to do. This custom has prevailed ever since the very beginning of the sixteenth century, and until a few years ago the watchman still retained the Elizabethan costume. This dress has now given way to more convenient modern garments, but the watchman still keeps his nightly guard.

Another custom, which is better known, belongs to a former seat of the Dukes of Rutland. This is the privilege of exacting a horseshoe from every visitor to Oakham Castle. Oakham Castle is not at present in the tenancy of the Manners family, but of the Finches, and round the walls of this twelfth century mansion are to be seen no fewer than 142 horseshoes, ranging from the ordinary size up to a gigantic shoe seven feet in length. The latter was given by George IV., is of solid bronze, and cost £50. The most treasured gems among the collection are shoes given by Queen Elizabeth and by our present Queen. The shoes are gilded and each is surmounted by the coronet proper to the rank of its donor.

Seeing that it is illegal for any subject to retain an armed force, it is not strange that the one exception to this law, namely, the Duke of Athol, jealously guards his privilege of keeping up two companies of retainers. Of one company the height of its members is 6 feet 1 1-2 inches, of the other 5 feet 10 3-4 inches. The little army, which is kept at Blair Castle, Perthshire, is regularly inspected by the duke himself. In 1841 the bodyguard was inspected by Queen Victoria and presented with a new set of colors.

End of the World by 1931.

Within twenty-five years this old earth will be no more. The seers who tell us so are a number of clergymen who partook in the deliberations of the "prophetic and second advent conference," at Exeter Hall, London. The particulars of the earth's finish, as given by the prophets, do not measure up the same, but all agree that the end is at hand. May 2, 1929, and April 9, 1931, are the choices given in dates.

The upheavals and turmoils so common of late in war and earthquake, are proof positive, the prophets conclude, that the usefulness of the world is departing. The coming of an anti-Christ, will complete the list of necessities for the scripture's fulfillment. This anti-Christ will make his first political appearance as king of Syria. In 1922 he will conquer France and extend his rule over many nations.

The prophets foretell that there will be ten million Christians on the earth, but of these 144,000, the chosen of the host, will be transferred to celestial mansions, in 1924 or 1926. The other 9,856,000 will be transported to the desert around Mount Sinai, to wait three and a half years for their approach to glory.

Forgot the Name.

A father, applying to the Maldon magistrate for a vaccination exemption certificate, was asked to give the name of his child. After considering a minute and scratching his head, he replied, "It's clean gone; I'm blessed if I can think of it." The mayor said that if a father could not think of the name of his own child he was not fit to apply for a certificate, and refused the application.

Don't Kill The Hawk.

Man has sinned more than any other animal in trifling with nature's balance. Clover crops and the killing of hawks are apparently unrelated, yet the hawks eat the field mice, the mice prey on the immature bees, and the bees fertilize the clover blossoms. The death of a hawk means an over-increase of field mice, and a consequent destruction of the bees.—Country Life in America,

Special Meeting Of City Council.

GAS DEBENTURE BY-LAW WAS PASSED — OTHERS ALSO — IS THE CITY GETTING ITS RIGHT PROPORTION OF FINES AND FEES?

A special meeting of the City Council was held last evening, the object of which was to consider and pass certain by-laws.

Ald Panter, acting Mayor, presided. Ald Marsh and Mayor Sulman were absent,

A communication was presented asking the Council to grant $50 towards aquatic sports, in the harbor on the Wednesday afternoon holidays, —Referred to the Executive Committee.

THREE BY-LAWS PASSED.

The seventh order of business, namely Introduction of By-laws, was then proceeded with.

Three By-laws were introduced by Ald Sinclair as follows;

A by-law to authorize the corporation to issue debentures to the extent of $25,000 for the purpose of extending the gas mains and making improvements to the gas works.

A by-law to ratify an agreement between the Trenton Electric Company and the city re lighting the city for the next three years.

A by-law authorizing the sale of a house and lot by the city to the G.T.R. Company and discharging a mortgage upon the same from the Butterfield estate.

Ald. Gordon was in the chair in committee of the whole.

In reference to the debenture by-law Ald. Green asked if it was expected that the extensions to be made would pay, annually, the extra tax, interest, etc.

Ald. Sinclair said it would not become a tax, as the revenue derived from the new comsumers will pay for it. This would have to be proven to the Commission, which the matter would be brought before.

This was the only discussion upon the by-laws and they were passed and numbered 1289, 1290 and 1291.

Acting Mayor Panter said it would be necessary to appoint an acting Chairman of Parks, as Ald. Knox would be absent from the city for some time.

On motion Ald. McCrodan was appointed.

THE BAND CONCERTS.

Ald. Knox asked what was going to be done about the band concerts. The Committee appointed had not met.

A Committee composed of Ald. McCrodan, Vermilyea and Sinclair was appointed to look after the matter and report at the next Council meeting.

ABOUT FINES AND FEES.

Ald Green, under the head of enquiries, asked the City Solicitor what proportion of fines and fees imposed by the Police Magistrate went to the city.

The Solicitor said that was rather a difficult question to answer off-hand, as it depended altogether whether the offence charged was criminal or not,

Ald. Green said he had asked this question because he had been informed that a fine of $40 and costs was imposed in a case some time ago by the Magistrate and the city only received $4. He had also heard that, at a more recent date, two were fined $10 each and costs, and the city only received $3. He would like to know why the city's proportion was so small, if the facts were as he had been informed.

The Solicitor stated the County Attorney claimed that, under the Statute, where a fine is imposed in a criminal offence such fine goes to the Provincial Treasurer.

Ald Sinclair suggested that, as there appeared to be some doubt as to this matter, the City Solicitor might write to the Attorney-General in reference to it. This was an important matter.

A motion to the above effect prevailed.

Council adjourned.

MARRIED AT ST. MICHAEL'S.

McINNCH — McDONNELL NUPTIALS THIS MORNING—A PRETTY WEDDING.

At 9 o'clock this morning St. Michael's Church was the scene of a pretty wedding, and many of the fair sex were present to witness the interesting ceremony. The groom was Mr Harry McIninch, eldest son of ex-Mayor McIninch, and the bride Miss Edith M. McDonnell, daughter of Mr. J. A. McDonnell, John street. The bride looked charming in a gown of crepe de chene, with silver sequin trimmings, and hat to match, and carried a bouquet of white roses. The bridesmaid was her sister, Miss Kate McDonnell, who wore a dress of white muslin with hat to match. Mr. Charles Dolan, of this city, assisted the groom. Rev. Father Twomey performed the ceremony, and also celebrated the Nuptial Mass. Mr. Wm. Quinlan was usher. The bride was given away by her father Mrs. McDonnell, the bride's mother, wore a dress of black voile over black silk jet. After the ceremony the wedding party and guests were handsomely entertained at the bride's parents' residence. The popularity of the bride was evidenced by the large number of beautiful gifts which she received, including a handsome silver fern dish from the choir of St. Michael's Church. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold locket with cross of pearls, to the bridesmaid a pearl ring, and to the groomsman a gold fob. Mr. and Mrs. McIninch left on the afternoon train for the west and will visit Buffalo, Rochester and other places before returning to the city to take up their residence. The many friends of the couple will wish for them a happy and prosperous future.

During the ceremony at the church Mr. Ingram presided at the organ and played Mendelssohn's Wedding March, the choir sang Millard's "Kyrie," and Mrs. Jas. Grant sang a solo, "Ave Verum."

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

"I suffered for five years with kidney and liver trouble, which caused severe pains across the back and a blinding headache. I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga Tenn. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s Drug Store.

Wedding Bells.

WEESE — WAY.

A very pretty and quiet wedding was celebrated at the home of the bride, West Bridge street, on Saturday, June 16th, when Mrs. Isabella Way was united in marriage to Wm. S. Weese, a prosperous farmer of Rednersville, the ceremony being performed by Rev. A. C. Maybee in the presence of a few immediate friends. After congratulations a dainty tea was served and a very pleasant evening spent. Mr. and Mrs Weese will take up their residence in the city, and will have the best wishes of a host of friends.

FESTIVE AND MEMORABLE EVENING AT MADOC LAST NIGHT—SPEECHES, SONGS AND BAGPIPE MUSIC.

Mr. John McIntosh, of this city, D.D.G.C. of the Sons of Scotland, last night paid an official visit to McKay Camp, Madoc. He was accompanied by Mr. William McIntosh (with the pipes), Messrs. P. McGregor, P. Johnston, Henry Graham and Wm. Leslie. A delegation from Campbellford was also present. After the lodge business was over adjournment was made to the St. Lawrence Hall, where a banquet was partaken of, and a splendid one it was, all the delicacies of the season being provided. Mr. Wm. Cross, Chief of Camp McKay, occupied the chair, and introduced each toast with pithy remarks. Brief but bright speeches were made by the visiting brethren, among the orators being the D.D.G.C., Rev. Mr. McKay, of Madoc, Chief Smith and Past Chief Olton, of Campbellford. Stirring selections on the pipes were given by Mr. Duncan Robertson, of Campbellford, and our own Piper McIntosh, and the old Scotch songs were given by Rev. Mr. McKay, of Madoc, and Mr. John McIntosh, D.D.G.C., of this city. The Belleville visitors arrived home at an early hour this morning, full of enthusiasm over their visit and loud in praise of the princely hospitality of their Madoc brethren.

Last Was the Killing of Azel Smalle Over the Cards.

Pardoned From British Columbia Penitentiary Only Two Months Ago—After Shooting Smalle, the Indian Jumped on a Pony and Was Far Up the Island Before Posse Could Be Organized—Still Uncaptured.

Victoria, B. C., June 19.—Johnie Jackum, the notorious Indian murderer who was pardoned from the British Columbia Penitentiary at New Westminster a couple of month ago, shot and killed Azel Smalle, a halfbreed, over a game of cards yesterday.

The shooting took place in a saloon on a lonely road on Reed Island. Jackum became incensed at Smalle's winnings, and the game ended in a drunken brawl, in which several shots were fired. The Indian jumped on a pony and was far up the island before a posse could be organized. Sheriff George Allen, with four mounted men, started after the murderer, who is armed and will fight before he is captured. Jackum has now four murders hanging over his head.

He had not been captured at midnight, but it is thought that his pursuers will surround him before daybreak.

WAS IT MURDER?

Woman's Strange Story of a Crime Committed In 1902.

Perth, June 19.—County Constable M. D. White, who has been working on the supposed Babcock-Martin murder case for the past 30 hours, will leave to-day for Rice Lake with a warrant to arrest Frank Beaver, the accomplice of Sandy Badore, the noted outlaw, who three weeks ago was sentenced to 14 years in penitentiary for attempted murder on a peddler.

A woman named Mrs. Nedde gave the startling information at Bathurst, near here, that two boys, named Babcock and Martin, who were supposed to have been drowned at Sharbot Lake, in April, 1902, were murdered by Sandy Badore, and another Indian named Frank Beaver, who lives in Rice Lake.

Badore used to live with Mrs. Nedde, and she says he told her of the deed, and where the bodies were buried. The authorities, it seems, sent to the place indicated, and found human bones in the ground. The two boys had left Sharbot Lake for the point in a skiff to get logs for W. Y. Cannon. They had between $70 and $80 on their persons, and the two Indians evidently knew this. Beaver is being sought for, and an investigation into the woman's story is going on.

Guilty of Manslaughter.

Montreal, June 19.—Manslaughter was the jury's verdict last evening in the case against James Hackett for the murder of the little Ahearn girl some weeks ago. The fact that the medical experts were hazy over the allegation that the victim had been outraged probably influenced the jurors towards clemency.

Thieves Steal and Destroy.

Quebec, June 19.—Thieves entered the St. Walier Church, St. David, just outside Levis, Sunday evening, breaking open money boxes and carrying away the contents, as well as church silverware, etc., and causing considerable destruction, as paraphernalia used in the Fete Dieu celebration was destroyed.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Firmer for Cattle—Prices Lower at Chicago and Buffalo.

London, June 18.—Cattle are quoted at 10¾c to 11¾c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8½c to 8¾c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 14c to 15c per lb.

TORONTO JUNCTION LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, June 18.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 67 car loads, composed of 1404 cattle, 44 sheep and 23 calves.

Exporters.

Trade was good, quality considered. Prices for the best cattle held about the same as a week ago, but medium cattle were easier and inclined to be slow of sale.

Prices for shipping cattle ranged from $4.75 to $5.30 per cwt., the latter price being paid for a few picked lots, the bulk sold at $4.80 to $5 per cwt. Bulls sold at $3.75 to $4.25.

Butchers.

Prime lots of picked butchers sold at $4.80 to $5 per cwt.; loads of good, at $4.65 to $4.85; medium, $4.30 to $4.50; stall fed cows at $3.75 to $4.25; grass cows, at $3.25 to $3.75 per cwt.

Milch Cows.

A few milch cows sold at $35 to $55 each.

Veal Calves.

Veal calves sold at $5 to $5.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Export sheep sold at $4.40 per cwt.

Hogs.

H. P. Kennedy reports prices unchanged at $7.25 for selects, and $7 for lights.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, June 18.—(Special.)—Cable advices from Liverpool and London on Canadian cattle came steady at 11c to 11½c, and the Glasgow market was firmer. The demand for ocean freight space has been good and considerable business has been done. The market is stronger, and rates for July are 2s 6d to 5s higher to all ports except Bristol; engagements to Liverpool, Glasgow and Manchester have been made for July at 40s; London at 32s 6d; Bristol, July and August, at 30s. Exports for the week were 650 cattle, 149 sheep; receipts were 700 cattle, 50 milch cows, 300 sheep and lambs, 251 calves and 1100 hogs. Of the hogs, 700 were bought in the west by the packers, consequently the supply on the market for sale was small; but, in spite of this fact, and stronger cables on Canadian bacon, the feeling was weaker and prices remained lower. A few small lots of choice selects were sold at $7.90, but the bulk of the trade was done at $7.50 to $7.75 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars. The butchers were out strong and trade was good, with the prices of cattle and calves higher all around. Prime beeves sold at 5½c to 5⅝c per lb.; pretty good cattle, 4c to 5c, and the common stock at 2¾c to 3¾c per lb. Milkmen's strippers were numerous and sold at 3¼c to 4¼c. Good milch cows were in good demand at $4.50 to $4.55. The other cows sold at $25 to $40 each. Good calves sold at $5 to $8 each, the others at $2.50 to $4 each. Sheep sold at 3½c to 4½c per lb. Lambs at $3 to $5 each. Store pigs sold at $7 to $11 each, and the young pigs at $1.75 to $3 each.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET

East Buffalo, June 18.—Cattle—Receipts, 5000 head; fairly active, 10c to 20c lower; prime steers, $5.50 to $5.90; a few at $6; shipping, $5 to $5.40; butchers', $4.50 to $5.25; heifers, $3.75 to $5.10; cows, $3 to $4.50; bulls, $2.75 to $4.25; stockers and feeders, $3.25 to $4.25; stock heifers, $2.75 to $3.50; fresh cows and springers, steady to $2 higher, $18 to $52.

Hogs—Receipts, 13,000 head; fairly active, shade higher; heavy and mixed, $6.85 to $6.90; yorkers, $6.80 to $6.85; pigs, $6.75 to $6.75; roughs, $5.75 to $6; stags, $4 to $4.75; dairies, $6.60 to $6.80.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 8000 head; active, wethers, 10c, lambs 25c lower; others, steady; lambs, $5.50 to $7; yearlings, $6 to $6.50; wethers, $6 to $6.15; ewes, $5 to $5.50; sheep, mixed, $3 to $5.75.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, June 18.—Beeves—Receipts, 3960. Steers, steady to firm; medium and common, slow; bulls, steady; cows, very dull; bologna cows, unsaleable; steers, $2 to $5.85; bulls, $3 to $4.40. Exports to-morrow, 1020 cattle and 3290 quarters of beef.

Calves—Receipts 6327; market, steady; veals, $5 to $7.75; culls, $4.50; buttermilks, $4 to $4.75.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 17,727 sheep, lower; lambs opened 10c to 25c lower; closed, fully 25c off, with some late sales of medium lambs 35c lower; yearlings, 25c to 40c off. Sheep, $4 to $5.75; choice handy wethers, $6; lambs, $7.25 to $8.65; choice early, at $8.75; yearlings, $4 to $7.

Hogs—Receipts, 12,918; market, steady at $6.90 to $7.10 for state hogs.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

Chicago, June 18.—Cattle—Receipts, 33,000; 10c to 15c lower; common to prime steers, $4 to $6; cows, $3 to $4.50; heifers, $2.75 to $5.25; bulls, $2.75 to $4.25; calves, $5.75 to $7.10; stockers and feeders, $2.75 to $4.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 45,000; strong to 5c higher; choice, prime, heavy, $6.65 to $6.70; medium to good, heavy, $6.60 to $6.65; butchers' weights, $6.62½ to $6.70; good to choice, heavy, mixed, $6.60 to $6.65; packing, $6.30 to $6.62½; sheep, $4.50 to $6.40; yearlings, $5.90 to $6.00; shorn lambs, $5.25 to $7.40.

CHEESE MARKETS.

Perth, June 18.—There were 2150 boxes of cheese boarded here to-day—1500 white and 650 colored. All sold. Price, 11c.

Surely.

"Tommy is such a sweet child," said a doting mother, "that I often think it will be a miracle if he lives to grow up."

"It will," said the candid neighbor, with a baleful gleam in his eye.

McINTOSH BROS.

MR. BORDEN ON DIVORCE

Suggests Joint Committee For Trial Court For Divorces.

Likewise Thinks an Officer Corresponding to the "King's Proctor" Should Intervene In Uncontested Cases—Col. Tisdale Thinks It Unfortunate That We Have Not a Divorce Court.

Ottawa, June 19.—In the House yesterday afternoon Mr. Northrup (East Hastings), moved that the MacIntosh divorce bill be referred back to the committee on private bills. Fifty members of that committee were absent when the Senate bill was rejected by a vote of 18 to 13. The Minister of Justice had voted with the minority. He submitted that the matter should receive more careful consideration.

Mr. Lancaster (Lincoln and Niagara) opposed the motion.

Wants a Divorce Court.

Col. Tisdale (Norfolk) thought the defendant was entitled to a vote of the full committee. Six other committees were in session at the time. He thought it unfortunate that we had not a divorce court to consider these cases.

Mr. Derbyshire (Brockville) also supported the motion.

The Senate was very careful and judicious in dealing with these cases.

Mr. Henderson (Halton) felt that in this case there had been a serious miscarriage of justice.

Mr. Alcorn (P. E. County) opposed the motion. There was no certainty of a larger attendance of the committee at a subsequent meeting.

Mr. Aylesworth Says Plainest Case.

Mr. Aylesworth stated that he had carefully read the evidence in the case. It was one of the plainest cases that he had ever seen. It was unfortunate that some members were called to attend other committees. The case was hurried through and the Speaker had no opportunity to be heard. While, as a rule, the House should sustain the judgment of a committee, yet he thought this case was an exception. Friends of the respondent were in consultation with members of the committee, and it certainly appeared as though some of the committee did not fully realize that they were acting in a judicial capacity.

The bill goes back to committee.

The Peer Divorce.

Another divorce case that occupied the house was letter G. of the Senate, entitled, "An act for the relief of John Albert Peer." The parties had been married and lived happily for twenty years. They had four children. Mr. Lancaster urged the House not to agree with the report of the Senate. The defendant had offered no evidence, but she had filed an affidavit stating that she had no means to make a defence. Divorces were increasing too rapidly. From 1874 to 1884 Canada granted nine divorces. In the one session of 1905 there were ten divorces, and at this session twenty case had come from the Senate.

Mr. Aylesworth reviewed the testimony. The respondent had left her husband and lived with her husband's cousin in London. Since then a child was born and registered by the woman as the cousin's child.

Mr. Borden's Idea.

R. L. Borden feared that all divorce cases were not heard and decided judicially. Lobbying was always objectionable, but in divorce cases it was especially odious. He suggested that the trial court for divorces be a joint committee of both Houses. He thought that some officer corresponding to the "King's Proctor" should intervene in uncontested cases so as to guard against collusion and to protect the public interest. So far as the pending bill was concerned he thought that the case was fully proved.

The bill passed.

Pension Funds Embezzled.

Before the orders of the day, Mr. Boyce (West Algoma) called attention to the defalcation of a certain Mr. McLean, who had embezzled some four thousand dollars of the pension funds for widows and orphans of pilots at North Sydney, Nova Scotia.

The Premier promised attention.

Col. Hughes "Too Previous."

Col. Sam Hughes enquired if there was any foundation for the newspaper statement that Mr. Aylesworth was about to resign.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier smilingly said that his hon. friend was "too previous."

Mr. Foster (North Toronto) called attention to the statement of Cinq-mars respecting his alleged anti-Catholic utterances in the recent London bye-election and entered a sweeping denial of the same.

G. T. P. Subsidiary Companies.

The bill to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Co. occupied the attention of the House this afternoon. It was objected that the Grand Trunk Pacific should build its own branches instead of incorporating a separate company.

Mr. Emmerson said that there was no new principle involved in the bill. Subsidiary companies had been repeatedly chartered for the C. P. R.

Mr. Pringle (Cornwall and Stormont) pointed out that the G. T. P., when incorporated, was to open up a new country. The branches provided for by this bill were really branches of branches and would closely parallel existing lines. For a distance of 415 miles these branches would run side by side with the C. P. R.

A Promise Violated.

In committing the country to the Grand Trunk Pacific enterprise it was repeatedly stated by the Premier, Mr. Fielding and others that it was not to come nearer than thirty miles to existing roads except at principal points. It was to be a "colonization line."

Mr. Emmerson replied that the policy of the Government had always been to permit railway companies to build branches when and where they pleased. The fact that such branches paralleled other roads was, in his opinion, immaterial.

A railroad only benefitted the country for about six miles on either side. The western people were demanding more roads and he would do nothing to prevent that demand being satisfied if any companies were prepared to meet it.

Oliver Isn't Telling.

In the House last night the Opposition pressed Mr. Oliver for some answer as to whether he intended to dismiss Mr. Preston. They were unable, however, to elicit any definite reply. He intimated that he might make a trip this summer to investigate at closer range. He was not satisfied with the conditions prevailing at our offices in England, but he was not prepared at present to say just what ought to be done.

Right to Regulate Questioned.

Ottawa, June 19.—The special committee to consider the proposed amendments to the Railway Act so as to include express and telephone companies under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission met yesterday morning and considered the bill introduced by Mr. Oliver (Prince Edward) to regulate express companies. F. H. Chrysler appeared for the C. P. R. and M. K. Cowan for the G. T. R.

Mr. Chrysler disputed the power of Parliament to regulate the tolls to be charged by express companies.

Because a Parliament had the right to incorporate companies it did not necessarily follow that it had the right to regulate them, too. The British North America Act left the control of property and civil rights to the provinces, and, in his judgment, a transaction between an express company and its customer was a civil contract. Therefore, the regulation of express rates and business belonged to the provinces.

Mr. Chrysler held that an express company was not an undertaking under the meaning of the B. N. A. Act.

W. F. Maclean (South York) insisted that Parliament had such power under the provisions of the B. N. A. Act granting jurisdiction to the Dominion Government over trade and commerce. The United States Congress had regulated the express companies under a constitutional grant to regulate commerce between the states.

Mr. Monk held that Parliament's full authority to regulate trade and commerce gave it the right to regulate express companies.

Sir Frederick Borden did not think that after Parliament had accepted the principle of Mr. Alcorn's bill this special committee had authority to deal with the question of jurisdiction.

On motion of Mr. Maclean the committee proceeded to discuss the various sections of the bill.

THREE WITNESSES.

Examined Monday At Hamilton In the Grocers' Guild Inquiry.

Hamilton, June 19.—Yesterday James Irving, Toronto, agent for W. H. Dunn, Montreal, who handled Babbitt's soap and other goods, said at the Grocers' Guild inquiry that after an argument with H. C. Beckett he refused to sell goods to the Wholesale Grocers' Co., Hamilton, because Mr. Beckett said the company was made up of retail grocers. He said that if he sold to that company the guild would have refused to buy from him.

W. J. Graham, an Owen Sound canner, admitted that he engaged in business, although he was the collector of inland revenue at that town.

R. L. Innes, secretary of the Canners, Limited, admitted that his company had an agreement with the guild, but was not bound to sell to only guild members. His firm had refused to sell the Wholesale Grocers' Co., Hamilton, because he had made enquiries and had found that it was a combination of retailers. The company declined to sell to similar companies.

CHEAP MONEY FOR MONTREAL.

Government to Renew Harbor Bonds at Half Prevailing Interest.

Montreal, June 19.—Last evening Hon. Mr. Brodeur said, at the banquet given in the Drill Hall to the Minister of Marine:

"Mr. Prefontaine was always faithful to the Liberal cause and placed his generosity at the disposal of his political friends. We felt sorry that, after he had disappeared, his opponents tried to investigate his administration. The people were shocked at such conduct, and I certainly did my duty in denouncing such action."

There were about a thousand at the tables, presided over by Premier Gouin.

Speaking of the port of Montreal, Hon. Mr. Brodeur announced that the Government would soon introduce legislation to redeem certain harbor bonds which pay 6 per cent. and are due in a month. The Government would advance the money at 3 per cent. and thus reduce the port's liabilities.

All Willing to Help Canada.

Ottawa, June 19.—Recently the superintendent of the commercial agencies addressed circulars to all British consuls-general and consuls in the United States, with a view of getting their assistance unofficially in the interests of Canadian trade. Replies have been received from the British consuls at Chicago, Boston, New York, Galveston, Portland, Baltimore, San Francisco, Philadelphia, New Orleans and Savannah, all agreeing to do what they can to further Canadian interests in the localities which they represent.

Garden Party as a Bribe.

London, June 19.—As a result of a petition, Thomas Charles Aga-Robartes, eldest son of Viscount Clifden, member of Parliament (Liberal) for Cornwall, has been unseated by the election courts owing to illegal practices. The entertainment of voters at a garden party was the principal item in the complaint.

Granted an Injunction.

Toronto, June 19.—The Keewatin Power Co. was yesterday successful in securing an injunction to restrain the municipality of Kenora from proceeding with the building of a municipal power plant on the east branch of the Winnipeg River. The date of trial was fixed at July 12, at Kenora.

Mackay to Contest Renfrew.

Pembroke, June 19.—Albert Mackay, Liberal, son of the late T. L. Mackay, ex-M. P., was nominated for the House of Commons bye-election here yesterday for the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. P. White, Conservative, recently deceased.

THE UNIVERSITY BOARD

John Hoskin, K. C., Is Appointed As Its Chairman.

The Twenty Men Who Will Have the Government, Conduct, Management and Control of the University of Toronto and University College Announced by Premier Whitney—Dr. Goldwin Smith Appointed.

Toronto, June 20.—The names of the board of governors of Toronto University were announced yesterday afternoon by Premier Whitney after a lengthy meeting of the Cabinet. These are the men who have been selected to control the affairs of Toronto University:

Two years—John Hoskin, K. C., (chairman board of governors), Hon. S. H. Blake, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, J. L. Englehart (Petrolea), Rev. Father Teefy, Judge Colin Snider (Hamilton).

Four years— B. E. Walker, G. R. R. Cockburn, C. D. Massey, Rev. D. Bruce Macdonald, W. T. White, E. C. Whitney (Ottawa).

Six years—Dr. Goldwin Smith, Chief Justice Moss, E. B. Osler, M. P., J. W. Flavelle, Rev. J. A. Macdonald, Hugh T. Kelly.

To these are to be added two ex-officio members of the board, the president, who is now Principal Loudon, and the chancellor, who is Sir William Ralph Meredith.

The board comprises twenty members, eighteen of whom are appointed by the Government.

Only three of the eighteen appointees are understood to have been asked by the Premier to accept positions on the board. For all that is known, some of them may decline to act.

Powers of Board.

The powers of the board of governors are wide. Section 37 of the new act says: "The government, conduct, management and control of the university and of University College and of the property, revenues, business and affairs thereof, shall be vested in the board."

On the board the Anglicans have the largest representation, with six, while the Presbyterians have five and the Methodists three. Of the others, two are Catholics, and one, the chairman, is a member of the Plymouth Brethren community. Prof. Goldwin Smith occupies an independent position.

Rumor Denied.

Denver, Colo., June 20.—President James H. Baker of the University of Colorado, yesterday authorized a denial that the presidency of Toronto University has been offered him.

INDIAN SLAYER CAUGHT.

Johnnie Jackum Will Pay Penalty For Four Killings.

Victoria, B. C., June 20.—John Jackum, who killed Azel Smalle over a card game, Monday night on Reed Island, was surrounded and captured while asleep in the garret of a deserted house at 7 o'clock yesterday morning.

Jackum will be taken to Vancouver for trial in September.

This makes the fourth murder that the notorious Indian has committed in 24 years.

Swift Justice In Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, June 20.—John Joseph Kean, the kidnapper of Freddie Muth, was given a hearing yesterday and held without bail to await the action of the grand jury. The grand jury found a true bill against Kean, and he was given an immediate trial and convicted in less than an hour. Judge Sulzberger sentenced the prisoner to twenty years. From the time of Kean's arrest until he was on his way to the penitentiary to begin sentence less than 24 hours had elapsed.

Double Rescue From Drowning.

Peterboro, June 20.—Harvey and Wilfred Adams, twin sons of Ald. Frank Adams, were bravely rescued from drowning Monday night. One boy fell off a raft in the Otonabee River and the other jumped in to same him, neither could swim. Herbert Rogers, the 11-year-old son of R. B. Rogers, late superintending engineer of Trent Canal, jumped in and saved both lads by taking one in each hand and swimming to shore.

Floored by Iron Bar.

Walkerville, June 20.—Monday night, Winifred Andrews, son of Supt. Andrews of the Wire Fence Co., was standing near a rapidly moving belt, holding in his hand a bar of iron about two feet long. A pulley in the belt caught the bar and caused it to strike him a hard blow on the head. He is in a dangerous condition.

Mr. McDougall Improves.

Quebec, June 20.—J. Lorne McDougall, ex-auditor-general of the Dominion of Canada, who was stricken with paralysis at the Chateau Frontenac Monday night, was much better last night, resting easier, and is expected that he will be out in ten days.

Building Collapses.

Hamburg, June 20.—A building in course of construction fell in yesterday. Six workmen were taken out dead, ten were injured, and three are still buried in the ruins. The disaster is attributed to the steel used in the building being too light.

Gave Life For Brother.

Manor, Sask., June 20.—Two young men, Joseph and William Carpenter, were drowned while bathing in Antler Creek at Cantal Monday. One brother lost his life in attempting to rescue the other.

High Finance Indeed!

Hon. Mr. Emmerson makes the announcement that the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway are expected to pay the running expenses of the road this year. The country will be delighted if an improvement is being made in the management of that road, for room for substantial improvement there certainly was and is. It is pointed out by the Montreal Gazette that no minister is entitled to credit for conducting the Intercolonial in a satisfactory manner until after he has brought the road through an election. Every election year since the Liberals took office the deficit on the Intercolonial has been increased by thousands of dollars That point, however, might be left without cavil if the road were actually being well managed in any year. When the estimates for the Government railway are examined with a little care it is easily seen how the Minister of Railways is able to make a showing even so favorable as to have the earnings of the road barely pay the running expenses. It is accomplished by decreasing the running expenses. That sounds like good management, and we might commend the minister for economy until we learn that running expenses are kept down by charging everything possible, and a good deal that might have been deemed impossible, to capital account. A few items of the lot are, moving an old restaurant building at a cost of $300, moving a freight shed and baggage room $150, moving a freight shed and putting in a cedar foundation $240, roofing a freight shed $1,280. A little more and we should have the salaries of the employees and the coal for the engines charged to capital account.

But the Intercolonial Railway, says the Woodstock Express, is not the only branch of the public service which is so conducted. In the Militia Department it is shown in the Auditor-General's report that 239 bearing reins were purchased at $1.17 each and charged against the national debt. Wool mops to the number of 500 were considered a good enough investment to put the country 55 cents in debt for each of them. Similarly 1,550 black leggings are charged up to capital account. The list of such absurdities might be continued almost indefinitely. It should not be concluded, however, without including an item of $12.50 for hat and coat hooks for the Parliament building at Ottawa. Such an important improvement to public works could not be paid from current revenue.

All this may be good bookkeeping, if the object of bookkeeping is to make things look as well as possible. It is, however, ruinously bad finance No wonder the Finance Minister can talk of surpluses. He would be a poor politician if he could not, when a surplus can be made by just charging up the necessary amount to capital account. Talk about a growing time! It is no wonder that the national debt of the Dominion was increased by five and a half million dollars in the fiscal year ending with June, 1905.

If all this expenditure is necessary, and it probably is as long as we have the Laurier administration in control of the purse, at least let us pay for it now, and know what we are doing. We are probably as well able to pay for freight shed foundations, and window blinds, and coat hooks, as the people of future generations will be. Besides, they may have a few of their own to buy.

UNEQUALLED SERVICE.

In all the world over, among all the railways of all nations, there is one line whose service stands pre-eminent—The Lake Shore Railway. Luxurious comfort, speed, safety, punctuality, personal attention and service, have here reached their highest development. Lake Shore trains run on time and when connections are to be made the schedule is so arranged that long waits and delays are avoided. In a word, here is a railway whose service in every respect leaves nothing to be desired. Travellers of experience know this to be so and all are careful to see that their tickets read "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." You can obtain full information by addressing J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O., or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The wedding situation has grown brisk again. The beauteous blushing brides were quite numerous today.

• • •

The Empress of Britain, which sails on Saturday next for Liverpool, will carry quite a contingent of Belleville people. It will give King Edward quite a flutter when he hears they are a-coming.

"O. K.," said the Municipal Commission. Now go ahead and give the people their gas as fast as possible.

• • •

Entrance examinations for the children are next. Then everybody must stand around and help Johnny get his name in the paper.

• • •

The saddest man in Ottawa—
That city of renown—
Was Aylesworth when Sir Wilfrid said:
"Go way back and sit down."

• • •

A Rochester man, it is said, changes color with the weather. Some Kingston girls change color whether the weather changes or not.

A Japanese expert who came over to study the effects of the San Francisco earthquake says there is no danger of a severe shock in the near future. The Japs must pretend to rule the inside of the world as well as the out.

The reserve squad in a New York police station turned out the other evening on receipt of a report that "a policeman is in serious trouble" at an address given. The address proved to be a church, where the officer was being married to a young woman whom he once rescued from a gang of thugs. Who was the joke on—the squad or the cop who was getting married?

A postal card mailed in Philadelphia twenty years ago has just been received at its destination in Camden. That beats any record ever made by the Belleville post office.

A Denver lady says that marriage is only an incident in the life of man. But most people who have been through it will agree that it is rather an impressive incident.

• • •

Two men tried to hold up a Lehigh Valley engineer last Sunday morning by threatening him with a club as he was crossing a vacant lot on his way home, but he did not stop. The only way to stop an engineer is to give the proper signal.

• • •

A Hamilton family were poisoned by eating sardines, but will recover. The Hamilton sardines are bad medicine, especially those in the Times office.

The following, from the Brockville Times, applies with equal strength to Belleville: "A new $10,000 gasoline launch was recently blown into bits by an explosion on board caused by corroded pipes. There is a whole fleet of these launches owned in Brockville. Are they taking care? There is going to be a bad accident some fine day if great care is not taken."

The Ottawa Citizen editorially rejoices in the fact that the Cheese Board of that city boarded 1564 boxes of cheese last Saturday. That's pretty fair for a little place like Ottawa, but here in Belleville we boarded 4340 boxes, and never turned a hair. That's going a few, eh?

Assuming cheese to be worth $10 per box, which amount it does not quite reach, the neat sum of $43,400 was received by the farmers of this district for their cheese on Saturday last. This average for the season would give the sellers represented on the Belleville Cheese Board not far from three-quarters of a million dollars for their output.

It is recalled by the Montreal Trade Bulletin that in 1879 cheese was bought in the Montreal market and in the country at five and six cents per pound, and that in the fall and winter of that season cheese advanced to twelve and a half cents per pound, giving a profit to holders of $4.50 to $5 per box. One Montreal firm cleaned up $400,000, "every dollar of which it lost two years after."

In this connection the following remarks of the Ottawa Citizen are freighted with hard common sense, and should be taken to heart by the factorymen of this district;

"Factorymen are making good big money at present prices and they should labor rather to merit their continuance by producing a prime article of cheese and guarding against any deterioration of the product which they offer to the British consumer. Only the best quality of milk should be accepted at the factory and the utmost care exercised in making and curing the cheese and in having the product reach the consumer in finest condition. If there be proper care in these respects it may reasonably be predicted that money in ever increasing volume will flow from the British consumer to the Canadian producer for his dairy products."

"Wait a moment," said our reporter, as he came into the sanctum and started to remove his collar, "there's a lot of rice down the back of my neck." He had just been to a wedding.

• • •

And after all, plaintively says the Peterboro Review, would life be worth living if it were not for the fishing season and the opportunity to tell fish stories. Surely not.

• • •

Well, well, well
Did you hear the wedding bell?

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

The regular meeting of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A. will be held Thursday at 3.30 p.m., at the home of Mrs. W. W. Chown.

The Legion Of Frontiersmen.

With preferential tariffs, Imperial penny postage, and an inter-colonial cable service, Canada has definitely taken the lead in promoting the development of the Empire. It is quite natural, therefore, that the new scheme of the Legion of Frontiersmen should be of Canadian origin. The Founder, Mr. Roger Pocock, based the ideas underlying the Legion upon his experience during many years work in some 30 trades in the Canadian wilderness. Among the first adherents to the cause was Reg. No. 1 of the Royal N.W.M.P., Colonel S. B. Steele, who commanded Strathcona's Horse. Since then Canadians have been very numerous and active among the workers of the Legion.

The proposal, which now has the full approval of the Secretary of State for War, is for a creation of what will in practice be the Intelligence Arm of the Forces of War. It will be entirely civilian, self-supporting and self-governing; a society of men who have been trained by working, hunting or fighting, in wild countries, or at sea. Its local commands scattered throughout the Empire, are forming rapidly, which in practice are rifle, athletic, and sporting associations, subscribing for each member $2.46 cents a year to the central fund of the Legion.

The training will be not by drill, which produces discipline for fighting, but by competition, which produces the initiative required for the Intelligence Service and the Commands, competing one with another in all warlike exercises, will not only find their own leaders, but will select the best men for active service.

As men captured in the field out of uniform are killed as spies, a uniform will be necessary, based on the customary dress of the Frontier; hat, kerchief round the neck, shirt and overalls, which is a cheaper and better dress than the usual military kit.

With permission of the authorities the men will train in shooting on rifle club lines, and in time the corps will develop active service contingents, equipped, armed and mounted, either for home defence or for the general defence of the Empire.

So it is hoped that the Legion will produce a unit of local guides and interpreters, for every possible seat of war; a strong corps of Frontier scouts, a corps of sharpshooters to support them, and a pioneer branch to handle every known means of transport, whether pack-horses, railroad engine, motor car, or boat The corps of Voyageurs supplied by Canada for the Nile campaigns is such a unit as the Legion will be able to supply in any emergency.

So the work of the Legion in the field will be to guide the field force, to watch the enemy's movements, to strike with lightning raids behind him and blow up his line of communication, but not to fight him, because that is the work of the army.

The Council of the Legion has headquarters at 6 Adam St., Adelphi, London, and is trying to secure an honorary organizer in every Canadian district.

Patriots are offered the chance of rendering magnificent services to the Empire.

Some Slips of the Tongue.

Never use the word "liable" when you mean "likely." Do not say, for instance, that "he is liable to come in at any moment." "Liable" implies misfortune and means "exposed to," "subject to," "in danger of."

Why do most of us speak of "unraveling a mystery?" Any good dictionary shows that "ravel" means "to unweave." You "ravel" a mystery, therefore, when you solve it. In "Hamlet" Shakespeare says: "Make you to ravel all this matter out."

If you and your friend Smith know a man called Jones, do not speak to Smith of "our mutual friend"—meaning Jones. Jones is your common friend. If you are friendly to Smith and Smith is friendly to you, you and Smith are "mutual friends," but that is the only sense in which the term may be rightly used.

Tiny Flower Sachets.

Quaint little flower sachets are made of bits of ribbon twisted and knotted and touched ever so lightly with brush and water colors until they are realistic in the daintiest sort of way. Pansies, daisies, great pale violets and the prettiest of all, orchids, are all made, each concealing the tiniest bag packed with a faint, delicious perfume. They are for tucking in a pile of snowy handkerchiefs or in veil or glove or collar case or even to be attached to the front of a corset by way of decoration.

Pictures.

In arranging pictures it should be remembered that oils, etchings and water colors should not hang together and that the drawing room walls are not to be packed with canvases if one is fortunate enough to be able to buy them. Two or three fine oil paintings are about all any room can stand, too many giving the effect of a picture gallery.

The Ontario Deaf Mute Association.

NEXT MEETING WILL BE IN TORONTO — FINE ADDRESS BY MR. BALIS.

Tuesday morning's session of the Ontario Deaf Mutes' Association was opened with prayer by Mr. P. Fraser.

This was followed by a very interesting address by Mr. Wm. Kay, a very intelligent man, who is deaf, dumb and almost blind, reminiscent of his past, and of incidents in the lives of prominent deaf men who had materially influenced his own secluded life.

Mr. Balis gave an address on "The "Pursuit of Happiness," as follows:

"THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS."

Happiness pursued—flees: always just beyond reach, while the stumbling-blocks alone confront us. We hope to find it in a lump, as the miner hopes to find gold, whereas it is intended to reach us little by little, so lasting longer and, according to the law of contrasts, seeming richer and pleasanter for the intervening ills of life.

Some say that wealth confers it, that business prosperity and social station are its conditions, that longings satisfied, desires accomplished, constitute happiness, or more properly felicity.

My notion of felicity is that it depends upon the kind of desires, the character of the longings to be satisfied, and the aspirations to be fulfilled. It is a mental, spiritual state, not an animal, a material, condition.

A Nero, a glutton, a drunkard, a savage may be happy, yet neither can enjoy felicity; none of them possess the power to rise above bodily and mental suffering, or even the momentary ills of life.

They cannot display the majesty of mind and spirit that can ignore them and go forward rejoicing, not carelessly, contemptuously, through torpor, but bravely, soulfully buoyed upon hope. None but those who exercise active Christian principles can enjoy complete felicity. Wealth and station are not necessary to it. They are valuable agents in enlarging the sphere of that usefulness, which is characteristic of those who enjoy felicity.

The greatest and most lasting felicity is often found among the poor. Love is there tried and refined; it is strengthened and broadened and deepened. It reaches farther when it stretches forth its hands from the abodes of poverty, and takes hold with stronger grasp, for it knows where to reach and how. It finds deepest and richest soil in the garden of hearts; sweetens the bread of labor and fans the brow of toil with soothing wings. Its rose-chain holds, as with fetters of steel the passions and impulses that, without it, would work dire evil in the world. Love is the mainspring wherever good is done or felicity enjoyed.

Most of you have homes. History shows the evil result of a lack of homes, of centres where families grow up together amid the thousand influences that mould us into good men and women, preserve the state and country from the evils of anarchy and disruption, and our firesides from irreligion and discord, making our country a haven of refuge for countless thousands of down-trodden, homeless victims of despotism and intolerance.

In our homes may true felicity be cultivated, for it is not found ready-made. Our pursuit of it is simply cultivation, as one would cultivate a garden of roses, not thornless roses, either, and we shall obtain more or less of it according to our skill in plucking the roses from among the thorns.

In the first place look upon home as your abiding place, not a tavern, and your family as its keepers. Let your desires be spiritual and intellectual rather than animal. Make home pleasant, first, for yourselves, then, since our friends are chosen for similarity of tastes it will be pleasant for them also. Don't keep a parlor for company and live in the kitchen yourselves. Aim at neatness and health. Do not emulate a richer neighbor when you cannot afford it, or enjoy the gratification when secured. There is a thorn already in our garden of roses, a source of toil and vexation and care for your family, reaching naturally upon yourself.

Let mirth be heard in your homes. It is good for you all and does unknown good to many a passerby, bringing answering smiles to their faces. Children reared in a joyous home will seldom stray very widely among the doubtful pleasures of the outer world. A half-hour of mirth at evening will blot a day of sorrow from childish hearts and even from our own.

Genuine love will accomplish wonders in the home; indeed, it is the keystone of the structure. It renders poverty less poor and lightens the cares of providing. Love at home and for home will sustain the worker through the day, far more than hope of gain, and often more than food. First, the love for God, then love for wife, for family, and fellow-men must follow. Mutual concessions will settle all differences; a kiss, a kind word or look will take away the sting of rudeness or abuse.

In my experience, I think the homes of the deaf are happier than a like proportion among the hearing; more contented and satisfying both in appearance and in management. In appearance, because all their pleasure in the realm of beauty is acquired through the eye. In management, because of the greater sympathy and mutual co-operation. Their resources are so limited and circumstances so narrowed in most cases, that they are compelled to make the most of very little and are easily satisfied.

Economy, not stinginess, is an important factor in maintaining our hold on felicity. Consider whether you can do without a thing, and if so do it. If not get it, and of the best your purse can afford. The best is always the cheapest. Learn to wait.

Economy in use is as important as economy in buying. Waste is worse than extravagance, because money squandered helps some one in the course of exchanges, but waste does not. Every created thing was intended for use, nothing for abuse. When your want comes your friends will remember your waste and be less ready to aid and sympathize with you. Half the ills of the poor are due to waste or unskilled ignorance in time of plenty. Economy united with cleanliness and good conduct, win for us many kind words and a good report in the community.

Live as well and abundantly as you can. Entertain your friends. Be snug and cosy. Don't cumber your homes with useless glitter and ornament, causing ceaseless labor for your housekeeper, and make your children hate a home that is full of "don'ts," and where they fear to move about lest they do some damage to the bric-a-brac. Comfort before all. Luxury is not comfort. Luxury can be dispensed with, but comfort never; it is a necessity.

Be prudent. Dare to say no, and dare to mean no. Not timid, prudent and bold. Prudent as to spending, looking ahead; prudent as to choice of associates; you may marry and some association prove embarrassing, some so-called friend not just the right kind to make your wife's acquaintance. You cannot be too careful and may save yourselves some very unhappy hours. So, be "wise in time."

Look upon your wives as partners in life's lottery, understanding that on your mutual effort depends the prize or the blank you draw, whether you obtain felicity or misery and disappointment.

As I said before, it is the character of the desires gratified that determines for felicity or infelicity. To be and do good, give pleasure and profit to others about us; to win the love of others and their respect for those Christian principles by which we profess to be actuated, which is gratifying to us and redounds to the glory of Him in whom we live and act. These desires can be gratified, and when they are, buoyed upon faith and with hope for our beacon light, we may go on rejoicing, for then we possess felicity. Start right, with an intelligent view of the means and end desired, and just be happy.

The Treasurer's report showed the association to be in a good financial condition.

The remainder of the forenoon was taken up in discussing several amendments to the by-laws of the association.

After the opening of the afternoon session, invitations to hold the next convention were extended from many places, and after discussion by those favoring each place, it was decided to hold the 11th convention of the association at Toronto, although Ottawa made a good run for it, coming within sixteen votes of the winner. After this the convention adjourned, to meet again in the evening, when resolutions were enthusiastically proposed and unanimously carried, thanking all who had in any way contributed to the success of the convention and expressing the appreciation of the members of the action of the Government in placing the Institution under the Education Department.

The rest of the evening was devoted to pantomimes and other social enjoyments.

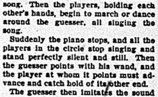
A PRETTY EXPERIMENT.

How to Start a Gas Works With a Long Stemmed Clay Pipe.

Show your little friends some evening when you have a party at your house how coal gas is made. All that you will need is a clay pipe and some plaster of paris. Fill the pipe with soft coal dust from the scuttle and plug up the top of the bowl very carefully with plaster. When the covering is dry, place the bowl of the pipe inside of the stove, where there is a hot fire, allowing the stem to stick out. In three or four minutes strike a match and hold it to the stem of the pipe, and, presto, there will be a steady blaze of gas. If there is no stove at hand, the pipe may be heated over a gas jet, but it will take longer—probably ten minutes—to start the gas from the coal.



THE GAS WORKS IN OPERATION.

When the gas is all burned from the stem of the pipe, cut out the plaster, and in the bottom of the bowl you will have a little coke.

Nearly all of the gas used in great cities is made exactly in this way, only on a very much larger scale.

GUESSING.

An Indoor Game In Which There Is Plenty of Fun.

A party of boys and girls may have a good deal of fun in playing this game. The first thing is to select one of their number as the "guesser" and then to blindfold him and give him a walking stick to serve as a wand.

The other players now form a circle around him, and some one at the piano strikes up the air of some familiar song. Then the players, holding each other's hands, begin to march or dance around the guesser, all singing the song.

Suddenly the piano stops, and all the players in the circle stop singing and stand perfectly silent and still. Then the guesser points with his wand, and the player at whom it points must advance and catch hold of its other end.

The guesser then imitates the sound of some bird or animal, and the player holding the other end of the wand must make the same sound, trying to disguise his or her voice so as not to be identified. The guesser may make three trials of this kind, and if not successful in telling who the player is he may touch him with the end of the wand here and there, but the player may crouch or stand on tiptoe to deceive the guesser as to his height.

If the guesser calls the right name the player takes his place in the circle, and the game begins again with the new guesser. If he fails to guess the name the game goes on until he succeeds.

The Squarest Word.

The squarest word in any language is the Latin time, which, in connection with the three other Latin words, item, meti and emit, can be read, when written as a square, in every possible direction, forward, backward, down and up, thus:

T I M E
I T E M
M E T I
E M I T

Egyptian Borrowers.

The Egyptians had a very remarkable ordinance to prevent persons from borrowing imprudently. An Egyptian was not permitted to borrow without giving to his creditors in pledge the body of his father. It was deemed both an impiety and an infamy not to redeem so sacred a pledge. A person who died without discharging that duty was deprived of the customary honors paid to the dead.

Conundrums.

Where are two heads better than one? In a barrel.

What has a branch, but has no leaves? River.

What are the poles that nobody climbs? North and south poles.

What capes are not worn? Cape Cod and Cape Ann.

What has a top that cannot spin? A mountain.

Dolly's Ailments.

I'm worried 'bout my dolly;
I'm afraid she isn't well,
But exactly what the matter is
It's very hard to tell.

She hasn't any appetite,
She never eats a thing,
No matter what a feast you spread
Or tempting dainty bring.

And, then, it's very curious
Why day and night and all
She sits and stares before her,
And to sleep she'll never fall

Unless I take her in my arms
Or lay her on her bed
With her toes so high she's nearly
Standing straight upon her head.

I think I'll tell the doctor
Like my mamma does for me.
I'm getting very anxious,
And I'd like for him to see

If he hasn't got a medicine
To make my dolly grow
As strong and plump and hearty
As her mother is, you know.

LITTLE BELL BIOGRAPHIES

Haydn

FRANCIS JOSEPH HAYDN, born at Rohrau 1732, died at Vienna 1809, was another of the 18th century musicians who became famous in their 'teens. His name is inseparably and popularly linked with that of George Frederick Handel in that mode of dramatic music called Oratorio. Handel is the composer of the incomparable "Messiah," and Haydn of the equally incomparable "Creation." This oratorio, written in his 60th year, is to-day as popular as 100 years ago.

Haydn's compositions comprise almost every form of vocal and instrumental music, yet his chief distinction is not in oratorio. His rank in the musical world is determined by his service to instrumental music. He fixed the form of the sonata and symphony which Beethoven (who called him "Papa" Haydn) perfected in beauty and expressiveness, for one thing substituting the light, gay Scherzo for Haydn's stately Minuets. As the musical father of Beethoven, Haydn is perhaps justly styled the father of classical instrumental music.

For the piano he composed 44 sonatas. The wonder is how in those days of the harpsichord, clavier and spinet—small and thin-voiced instruments—the composers could conceive and write sonatas the beauties of which could be revealed only by some such perfect instrument as

The Bell Piano

Distinguished in every mechanical device, and producing a full, rich Singing Tone, the Bell Art Piano enables the performer to overcome every technical difficulty and thus to express the pure music of the composer with the utmost perfection and beauty. Both for the home and for the concert hall, it is The Player's Perfect Piano.

Involving Less Trouble

Mrs. Jennie Lee Ondego had just returned from her summer vacation.

"My, Goodness.' she exclaimed, as she inspected the alterations that had been made in the house during her absence. "This isn't the kind of Wall Paper I wanted. It will not harmonize with my complexion at all."

"Well," irritably answered her husband, "you can change your complexion more cheaply than I can repaper this house.'

It was her husband's doings; he knew much more about banking than about decorating.

Had he only been shrewd enough to have employed a good decorator and left the decorating in his hands there would have been no error—the shrewd decorator would have learned of necessary details the banker would not think of and there is so much in knowing how. The decorator would have made equally bad blunders in carrying out the banker's business.

SIDNEY CROSSING.

June 18.—The funeral services of the late Mrs. Russell were conducted at the family residence this afternoon by Rev. Mr. Wilkins, of Trenton. Deceased who was in her 77th year, was a devout member of the Presbyterian Church of Trenton, and a woman highly respected by all. A large family are left to mourn the loss of a fond and loving mother to whom as friends and neighbors we extend our heartfelt sympathies. The remains were interred in White's Church burial ground.

Mr and Mrs. Webster Hyde, of Trenton, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Judson Kelley.

Mrs. J. N. Young has been spending the past week with friends in Belleville.

Misses May Hall and Nina Palmer are delegates from White's Church Epworth League to the Summer school at 12 o'Clock Point.

Mr. and Mrs. Burl. Fanning, of Wellman's Corners, are visiting friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. John Ketcheson, of Bethel, are visiting at the homes of their sons, Messrs Seldon and Manchester Ketcheson.

The annual summer meetings of the West Hastings' Woman's Institute were held on Thursday and Friday at the homes of Mrs. Milton Vanderwater, Centenary, and Mrs. Manchester Ketcheson's, Harder's. The lady delegates Mrs. Purvis and Miss Bella Miller, of Guelph, gave very interesting addresses and demonstrations which were helpful to all. The President, Mrs. Nicholson, and Mrs. Farley, president of East Northumberland branch, also made a few pointed remarks. The meetings were indeed beneficial to all.

Mrs. Geo. Cox, of Trenton, has been spending a few days with her sister, Mrs. G. Finkle.

Mr. Charles Moon is enjoying a month's visit to Winnipeg and other western points.

Mrs. Purvis and Miss Miller, of Guelph, were entertained at the homes of Mrs. D. Hyde and Mrs. S. Ketcheson during their stay here.

TIMELY TOPICS.

A TOILET TRAGEDY.

(Baltimore American.)

(The news of the day reports the case of a girl in Illinois who broke her arm while trying to fasten a waist, which buttoned in the back.)

Her new waist a thing was of beauty and style,
All white silk and ribbon and lace;
'Twas made with a yoke full of butterfly bows,
And its fit was a marvel of grace.
In fact, only eyes of a feminine cast
Could of all its perfections keep track;
It had a blouse dip and sleeves made for long gloves,
And it buttoned all way down the back.

"No girl on the block has a waist that's so fine,"
She murmured with fast swelling pride;
"Tis pity to waste it to graduate in,
'Tis just lovely enough for a bride."
Then she started to put on this most exquisite waist.
With of conquering visions no lack,
But struck a bad snag when she tackled the job
Of buttoning the thing down the back.

She squirmed and she wriggled, she twisted and turned,
She bent till her nose touched the floor,
Then, reversing her spine, touched her heels with her head,
While the buttons played tag till she swore.
She cut letter "S's" all over the room,
She writhed like a man on the rack;
Her contortions would gain her a job in the show,
While buttoning that waist down the back.

She waltzed like a windmill, she danced the can-can,
She wheeled like a cartwheel about,
And desperately tried on herself Jiu-Jitsu,
To turn herself quite inside out.
She curled round her arm in one last frantic clutch;
Like a pistol shot came a loud crack,
For nature gave way—she had broken her bones
But not buttoned her waist down the back.

The French flag has been hoisted in the town of Trapani, and a torpedo boat from which the populace attempted to haul the national flag hastily left the port. Minister of Finance Fielding has at last introduced a bill in Parliament giving power to the Finance Minister and Receiver-General to redeem worn silver, bronze and copper coins with new ones. These old coins would be taken at par at the department and new ones given for them. This did not refer to mutilated coins. It was an offence against the law to mutilate coins, and therefore they could not be taken in exchange and thus legislation became necessary.

Newport, Rhode Island, a city of 25,000 inhabitants, has adopted a scheme of civic government which seems to be based on the good old system of "every elector an office holder." The old town meeting idea is the basis for the new charter, but it has been amended and improved. Now the city is ruled by a council of 20 members, 12 Republicans and 8 Democrats. In future the Council will consist of 105 non-partisan members, 39 to be elected from each of the five wards. A Board of Aldermen will be retained for executive work, and the mayor's powers will be greatly increased.

Well informed Canadian railway men attributed the invasion of the Northwest by the Hill system to a realization by Mr. Hill that the day is fast approaching when the Canadian prairies will be called on to supply the wheat that the Minneapolis mills will require for home consumption. The Northwestern States are not maintaining their position as wheat-growing areas. The land has been cropped for so many consecutive years that its fertility is decreasing, and there is a decided movement from wheat-raising to mixed farming. At the same time the demands of the home market are becoming more persistent. It is quite within the bounds of probability, then, that Canada will within a few years be the source of much of the supply of wheat demanded by the Minneapolis millers. And "Jim" Hill wishes to be the carrier.

The surplus in the Post Office Department is largely the result of the greater prosperity in the country. The deficit of former years was caused very largely by the needs of the Northwest. Postal facilities were extended by the Conservative Government to localities, having few settlers at wide distances apart. It was the proud boast of that Government that wherever the smallest settlement was formed, postal advantages were freely afforded. It was properly and wisely regarded as a means of making the settlers in remote parts of the country contented with their lot, and of encouraging immigrants to battle with the difficulties of an isolated existence. All this was done at immense cost to the department, but it was well done. The result has proven that this money, as well as the other large sums called for in organizing the Northwest, was a profitable investment. Immigration has poured in. The corner settlement has become a thriving village, the village a town, the town a city. Profit has accrued to the Post Office as it has to the mercantile and manufacturing world by this development in the Northwest.

Flakes of Dandruff on the Collar and Shoulders of a Gentleman In Full Dress.

This is the thing you quite frequently see in the ball-room—a man's black dress-coat literally covered with dandruff.

It must be annoying to the wearer, and certainly not a pleasant thing to observe. But dandruff can be eradicated. It is a germ disease that will some day cause baldness.

Newbro's Herpicide kills the hair-destroying germ, and stimulates the hair to a rich, abundant growth; it does more—keeps the hair soft and pliant.

Furthermore, Herpicide is a most pleasant toilet accessory; of pleasing odor, and cooling to the scalp.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

THE CHAMELEON.

It Has Two Complete and Independent Nervous Systems.

There are few instances of double birth in which two individuals are inseparably joined together, but among animals it is a common occurrence. A case in point is the chameleon, long famous for its power of changing color.

The nervous centers in one lateral half of the chameleon go on independently of those in the other. Notwithstanding the strictly symmetrical construction of the animal as to its two halves, they move quite independently of one another and convey separate impressions to their respective centers of perception. The consequence is that when the animal is agitated its movements resemble those of two animals, or, rather, perhaps, two halves of animals glued together. Each half wishes to go its own way, and there is no concordance of action. The chameleon, therefore, is the only four legged vertebrate that is unable to swim. It becomes so frightened when dropped into water that all faculty of concentration is lost, and the creature tumbles about as if in a state of intoxication.

The chameleon, moreover, may be fast asleep on one side and wide awake on the other. Cautiously approached at night with a candle so as not to awaken the whole animal at once, the eye turned toward the light will open and begin to move and the corresponding side to change color, whereas the other side will remain for a longer or shorter time in a torpid, motionless and unchanged state with its eye fast shut.—Exchange.

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton.

DIET DELUSIONS.

They Come Down to Us From the Old Barbarous Tribes.

Some diet delusions are of most modern date, while others are of most respectable antiquity. Among the latter is that very ancient survival, the notion that particular foods are "good" for particular things or effects.

This is an almost direct descendant of the notion, held with greater or less unanimity by nearly all savage and barbarous tribes, that the flesh or viscera of birds and animals possessing particular qualities will be likely to produce the same qualities in those who eat them.

Thus Nero used to banquet on nightingales' tongues in the hope of improving his voice, and the savage cut out and devoured the heart of the bear, the liver of the buffalo, etc., believing that the strength and courage of these animals would thereby be transferred to himself.

It is probable that the most gruesome of ancestral rites—cannibalism—was largely due to the same belief, although, of course, in Neanderthal days primitive man would have no more hesitancy about eating his enemy after he had killed him than he would in devouring a bear or a deer.

In fact, the early converts of the missionaries in the South Sea islands referred to their favorite dish as "long pig." Every known race has at some time been cannibal.—McClure's Magazine.

Magyar Music.

Of Magyar art music seems to have gained the widest admiration, and it is certain that musical executants of the first order, and in the case of Liszt of unique grandeur, have justified part of the expectations with which musical Europe has long looked upon Hungary. Magyar music can be likened to nothing more aptly than to the exclusively Hungarian river Theiss. Capricious and majestic, teeming with life and silting up for miles, surrounded by charming floriture of water lilies and alder trees and suddenly again by poisonous marshes and swamps, such is the Theiss, such is Hungarian music—stirring, bewildering, unspeakably saddening, inexpressibly exhilarating. It is the music of rhapsodic souls, of intoxication, of the battlefield, of wild war dances after the victory. But, like the great river, it cannot be regulated.—Nineteenth Century.

VARICOCELE CURED

NO NAMES USED WITHOUT WRITTEN CONSENT.

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on a double varicocele. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy and Kergan, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. He wrote them and got the New Method Treatment for me. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never lose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of "The Gentleman From Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

slightly shook his head. Marsh and the general started with surprise and stared incredulously. That Crailey should shake his head! If the signal had been for a church meeting they might have understood.

Mr. Gray's conduct was surprising two other people at about the same time—Tom Vanrevel and Fanchon Bareaud; the former by his sudden devotion to the law; the latter by his sudden devotion to herself. In a breath he became almost a domestic character.

Miss Bareaud was even happier than she was astonished—and she was mightily astonished—to find her betrothed developing a taste for her society alone. Formerly she had counted upon the gayeties of her home to keep Crailey near her; now, however, he told her tenderly he wished to have her all to himself. This was not like him, but Fanchon did not question.

The Bareaud house was the most hospitable in Rouen. Mrs. Bareaud, a southerner, loving to persuade the visitor that her home was his, not hers, lived only for her art, which was that of the table. Mr. Bareaud at fifty had lived so well that he gave up walking, which did not trouble him, but at sixty he gave up dancing, which did trouble him. His only hope, he declared, was in Crailey Gray's promise to invent for him a concave partner.

There was a thin, quizzing shank of a son, Jefferson, who lived upon quinine, ague and deviltry, and there were the two daughters, Fanchon and Virginia. The latter was three years older than Fanchon, as dark as Fanchon was fair, though not nearly so pretty, a small, good natured, romping sprite of a girl who had handed down the heart and hand of Crailey Gray to her sister with the best grace in the world. For she had been the heroine of one of Mr. Gray's half dozen or so most serious affairs, and after a furious rivalry with Mr. Carewe the victory was generally conceded to Crailey. His triumph had been of about a fortnight's duration when Fanchon returned from St. Mary's, and with the advent of the younger sister the elder, who had decided that Crailey was the incomparable she had dreamed of since infancy, was generously allowed to discover that he was not that vision; that she had fallen in love with her own idea of him, whereas Fanchon cared only that he be Crailey Gray.

To be in love with Crailey became Fanchon's vocation. She spent all her time at it and produced a blurred effect upon strangers. Nor was she alone in suspecting Mr. Gray of genius. In the first place, he was so odd; in the second, his poems were "already attracting more than local attention," as the Journal remarked generously, for Crailey had ceased to present his rhymes to that valuable paper. Aye, Boston no less was his mart.

He was rather radical in his literary preferences and hurt the elder Chenoweth's feelings by laughing heartily at some poems of the late Lord Byron, offended many people by disliking the style of Sir Edward Bulwer and even refused to admit that James Fenimore Cooper was the greatest novelist that ever lived. But these things were as nothing compared with his unpatriotic defense of Charles Dickens. Many Americans had fallen into a great rage over the vivacious assault upon the United States in "Martin Chuzzlewit." Nevertheless Crailey still boldly hailed him, as every one had heretofore agreed, the most dexterous writer of his day and the most notable humorist of any day. Of course the Englishman had not visited and thoroughly studied such a city as Rouen, Crailey confessed twinklingly; but, after all, wasn't there some truth in "Martin Chuzzlewit?" Mr. Dickens might have been far from a clear understanding of our people, but didn't it argue a pretty, ticklish vanity in ourselves that we were so fiercely resentful of satire, and was not this very heat over "Martin Chuzzlewit" a confirmation of one of the points the book had presented against us? General Trumble replied to this suggestion with a personal one to the effect that a man capable of saying a good word for so monstrous a slander—that a man, sir, capable of declaring his native country to be vain or sensitive, ought to be horsewhipped, and at this Crailey laughed consumedly.

Trumble retorted with the names of Benedict Arnold and Aaron Burr. "And if it comes to a war with these greasers," he spluttered apoplectically, "and it is coming, mighty soon, we'll find Mr. Gray down in Mexico throwing mud on the stars and stripes and cheering for that one legged horse thief, Santa Anna! Anything to seek out something foolish among your own people!"

"Don't have to seek far sometimes, general," murmured Crailey from the depths of the best chair in the club, whereupon Trumble, not trusting himself to answer, went out to the street.

CHAPTER V.

MISS CAREWE was at her desk, writing to Sister Cecilia, whom she most loved of all the world, when the bells startled her with their sudden clangor. The quill dropped from her hand, she started to her feet, wide eyed, not understanding, while the whole town, drowsing peacefully a moment ago, resounded immediately with a loud confusion. She ran to the front door and looked out, her heart beating wildly.

The western sky was touched with a soft rose color, which quickly became a warm glow, fluctuating, and in the instant shot up like the coming of a full aurora. Then through the broken foliage of the treetops could be seen the orange curls of flame, three-quarters of a mile away though they were.

People calling loudly that "it was Carewe's warehouses" were running down the street. From the stable old Nelson on her father's best horse came galloping and, seeing the white figure in the doorway, cried out in a quavering voice without checking his steed:

"I goin' to tell yo' pa, Miss Betty. He in de kentry on lan' bus'ness. Go back in de house, missy!"

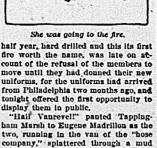
The other servants, like ragged sketches in the night, flitted by with excited ejaculations to join the runners, and Miss Betty followed them across the dew strewn turf in her light slippers, but at the gate she stopped.

From up the street came the sound of a bell smaller than those of the churches and courthouse, yet one that outdid all others in the madness of its appeal to clear the way. It was borne along by what seemed at first an indefinite black mass, but which—as the aurora grew keener, producing even here a faint yellow twilight—resolved itself into a mob of hoarsely shouting men and boys, who were running and tugging at ropes which drew along three extraordinary vehicles. They came rapidly down the street and passed Miss Betty with a hubbub and din beyond all understanding—one line of men, most of them in red shirts and oilcloth helmets, at a dead run with the hose cart, a second with the hand engine, the third dragging the ladder wagon. One man was riding, a tall, straight gentleman in evening clothes and without a hat, who stood precariously in the hose cart calling in an annoyed tone through a brazen trumpet. Miss Betty recognized him at once. It was he who caught her kitten, and she thought that if she had been Fanchon Bareaud she must have screamed a warning, for his balance appeared a thing of mere luck, and if he fell he would be trampled under foot and probably run over by the engine. But happily, she remembered, she was not Fanchon Bareaud.

Before, behind and beside the department raced a throng of boys, wild with the joy experienced by their species when property is being handsomely destroyed. After them came panting women, holding their sides and gasping with the effort to keep up with the flying procession.

Miss Betty trembled, for she had never seen the like in her life. She stood close to the hedge and let them go by. Then she turned in after them and ran like a fleet young deer. She was going to the fire.

Over all the uproar could be heard the angry voice through the trumpet calling the turns of the streets to the men in vain, upbraiding them and those of the other two companies impartially, and few of his hearers denied the chief his right to express some chagrin, since the department, organized a half year, hard drilled and this its first fire worth the name, was late on account of the refusal of the members to move until they had donned their new uniforms, for the uniforms had arrived from Philadelphia two months ago, and tonight offered the first opportunity to display them in public.



She was going to the fire.

"Hail Vanrevel!" panted Tappingham Marsh to Eugene Madrillon as the two, running in the van of the "hose company," splattered through a mud puddle. "You'd think he was Carewe's only son and heir instead of his worst enemy. Hark to the man!"

"I'd let it burn if I were he," returned the other.

"It was all Crailey's fault," said Tappingham, swinging an arm free to wipe the spattered mud from his face. "He swore he wouldn't budge without his uniform, and the rest only backed him up, that was all. Crailey said Carewe could better afford to lose his shanties than the overworked department its first chance to look beautiful and earnest. Tom asked him why he didn't send for a fiddle," Marsh finished, with a chuckle.

"Carewe might afford to lose a little, even a warehouse or two, if only out of what he's taken from Crailey and the rest of us these three years."

"Taken from Vanrevel, you mean. Who doesn't know where Crailey's—Here's Main street. Look out for the turn."

They swung out of the thick shadows of Carewe street into full view of the fire, and their faces were illuminated as by sunrise.

The warehouses stood on the river bank, at the foot of the street, just south of the new "covered bridge." There were four of them, huge, bare sided buildings, the two nearer the bridge of brick, the others of wood and all of them rich with stores of every kind of river merchandise and costly freight—furniture that had voyaged from New England down the long coast, across the Mexican gulf, through the flat delta and had made the winding journey up the great river a thousand miles and almost a thousand more, following the greater and lesser tributaries; cloth from Connecticut that had been sold in Philadelphia, then carried over mountains and through forests by steam, by canal, by stage and six mule freight wagons to Pittsburg, down the Ohio and thence up to Rouen on the packet; Tennessee cotton, on its way to Massachusetts and Rhode Island spindles, lay there beside huge mounds of raw wool from Illinois, ready to be fed to the Rouen mill; dates and nuts from the Caribbean sea, lemons from groves of the faraway tropics, cigars from the Antilles, tobacco from Virginia and Kentucky; most precious of all, the great granary of the farmers' wheat from the level fields at home; and all the rich stores and the houses that held them, as well as the wharfs upon which they had been landed and the steamers that brought them up the Rouen river, belonged to Robert Carewe.

That it was her father's property which was imperiled attested to the justification of Miss Betty in running to a fire, and as she followed the crowd into Main street she felt a not unpleasant proprietary interest in the spectacle. Very opposite sensations animated the breast of the man with the trumpet, who was more acutely conscious than any other that these were Robert Carewe's possessions which were burning so handsomely. Nor was he the only one among the firemen who ground his teeth over the folly of the uniforms, for now they could plainly see the ruin being wrought, the devastation threatened. The two upper stories of the southernmost warehouse had swathed themselves in one great flame, the building next on the north, also of frame, was smoking heavily, and there was a wind from the southwest which, continuing with the fire unchecked, threatened the town itself. There was work for the volunteer brigade that night.

They came down Main street with a rush, the figure of their chief swaying over them on his high perch, while their shouting was drowned in the louder roar of greeting from the crowd into which they plunged as a diver into the water, swirls and eddies of people marking the wake. A moment later a section of the roof of the burning warehouse fell in with a sonorous and reverberating crash.

The engine company ran the force pump out to the end of one of the lower wharfs, two lines of pipe were attached, two rows of men mounted the planks for the pumpers and at the word of command began the up and down of the hand machine with admirable vim. Nothing happened; the water did not come; something appeared to be wrong with the mechanism. As every one felt the crucial need of haste, nothing could have been more natural than that all the members of the engine company should simultaneously endeavor to repair the defect. Therefore ensued upon the spot a species of riot which put the engine out of its sphere of usefulness.

In the meantime fifty or sixty men and boys who ran with the machines, but who had no place in their operation, being the bucket brigade, had formed a line and were throwing large pails of water in the general direction of the southernmost warehouse, which it was now impossible to save, while the gentlemen of the hook and ladder company, abandoning their wagons and armed with axes, heroically assaulted the big door of the granary, the second building, whence they were driven by the exasperated chief, who informed them that the only way to save the wheat was to save the building. Crailey Gray, one of the berated axmen, remained by the shattered door after the others had gone and, struck by a sudden thought, set his hand upon the iron latch and opened the door by this simple process. It was not locked. Crailey leaned against the casement and laughed with his whole soul and body.

Meanwhile, by dint of shouting in men's ears when near them, through the trumpet when distant, tearing axes from their hands, imperiously gesticulating to subordinate commanders and lingering in no one spot for more than a second, Mr. Vanrevel reduced his forces to a semblance of order in a remarkably short time, considering the confusion into which they had fallen.

The space between the burning warehouse and that next it was not more than fifty feet in width, but fifty feet so hot no one took thought of entering there, an area as discomfiting in appearance as it was beautiful with the thick rain of sparks and firebrands that fell upon it. But the chief had decided that this space must be occupied and, more, must be held, since it was the only point of defense for the second warehouse. The roof of this building would burn, which would mean the destruction of the warehouse, unless it could be mounted, because the streams of water could not play upon it from the ground nor from the ladders do much more than wet the projecting eaves. It was a gable roof, the eaves twenty feet lower on the south side than on the north, where the ladders could not hope to reach. Vanrevel swung his line of bucketeers round to throw water not upon the flames, but upon the ladder men.

Miss Carewe stood in the crowd upon the opposite side of the broad street. Even there her cheeks were uncomfortably hot, and sometimes she had to brush a spark from her shoulder, though she was too much excited to mind this. She was watching the beautiful fiery furnace between the north wall of the burning warehouse and the south wall of its neighbor, the fifty feet brilliant and misty with vaporous rose color, dotted with the myriad red stars, her eyes shining with the reflection of their fierce beauty. She saw how the vapors moved there, like men walking in fire, and she was vaguely recalling Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego, when over the silhouetted heads of the crowd before her a long black ladder rose, wabbled, tilted crazily, then lamely advanced and ranged itself against the south wall of the second warehouse, its top rung striking ten feet short of the eaves. She hoped that no one had any notion of mounting that ladder.

A figure appeared upon it immediately, that of a gentleman, bareheaded and in evening dress, with a brass trumpet swinging from a cord about his shoulders. The noise grew less, the shouting died away, and the crowd became almost silent as the figure, climbing slowly, drew up above their heads.

Two or three rungs beneath came a second, a man in helmet and uniform. The clothes of both men, drenched by the bucketeers, clung to them, steaming. As the second figure mounted a third appeared, but this was the last, for the ladder was frail and sagged toward the smoking wall with the weight of the three.

The chief, three-fourths of the way to the top, shouted down a stifled command, and a short grappling ladder, fitted at one end with a pair of spiked iron hooks, was passed to him. Then he toiled upward until his feet rested on the third rung from the top. Here he turned, setting his back to the wall, lifted the grappling ladder high over his head so that it rested against the eaves above him and brought it down sharply, fastening the spiked hooks in the roof. As the eaves projected fully three feet, this left the grappling ladder hanging that distance out from the wall, its lowest rung a little above the level of the chief's shoulders.

Miss Betty drew in her breath with a little choked cry. There was a small terraced hill of piled up packing boxes near her, possession of which had been taken by a company of raggamuffinish boys, and she found herself standing on the highest box and sharing the summit with these questionable youths, almost without noting her action in mounting thither, so strained was the concentration of her attention upon the figure high up in the rose glow against the warehouse wall. The man, surely, surely, was not going to trust himself to that bit of wooden web hanging from the roof! Where was Miss Bareaud that she permitted it? Ah, if Betty had been Fanchon, and mad woman enough to have accepted this madman, she would have compelled him to come down at once, and thereafter would lock him up in the house whenever the bells rang!

But the roof was to be mounted or Robert Carewe's property lost. Already little flames were dancing up from the shingles, where firebrands had fallen, their number increasing with each second. So Vanrevel raised his arms, took a hard grip upon the lowest rung of the grappling ladder and tried it with his weight. The iron hooks bit deeper into the roof; they held. He swung himself out into the air, with nothing beneath him, caught the rung under his knee, and for a moment hung there, while the crowd withheld from breathing. Then a cloud of smoke swirling that way made him the mere ghostly nucleus of itself, blotted him out altogether, and, as it rose slowly upward, showed the ladder free and empty, so that at first there was an instant when they thought that he had fallen, but, as the smoke cleared, there was the tall figure on the roof.

It was an agile and a daring thing to do, and the man who did it was mightily applauded. The cheering bothered him, however, for he was trying to make them understand below what would happen to the engine company in case the water was not sent through the lines directly, and what he said should be done to the engineers included things that would have blanched the cheek of the most inventive Spanish inquisitor that ever lived.

Miss Betty made a gesture as if to a person within whispering distance. "Your coat is on fire," she said in an ordinary conversational tone without knowing she had spoken aloud, and Mr. Vanrevel, more than a hundred feet away, seemed particularly conscious of the pertinence of her remark. He removed the garment with alacrity, and for the lack of the tardy water began to use it as a flail upon the firebrands and little flames about him, the sheer desperate best of a man in a rage doing what he could when others failed him. Showers of sparks fell upon him. The smoke was rising everywhere from the roof and the walls below and, growing denser and denser, shrouded him in heavy veils, so that as he ran hither and thither, now visible, now unseen, stamping and beating and

VIVID DESCRIPTIONS

Cause Seven St. Petersburg Newspapers to Be Confiscated.

Bialistok Outrages Were Egged on by the Authorities, According to the Report of M. Vinaver, a Member of the Lower House — Massacre Was Not the Result of Race Hatred—Draws Revolver on Gen. Trepoff.

St. Petersburg, June 20.—No disorders at Bialistok were reported yesterday. The city council of Bialistok has demanded the abrogation of martial law.

Seven St. Petersburg newspapers besides The Gulois were confiscated yesterday, two for their vigorous comment on the attitude of the authorities at Bialistok and the others for long descriptive stories of the outrages from correspondents.

Commissioner's Report.

M. Vinaver, a member of the Lower House, yesterday afternoon received the following despatch from M. Jacobson, a member of the commission sent to Bialistok by the Lower House of Parliament to investigate the Jewish massacre there:

"Order was restored yesterday. Seventy-eight Jews and six Christians have been buried. The majority of the dead were killed with bayonets or rifle bullets. The total of the dead has not yet been established. A Cossack yesterday killed a passing Jew. The city council has unanimously declared that the massacre was not the result of race hatred, but was due to provocation, and the troops and police participated in the outrages. The reports that Jews and revolutionists attacked the inhabitants are false."

Drew Revolver On Gen. Trepoff.

A circumstantial report was in circulation yesterday of an attempt on the life of Gen. Trepoff, commandant of the palace, by a well-dressed woman masquerading as Princess Narishkin. According to the rumor the woman gained admittance to the palace and when Trepoff appeared she drew a revolver, but it was seized before she could fire. The story is denied by the police.

Seddon Memorial Service.

London, June 20.—Lord Strathcona represented Canada at the Seddon memorial service in St. Paul's yesterday. Representatives of the King, Government and all the Colonies were present.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Experience is a great teacher. So is a real estate boom.

The more a man knows the less he admits to knowing.

All of us can't be in the same boat. If we were, we'd sink it.

Let the other fellow have his way as long as he only wants to talk.

Elections and marriages are just alike. There is nothing the candidate will not promise beforehand.

If you are going to give both barrels, do it like a man—give them to the victim's face and not behind his back.

Nothing makes a man quite so ill natured as to be expected to be grateful for something that does not please him.

There is a great deal said about love at first sight; not much said about the hatred at first offense, which is more sure.

Chickens In the Rain.

On a rainy morning a good deal of wisdom may be learned from the chickens. If it is to be a soggy, rainy, drizzly day all day, the chickens will get out and stand about in the rain with an utterly indifferent manner. They look just as human beings feel, and they keep it up all day. But if the rain is to continue but a few hours the chickens will stay under shelter. They cannot be kept out. They hurry under cover when disturbed and stay there till the fair weather comes, which it does presently. And then they go out and enjoy the sunshine. The chickens know.

Quaint Customs In Abyssinia.

Quaint customs prevail in parts of Abyssinia. When a father is getting on in years the son bids him climb into a tree and jump down from the branches. If the old man staggers on landing the son spears him on the spot—his usefulness is over. One tribe had a custom of sewing chance visitors up in green hides and leaving them to be killed by the contraction of the skins. With another the only orthodox way of dealing with strangers was to tie them in a bundle and roll them over a precipice.—London Mail.

Old Time Acting.

The old time actor had peculiar and primitive views as to elocution and its uses. I remember a certain old friend of mine who, when he recited the opening speech in "Richard III." and arrived at the line, "In the deep bosom of the ocean buried," suggested the deep bosom of the ocean by sending his voice into his boots. Yet these were fine actors, to whom certain young gentlemen who never saw them constantly refer. The methods of the stage have completely changed and with them the tastes of the people. The probability is that some of the old actors of only a few years ago would excite much merriment in their delineation of tragedy. A very great tragedian of a past generation was wont in the tent scene in "Richard III." to hold a piece of soap in his mouth, so that, after the appearance of the ghosts, the lather and froth might dribble down his chin, and he employed moreover a trick sword which rattled hideously, and, what with his foam flecked face, his rolling eyes, his inarticulate groans and his rattling blade, the small boy in the gallery was scared into a frenzy of vociferous delight!—Richard Mansfield in Atlantic.

CATTLE MARKETS.

British Prices Unchanged—American Markets About Steady.

London, June 19.—Cattle are quoted at 10¾c to 11¾c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8½c to 8¾c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 14c to 15c per lb.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, June 19.—Receipts of live stock since last Friday, as reported by the railways, were 68 car loads, composed of 1150 cattle, 390 hogs, 365 sheep and lambs and 200 calves.

Exporters.

Prices ranged from $4.75 to $5.30, the latter price being obtained for one load of choice cattle, 1275 lbs. each, by McDonald & Maybee, and two loads sold by Crawford & Hunnisett at $5.20 per cwt. The bulk sold around $5 per cwt. Export bulls sold from $3.75 to $4.25.

Butchers.

Prime butchers' picked lots sold from $4.80 to $5 per cwt., but there were few of this class; loads of good sold at $4.00 to $4.75 per cwt.; medium at $4.30 to $4.50; common at $4 to $4.25; stall-fed cows at $3.50 to $4; grass cows, $2.75 to $3.25 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Harry Murby reports a fair trade in stockers and feeders at last week's quotations. Mr. Murby bought a few lots of stockers and feeders at following prices: Short-keeps, 1100 to 1200 lbs., at $4.50 to $4.75; good steers, 900 to 1050 lbs., at $4 to $4.25; good steers, 800 to 900 lbs., at $3.90 to $4.10; light stockers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, $3 to $3.25; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Milch Cows.

There was a large number of common to medium milch cows and springers, and as there were no Montreal buyers on hand the market was dull and draggy at much lower prices than last week. The bulk of these ranged from $30 to $45 each and one or two were reported as having sold at $50.

Veal Calves.

About 200 veal calves sold at $3.50 to $6 per cwt. One extra prime quality calf, new milk fed, sold at $7 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

The run was light and prices were firm. Export ewes sold at $4.25 to $4.50; yearling lambs at $5.75 to $6.50; spring lambs, $3.50 to $6 each, with a few extra quality at $6.25 per cwt.

Hogs.

The deliveries were light. Mr. Harris reports prices unchanged at $7.25 for selects and $7 for lights and fats.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

East Buffalo, June 19.—Cattle—Steady; prices unchanged.

Veals—Receipts, 50 head; slow and 25c lower; $4.50 to $7.25.

F. B. McNamee Dies.

Montreal, June 20.—F. B. McNamee, one of the oldest and best-known citizens of Montreal, passed away early yesterday morning. Mr. McNamee, who was born in Ireland in 1828, was in his earlier years a well-known contractor, having had the rebuilding of the Lachine Canal. He also constructed the Toronto pipe line into the bay, to supply the city with its present water system.

To Pay President's Expenses.

Wasington, June 20.—The House committee on appropriations yesterday voted a favorable report on the Watson bill, authorizing an annual appropriation of $50,000 to pay the traveling expenses of the President of the United States and such guests as he may invite.

Mr. Northrup's Speech

ON THE NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

If the Minister of the Interior be right when he says that in this matter the Liberal Government has followed the policy of the Conservative Government, then the truth must be that as in the case of the fiscal policy of the Conservative party, which they also adopted, they so mutilated it and cut it up that in every single respect in which they changed it they changed it for the worse. And as to the trade policy, it is only the other night that the Solicitor-General delivered one of the most able and eloquent and patriotic speeches on protection which was ever delivered even in the City of Toronto, he adopts the trade policy of the Conservative party and to the extent that he does adopt it he is pursuing a sane and a safe course.

I have nothing more to say, Mr. Speaker, on this question except to ask hon. gentlemen before they vote to calmly and carefully consider the amendment which is before the House. The Minister of the Interior and his followers who have spoken have carefully abstained from discussing the question before us, and have wandered far afield to deal with other matters with which we have no immediate concern. I have no doubt that the issue before the House is so distasteful to them, that gentlemen on the other side who may speak later will continue to steer clear of the question, but I trust that gentlemen on this side of the House will take care that they stick to the text. Will the Minister of the Interior or any of his supporters explain how it is that on the one hand he can tell us that this is a good contract, and on the other hand he announces that it is so bad that he is going to cancel it? There is no clause in that contract under which he can cancel it except clause 12, which provides:

"This agreement shall continue in force for ten years from the date thereof, subject, however, to the right of the Government to cancel it by notice in writing under the hand of the minister if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the minister that the company is failing to carry out its obligations. But either party has the right to abrogate the agreement by four years' notice."

It has appeared to the satisfaction of the minister that the company has failed to carry out its obligation and he has written to the company giving his reasons for cancelling the contract, and the reasons which he gives are simply, that because immigration is less than he excepted from certain countries he therefore infers that the company cannot have been carrying out the contract. It would seem that the further this contract goes the worse it gets. If the minister is sincere in his declaration; if this is a good contract: if it is a contract in the interests of this country, why in heaven's name does not the Government do its best to have the company carry it out and thus secure the benefits which they say will result to Canada from it. What are we to say of a minister who declares that this is a good contract, but because immigration is not as great as he expected it should be from two countries, he cancels the contract without considering whether it is not possible to have it faithfully carried out. From the way in which he has proceeded the minister may find that on top of all his other difficulties he has simply brought the country into a lawsuit by professing to cancel a contract while according to his own letter written to the company he had no grounds for cancelling except his suspicion based on the fact that the returns were not as great as he had expected. And, if that contract should be rescinded because the company is not carrying it out, why does the Government not rescind it at once? Why pay this company another dollar of the public money of Canada? What right have the members of this syndicate; of their bonus of $5 per head; what right has Mr. Smart to sit in his office in Montreal and draw his salary for six months more if that company has forfeited its rights under the contract? Let the minister come out in a manly way; let the Government do one right thing in connection with this contract even though it be the last; if this contract has been conceived in iniquity and carried out in misfortune, let there be one redeeming feature about it, let them cancel the contract at once if it is a bad contract. But if, as they say, it is a good contract, then let them retain it, let them make the contractors do their duty to this country and let Canada enjoy the benefits of this contract which they declare is such an excellent one. We are here representing the people of this country and we owe the duty to our constituents that if the Government has made a contract that is injurious and absurd, to so declare by our vote. How can the members of this House vote down the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto, which declares that this contract ought to be cancelled, and then hold up both hands to praise the Government which forthwith cancels the contract and cancels it in the most objectionable and illegal way? I trust that gentlemen on both sides of the House when they come to vote will bear in mind that this is the kind of thing that is liable to undermine the whole of our public life. If it be true that this company is the bogus company it apparently is, then the good name of Canada at home and abroad requires that the condemnation of this House should be visited on those who made such a contract and on those who participated in it. If on the other hand a majority of the members of this House should deliberately vote that this contract is not injurious, is not improvident, is not absurd, and that immediate steps should not be taken to terminate it, then, sir, I shall be deeply sorry for the effect that such a vote as that will have on the good name of this House and on the good name of the people of Canada in countries outside the borders of our Dominion.

KEEPING YOUNG.

It Is a Difficult Task if One Follows Fashionable Society.

How to keep young is one of the questions of perennial interest to the feminine mind. Amelie Rives, the noted author, who is said to look like a girl in her teens, recently told of her reply to a physician who wrote her to send him the secret of what he called her perpetual youth, says the Advance. "I wrote back that he must consider the cost," she said. "It is a cost that few of his fashionable patients would make, for I rise at 7 or 7:30, ride or walk in the country roads, live close to my books, see few people and retire at 10. What fashionable women could endure my life? I remember thinking about it one winter morning, when I was walking alone, the crisp, crackling snow under my feet, the fairy outline of a gossamer frost revealing every twig of bush and tree, and I was so invigorated and happy I could have whistled like a boy with delight. But if I had been a woman of fashion I couldn't have endured the silence, the empty distances, the quiet; why, a woman of fashion would die in my place, and I am quite sure that I should in hers." It is in such solitude and close communion with nature, in the home of her childhood—an old fashioned, rambling country home in Albemarle county, Va., that much of Amelie Rives' work is done.

THE TRAINED NURSE.

Why She Does Not Remain Long In Her Profession.

Carefully gathered statistics appear to show that the "marryingest" of all women are trained nurses. Though complete figures have not as yet been compiled, from a considerable mass of data the conclusion is drawn that nine out of ten trained nurses marry during the first seven years of their occupation as such.

When a pretty young woman speaks of devoting her life to the self denying profession of a trained nurse she is using, perhaps unconsciously, a mere figure of speech. Statistics show that she has an even chance to be married within four and a half years and that she has one chance in eight of becoming the wife of a physician. The chances are five to one that within ten years she will marry one of her patients.

The importance of these figures from the viewpoint of the sociologist is obviously great. Pretty young women in steadily increasing numbers are entering the field in question, in which there seems always to be plenty of room for fresh recruits, who are required to fill the places of those who get married and pass out of the profession forever. Thus, owing to the causes suggested, it is rare indeed to discover a trained nurse who has been in the business for as much as ten years.—Saturday Evening Post.

CULINARY CONCEITS.

In making mush an egg beater is recommended for the first stirring, to avoid lumpiness.

When preparing a rabbit for the kettle, instead of picking off the stray hairs singe it as you would a chicken.

Lemon coffee is delicious. Rub each side of a lump of sugar on the rind of a lemon and pour the coffee in the ordinary way.

If too much salt has been added to the soup slice a raw potato and boil it in the soup a few minutes. The potato will absorb much of the salt.

Slices of toast well moistened with white sauce and topped with plain scrambled eggs sprinkled with grated cheese make a tasty and nutritious luncheon dish.

Food fried in olive oil has a delicious crispness and not only lacks the quality of making the food indigestible, but adds much to the food value of all articles fried in it. The best grade of olive oil is not greasy.

Be Cheerful.

Be cheerful. It is trite advice to tell women to take each day as it comes, to avoid remorse over what is done and forebodings over what is to come, but it is no less valuable advice. Nervous prostration is seldom the result of present trouble or work, but of work and trouble anticipated. Mental exhaustion comes to those who look ahead and climb mountains before they arrive at them. Resolutely build a wall about today and live within the inclosure. The past may have been hard, sad or wrong. It is over. The future may be like the past, but the woman who worries about it may not live to meet it. If she does she will bear it. The only thing with which she should concern herself is today, its sunshine, its air, its friends, its frolics, its wholesome work and perhaps its necessary sorrow.

Sometimes a young man is turned down when he really should be turned up and spanked.

Charity begins at home, but it is apt to be out when anybody calls.

THE BIRTH OF WORDS

A WEALTH OF EXPRESSIONS FROM THE HUMAN BODY.

More Than Four Hundred Words In Our Language Are Related to the Hand Alone and Almost as Many Are Derived From the Head.

The human body—its limbs, fingers, toes, mouth, nose, ears, head and some of the internal organs—has originated hundreds of words. In one of the large dictionaries more than 400 are found related to the hand alone and almost as many to the head.

Index, indicate, predicate, from a Greek word for finger, mean that which points out. So oracle and orator refer to what comes out of the mouth. Audience, audible, auscultation, the auditing of accounts, originally after a "hearing" of the officials, are traceable to the ear. Spirit means the breath and is also found in conspire, "to breathe together;" inspire, "to breathe in," and even in perspire, "to breathe through." Impediment is something against the foot. Ell, the cloth measure, is the length of the forearm. The hair in capillary attraction means the power exerted through the capillary or hairlike tubes.

The heart (cordis) is to be observed in a cordial, or heartening, drink; a cordial, or hearty, manner; the core of an apple. Dents in wood or metal get their name from their resemblance to tooth marks. The tongue sticks out in several words, like language and linguist.

In some countries anybody may rise by his own merits to be somebody, even to the "head" of the nation or of the church; be a head master of a school, head a revolution, take up "arms" and prove to be a capital—that is, a headmost—soldier and the chief (head) of the army.

Corporal punishment is bodily punishment; capital punishment is punishment by decapitation, or taking off the head. A corporal—that is, a caporal—means the same as captain—that is, the head of a body of foot soldiers. A colonel is one who has been crowned. The commander in chief, or head commander, compels the chieftains, or headmen of the enemy, to capitulate—that is, surrender according to an agreement that is divided into capitulas, or little heads, or chapters.

A heady and headstrong ruler sometimes makes people wish he was headless. To make headway against his foes he may have to rush headlong into difficulties or take a header into the unknown sea of politics. Among some peoples one with the big head is likely to lose it. Under some the headship of the ship of state does not make headway against the head winds of events or around the "cape," or headland, just ahead. He may plunge into trouble over head and ears, and his opponents have to put their heads together to head him off, so as to prevent a head-on collision with another nation. Some men hate to be treated as deadheads at political headquarters or as so many head of cattle or as mutton heads or cabbage heads, cabbage itself being from an old Spanish word meaning head.

Some men "play their hand" for all there is in it. Some stretch out the glad hand to every one. Some keep hand in glove with those engaged in underhand proceedings as well as with those who have climbed to high places hand over hand. When the right man says "Hands off!" even his right hand man would not lay hands on what was forbidden. The clock hands tell us if we are beforehand or behindhand.

A handsome man originally was one who used his hands skillfully and so was graceful and probably, therefore, good looking. Although every one carries a palm in his hand, people no longer, with palms in their hands, welcome their heroes. One may have his finger in too many pies and tread on too many toes. One's chirography, manuscript, handwriting—they are all one—may be rather coarse, but his fine hand is detected in many a public document and so arouse opposition to his handling the funds. This might prove a severe handicap, which was originally so called from the jockeys putting their hands into a cap and drawing lots for the places that their horses were to have in the race. Footstool and foot rule sound alike, but in the first foot is the literal, in the second the figurative, use of the word.

Though the politician put his best foot forward he may find his foothold getting insecure and begin wondering what's afoot. His coachman, mounting the footboard, may be insolent; his footman, contemptuous; his chef, or head cook, neglectful. He may be ridiculed before the footlights as a social footpad, living a hand to mouth existence at the expense of the taxpayers. While they are insisting on his toeing the mark and he is hanging to his position by the toe nails, as the saying is, he may well wish he was back on his native foothills.

Were he arrested he might be handcuffed and fetters, or feeters, placed upon his feet. He might not even have an opportunity of making mouths or showing his teeth at his enemies. He might in other days be turned over to the headsman, but there would be no newspaper headlines proclaiming that fact. Only a small headstone might tell his fate to the pedestrians, or foot passengers, going by.

The Height of Simplicity.

"Awfully simple, isn't he?"

"I should say he was. Why, it's an actual fact that he played poker with a stranger on an ocean liner."

We have no right to say that the universe is governed by natural laws, but only that it is governed according to natural laws.—Carpenter.

VANISHED TREASURES.

Masterpieces of Art That Are Lost to the World.

The "Venus de Milo," which has been in the Louvre for many years is, as all the world knows, an imperfect piece of sculpture, though it is the greatest treasure of its kind the world has ever seen. A great reward would be given the man who could find the missing parts. About 1878 the most important of them—the right arm—came to light in London and was proved by experts to be genuine. The owner, however, refused to part with it and concealed it for fear it would be stolen. Unfortunately he died without revealing its hiding place, so it is as much lost as ever.

A bronze drinking cup which was stolen from an Egyptian temple in 1739 and brought to Europe has miraculously disappeared. On it is engraved the whole history of the Pharaohs, and it could easily be sold for $100,000. In fact, the French government offered a reward of $14,000 for its discovery, but the famous cup has vanished, probably forever.

Another treasure which has vanished in as strange a way is the Marcella vase of the Dresden collection. This is the only piece missing from the famous Dresden Marcella collection, the value of which is said to be $75,000. It bears the cross arrows and the lion's head. Not long ago the vase was said to be in England, but, be that as it may, the person who rediscovers this treasure may command any price in reason for it.

How it is possible that a treasure so large as a painting could be lost sight of entirely is not easily explained, but this has often happened. One of Reynolds' paintings, "Countess of Derby," which is considered his best portrait, has disappeared. Not long after it was painted it disappeared from the collection of the Earl of Derby and has never been heard of since, though it would bring $150,000 to the finder. There are also two Vandykes and a Rembrandt missing, for which collectors are willing to pay $200,000. The Earl of Crewe would give a large sum for the return of a Cupid which some vandal cut from the portrait of the former Countess of Crewe and her son, who was painted as the sprite.

THE STAGE KISS.

It Tests the Genius of the Actor and the Actress.

The stage kiss is important. There is nothing which so tests the genius of an actor and an actress as the ability under just such circumstances to produce the illusion of love. On the stage it is necessary for them to forget their own personalities, to smother their own feelings, one for the other, and in the place of the warped though genuine kiss we see at the railroad station and the steamship wharf present to our eyes by the magic of their acting a highly artificial product.

And this highly artificial product, because it is art and because it is produced by art, impresses us as real and genuine where the actually real and genuine would have filled us only with derision and contempt, just as real tears on the stage would fail to move us. Indeed, the best stage kisses, the kisses that are most convincing in the way of realism, are usually given and received by actors and actresses whose feeling for each other in private life is, to say the least, indifferent. Frequently, if audiences only knew, they watch lovemaking on the stage between men and women who are literally at daggers' points with each other.

I would not go so far as to say that such a state of feeling always contributes to good stage lovemaking and to realistic stage kissing, but I do know that it is an axiomatic truth, recognized by theatrical managers everywhere, not to engage playfolk lovers to enact similar roles in a drama if it is at all possible to get any one else.—Blanche Ring in "The Psychology of the Stage Kiss."

Indigestion.

The following cure for indigestion is recommended by the eminent Dr. Bond in the London Lancet, a medical journal of world wide repute.

"The indigestion must be a very hopeless one," says Dr. Bond, "which will not yield to a diet of a small cup of warm milk to which a teaspoonful of rum has been added, followed by a plain biscuit or two and some very mild cheese, paradoxical as this combination may seem."

According to Dr. Bond, there is a subtle harmony between these ingredients that does the business.

Arithmetical.

"Yes," said the old mathematician, with a gleam in his eyes, "I've always looked at it that way. Marriage is addition, when the little ones come it's multiplication, when dissension looms up to cloud the horizon of their happiness it's division and when the final parting comes it's subtraction."

"And how about divorce?" asked the listener.

"Oh, I guess that would come under the denomination of fractions."

A Rare Article Indeed.

A little girl not long ago displayed a bit of feather—black, as it happened—to a caller at the house. This man looked impressed and inquired gravely, "What is that Nelly, an angel's wing?" The child slowly shook her head. "Oh, no," she answered at once. "Angels' feathers are white, and I think they are very scarce."

Silence.

The man who is trying to keep his head above water realizes that a floating debt is a poor life preserver.

THE BIRTHPLACE OF BURNS.

[Written in his cottage at Ayr.]

Though Scotland boasts a thousand names
Of patriot, king and peer,
The noblest, grandest of them all
Was loved and cradled here.
Here lived the gentle peasant prince,
The loving cotter's king,
Compared with whom the grandest lord
Is but a titled thing.

'Tis but a cot roofed in with straw,
A hovel made of clay;
One door shuts out the snow and storm,
One window greets the day.
And yet I stand within this room
And hold all thrones in scorn,
For here beneath this lowly thatch
Love's sweetest bard was born.

Within this hallowed hut I feel
Like one who clasps a shrine,
When the glad lips at last have touched
The something deemed divine.
And here the world through all the years,
As long as day returns,
The tribute of its love and tears
Will pay to Robert Burns.
—Robert G. Ingersoll.

TRAMWAYS IN DURBAN.

They're Ahead of Toronto in the South African City.

The Tramway and Railway World contains an interesting account of the Durban tramway system, from which we learn that the tramway department owns forty-five double-decked single-truck motor cars. The double-decked cars, which each weigh nine tons empty, have a 7ft. wheel-base, and are fitted with 33in. steel-wired wheels. The length of the car over all is 26ft., the length inside the body 16ft. 6in., the width over all 8ft. 10in., the height inside 6ft. 7in., and the height of the floor above the rail 2ft. 8in. The seating capacity is thirty outside and twenty-four inside.

The town council have gone in for providing for funerals, and have two funeral cars, one for Europeans and the other for natives. The department also owns two road-sprinkling cars, one having a capacity of 1,800 gallons and mounted on a 21-T truck, and the other holding 3,800 gallons and mounted on a pair of maximum traction trucks. There are also three stone wagons worked by the tramway department, but owned by the public works department. They are largely used for road-making purposes. Ten new cars are on order from the British Westinghouse Co. The car-shed, which can accommodate forty-two cars, is 215ft. long by 75ft. broad, has seven tracks of a total length of 1,290ft., and five repair pits.

The service of cars begins at 5.30 a. m., and finishes at 11.30 p. m. The average frequency of the service is five minutes within two miles of the centre of the town, and ten and fifteen minutes beyond that radius; but on the more frequented portions of the routes the cars run on a two-minute headway between 8 and 9 a. m. and 5 and 6 p. m. Fixed stopping-places, about two hundred yards apart, are provided, and they are indicated by enameled signs fixed to the traction poles. The average speed, including stops, is ten miles per hour, and the maximum speed allowed is twenty miles per hour. The average fare per mile is 3-4d., while the minimum fare for an adult is 1 1-2d. and for a child 1d. The longest through route is 11 1-4 miles, for which the fare is 1s.

NEW WAR OFFICE.

26,500,000 Bricks Used In New 600-Roomed Dwelling.

The new War Office in Whitehall, which has taken just six years to complete, is undoubtedly one of the most wonderful and up-to-date buildings in London.

Magnificent and imposing as the exterior is, it gives but a small idea of the vast undertaking involved in its construction.

Here are some interesting details as to the actual quantity of materials used in the building, which help to show the gigantic nature of the task. These include:

Ordinary bricks—Twenty-five millions.

Glazed bricks—One and a half million.

Portland stone—Twenty-six thousand tons.

Lead—Sixteen hundred tons.

Steel—Three thousand five hundred tons, used for floors, etc., the building not being of steel construction).

Concrete—Thirty-five thousand cubic yards.

The immense size of the building is indicated by the fact, that there are:

Six hundred rooms.

Two and a half miles of corridors.

Seventeen miles of asphalt.

Nine miles of chimney flues.

Seven acres of asphalt.

Fifty-four acres of plasterers' work.

One hundred miles of piping—heat, water, drains, covering for electric wires.

Four acres of mosaic paving in the corridors.

Seventeen hundred windows.

The circumference of the building is 1,500 feet, and the entire height from the concrete foundation to the top of the towers is 156 feet.

In order to ensure dryness, the entire building is set in a concrete "dock" 24 feet deep, the inner walls of which are well removed from the walls of the structure. This dock has a cubical contents of 13,000,000 gallons, and would float several warships.

Drummed Out For Cowardice.

At Templemore Barracks, County Tipperary, the courtmartial sentence of "drumming-out" two privates of the Worcestershire Regiment, who had been convicted of cowardice, was carried out. Recently their comrade, William Walker, was killed on the railway, and these two men ran straight away to the barracks, but did not report the terrible fatality. The "drumming-out" was witnessed by a large body of troops and the general public.

Fewest Deaths and Births.

Both the birth and the death rates for the borough of Scarborough for the year 1905 were the lowest on record. The medical officer of health says that the saving of life has been effected chiefly at the earlier ages, especially under one years.

Tidal Wave at Cobourg.

Cobourg Post: On Friday evening of last week a peculiar phenomenon occurred at the harbor. Just previous to the electrical storm the water receded about three feet, leaving the large schooner Charlie Marshall hard on the bottom of the harbor and laid bare the cribs along the docks. A few hours later a tidal wave came in, when the schooner was floated, the landing stage at the life boat station was raised level with the dock and one of the small yachts landed on the breakwater. The sight was a rare one; nothing similar to it was ever seen before by the oldest inhabitant or frequenters about the wharf.

Fire on McDonald Ave.

At a few minutes after 8 o'clock this morning the fire alarm was sounded. The fire proved to be at the residence of Mr. John Taylor, west side of McDonald Avenue. Considerable damage was done to the roof. Although the house is just outside of the city limits, McDonald Avenue being the dividing line, the brigade helped to extinguish the blaze. The owner of the building is a G.T.R. employee.

MANY WILLING VICTIMS OF THE BLIND GOD STOOD BEFORE THE HYMENEAL ALTAR IN THIS CITY TO-DAY.

Wednesday still continues to be the favorite day for weddings, and to-day many fair daughters of Belleville married the men of their choice, Old Sol smiled on the ceremonies, and "all went merry as a marriage bell," as the poet sings.

BUDD—BISCOMBE.

A charming home wedding took place at 9 o'clock this morning, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. Biscombe, Bettes St., when Miss Agnes M., their youngest daughter, became the wife of Rev. A. W. Budd, of Grenville, P.Q. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Geo. Brown, pastor of the Tabernacle. The interior of the house was tastefully decorated for the occasion. The bride was beautifully attired in a gown of cream crepe de chene, over taffeta, with lace and festooned chiffon trimmings. She carried a bouquet of white roses.

After the ceremony a dainty wedding breakfast was served and much enjoyed by the guests, after which the happy young couple left by the noon express for Montreal and Quebec, whence they sail on Saturday, per steamship Empress of Britain, for England. The bride's going away costume was a brown broadcloth Empire gown and Eton coat, with hat to match.

The wedding presents were tasteful and elegant, and amply testified to the popularity of the bride among her many friends in this city.

The above wedding is the culmination of another Albert College romance, both the bride and groom having attended that temple of learning some years ago. Since attending Albert, Rev. Mr. Budd has spent four years in pastoral work and two years at Wesleyan Theological College, Montreal, graduating from there in May of this year. On June 3 he was regularly ordained to the work of the Christian ministry, and stationed at Grenville, P.Q. Many warm friends in this city will wish Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Budd a pleasant voyage over the matrimonial sea.

MAIRS—ASELSTINE.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Adelbert Aselstine, Moira St., was this morning, at 9 o'clock, the scene of an extremely pretty home wedding, when their daughter, Miss Vida Aselstine, a charming and popular young lady of this city, was united in marriage to Mr. Thomas Mairs, of Retsof, New York, deputy sheriff of Livingstone County. Rev. R. H. Leitch, pastor of Holloway St. Church, performed the ceremony. The bridesmaid was Miss Iola Heagle, of Trenton, and Mr. Walter Aselstine, brother of the bride, was groomsman. The bride looked charmingly pretty in a gown of white flowered silk colienne. She wore the customary bridal veil and carried a bouquet of carnations and smilax. The bridesmaid was beautifully gowned in white silk. A large number of guests, many from out of town, were present The presents were numerous and nothing short of magnificent. The happy couples left on the 11 o'clock train for the west. They will tour New York state before taking up their residence at Restof. The bride's going-away custome was of camel's hair cloth, with hat to match. A host of friends in Belleville will wish much joy to Mr. and Mrs. Mairs.

McGOLRICK — MUSGROVE.

A quiet but very pretty wedding took place at high noon to-day, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James McGolrick, George St., when their second daughter, Miss Muriel Blanche, was united in marriage to Mr. Frederick A. Musgrove, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Musgrove, Toronto. The bride, who is one of Belleville's prettiest and most popular young ladies, wore a beautiful dress of white chiffon jupe and lace over taffeta silk, the long veil of tulle arranged becomingly over a wreath of orange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses. She was attended by her two sisters, the Misses Adeen and Pearl, while the groom was supported by Mr, J. Oliver McGolrick, brother of the bride.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Beamish, rector of St. Thomas' Church, and after a dainty wedding breakfast Mr. and Mrs. Musgrove left amid the best wishes of their many friends for a trip west.

CHILMAN — HUMFREY.

At 2 o'clock this afternoon a pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr. Ed. Johnston, McDonald avenue. The bride was Miss Rose Humfrey, a sister of Mrs. Johnston, and the groom Mr. Charles Chilman, of Chicago, who is connected with the Santa Fe Railway. Rev. A. M. Hubly, rector of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, officiated. The bridesmaid was Miss Pearl Thompson, and the groomsman Mr. John Nichol, of Toronto. The bride was attired in a gown of cream organdie and carried a bouquet of roses and carnations. The bridesmaid's dress was of cream silk colienne. After the ceremony a wedding repast was partaken of. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Chilman left on the evening train for the west and after a visit to some places of interest will proceed to their home in Chicago. The groom was at one time a resident of this city and was deservedly a popular young man.

SMITH — BASHAW.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at St. John's Church last evening, when Mr. Frank Smith and Miss Mabel Bashaw, of this city, were united in marriage. Rev. Canon Bogert performed the ceremony. Mr. Richard Rushlow and Miss Teresa McConnell were witnesses to the ceremony.

BIRD — STICKNEY.

A pretty but quiet home wedding was held at the residence of Mrs. I. F. Stickney, 1st con. Tyendinaga, on Wednesday morning, June 20, when her third daughter, Lydia Frances, was united in marriage to Mr. Milton Francis Bird, of Stirling The ceremony was performed by Rev. Wm. Coombe, Shannonville, at 9.30 a.m., in the presence of the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The young couple were unattended. After the ceremony and congratulations, a dainty wedding breakfast was served, after which Mr. and Mrs. Bird left on the 2.20 p. m. train for a trip in the eastern part of the province.

JORDAN — LLOYD.

A quiet wedding took place at 2 o'clock this afternoon, at St. Thomas' Church. The groom was Mr. Thomas Jordan, of Tyendinaga, and the bride Miss Winnifrid Lloyd, of Ameliasburg Rev. Rural Dean Beamish officiated The young couple were unattended, but some friends were present as witnesses. Mr. and Mrs. Jordan will visit relatives in the northern part of the county before taking up their residence in Tyendinaga.

LATCHFORD — JORDAN.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the residence of Mr. William Jordan, Myrehall, on Wednesday, June 13th, when, in the presence of about sixty guests, his eldest daughter, Miss Ida I., was united in marriage to Mr. Robt. A. Latchford, of Tweed The Rev. J. W. Archibald, of St Paul's Church, Roslin, performed the ceremony. The bride entered the parlor leaning on her father's arm, to the strains of the Wedding March played by Miss Mabel Huff, of Belleville. She looked exceedingly pretty in a gown of cream colienne over cream taffeta, with chiffon and ribbon trimming, the only ornament being a sunburst of pearls. She wore a white silk Mechlin veil, caught with orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of white carnations and similax The bridesmaid was Miss Nellie Coulter, who wore a pretty cream voile dress, trimmed with lace and ribbons. The ceremony took place in the evening at eight o'clock under a beautiful arch of evergreens and white roses, which was lit up with colored candles. Miss Nellie Robinson, of Norwood, and Miss Gertie Jordan, sister of the bride, were pretty little maids of honor and held the white satin streamers from the arch The best man was Mr. Thos. Jordan, brother of the bride. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch and chain, a gold bracelet to the bridesmaid, and to the groomsman gold cuff links. After congratulations the guests proceeded to the dining-room, which was profusely decorated with evergreens and the national colors, where a sumptuous repast was served. The following evening the happy couple left amid showers of rice and good wishes, accompanied by a number of friends, for Tweed where a reception was held at the home of the groom. The bride's going-away dress was navy blue broadcloth, with white silk blouse and hat to match. The presents were costly and numerous, showing the high esteem in which the bride is held by her many friends.

Horrible Story, This.

Dublin, June 19.—The Independent states that Mr. O'Donovan, a member of the Brandon District Council, speaking at a Council meeting, accused the American Beef Trust of making its Irish customers cannibals. He instanced the case of a local farmer, who had found parts of a man's thigh in a barrel of American salted beef. This fact could be proved under oath. The farmer was so disgusted that he buried the flesh in his garden and kept the matter secret for a long time.

Sitting Was Brief And Business-like.

MUNICIPAL COMMISSION APPROVED AND RATIFIED THE GAS DEBENTURE BY-LAW PASSED BY THE CITY COUNCIL.

The Municipal and Railway Commission, which was recently appointed by the Ontario Government, and is composed of Messrs. J. Leitch, of Cornwall; H. M. Kittson, of Hamilton, and A. B. Ingram, of St. Thomas, yesterday afternoon held their first official sittings in this city, in the Court House.

The object of the Commission's attendance in this city was to hear evidence in reference to the Gas Debenture By-law passed by the City Council, authorizing the borrowing of $25,000 to extend the gas system in this city, and also for improvements at the gas works. After the members had taken their places upon the bench, evidence in support of the By-law was heard.

Mr. W. J. Thomson, manager of the Gas Works, was sworn and questioned by Mr. Mikel, city solicitor. Mr. Thomson said he had been connected with the gas works for some years. It was proposed to make, under the new By-law, extensions of gas mains on Cedar street west from West Bridge street, 450 feet; Forin street from Ann street to Charles street; Foster avenue from Pine street to connect with main on Foster avenue; West Bridge street from Sinclair street to Yeomans street; Pine street from Charles street to Bleecker avenue, and on Bleecker avenue from Pine street to Railway Station street; Albion street, north from Pine street 450 feet; Everett street from Bridge street to Catherine street; Emily street from Bleecker avenue to Bettes street, on Bettes street from Emily street to Brassey street and on Brassey street east 250 feet; South Ann street from Dundas street north 300 feet to present connection; Ridley street from North Front street to Grier street and on Grier street from Ridley street to College street; and the construction of services from these and other mains and for relaying the mains on Catherine street and Victoria avenue, and for the purchasing of 400 slot or prepayment meters, and for the construction of a Gas Holder of 60,000 cubic feet capacity.

The estimated cost was $25,000. He had made a personal canvass of those residing upon these streets and it was absolutely certain that 90 new consumers of gas would be secured and probably more. This would, he estimated, mean a revenue of $2160 per annum. The by-products, such as coke and tar, which would be secured, because of extra coal being consumed, Mr. Thomson estimated would bring in a revenue of $5184.40, makbring in a revenue ot $518.40, makthis was the coal which would cost $716.40 laid down at the shed. This would leave a revenue, above the expenditure, of $1962, which was more than the principal and interest which would be involved in the debenture by-law. In one of the districts where it is proposed to make extensions Mr. Thomson said there was a large educational institution, where considerable gas would be used, and this had been counted as but one consumer.

In answer to a question from the Chairman, Mr. Thomson said he was certain that the revenue would be what he had stated.

No person was present to offer any evidence against the By-law.

Mr. Leitch, Chairman of the Commission, said it had been a pleasure to him to have the privilege of driving over some parts of the city, and it appeared that it was necessary to make the extensions in the gas service as outlined in the By-law. It would also be necessary to instal a new holder owing to the large increased production of gas. The extensions, he considered, were in the public interest, and there should be no difficulty in securing the number of new consumers mentioned. The Commission, he said, would grant an order approving of and sanctioning the By-law.

Mr. Mikel, on behalf of the City Council, thanked the members of the Commission for coming to the city and disposing of this matter, and also took occasion to congratulate them upon their appointment.

This concluded the business of the sitting.

BURIED IN COAL AVALANCHE.

One Miner Killed and a Second Is Badly Injured.

Springhill, N. S., June 20.—A fatality occurred in the mines here early yesterday, by which a Welshman named Benjamin Davies, lost his life, while a companion was badly injured.

They had proceeded to get timber. This section is well-known as uncertain and dangerous, the seams being very steep, and it often happens that a "slump" occurs without the slightest warning, several tons of coal rolling down the grade like an avalanche, sweeping everything movable with it.

Before the men realized the nature of the surroundings, the road about them commenced to "run," carrying both men to the roadway below, completely burying deceased, and partially covering Pervis Herring, who was held in this position four and one-half hours before being released.

The mines were idle yesterday in accordance with the custom in these events and will also be idle to-day to allow workmen to attend the funeral.

BASIS FOR UNION.

Bishop Williams Says Anglicans Will Negotiate Under Four Divisions.

London, June 20.—In his charge to the Synod of Huron yesterday afternoon, Bishop Williams, referring to the basis upon which the Anglican Church would negotiate for unity resolved itself into four divisions:

(1) The acceptance of the Scripture as the revelation of God and the warrant for faith and conduct.

(2) The acceptance of Nicene and apostles creed and the sufficient exposition of the faith.

(3) The acceptance of the two sacraments ordained by Christ.

(4) The acceptance of the historic Episcopate.

"We Anglicans," said his lordship, "have at least always prayed for unity. We have even made overtures to other bodies with a view to restoring the grand idea of the apostolic life—the visible fellowship of believers—and until recently we have had little response from any quarter."

ANARCHISTS IN PORTLAND.

One of the Group Confirms Report of Murderous Design.

Portland, Ore., June 20.—Statements made by Walter Sealaszkiwcz, formerly president of the Polish National Society, confirm a recent report that this city harbors an anarchistic society which contemplates the assassination of President Roosevelt.

Sealaszkiwcz's statements were made to the police Monday while he was securing warrants for several members of his society, whom, he alleges, attacked and beat him Sunday night for objecting to an alleged misuse of the society's funds.

Sealaszkiwcz states that there are about 80 anarchists in the city, and that they hold regular meetings at places northeast of Portland.

SUICIDED IN BUFFALO.

End of Young Canadian—Combination of Whisky and Morphine.

Buffalo, June 20.—What was at first thought to be a mysterious murder by poison was reported to the authorities yesterday morning, when Robert Byrch, a young Canadian, was found dead in bed in his boarding-house, 114 Swan street, after he had been assisted home by two strange men. Death, due to the combination of whisky and morphine, self-administered, was the decision of the police and Medical Examiner John D. Howland, after a rigid investigation. Byrch was about 21 years old, and it is believed came from Toronto, Ont. He was a sign painter.

Was No Mythical Brother.

Kingston, June 20.—When the County Court Sessions opened yesterday afternoon Abraham Schacher sat in the prisoners' dock instead of his brother Charles, who a few hours before was on trial for stealing furs from McKay's store in November last. The resemblance was remarkable, and caused a sensation in court. He said he had returned from New York to save his brother from suffering for his crime, and pleaded guilty. The judge sent him to the Central Prison for a year. Wood, who turned King's witness, was liberated, and Charles Schacher was allowed to go on bail of $1,000 to appear in December next to answer other charges against him.

Dies After Hearty Meal.

Brockville, June 20.—After eating a hearty meal, which he seemed to relish, James Easter, an elderly citizen, fell from the chair at the home of his brother yesterday and suddenly expired. Yesterday he left the hospital, where he had been receiving treatment for a fortnight. He was 69 years of age.

$50 FOR THE FORENOON

J. H. Semple Was Well Paid by the Government.

Examined the Provisions For the Arctic Before Sailing, But Declines to Tell What He Was Paid to Examine Samples of Goods Returned After the Voyage—Committee Didn't Insist on an Answer.

Ottawa, June 20.—J. H. Semple of Montreal gave evidence before the special committee on the supplies to the SS. Arctic yesterday afternoon.

He said he had been instructed by the late Minister of Marine to examine the provisions of the vessel before she sailed and after she returned. He did so and said unhesitatingly that the goods were of a class that "could not be beaten." He also examined the invoices, and in his judgment the prices charged were fair. He saw some trumpery cases in which he thought the prices were rather high, but these were too small to make a fuss about. On the whole the charges were reasonable. On the return of the Arctic a portion of the perishable goods which were left over were sold in Montreal at what they cost. Any loss through breakages he deemed to be due to bad storage. As regards damage by frost he thought the lime juice a little affected, but that was all.

In reply to Mr. Northup, witness said that though he visited The Arctic before she sailed in order to examine the provisions, when the vessel returned the goods were brought to Ottawa and he examined them here. When he inspected there were present Col. White, Col. Gourdeau, and Mr. Boudrault. There was nothing to show that the goods came from the Arctic. The samples were simply laid before him. It took a forenoon to examine the samples, and for this he received $50.

Question of Privacy.

He also spent a month at Sorel in the work of examination. He worked every day except Saturday afternoons and Sundays. He found at Sorel on the Arctic some defective stores, owing to boxes and tins having been broken. About a quarter of the boxes were broken and most of the goods they contained were rendered unfit for use. Biscuits suffered most.

Questioned by Mr. Northup, Mr. Semple refused to say how much he charged for his services at Sorel.

Mr. Bergeron pressed the point, but Mr. Carvell and Mr. MacPherson objected to the question being put. It was private business.

"All right," said Mr. Bergeron, when the question had again been objected to by Mr. MacPherson, "If we can't get an answer here we can get it in Parliament. This is just a sample of the way business has been going on.

To Mr. Bennett witness said that he did business as a wholesale grocer at 55 St. Francis Xavier street, Montreal, room 9.

Mr. Bennett: "Do you carry any stock?"

Mr. Semple: "I do not. I did for thirty years. Now I buy goods and sell them on commission and for profit as I desire."

This concluded Mr. Semple's evidence.

Quite Certain.

F. Moffet, jr., a checking clerk, said he was in Quebec from the middle of July till the Arctic sailed on September 17. He checked all the goods placed on the Arctic, and felt certain that everything mentioned in the invoices went aboard. He was positive no goods had been taken away in a launch.

To Mr. Bergeron the witness said he could not swear positively that no goods had been taken away during the night, but he did not think it possible.

J. B. Boudreau, assistant accountant of the Marine Department, who was sent to Quebec to take charge of the loading of supplies on to the Arctic, was the next witness called. His duty was to check both as to quality and quantity. He did not open all the cases as this would have been impossible, but was reasonably certain that all the supplies mentioned in the invoices were received.

Mr. Boudreau was as positive as the previous witness that no supplies had been taken away from the Arctic in a launch. He corroborated Mr. Semple's evidence as to goods spoiled on the vessel. The examination of the witness was not concluded when the committee rose at 6 o'clock.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Ottawa, June 20.—At the evening session of the House, on motion to go into supply, Mr. Fowler (King's and Albert) moved an amendment requiring the Department of the Interior to investigate and dismiss Philip Wagner, at present an interpreter at Edmonton, who, he said, had repeatedly defrauded immigrants, and had served several terms in jail therefor.

Mr. Oliver replied that for his crime Wagner had been punished and was now leading a useful and respectable life.

On division Mr. Fowler's amendment was lost: yeas 41, nays 88.

$80,000 to 'Frisco.

Mr. Fielding announced that upon the advice of His Majesty's consul-general at San Francisco the Government had sent $80,000 to James D. Phelan, president of the Red Cross Society, for geenral distribution.

In answer to an enquiry by R. L. Borden, Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that a bill would be brought down at the present session, dealing with pensions for ex-Cabinet Ministers.

The House passed Sir Frederick Borden's bill to amend the Militia Act.

Several other Government bills were passed, including Mr. Fielding's bill to redeem worn silver coin and to change the fiscal year. The Minister stated that $230,000 of American silver had been returned to the United States.

New Bridge Over Niagara.

Ottawa, June 20.—The railway committee of the House of Commons met yesterday and passed a bill to incorporate the Trans-Niagara Bridge Co., which is for a new bridge across Niagara River for railway and general traffic. The capital is placed at $1,000,000, and the head office, Toronto. The bridge is to be located near Niagara Falls, north of the upper steel arch bridge and about within 1,000 feet of it. The tolls must be subject to the Railway Commission and the usual clause to begin work in two years and finish in five was inserted.

MORE DIVORCE TALK.

Senator McMullen Thinks Time Is Ripe to Consider Court.

Ottawa, June 20.—In the Senate yesterday, Senator Watson opposed the acceptance of a report from the divorce committee recommending divorce for Geo. K. Hadley of Brandon. Senator Watson declared that the evidence was insufficient to grant divorce upon. There was no evidence that she had ever been guilty of an immoral act.

Senator McMullen, as a member of the committee, was convinced that the evidence was ample to warrant divorce being granted. From the amount of criticism the recommendations of the divorce committee had been subjected to during the past few weeks he thought the time had come for the Government to seriously consider relieving the Senate of divorce and establishing a divorce court to do the business.

Senator Wilson, one of the divorce committee, had not agreed with the majority in this case. He made a review of the evidence to show that in this case divorce should not have been granted against Mrs. Hadley.

Senator Jones thought the evidence insufficient.

Senator Kirchhoffer had a good deal of curiosity as to what the Senate would do in this case. He intimated that he would resign from the divorce committee, of which he had been president for many years. He thought the committee had found properly in this case.

Senator Landry opposed the bill.

LORDS PASS IT.

Bill Provides For Legalization of Marriage With Sister-in-Law.

London, June 20.—The colonial marriages bill passed its third reading without comment, in the House of Lords yesterday.

This bill provides for the legalization in the United Kingdom of marriages with a deceased wife's sister, legally contracted anywhere in the British possessions.

Closure For Education Bill.

London, June 20.—After a heated debate, lasting from early Monday afternoon till 2.30 yesterday morning, the House of Commons, having voted down numerous amendments offered by the Opposition, adopted a resolution offered by Premier Campbell-Bannerman with a view to expediting the progress of the education bill. The Government's majority was 141. The resolution empowers the Government to closure the bill and defines the clauses which may be passed each day. It allows 17 days for the remaining stages of the bill.

W. B. Hamilton Dead.

Toronto, June 20.—The death occurred yesterday, from old age, of W. B. Hamilton of the shoe firm of that name, at the age of 82. He was born in Montreal in 1824, and came to Toronto when 9 years old. In 1860 he began the manufacture of shoes. He was the oldest director of the Bank of Commerce and had held office for many years. He was also a member of the Board of Trade from its earliest days, and at one time was its president. He was on the exhibition committee from its organization, and was a charter member and honorary director.

New High School Inspector.

Toronto, June 20.—H. B. Spotton, principal of the Harbord street Collegiate Institute, has been appointed inspector of high schools, to succeed John E. Hodgson, who has resigned. Mr. Spotton has been principal of Harbord street Collegiate Institute since 1892, previous to which time he was for many years head master of the Barrie High School. He is a native of Port Hope, and graduated from Toronto University in 1864, being a specialist in science.

Threatened to Burn Works.

Brockville, June 20.—A strapping young man named Daniel Henry, of Prescott, was arraigned yesterday for threatening to burn the plant of the fulminate of mercury works outside of Prescott. The trouble arose over employment of non-union labor. Henry and other employes were laid off during a slack period, and when operations were resumed he was not taken on.

Motor Boat Blows Up.

Brockville, June 20.—John Duneau, F. Mallory and W. Chick, operating a motor boat on Jones' Creek, narrowly escaped drowning and serious injury by the explosion of gasoline, which was supplying the motive power. The fluid ignited through a leak, and a terrific report followed. Both ends were blown out of the boat. Mallory was badly burned on the arms and face.

Bedour Confesses?

Kingston, June 20.—Chief of Police White of Perth saw Bedour in jail here. He would say nothing of his connection with the alleged murder at Sharbot Lake, but said the lads were done away with, not drowned; that he knew who did the deed, and he could show where the bodies were placed.

Production of Portland Cement.

Washington, June 20.—The production of Portland cement in 1905 amounted to 35,246,812 barrels, valued at $33,345,867, which represents a gain of 8,740,931 barrels in quantity, and $9,890,748 in value over 1904.

Miners' Strike Settled.

Columbus, Ohio, June 20.—The strike of the miners in Ohio was settled yesterday, and the men have been ordered to go back to work. The settlement includes the return of union men to the mines in Eastern Ohio.

JEWS TORN TO PIECES

Mad Orgie of Blood Which Continued For 72 Hours.

Savage Bestiality of Russians Who Burned and Sacked Jewish Dwellings—Slaughter and Pillage Went on Unchecked for Three Days—Troops Fired Into the Houses of the Hunted and Persecuted Race.

Gredno, Western Russia, June 21.—Owing to the refusal of the censor at Bialistok to permit the free telegraphing of the result of the investigation of the massacre of Jews there, the correspondent of the Associated Press came here. The anti-Jewish rioting at Bialistok is now ended. The troops are in full control, and in view of the outcry raised it is certain that the authorities will not permit a renewal of the horrors recently witnessed at Bialistok.

This entire region is greatly excited owing to fear that the Bialistok massacre was only the signal for a general attack on the Jews throughout the pale and in Poland, but if any such conspiracy existed it is too late to carry out the plans, as the most imperative orders to prevent further outbreaks have been issued to the governors and governor-generals from St. Petersburg.

Awful Savagery.

When the correspondent arrived at Bialistok Sunday morning the worst was already over, but on all sides there was revolting evidence of savage bestiality on the part of the blood-drunken mobs, which sacked and burned the Jewish houses, shops and stores. For seventy-two hours, with a slight abatement during the daytime, the mad orgie of blood and pillage went on unchecked. The inhumanity displayed would have done credit to the mongrel hordes of Genghis Khan in his conquests of China and Central Asia early in the thirteenth century. At first police and troops urged on the mob, but finally, when dismayed by the bloody deeds accomplished, they reluctantly sought to obey the orders of their superiors to put an end to the work of the rapacious bands of roughs, who were so far beyond control of the local forces that regiment after regiment had to be thrown into the city before order could be restored.

Like Wild Beasts.

During the rioting the Jews were hunted down by ferocious pursuers, who in the majority of cases were not content with killing more victims, but tore them to pieces like wild animals. And while this was in progress the troops either stood idly by or, as was more frequently the case, fired into the houses and shops where Jews were concealed, under the pretext that they believed them to be revolutionists, but really in order to make way for the murderers and plunderers who followed in the soldiers' wake.

While it is impossible to give the exact figures, the visits of the correspondent to the hospitals and cemeteries enable him to approximate the killed at one hundred Jews and twenty Christians and the wounded at one hundred and fifty Jews and seven Christians.

Origin of Massacre.

The question of the origin of the massacre was carefully investigated.

Although many of the Jews denied that a bomb was thrown at the Orthodox procession Thursday, in honor of Corpus Christi day, that a bomb was thrown the fact is established beyond a doubt. But the question of who threw the bomb remains unsettled.

The accounts of impartial witnesses, however, demonstrate that an insulting cry enraged the Jews, who attacked the religious procession. Then from one end of the city to the other the police spread the report of the attack, thus fanning the religious fanaticism of the Christians and setting loose the worse elements upon the Jews, on whom the crowds watching the procession had already turned.

Government Knew of It.

As proof of the charge that the massacre was prepared in advance, the Jews claim that the keepers of the Government wine shops received notice the day before the outbreak to remove their cash from the shops to safer places.

Soldiers Laughed.

The Jews at first fought with revolvers and bombs, and with these weapons the majority of the Christian victims were killed. But the Jews were soon overwhelmed and fled for shelter into cellars or attics. The soldiers watched this chase and butchery, sometimes laughing with indifference, but never failing to fire into houses where Jews, sometimes to the number of a hundred, were making a stand against their assailants.

A member of the Parliamentary Commission investigation says it has failed to find evidence that the massacre was planned at St. Petersburg, nor that the chief of police of Bialistok was a party, but the responsibility of his subordinates is proved. The thrower of the bomb is not yet discovered.

Trepoff to Form Cabinet.

London, June 21.—The Tribune's correspondent at St. Petersburg asserts that Emperor Nicholas is urging Gen. Trepoff to negotiate a Cabinet.

Three Men in the Murders.

Perth, June 21.—"I am perfectly satisfied that I will be able to prove the case."

This was the emphatic declaration made last night by Chief of Police M. D. White, referring to Sandy Bedour and Frank Beaver, the men alleged to have murdered two Sharbot Lake boys four years ago. Another assertion by Mr. White causes the mystery to further thicken. "There is a third party implicated, but he declined to say more.

Little Man in Big Place.

After the scathing snub administered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the Cinqmars case, Hon. Mr. Aylesworth must feel that his remaining influence in the Ministry has greatly declined. What is he going to do about it? What can he do with entire credit to his own standing as a public man, but retire from the position for which he has, in the Premier's opinion, plainly and unequivocally expressed, shown his unfitness? As the London Free Press points out, The effect of Sir Wilfrid's open and pointed rebuke leaves the new Minister in a sorry plight. The man who was expected to bulk large in the public eye is found much undersized. The incident recalls several things in Mr Aylesworth's experience; how he "flew off the handle" before Lord Alverstone, causing a furore in Canada which he had to "swallow himself" in order to allay; how he assumed to treat the public patronage while Postmaster-General, dismissing capable men as a despot might do as in the case of the postmaster at Cannington. All this while arrogating to himself the largest privileges, such as practising his legal profession while under pay as a Cabinet Minister. People must come to distrust a Minister of Justice who would persist in appearing as a barrister before a judge whom he appointed and had the power to promote, especially if he has made the mistake of acting a strongly partisan part in Parliament regarding a point of high judicial practice.

It will take Mr. Aylesworth years to recover from the discredit which Sir Wilfrid's stinging rebuke cast upon him. In effect Sir Wilfrid told his colleague, the new Minister of Justice, that he had taken a position that was utterly untenable as well as impolitic. On the instant the Premier administered a reprimand such as would befit a too forward school boy. Imagine the audacious simplicity of a Minister new to Parliamentary usage, attempting to lead his party into a pitfall obvious to all the older hands, and that in presence of his chief, and in a way to bring that able tactician in a headlong rush to retrieve the position and save from disaster. How far will the Liberal rank and file be ready to follow the Minister of Justice after such a fiasco.

Are Parents to Blame?

Rev. Father Shea, of Montreal, writes to the press of that city, dealing trenchantly with a matter which concerns parents everywhere. He says in part:

> "Clergymen, medical men and the officers of the law and order, are awakening to the fearful dangers to which our boys and girls are exposed by being allowed to roam loosely about the streets and lanes after nightfall. If seem a much harder for ordinary parents to raise children now-a-days than it ever was. Formerly boys and girls had a greater reverential fear of their parents, and they seldom provoked their displeasure."

The worthy father seeks to account for this falling off in the greater worldliness of parents, the quest for wealth and social advancement which leaves the children more and more to the care of irresponsible persons or without the careful training that was formerly given to the bringing up of the family. He blames the parents, who wantonly thrust the children into places, associations, companionships and influences that put their innocence into jeopardy.

But that, says a contemporary, is not the whole of the matter, nor perhaps the greater reason. Might not the cause be deeper, for instance, in the readier means of self support now than formerly? Time was in this country when the boy just out of school found more trouble to get on in the world than in these more prosperous years. His parents had to "speak for him" and go security for his good behavior in order to "get a job" and make a start in life. Jobs were not to be had for the asking as seems to be the case now-a-days, when "Boy wanted" and 'Girl wanted" are placarded everywhere. The demand for labor extending so readily to boys and girls at good wages, gives them an independence which was unknown to the previous generation.

It is just possible that the explanation of Father Shea's complaint may be found less in the voluntary relaxing of parental control than in the self-assertion which comes of the opportunity to young people to earn their own support. The neighbors are in some cases amused with the growing airs of a young cub who has come into a certain income of three or four dollars a week, how he begins to form expensive habits, and indulge in amusements which cost money, and to break away from home influences. Comparing notes, he soon discovers that the board is not what it should be. He has got to have better or he will "leave." The poor mother who has denied herself to give him an education, and a decent appearance among other boys, who has nursed and tended him through all the troubles of childhood, must find it a heart-breaking matter to see her son thus behave. It is hoped such cases are rare. Yet that they exist to a notable extent is probable from the remarks often dropped of late by men entitled to credence. But are the parents so much to blame as Father Shea declares them to be?

An ex-alderman of this city is loaded up with an idea which is by no means a bad one. He thinks the city should build a wall at the north end of the harbor, on the east side of Victoria park. The place in question is an eyesore at present, but our friend thinks that, were a wall built there, the outer part would be soon filled and, with a little dredging, private boats would be able to tie up to and take on passengers from the wall. It would certainly be a big improvement over present conditions, and as the city now owns the lot adjoining the north end of the harbor, it seems to be up to them, our subscriber thinks, to make some improvements, especially as the cost would not be by any means great.

This will be done to protect the licensed vendors who make a living out of it. The cost of a license is nothing, but the department reserves the right to refuse any license where it does not seem to be required. We will not grant licenses to departmental stores.'"

WHAT IS MANSLAUGHTER?

(Mail and Empire.)

James Hackett, the slayer of little May Ahearn in Montreal, having been found guilty of manslaughter, the presumption must have been that the child attacked him. The public would be indebted to some judge for an exact definition of the crime of manslaughter. The impression prevails that it is more a loophole for a murderer than anything else.

Pretty Home Wedding.

CHILMAN—HUMFREY.

At 2 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon a pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. George Humfrey, McDonald avenue. The bride was Miss Rose Humfrey, of this city, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Humfrey, and the groom Mr. Charles Chilman, of Chicago, who is connected with the Santa Fe Railway Rev. A. M. Hubly, rector of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, officiated. The bridesmaid was Miss Pearl Thompson, and the groomsman Mr. John Nichol, of Toronto The bride was attired in a gown of cream organdie and carried a bouquet of roses and carnations. The bridesmaid's dress was of cream silk eolienne. After the ceremony a wedding repast was partaken of. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Chilman left on the evening train for the west and after a visit to some places of interest will proceed to their home in Chicago. The groom was at one time a resident of this city and was deservedly a popular young man.

What's the good of keeping from him
Any good things you may see,
That will lift his load of labor
Like Rocky Mountain Tea.
—D. M. Waters.

Good Girl!

Peterboro Examiner: Some young men, from whom it might not be expected are anxious for improving themselves—improving on nature's handiwork by making bigger fools of themselves than nature intended. Last night a party of young ladies passing along Charlotte street were overtaken by two or three young men. One of these, in passing, when he came opposite this militant young lady, put his face down close to hers and made a kissing noise. Without hesitation the insulted damsel took her revenge. She laid her umbrella over the hoodlum's impudent head with such force as to smash the rain shedder. It is difficult to tell which was more surprised—the young man at the promptness of his punishment, or the young lady that her umbrella should be broken over so soft an object as the hoodlum's head.

In days to come when this plucky damsel comes to preside over a home and a husband it will not be difficult to decide which will be head of the house.

When the baby talks it is time to give Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea. It's the greatest baby medicine known to loving mothers. It makes them eat, sleep and grow. 35 cents, Tea or Tablets.—D. M. Waters.

UNNA DEFINES A CAUSE.

European Skin Specialist Says Dandruff is Caused by Parasites.

Upon that theory, proved beyond a doubt, a cure for dandruff was sought after. Scientists, chemists, druggists and physicians all "took a hand" and the successful issue is the present product known as "Newbro's Herpicide."

This remedy actually kills the parasites that infest the hair bulb, does its work most effectively and contains not an atom of substance injurious to any thing else than the germ alone. Herpicide causes the hair to grow as nature intended it should, soft and abundant.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Mr H. S. O'Hara and son Raymond, had a severe shaking up on Monday. They had purchased a colt near Marmora, and in leading it away from the stable it got frightened and jumped into the buggy wheels, upsetting the latter and causing quite a wreckage in a few seconds. Mr. O'Hara was considerably bruised, and the buggy badly smashed, but the colt and Raymond escaped unhurt.—Madoc Review.

GODFREY'S TANKARD.

A Seventeenth Century Relic of the Plague In London.

A curious historical relic of London is the large tankard of solid silver presented by Charles II. to Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey for his valuable services during the plague and the fire of London, for which he received the honor of knighthood in 1666. The tankard, which is of plain silver, has a hinged cover and weighs nearly thirty-six ounces. Its front is engraved with the royal arms and the crest of the recipient, together with inscriptions in Latin and engravings of scenes connected with the fire, which are still in excellent preservation. The engraving of the pesthouse men carrying corpses to the dismal plague pit and that of the crowded blocks of houses surmounted by flames are very quaint and curious. Sir Edmund, who was born in 1621 at Sellinge, in Kent, was a timber merchant, possessing wharfs at Dowgate city and at Charing Cross. He prospered, became justice of the peace for Westminster and member of parliament for Winchilsea. In history, as no reader of Macaulay and Green will need to be told, his name is most famous in connection with his mysterious murder, which was popularly attributed to the zeal with which he had devoted himself to unraveling the alleged popish plot. His body was found in a ditch near Primrose hill, face downward and penetrated by his own sword, under circumstances which precluded the idea of suicide or robbery.

The excitement caused by this still mysterious event is indicated by the fact that when the funeral procession left the city, with great pomp and pageant, for the burial ground of St. Martin's-in-the-Feilds, it was preceded by 70 clergy and followed by upward of 1,000 persons of distinction.

THE JAW AND THE TEETH.

What May Happen If We Continue Using Soft Foods.

The teeth are really appendages of the skin, and not of the skeleton, as people generally believe. The jaw is formed in accordance with the necessity for providing a hold for the teeth—that is, if there were no teeth to come, the jaw would grow differently, and would not have its present shape. The jaw is not an independent part, as it would like to be; it has to form itself to accommodate tenants with which, strictly speaking, it has no ties of kindred.

The use of soft foods decreases the size of the teeth, and they will ultimately disappear, unless we make more use of them.

As there does not seem to be any likelihood of a change in our habits, we must expect to lose them in course of time. Then the jaw will assume probably another shape. Further, the gums might disappear, for there can be no use for them after the disappearance of the teeth.

The loss of the teeth makes the lips fall in, and brings us near to the Punch form of face! We find it impossible to pronounce sounds, such as t, d, sh, ch. The change of face, so to say, will certainly lead to a modification of the tongue, and this in turn to the inability to pronounce other sounds.

Atonic Dyspepsia.

The ultimate cause of atonic dyspepsia is constitutional depression. It may be due to overwork, and especially to prolonged worry. Sometimes the dyspepsia is the first manifestation of tubercular poisoning. Again, there seems to be an inherent failure of the digestive organs. Once established, dyspepsia is, in turn, the cause of loss of strength, of mental inertia and visceral weakness. Some degree of simple anaemia is almost inevitable. The exciting cause may be an illness of any kind, the excessive use of tea, coffee or other beverages, the lack of proper food, some error in habits of eating. Often it is not discoverable.

Consolatory.

A correspondent of an English paper tells how some one visited a wild beast show and saw a countryman come in bearing unmistakable signs of having had a glass too much. A tiger scratched the back of the hand with which the man grasped a bar of the cage. The laceration was severe, and the pain was great. The sufferer danced about and twirled his shillalah, crying: "Let him out! Let him out till I have me will av him!" A companion tried to soothe the irate dancer, with this neat impromptu: "Never mind, Pat. Sure, he only wanted to scrape acquaintance wid ye."

He Knew.

The first witness called in a petty lawsuit in Cincinnati was an Irishman of whose competence as a witness opposing counsel entertained doubt. At their instance there was put to him before being sworn the usual interrogatory, "Do you know the nature of an oath?"

A broad grin spread over the face of the Irishman as he replied:

"Indade, your honor, I may say that it is second nature with me."

Variety.

She—Don't you get tired of this modern life, with its heartburnings, its longings, its cruel disappointments, its unutterable inadequacy? He—Oh, yes, but always just about that time some new girl comes along.

Her Status.

The Captain—That's a handsome woman! Is she unmarried? The Belle—Oh, yes! (Captain indulges in pleasing reflections.) She's been unmarried several times!—London Mail.

Glory is like a circle in the water, which never ceaseth to enlarge itself till by broad spreading it disperse to naught.—Shakespeare.

KITCHEN APRONS.

Have Them of Rubber, Oilcloth or Waterproof Material.

One of those housekeeping geniuses who manage to do their work with the least labor has borrowed an idea in aprons from her son, an amateur photographer.

He spoiled his clothes with the evil smelling chemicals in which amateur photographers revel until in a burst of inspiration it occurred to him to tie a piece of waterproof goods around his waist during his developing work.

His clothes were spared and his mother furnished with an idea.

She gradually banished from the kitchen wardrobe all the checks, denim and ticking aprons in which she had hitherto taken pride.

She replaced them with smaller number of oilcloth and waterproof aprons, long skirted, bibbed, sleeved and pocketed.

In these no form of kitchen work, no matter how "moist and unpleasant," could spoil or stain the dress beneath.

When the aprons were soiled no elaborate washing and ironing were necessary. They were as easily cleaned as a child's slate with a sponge and dry cloth. The maid of all work was also furnished with them, and beneath them she could wear a clean muslin apron and thus be ready to answer the doorbell at a second's notice by the simple process of slipping off the upper covering.—New York Press.

BUYING GLOVES.

Tests Which Will Aid You In Making Your Selection.

Many women buy their gloves carelessly. They do not examine the glove and later find to their sorrow that the glove that seemed pretty and effective on the hand is badly made and of poor material.

"In selecting a pair of gloves," said a glove saleswoman, "the best plan is to test the kid by stretching it. Take the side seams between the thumbs and fingers and pull. If the kid is soft and pliable, the pores small, even and not specially noticeable and the glove immediately takes on its original shape, it gives evidence of not only being elastic and therefore full of new life, but of being of a fairly good quality. The heavy walking gloves can be tried in the same way, but as sure a test as any is in smelling them, and if there is a rather fragrant odor like that of Russian leather, they, too, should be all right. The stitching in the seams should all be carefully examined to see that it is perfect and that there are none sewed so close to the edges that they will tear out. If well made they should have a small gore between each of the fingers."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Charcoal tied in a bag and dropped into the cistern will purify the water.

When lemons have become hard and dry immerse them in cold water. They will soon become quite soft and ready to use.

The most practical use for old corks is to make a low fire burn up. Empty spools are also good kindling, and neither should be allowed to accumulate in any quantity.

Use cold boiled sweet potato for baiting rat or mouse traps, and you will find it much more effective than cheese or bacon rind or any of the time honored baits.

In buying draperies consider the size of your room. Heavy, imposing ones makes a small room look stuffy, while airy, diaphanous hangings are out of place in a very large room.

Soda should never be dissolved in hot water, because if it is some of the gases would then be liberated and wasted, and a greater amount of soda would be needed to make good this waste than if the soda were dissolved in cold water.

Devonshire Meat Pie.

Remove the meat from a knuckle of veal. Put the bones in a kettle, cover with cold water and add one slice of onion, one slice of carrot, a bit of bay leaf, a sprig of parsley, twelve peppercorns and two teaspoonfuls of salt. Then heat slowly to the boiling point. Add the veal, and let simmer until the meat is tender. Remove the meat, and reduce stock to two cupfuls. Put a one-half pound slice of lean raw ham in a frying pan, cover with lukewarm water and let stand on the back of the range for one hour. Brown four tablespoonfuls of butter, add four tablespoonfuls of flour, and when well browned pour on gradually, while stirring constantly, the two cupfuls of stock. Then add veal and ham, each cut into cubes, and let simmer for twenty minutes. Put in a serving dish and cover with a top made of puff paste of correct size. It is much better to bake the paste separately, and cover the pie just before sending to the table.—Miss Farmer in Woman's Home Companion.

Denim as Floor Covering.

Figured denims have proved wonderfully satisfactory for making all sorts of inexpensive furnishings, the newest use of all being for a floor covering. The discovery was an outcome of necessity, as so many household necessities are. There was a little room which was carpeted with one of those utter monstrosities in which cabbage roses of a violent pink were blooming only too luxuriantly. The little woman who inhabited it was driven to despair every time she looked at it and finally to invention. She took plain blue denim and made a rug of it, finishing it with a wide border of figured denim—the same shade of blue for a foundation, with the weave shifted to throw the lighter threads to the surface here and there in set figures. Tacked into place, which meant over that carpet, it changed the whole character of the room.

TIMELY TOPICS.

JUST AN OLD-FASHIONED WOMAN.

She's just an old-fashioned woman, who attends to her duties as they come,
Without any noise or fuss about it;
She is kind and neighborly and lends a hand in work or play;
She is the idol of her household and her dominion is home,
Where she reigns by the divine power of love,
And her heart never grows old.

She's not overly ambitious; she doesn't speak in meeting, nor bother about having a vote;
She never attends a caucus, or yearns for a career;
But she is the apple of the eye of all the little folks and the big folks who know her;
And they think there's nobody like her;
And they run to her to share in their joys, and when sorrow comes
Or death's dark shadow looms across their path they crave her loving sympathy.

At such an hour the old-fashioned woman went down one night
To answer the urgent cry of a young woman
Suddenly bereft of her mother by the pitiless hand of death;
And the young woman, running to meet her, in her agony and despair,
Fell on the old-fashioned woman's motherly bosom
And lay there all night, clinging close to her heart,
Presently falling fast asleep (like a baby in its mother's arms) forgetting her tears
And in the morning awoke, comforted and strengthened.

Was the old-fashioned woman tired, sitting up all night in the chair holding the young woman in her arms?
Nobody knew; not even the old-fashioned woman herself;
She had merely helped a fellow creature who was in trouble, and that rested her.

Wherever the old-fashioned woman goes, she's like the sunshine dispelling the gloom.

Even the beggars and tramps, homeless and outcasts that they are,
Find a friend in the old-fashioned woman,
And they never go hungry or discouraged from her door;
For she does not reproach them on their shortcomings,
Nor grudge them the glorious sunlight and illimitable air;
Nor forbid them the songs of the birds and the free music of the winds in the trees.

And, may be, the blessings of God these poor outcasts invoke upon her
Are heard in the courts above and will stand to her credit there
When the records are finished and judgment is pronounced on the Great Day.

Wonders never cease. The New York police found a drunken man with $17,000 in his pocket and did not steal it. The newspapers announced this marvel, and the man's wife, who had been on his trail for five years was thus enabled to capture him and get a share of his money. The adventurer loses some $2,000; but by all the rules of the game as they play it in New York he should have lost $17,000, had his head cracked with a club, and then been sent to jail for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest, while the police of the precinct divided his roll.

There are no old maids in Turkey and no equivalents for the word "spinster" in the Turkish language. Whatever a girl's social position or personal attraction, she is considered to have a right to a husband, and she gets one. To be unmarried is a shame in Turkey. Even the slave girls after seven years of service get their freedom and are presented with a husband. In Turkey married men are regarded with special favor. Yet as a fact they have very little to do with getting married. Neither, for that matter, have the girls they marry. It's the man's mother who does it all.

LIFE ON EASY STREET.

It Is an Ideal Place and Worth Striving For.

There are more strong limbed, clear headed, brave hearted people living on Easy street than anywhere else in this broad land, and their prime condition is the natural consequence of living there, for, although you may not have thought of it, there is a close relationship existing between good health and the consciousness of getting on well in life. You can see this for yourself if you will note how a strong man droops, like a frost nipped flower, who by some mistake loses his position, his possessions or the esteem of his fellows, one or all. Shylock made a hard bargain with a borrower, and in his effort to foreclose the bond lost his cash and won the contempt and scorn of all men. Mental disturbance followed, including physical ill being, and, staggering away from the judge's bench and clutching at the air, he cried, "I am not well!" But you need not go back so far to get an illustration.

And on the other hand you can see by observing for yourself how the gain, or even the anticipated gain, of a home on Easy street will make a sick man well, quicken dying hopes into life and change the water of sorrow into the wine of joy. Recent literature has reminded us how a happy turn in the tide of the affairs of Josiah Wedgwood, afterward to become the world's great pioneer pottery artist and inventor, raised him from an invalid's couch and started him upon the road to affluence and distinction among England's industrial princes. Similarly Mary Wollstonecraft, afterward the mother of the poet Shelley's wife, ill from neglect and discouraged by hardships, was, by the success of her modest ventures in literature, heartened to undertake her great life work, which soon yielded her a handsome royalty.

Read the story of Angelina, who lives on East street and has no desire to move and lose her clear headedness and her health. She was engaged to be married to Allan. He was a clerk receiving $12 per week, and she earned $85 a month teaching school. After a few years Angelina explained her continued spinsterhood by saying that she had given Allan time to develop into a larger money getter, and he had not done it, so she decided against the advisability of exchanging an $85 a month position for a $50 a month husband. It is quite true that when poverty comes in at the door love flies out of the window, but it is not because the Angelinas are without sentiment. It is because love cannot feed on incompetency and thrives best on Easy street.

So the importance of everything that will aid any one to get on in the world is established on a sure foundation—the testimony of facts. We do not exalt mere money getting above those qualities of head and heart which make life worth living, but rather emphasize the honorable getting of it as a conserver of them. And hence the wisdom of living on Easy street.

In 1750 there was a great earthquake in England, and Horace Walpole records that "several women have made 'earthquake gowns'—that is, warm gowns to sit out of doors all night." Walpole also tells that "Turner, a great china man at the corner of the next street had a jar cracked by the shock. He originally asked 10 guineas for the jar. He now asks 20, because it is the only jar in Europe that had been cracked by an earthquake."

PENGUINS FEEDING.

The Change That Takes Place When They Enter the Water.

The appearance of the keeper of the penguins at the zoo, with his pail of live gudgeon, is the signal for sudden and intense excitement in the cages. The penguins wave their little flippers and waddle to the door, whence they peer eagerly down the wooden steps leading to the pool. The cormorant croaks and sways from side to side, and the darters poise their snaky heads and spread their batlike wings. At the water's edge the penguins do not launch themselves upon the surface like other water fowl, but instantly plunge beneath.

Once below water an astounding change takes place. The slow, ungainly bird is transferred into a swift and brilliant creature, beaded with globules of quicksilver, where the air clings to the close feathers, and flying through the clear and waveless depths with arrowy speed and powers of turning far greater than in any known form of aerial flight. The rapid and steady strokes of the wings are exactly similar to those of the air birds, while its feet float straight out level with the body, unused for propulsion or even as rudders and as little needed in its progress as those of a wild duck when on the wing.

The twists and turns necessary to follow the active little fish are made wholly by the strokes of one wing and the cessation of movement in the other, and the fish are chased, caught and swallowed without the slightest relaxation of speed in a submarine flight which is quite as rapid as that of most birds which take their prey in midair. In less than two minutes some thirty gudgeon are caught and swallowed below water, the only appearance of the birds on the surface being made by one or two bounds from the depths, when the head and shoulders leap above the surface for a second and then disappear.

Any attempt to remain on the surface leads to ludicrous splashing and confusion, for the submarine bird cannot float. It can only fly below the surface. Immediately the meal is finished both penguins scramble out of the water and shuffle with round backs and drooping wings back to their cage to dry and digest.—London Spectator.

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton.

BISON FURNACE

With a Bison Hot Water Furnace in the basement, there is little need for brush or scraper.

No place in it for soot or dirt to lodge, and its flues are practically self-cleaning.

In most furnaces the water jackets are constantly covered with soot and ashes, requiring constant cleaning to enable the fire to heat the water—a dirty job.

The Bison has more good heating points than all other heaters combined.

The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of "The Gentleman From Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

sweeping away the brands that fell, he seemed but the red and ghostly caricature of a Xerxes ineffectually lashing the sea. They were calling to him imploringly to come down, in heaven's name to come down!

The second man had followed to the top of the ladder against the wall, and there he paused, waiting to pass up the line of hose when the word should come that the force pump had been repaired, but the people thought that he waited because he was afraid to trust himself to the grappling ladder. He was afraid, exceedingly afraid, though that was not why he waited, and he was still chuckling over the assault of the axes.

He swung himself out into the air

His situation had not much the advantage of that of the chief. His red shirt might have been set with orange jewels, so studded it was with the flying sparks, and, a large brand dropping upon his helmet, he threw up his hand to dislodge it and lost the helmet. The great light fell upon his fair hair and smiling face, and it was then that Miss Betty recognized the incroyable of her garden.

CHAPTER VI.

It was an investigating negro child of tender years who, possessed of a petty sense of cause and effect, brought an illuminative simplicity to bear upon the problem of the force pump, and a multitudinous agitation greeted his discovery that the engineers had forgotten to connect their pipes with the river.

This naive omission was fatal to the second warehouse. The wall burst into flame below Crailey Gray, who clung to the top of the ladder, choking, stifled and dizzily fighting the sparks that covered him, yet still clutching the nozzle of the hose line they had passed to him. When the stream at last leaped forth, making the nozzle fight in his grasp, he sent it straight up into the air and let the cataract fall back upon himself and upon the two men beneath him on the ladder.

There came a moment of blessed relief, and he looked out over the broad rosy blur of faces in the street, where no one wondered more than he how the water was to reach the roof. Suddenly he started, wiped his eyes with his wet sleeve and peered intently down from under the shading arm. His roving glance crossed the smoke and flame to rest upon a tall, white figure that stood full length above the heads of the people upon a pedestal wrought with the grotesque images of boys; a girl's figure, still as noon, enrapt, like the statue of some young goddess for whom were made these sacrificial pyres. Mr. Gray recognized his opportunity.

A blackened and unrecognizable face peered down from the eaves, and the voice belonging to it said angrily:

"Why didn't they send up that line before they put the water through it?"

"Never mind, Tom," answered Crailey cheerfully, "I'll bring it up."

"You can't! I'll come down for it. Don't be every kind of a fool!"

"You want a monopoly, do you?" And Crailey, calling to Tappingham Marsh, next below him, to come higher, left the writhing nozzle in the latter's possession, swung himself out upon the grappling ladder, imitating the chief's gymnastics, and immediately, one hand grasping the second rung, one knee crooked over the lowest, leaned head down and took the nozzle from Marsh. It was a heavy weight, and, though Marsh supported the line beneath it, the great stream hurtling forth made it a difficult thing to manage, for it wriggled, recoiled and struggled as if it had been alive. Crailey made three attempts to draw himself up, but the strain was too much for his grip, and on the third attempt his fingers melted from the rung, and he swung down fearfully, hanging by his knee, but still clinging to the nozzle.

"Give it up, Crailey. It isn't worth it," Vanrevel called from overhead, not daring the weight of both on the light grappling ladder.

But though Crailey cared no more for the saving of Robert Carewe's property than for a butterfly's wing in China, he could not give up now, any more than as a lad he could have forborne to turn somersaults when the prettiest little girl looked out of the schoolhouse window. He passed the nozzle to Tappingham, caught the second rung with his left hand, and, once more dangling head downward, seized the nozzle; then, with his knee hooked tight, as the gushing water described a huge semicircle upon the smoke and hot vapor, he made a mad lurch through the air, while women shrieked, but he landed upright, half sitting on the lowest rung. He climbed the grappling ladder swiftly, in spite of the weight and contortions of the unmanageable beast he carried with him. Tom leaned far down and took it from him, and Crailey, passing the eaves, fell exhausted upon the roof. Just as he reached this temporary security a lady was borne, fainting, out of the acclaiming crowd. Fanchon was there.

Word had been passed to the gentlemen of the engine company to shut off the water in order to allow the line to be carried up the ladder, and they received the command at the moment Tom lifted the nozzle, so that the stream dried up in his hands. This was the last straw, and the blackened, singed and scarred chief, setting the trumpet to his lips, gave himself entirely to wrath.

It struck Crailey, even as he lay coughing and weeping with smoke, that there was something splendid and large in the other's rage. Vanrevel was ordinarily so steady and cool that this was worth seeing, this berserker gesture; worth hearing, this wonderful profanity, like Washington's one fit of cursing, and Crailey, knowing Tom, knew, too, that it had not come upon him because Carewe had a daughter into whose eyes Tom had looked; nor did he rage because he believed that Crailey's life and his were in the greater hazard for the lack of every drop of water that should have issued from the empty nozzle.

Their lungs were burdened with smoke, while the intolerable smarting of throat, eyes and nostrils was like the incision of a thousand needles in the membranes. Their clothes were luminous with glowing circles where the sparks were eating. The blaze widened on the wall beneath them, and Marsh was shouting hoarsely that he could no longer hold his position on the ladder, yet Crailey knew that none of this was in Tom's mind as he stood, scorched, blistered and haggard, on the edge of the roof, shaking his fist at the world. It was because his chance of saving the property of a man he despised was being endangered.

Crailey stretched forth a hand and touched his friend's knee. "Your side of the conversation is a trifle loud, Tom," he said. "Miss Carewe is down there across the street on a pile of boxes."

Tom stopped in the middle of a word, for which he may have received but half a black stroke from the recording angel. He wheeled toward the street and, shielding his inflamed eyes with his hand, gazed downward in a stricken silence. From that moment Mr. Vanrevel's instructions to his followers were of a decorum at which not the meekest Sunday school scholar dare have caviled.

The three men now on the long ladder—Marsh, Eugene Madrillon and Will Cummings—found their position untenable, for the flames, reaching all along the wall, were licking at the ladder itself between Marsh and Eugene. "I can't stand this any longer," gasped Tappingham, "but I can't leave those two up there either."

"Not alone," shouted Cummings from beneath Madrillon. "Let's go up."

Thus it happened that when the water came again and Vanrevel let it fall in a grateful cascade upon Crailey and himself three manly voices were heard singing as three men toiled through the billows of rosy gray below the beleaguered pair:

"Oh, the noble Duke of York,
He had ten thousand men;
He marched them up the side of a house
And marched them down again!"

A head appeared above the eaves, and Marsh, then Eugene, then Cummings, came crawling over the cornice in turn to join their comrades. They were a gallant band, those young gentlemen of Rouen, and they came with the ironical song on their lips and, looking at one another, ragged and scarified, burst into hoarse but indomitable laughter.

Two others made an attempt to follow and would not be restrained. It was noticed that parts of the lower ladder had been charring, and the ladder men were preparing to remove it to a less dangerous point when old General Trumble and young Jefferson Bareaud made a rush to mount it and were well upon their upward way before the ladder, weakened at the middle, sagged, splintered and broke, Trumble and Bareaud falling with it. And there was the grappling ladder dangling forty feet above the ground, and there were the five upon the roof.

The department had no other ladder of more than half the length of the shattered one. Not only the department, but every soul in Rouen, knew that, and there rose the thick, low sigh of a multitude, a sound frightful to hear. It became a groan, then swelled into a deep cry of alarm and lamentation.

And now almost simultaneously the west wall of the building and the south wall and all the southwestern portions of the roof covered themselves with voluminous mantles of flame, which increased so hugely and with such savage rapidity that the one stream on the roof was seen to be but a ridiculous and useless opposition.

Everybody began to shout advice to his neighbor, and nobody listened even to himself. The firemen were in as great a turmoil as was the crowd, while women covered their eyes. Young Frank Chenoweth was sobbing curses upon the bruised and shaking Trumble and Jefferson Bareaud, who could only stand remorseful, impotently groaning, and made no answer.

The walls of the southernmost warehouse followed the roof, crashing in one after the other, a sacrifice pyre with its purpose consummated, and in the seeth and flare of its passing Tom Vanrevel again shaded his eyes with his hand and looked down across the upturned faces. The pedestal with the grotesque carvings was still there, but the crowning figure had disappeared—the young goddess was gone. For she, of all that throng, had an idea in her head, and, after screaming it to every man within reach, only to discover the impossibility of making herself understood in that babel, she was struggling to make her way toward the second warehouse, through the swaying jam of people. It was a difficult task, as the farther in she managed to go the denser became the press and the more tightly she found the people wedged, until she received involuntary aid from the firemen. In turning their second stream to play ineffectually upon the lower strata of flame they accidentally deflected it toward the crowd, who separated wildly, leaving a big gap, of which Miss Betty took instant advantage. She darted across, and the next moment, unnoticed, had entered the building through the door which Crailey Gray had opened.

The five young men on the roof were well aware that there was little to do but to wait, and soon they would see which was to win, they or the fire, so they shifted their line of hose to the eastern front of the building, out of harm's way for a time at least, and held the muzzle steady, watching its work. And in truth it was not long before they understood which would conquer. The southern and western portions of the building had flung out great flames that fluttered and flared on the breeze like titanic flags, and steadily, slowly at first, then faster as the seconds flew, the five were driven backward, up the low slope of the roof toward the gable ridge. Tom Vanrevel held the first joint of the nozzle, and he retreated with a sulky face, lifting his foot grudgingly at each step. They were all silent now, and no one spoke until Will Cummings faltered:

"Surely they'll get a rope up to us some way?"

Will knew as well as did the others that there was no way, but his speech struck the sullen heart of the chief with remorse. He turned. "I hope you'll all forgive me for getting you up here."

A sound, half sob, half giggle, came from the parched lips of Eugene Madrillon as he patted Tom on the shoulder without speaking, and Crailey nodded quietly, then left the group and went to the eastern edge of the roof and looked out upon the crowd. Cummings dropped the line and sat down, burying his hot face in his arms, for they all saw that Vanrevel thought "it was no use," but a question of a few minutes, and they would retreat across the gable and either jump or go down with the roof.

* * * * * * *

Since the world began idle and industrious philosophers have speculated much upon the thoughts of men about to die, yet it cannot be too ingenuous to believe that such thoughts vary as the men, their characters and conditions of life vary. Nevertheless, pursuant with the traditions of minstrelsy and romance, it is conceivable that young unmarried men called upon to face desperate situations might, at the crucial moment, rush to a common experience of summoning the vision, each of his heart's desire, and to meet, each his doom, with her name upon his lips.

An extraordinary thing occurred in the present instance, for, by means of some fragmentary remarks let fall at the time and afterward recalled, such as Tappingham Marsh's gasping, "At least it will be on her father's roof!" and from other things later overheard, an inevitable deduction has been reached that four of the five gentlemen in the perilous case herein described were occupied with the vision of the same person, to wit, Miss Elizabeth Carewe, "the last, the prettiest, to come to town!"

Crailey Gray, alone, spoke not at all, but why did he strain and strain his eyes toward that empty pedestal with the grotesque carvings? Did he seek Fanchon there, or was Miss Carewe the last sweet apparition in the fancies of all five of the unhappy young men?

The coincidence of the actual appearance of the lady among them therefore seemed the more miraculous when, wan and hopeless, staggering desperately backward to the gable ridge, they heard a clear contralto voice behind them:

"Hadn't you better all come down now?" it said. "The stairway will be on fire before long."

Only one thing could have been more shockingly unexpected to the five than that there should be a sixth person on the roof, and this was that the sixth person should be Miss Betty Carewe.

They turned, aghast, agape, chopfallen with astonishment, stunned and incredulous.

She stood just behind the gable ridge, smiling amiably, a most incongruous little pink fan in her hand, the smoke wreaths partly obscuring her and curling between the five and her white dress, like mists floating across the new moon.

"Hadn't you better all come down now?"

Was it but a kindly phantasm of the brain? Was it the incarnation of the last vision of the lost volunteers? Was it a Valkyrie assuming that lovely likeness to perch upon this eyrie, waiting to bear their heroic souls to Valhalla, or was it Miss Betty Carewe?

To the chief she spoke—all of them agreed to that afterward—but it was Crailey who answered, while Tom could only stare and stand wagging his head at the lovely phantom like a mandarin on a shelf.

"My mother in heaven!" gasped Crailey. "How did you come up here?"

"There's a trap in the roof on the other side of the ridge," she said, and she began to fan herself with the pink fan. "A stairway runs all the way down—old Nelson showed me through these buildings yesterday—and that side isn't on fire yet. I'm so sorry I didn't think of it until a moment ago, because you could have brought the water up that way. But don't you think you'd better come down now?"

CHAPTER VII.

Not savage Hun nor "barbarous Vandyke" nor demon Apache could wish to dwell upon the state of mind of the chief of the Rouen volunteer fire department; therefore let the curtain of mercy descend. Without a word he turned and dragged the nozzle to the eastern eaves, whence, after a warning gesture to those below, he dropped it to the ground, and, out of compassion, it should be little more than hinted that the gesture of warning was very slight.

When the rescued band reached the foot of the last flight of stairs they beheld the open doorway as a frame for a great press of intent and contorted faces, every eye still strained to watch the roof, none of the harrowed spectators comprehending the appearance of the girl's figure there, nor able to see whither she had led the five young men, until Tappingham Marsh raised a shout as he leaped out of the door and danced upon the solid earth again.

Then, indeed, there was a mighty uproar. Cheer after cheer ascended to the red vault of heaven. Women wept, men whooped and the people rushed for the heroes with wide open, welcoming arms. Jefferson Bareaud and Frank Chenoweth and General Trumble dashed at Tom Vanrevel with incoherent cries of thanksgiving, shaking his hands and beating him hysterically upon the back. He greeted them with bitter laughter.

"Help get the water into the next warehouse. This one is beyond control, but we can save the other two. Take the lines in—through the door!" He brushed the rejoicing friends off abruptly, and went on in a queer, hollow voice: "There are stairs—and I'm so sorry I didn't think of it until a moment ago, because you could have brought the water up that way!"

A remarkable case of desertion had occurred the previous instant under his eyes. As the party emerged from the warehouse into the street Tom heard Crailey say hurriedly to Miss Carewe: "Let me get you away—come quickly!" saw him suddenly seize her hand and, eluding the onrushing crowd, run with her round the corner of the building. And somehow, through what inspiration or through what knowledge of his partner's "temperament," heaven knows, the prophetic soul of the chief was unhappily assured that Crailey would offer himself as escort to her home and find acceptance. But why not? Was it Crailey who had publicly called his fellow man fool, idiot, imbecile, at the top of his lungs only to find himself the proven numskull of the universe! Tom stood for a moment staring after the vanishing pair, while over his face stole the strangest expression that ever man saw there; then, with meekly bowed shoulders, he turned again to his work.

At the corner of the warehouse Miss Carewe detached her hand from Crailey's, yet still followed him as he made a quick detour round the next building. A minute or two later they found themselves, undetected, upon Main street in the rear of the crowd. There Crailey paused.

"Forgive me," he said breathlessly, "for taking your hand. I thought you would like to get away."

She regarded him gravely, so that he found it difficult to read her look, except that it was seriously questioning, but whether the interrogation was addressed to him or to herself he could not determine. After a silence she said:

"I don't know why I followed you. I believe it must have been because you didn't give me time to think."

This, of course, made him even quicker with her than before. "It's all over," he said briskly. "The first warehouse is gone, the second will go, but they'll save the others easily enough now that you have pointed out that the lines may be utilized otherwise than as adjuncts of performances on the high trapeze." They were standing by a picket fence, and he leaned against it, overcome by mirth in which she did not join. Her gravity reacted upon him at once, and his laughter was stopped short. "Will you not accept me as an escort to your home?" he said formally.

"I do not know," she returned simply, the sort of honest trouble in her glance that is seen only in very young eyes.

"What reason in the world?" he returned, with a crafty sharpness of astonishment.

She continued to gaze upon him thoughtfully, while he tried to look into her eyes, but was baffled because the radiant beams from the lady's orbs, as the elder Chenoweth might have said, rested somewhere dangerously near his chin, which worried him, for, though his chin made no retreat and was far from ill looking, it was nevertheless that feature which he most distrusted. "Won't you tell me why not?" he repeated uneasily.

"Because," she answered at last, speaking hesitatingly—"because it isn't so easy a matter for me as you seem to think. You have not been introduced to me, and I know you never will be, and that what you told me was true."

"Which part of what I told you?" The question escaped from him instanter.

"That the others might come when they liked, but that you could not."

"Oh, yes, yes." His expression altered to a sincere dejection, his shoulders drooped and his voice indicated supreme annoyance. "I might have known some one would tell you. Who was it? Did they say why I"—

"On account of your quarrel with my father."

"My quarrel with your father!" he exclaimed, and his face lit with an elated surprise. His shoulders straightened. He took a step nearer her and asked eagerly, "Who told you that?"

"My father himself. He spoke of a Mr. Vanrevel whom he disliked and whom I must not meet, and, remembering what you had said, of course I knew that you were he."

"Oh!" Crailey's lips began to form a smile of such appealing and inimitable sweetness that Voltaire would have trusted him, a smile altogether rose leaves. "Then I lose you," he said, "for my only chance to know you was in keeping it hidden from you. And now you understand."

"No," she answered gravely, "I don't understand. That is what troubles me. If I did and believed you had the right of the difference I could believe it no sin that you should speak to me, should take me home now. I think it is wrong not to act from your own understanding of things."

The young man set his expression as one indomitably fixed upon the course of honor, cost what it might, and in the very action his lurking pleasure in doing it hopped out in the flicker of a twinkle in his eyes and as instantly sought cover again—the flea in the rose jar.

"Then you must ask some other," he said firmly. "A disinterested person should tell you. The difference was political in the beginning, but became personal afterward, and it is now a quarrel which can never be patched up, though, for my part, I wish that it could be. I can say no more, because a party to it should not speak."

She met his level look squarely at last, and no man ever had a more truthful pair of eyes than Crailey Gray, for it was his great accomplishment that he could adjust his emotion, his reason and something that might be called his faith to fit any situation in any character.

"You may take me home," she answered. "I may be wrong and even disloyal, but I do not feel it so now. You did a very brave thing tonight to save him from loss, and I think that what you have said was just what you should have said."

So they went down the street, the hubbub and confusion of the fire growing more and more indistinct behind them. They walked slowly, and for a time neither spoke, yet the silence was of a kind which the adept rejoiced to have produced thus soon—their second meeting. He waited until they passed into the shadows of the deserted Carewe street before he spoke. There he stopped abruptly, at which she turned, astonished.

"Now that you have saved my life," he said in a low, tremulous tone, "what are you going to do with it?"

Her eyes opened almost as widely as they had at her first sight of him in her garden. There was a long pause before she replied, and when she did it was to his considerable surprise.

"I have never seen a play except the funny little ones we acted at the convent," she said. "But isn't that the way they speak on the stage?"

Crailey realized that his judgment of the silence had been mistaken, and yet it was with a thrill of delight that he recognized her clear reading of him. He had been too florid again.

"Let us go." His voice was soft with restrained forgiveness. "You mocked me once before."

"Mocked you?" she repeated as they went on.

"Mocked me," he said firmly. "Mocked me for seeming theatrical, and yet you have learned that what I said was true, as you will again."

She mused upon this, then, as in whimsical indulgence to an importunate child:

"Well, tell me what you mean when you say I saved your life."

"You came alone," he began hastily, "to stand upon that burning roof"—

The "Arctic" Expedition.

SPEECH OF MR. W. B. NORTHRUP, M.P., IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON THE ABOVE SUBJECT.

Mr. Northrup. In justice to the minister whose estimates are under consideration, one should say that no doubt his predecessor, in perfect good faith, made the estimate which the hon. leader of the Opposition has just read, but no doubt found afterwards that he was embarrassed, as the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie found himself some years ago, when he raised his famous wail that he was besieged by his friends, who sought rewards which they had not earned, demanded positions which they were wholly unfitted to occupy, and presented claims that would have ruined the treasury if they had been paid. That has been the position of the minister in providing stores for the Arctic. The minister this afternoon tried to defend the purchase of these stores. His way was to defend them in bulk, and hon. gentlemen behind him applauded with delight. Let me give some of the expenditures in a little detail, and we will see if they are equally pleased with these. I hope the minister will understand that I do not object to the men smoking on board. I think it quite proper that the men should be allowed to smoke in those northern climes. Admitting that, however, while not being certain in my own mind that it is the bounden duty of the Government to supply them with the mans of indulging in that luxury, yet being perfectly willing that the Government should provide them with pipes, cigars, cigarettes and tobacco, I ask the minister if he thinks $3,600 was a fair expenditure for those luxuries. Then, I think it right that those who go to the north should take all possible precautions against disease; and we know that scurvy frequently attacks men in that part of the world. So I think they were justified in taking some lime juice on board. But assuming that, does the minister not think that 1,200 gallons was a little too much for thirty-four men? I think that the men might very properly have a little of something on the 24th of May, the 1st of July, on birthdays and on Christmas day to celebrate on, and I notice that the department was so anxious that these worthy mariners should not forget their loyalty to their chief that it supplied them with 4,000 Laurier cigars, together with 8,500 more to smoke on political festivals. I do not object to these gentlemen having a little liquor even to add to the jubilation, but surely $2,000 worth is a little too much. Did not the minister state this afternoon that the champagne was bought in pints? I notice that $32 per case was paid for ten cases. If the minister thinks it proper that the crew of this boat should be regaled on champagne costing $32 per pint case, he has a higher opinion of that crew than the ordinary taxpayer of this country has. I think it was quite proper that the men should be provided with some means of amusement to enable them to pass the long winter pleasantly. If you read Major Moodie's report, you will come to the conclusion that they had a most delightful time, with cricket, games of various kinds, concerts at night, and the publication of a paper on board. Nobody would complain of some provision being made for them, so that time would not hang heavy on their hands. The minister bought them packs of cards, and I do not object to their playing cards; I think it a very proper form of amusement. Will the minister be equally fair and say if he does not think that seventeen dozen packs of cards are a few too many. There may have been some men on board who would not play cards, and it was equally proper that the minister should provide some harmless amusement for them; therefore some checker boards were purchased. Again I wish to be just to the minister, and I give him full credit for the economy with which he purchased only ten checker boards. Some men might be playing cards, some sleeping, some writing letters, some at the concert, some at cricket.

Some might be writing letters, some might be playing croquet or giving a concert—they would not be all playing checkers at the same time. Therefore, all credit to the minister, who instead of buying thirty-four checker boards only bought ten. I hope he will appreciate my fairness and anxiety to do him justice in giving him credit for only buying ten. But will he not admit that in paying $5.49 per checker board or $54.90 for the ten he was paying a little more than most people are accustomed to paying in the old provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Some hon. gentleman last week rather made merry over the expenditure on the old crusted port wine of the vintage of 1878. I do not altogether agree with my hon. friends in their criticisms. I would be rather inclined to congratulate the minister on getting that fine old crusted port of 1878 vintage. Why, he only paid $12 a case for it. Surely the taxpayers can stand $12 a case. Some of them may not like it too well. There are a good many who might object to any wines being purchased at all. But I am not finding fault with the minister except in this respect, that I wonder why he did not buy more of this old crusted port at $12 a case instead of coming to Ottawa and buying more at $13 a case.

These men had to be clothed. It may be a matter of honest doubt as to whether or not this country was bound to clothe them. Some people might take the ground that as these men were paid good wages and were under no expense they could very well afford to clothe themselves. I am willing, however, to be generous and admit the justice of furnishing these thirty-four men, who were to be away a year before any relief ship could come to them, with plenty of clothing. But does the hon. minister think it was really fair to spend $22,000 in clothing these thirty-four men until the relief ship could reach them? But I can understand what pressure was brought upon the Government by their friends clamouring for the opportunity to furnish supplies. Take the account of the Hamilton Company of Montreal. They charge for forty trousseaus, but we will not go into that. They charged for sleeping bags for one man 25 at $70, and for two men three at $200, and for three men three at $225.

It does do good baking

This is the range that bakes better because the diffusive oven flue draws in cold air from the kitchen-floor, carries it around the oven, and pours it HOT down into the oven FROM THE TOP in a current that moves all round the whole oven and up and out the flue. When that clean, hot air leaves the oven it takes with it all the moisture, all the odors, which in OTHER ovens stay in and saturate the baking food. Perfect draft control, perfect oven, draw-out oven rack for easy basting,—all points singular to

STABBED THE CLERGYMAN.

Mysterious Attack on Sunday Evening While Driving to Church.

Port Hope, June 21.—The residents of Baillieboro, a small village about 12 miles north of Port Hope, are excited over a stabbing affray. On Sunday evening, while driving to church, Rev. E. R. Nicholls, pastor of Baillieboro Baptist Church, and formerly of Toronto, was attacked by an unknown man in a thickly-wooded spot near Sackville's Mills.

Without warning, a man sprang out at a sudden turn in the road and made a savage lunge at the clergyman with a knife. The blade struck his left shoulder and glanced down the arm to the elbow, inflicting a nasty gash.

Whipping up his horse Mr. Nicholls escaped. A search party was organised, but no trace was found of the man.

Insane Tailor Shoots Man.

Hamilton, June 21.—An insane tailor named Clement Wilkinson, with a rapid firing revolver caused all kinds of excitement by firing many shots in the heart of the city yesterday afternoon about 3 o'clock. Lawrence R. Hislop of the Laurentian Publishing Co., room 26, Church street, Toronto, a young man, had the bad luck to get in the way of one of the random shots, and he is laid up in the City Hospital. The bullet struck him in the temple, but glanced off, making a painful but not dangerous wound. He will recover. Wilkinson will likely be committed to an insane asylum.

To Enforce Local Option.

Toronto, June 21.—John A. Ayearst of Thamesville has been appointed provincial inspector under the License Act to travel about the province and see how the local option law is enforced. In the old act there was provision for such an officer but it was not taken advantage of. The intention of the Government in appointing a provincial inspector is to see that the local license inspectors do not neglect their duties.

Took Paris Green.

Walkerville, June 21.—Charles Quenelle, coachman for Robert Hankeel of Detroit, took a fatal dose of Paris green at the Henkeel summer home, a few miles above here. He was found later by one of the family and hurried to Hotel Dieu Windsor, where he died. Quenelle was about 35 years of age.

John Carveth, J. P., Dead.

Orono, June 21.—John Carveth, a pioneer of Durham County, and the oldest justice of the peace in Canada, having held appointment for over 50 years, is dead, at the age of 80. He was born in Cornwall, Eng.

In Cupid's Chariot

By Michael James

Copyright, 1906, by E. C. Parcells

"Shades of Cleopatra," ejaculated Covington to himself, "it's a woman, and," he added, "a mighty pretty one too!"

The sample room of the Hotel Wentworth was filled with neatly arranged dry goods samples, among which the young woman moved, calm and confident. Behind her trotted old Epton, the best customer he had in Wentworth. The little circle embracing each corner of the old man's thin lips showed that he was pleased too. "She's sold him, or I'm a Dutchman," was Covington's thought as he backed out of the door he had so airily opened a moment before, "and that means I've got to work, for the man, woman or child who can sell Epton under a year's acquaintance is a wonder. Well, it's the back sample room for mine and a hustle to snare the rest of them before she gets done with Epton."

His eye caught a big black sample case in the hall. "Jim Dunkley's trunk! I'll bet a dollar booze got the best of Jim, and they've given this woman his territory."

Ignoring the grinning clerk, who had seen Covington advance on the sample room like a conquering hero, he scanned the register. Yes, there it was: "Miss Cecil Gardner, Chicago." The signature was very like the young lady herself—trim, neat, capable and yet almost appealingly feminine.

As he laid out his samples in the poorly lighted back sample room Covington pondered resentfully upon the depravity of the firm of Stern & Sulzmann which would fire good, easy picking like Jim Dunkley and give his place to a woman—what was worse, to a woman who knew her business. Slamming the door viciously, Covington started out to round up the other dry goods men of the town.

He returned in half an hour, even more resentful than before. Miss Gardner evidently believed in the early bird theory, for she had already sold good bills to all three dealers. Covington met Epton on the hotel steps. He knew the case was hopeless, but he greeted his former customer cordially. "Sorry I can't do any business with you this time, Mr. Covington," said the merchant when the preliminaries had been disposed of, "but Miss Gardner had what I wanted. You are just a trifle too late." Covington felt like kicking the big S. & S. sample case that leered at him in the hallway.

THERE WAS A CRASH.

When Covington tossed his grip into the bus after dinner he found Miss Gardner already ensconced in a corner of the vehicle.

During the ride to the railway station he discovered by oblique glances that she was even prettier than he had at first imagined. Her profile was good, her complexion beautiful and real, her lips superlatively pretty. "Tommyrot!" snorted Covington to himself when he saw where his reflections had led him. He began planning how to outwit Miss Gardner when they reached Essig, for he knew that she surely would stop there.

Experience told at Essig, and Covington sold big bills to the two dealers in the thriving little town. It was Miss Gardner's turn to depart without an order. There was something more than the mere indifference of a stranger in her manner when they were bus companions once more, this time for the evening train to Tilton. The atmosphere was so chilly that Covington felt like blowing on his fingers.

The first day was a counterpart of most of the days that followed for two months. Occasionally Covington's side trips to small towns which Miss Gardner did not make would keep them out of each other's way for a time. Soon Covington found himself planning to avoid these side trips by having the customers come at the expense of the house to the larger points on his route. "Other fellows do it," he argued. "It makes good feeling to give them a little holiday, and it doesn't cost much more than my livery hire." He never once admitted that a growing inclination to see as much as possible of Miss Gardner had anything to do with the matter.

The situation certainly had its drawbacks. They became acquainted, of course. Miss Gardner told him of her first employment in Stern & Sulzmann's as a stenographer; how gradually she had been detailed to wait on the smaller customers who came to the city for their goods and how the firm, quick to note her natural ability as a saleswoman, had given her Dunkley's place on trial when that gentleman's failings could no longer be overlooked.

But there were no pleasant little chats when Miss Gardner failed in a town. Between stations on these unlucky days Covington, with the uncomfortable feeling that it was cowardice to make war on a woman, usually occupied a seat in the smoker, while a very discouraged Miss Gardner did fancy work or read; hence, after a particularly disastrous day, he saw a tear fall on to the page of his fair opponent's book. He laid down, flagrantly and completely, for the next four towns, only awakening to the pass his chivalry had brought him when the house, in a sarcastic letter, suggested that he was out after orders and not on a pleasure trip, as he seemed to imagine.

"It's all right to sit there in the office and 'call' a fellow," he mused bitterly, "but I'd like to see one of them up against the same situation. It isn't like having a man to deal with. A man will grin and buy a drink when you do him good and hard, but he'll lay awake nights until he gets back at you. He doesn't go away and cry all by himself as if he hadn't a friend on earth. I'm not doing any business, and I know it, but if I let myself out Cecil"—he always thought of her as Cecil—"will lose her job. And if I don't let myself out I'll lose mine, I guess." He rubbed his homely boyish face in perplexity. "I'm sure I can't see the finish."

Dick Harpin's bus at Barton Center was the factor which provided a violent but satisfactory solution to Covington's problem. Harpin's bus was a standing jest among the traveling fraternity. It was as old apparently as the wonderful one hoss shay, but its age was not so honorable, for the bus was rickety and disfigured.

It was a nippy February morning when Miss Gardner and Covington climbed into the bus for the long, cold ride uptown. The driver unhooked the weight strap and stepped back. At that precise moment the keen wind whirled a piece of paper into the faces of the restive horses.

Harpin grabbed at the reins and missed as the animals leaped forward. A man ran into the center of the street. They swerved from his foolish, waving arms, and there was a crash. The wheels on one side of the bus had struck a telephone pole and been torn off.

At the first alarm Covington tried to open the door, but it stuck. With two wheels gone, he saw that few seconds would elapse before the vehicle would overturn. His one idea was to protect the girl who, pale and terror stricken, sat opposite him. He seized her in his arms, shielding her with his body, as the bus, swayed wildly at the heels of the galloping horses, toppled over.

When the team was stopped a block away they found Covington beneath the wreck of the bus, cut and bruised somewhat, but conscious. Miss Gardner, uninjured, was still clasped in his arms, and his lips were against her cheek.

Covington's orders have regained their former satisfactory size and volume, and Dunkley has been given his old place by Stern & Sulzmann. Miss Gardner has resigned. It's to be in June, and any woman will tell you that four months is hardly time enough to prepare for a wedding.

Various Views of Charlotte Corday.

The contemporaries of Charlotte Corday, said Dr. Cabanes, have thought that "her complexion had the transparency of milk, the carnation of roses and the velvetiness of peaches." They have thought also that "she was not pretty. Her face was hard, insolent and as if marked with erysipelas." One witness says that "Mlle. Corday was not handsome, but her expression was so sweet, so sweet!" Some say that she was tall rather than small; others say that she was tall; many say that she was decidedly small. Her passport makes her height five feet one inch. Her hair, according to an official document, was chestnut; according to another official document it was blond; Mme. Hauer, wife of the painter who made Charlotte's portrait, says that her hair was "cendre"—that is, mouse or drab or ash colored. Abbe Dinone, who had a lock of her hair, says that it was "neither red nor 'cendre.'" Dr. Cabanes says decisively that she was beautiful, of average height, and that her hair was chestnut. History, founded on authentic documents, says that her expression was sweet and sour; that her complexion was of milk and roses and marked at the same time as by erysipelas, and she was of tall, small and medium height; that she was blond, dark and neither dark nor blond. History is a science.

The Wonderful Parasol Ant.

The greatest known curiosity of insect life, as far as habits are concerned at least, is to be found in the queer "parasol" or "umbrella" ant, so common in all parts of tropical America from Texas to Venezuela. The common name by which the creature is known has been bestowed because of a queer habit this species of ant has of stripping certain kinds of trees and shrubs of their foliage and carrying the leaves to their nests. An army of these ants which have been off on a foraging expedition present the queerest sight imaginable as they march in long columns by twos, fours and sixes, each holding the stem of a leaf in his jaws, the leaf itself shading the little insect's body like a parasol does the face and shoulders of a lady. The early naturalists imagined that these ants carried leaves for the sole purpose of protecting themselves against the rays of the tropical sun, but investigation shows that they have another use for the bits of green they gather. The leaves are only wanted as soil upon which to grow a certain species of fungi of which the parasol ant is very fond.

THE SOLAR SYSTEM.

Some Facts Which Give an Idea of Its Immensity.

In all the heavens, with the exception of passing meteors or meteorites, not one body occupies a position closer to earth than the moon, which is some 240,000 miles away—very far, of course, side by side with any earthly distances, but a mere fraction side by side with other astronomical distances. Next to the moon our nearest occasional neighbor is Venus, and then Mars. Both Venus and Mars, however, are often farther away from us than the sun, which remains always at somewhere about the same distance, roughly about from 90,000,000 to 93,000,000 miles. This dividing space between sun and earth is of great importance in thinking about the stars, and it should be clearly impressed upon the mind. Next to the sun in point of nearness come the more distant planets—Jupiter, which is about five times as far from the sun as our earth is; Saturn, nearly twice as far as Jupiter; Uranus, nearly twice as far as Saturn, and Neptune, nearly three times as far as Saturn. All these planets belong to our sun, all are members of his family, all are part of the solar system. The size of the solar system as a whole, consisting thus of the sun and his planets, including our earth, may be fairly well grasped by any one taking the trouble to master two simple facts. They are these, that our earth is roughly about 92,000,000 miles away from the sun and that Neptune, the outermost planet of the solar system, is nearly thirty times as far distant from the sun as our earth is.

AN ODD BIRD.

The Kiwi of New Zealand Has Some Remarkable Peculiarities.

That queer bird, the kiwi, is a native of New Zealand. Its remarkable peculiarities are, first, the apparent absence of wings, as the plumage so covers the small, rudimentary, sticklike appendage of a wing that none whatever is apparent. The situation of the nostrils at the bill's extremity is a second peculiar feature. While hunting for earthworms it probes the soft ground, making a continual snuffing sound. Thus the scent is evidently of great help in finding food and the reason for the position of the nostrils quite apparent.

A third peculiarity is the very disproportionate size of the egg in comparison to the bird, it being a little less than one-fourth the bird's own weight. One kiwi's egg found weighed fourteen and one-half ounces, while the bird weighed just under four pounds (sixty-four ounces) and was about the size of an ordinary hen.

The plumage of the kiwi is a dull brown streaked with light gray, and the body resembles a miniature hay shock, rather badly hacked off at the rear part, as nature has not provided the kiwi with such decoration as a tail. The absence of wings is compensated for by its swiftness of foot, and the large, clumsy looking legs, which are sometimes used as weapons, are placed far back on the oddly shaped body.—St. Nicholas.

That Was All.

A young girl who is always trying some new thing was present once when the doctor set a neighbor's broken arm. She was sure that she knew exactly how it was done and rather anxious to put her new knowledge into practice. Some time later a hen out in the chicken yard broke its leg. The girl directly announced that she meant to set it "and make it as good as new." Accordingly it was put into a plaster cast and left for the proper length of time to knit. When the day came to take off the cast the girl ran out to the henhouse in great eagerness to see the result. Presently there was a scream that brought every member of the family to her side. The chicken was jumping miserably over the ground sidewise instead of directly forward. You know a hen's leg has a crook. Well, she had crooked it the wrong way, that was all.

Aliens In Old London.

Here is a curious report of the aliens in London in the year 1567: "There being a great increase of foreigners in the city, her majesty ordered the lord mayor to take the name, quality and profession of all strangers residing within the city of London." The list was headed by the item, "Scots, 40." Other nations were represented by "French, 428; Spaniards and Portuguese, 45; Italians, 140; Dutch, 2,030; Burgundians, 44; Danes, 2; Liegeois, 1."

Shark's Tail For Luck.

Attached to the extreme end of the bowsprit of a sailing vessel there may sometimes be seen a piece of some material that looks remarkably like leather. This seeming piece of leather is really a shark's tail. It is placed there because the sailors think that it augurs good luck, believing that pleasant voyages will be their lot while it remains there. Instead of the bowsprit the tail is at times nailed to the top of one of the masts.—London King.

MARIE CORELLI'S SORROW.

Recorder of Satan's Sorrows Has Troubles of Her Own—Postcards Libel Her Features.

Marie Corelli, the well-known novelist, has applied for an injunction to restrain A. and E. Wall, of Stratford-on-Avon, from publishing picture postcards purporting to depict scenes in her private life. Miss Corelli is good looking and it is alleged that the cards libel her features. The action again raises a legal point that has never yet been decided.

Miss Corelli resided at Stratford-on-Avon, Mr. Eve, K. C., explained, and had taken some part in the social life of the district. Early this month it was arranged to hold a Shakespearian festival to commemorate what was alleged to be the birthday of one William Shakespeare. (Laughter.)

In anticipation of a large number of visitors being attracted who would desire to become acquainted with the other notable people of Stratford-on-Avon, the defendants produced sets of picture postcards, entitled "The Distinguished Authors Series, No. 1."

Miss Corelli at once took objection to the cards, and if his lordship would look at them and at a recent photograph of the lady he would see what a gross libel had been perpetrated on her features. (Laughter.)

One of the cards was called "Shakespeare and his contemporaries," which looked as if the defendants wished to suggest that Shakespeare was a contemporary of Miss Corelli. (Laughter.) The publication of the cards had caused Miss Corelli much annoyance.

One of the cards complained of represented Miss Corelli presenting a cup to the Stratford-on-Avon Boat Club, and the defendant said he was present on the occasion and it was the best representation he could give from memory of the features of the lady who was so gracefully presenting the cup. Another card showed Miss Corelli in a gondola, and the defendant said it depicted what had occurred last summer on the Avon. A card styled "Sweets to the Sweet" displayed a pony carriage outside Miss Corelli's house, and a further picture depicted the lady playing with a pet dog on a lawn. The latter was admitted to be purely imaginary. Miss Corelli had no dog.

Counsel said he thought there was a case here which would have to be tried, as to the right of a person not only to her own features, but to features which did not belong to her. (Laughter.)

Mr. Scott Thompson (with Mr. Eve) contended that the cards were libellous.

His Lordship—Because the portraits are unlike must they necessarily be libellous? (Laughter.)

Mr. Thompson thought there could be no doubt about it in this case. The gondola picture was ridiculous as a work of art.

His Lordship—The work of art is sold at a halfpenny, I suppose? (Laughter.)

Mr. Percy Wheeler submitted that the only question was whether Miss Corelli had suffered any legal injury. It must be a very sensitive age if it was to hold a person up to ridicule and contempt to say that she played with a dog on a lawn. (Laughter.)

His Lordship said the inference was that the picture was taken in the lady's garden, and that she was a person who liked to be advertised in this way.

Mr. Wheeler—It might have been taken over the garden wall. (Laughter.)

The affidavit was read by Miss Corelli, who stated that she went to Stratford-on-Avon for the purpose of obtaining privacy, and that the cards were calculated to expose her to unjust contempt in relation to her private life, and prejudice her in her profession as an authoress.

The second defendant, Miss Edith Wall, in reply, retorted in her affidavit that so far from seeking privacy during her seven years' residence at Stratford, Miss Corelli had courted publicity in every way.

Mr. Wheeler followed this up with a declaration that had the portraits of Miss Corelli been flattering nothing would have been heard of this action. Few ladies, he said, would admit that a portrait did them justice and he assumed that Miss Corelli was no exception to the rule.

If these cards were a libel, every exhibition of the Royal Academy would be a collection of libels. (Laughter.)

Photographers, too, would be liable to be sued, for it was common knowledge that most people when they had their photographs taken looked positively hideous. (Laughter.)

Mr. Eve: Speak for yourself, Mr. Wheeler. (Laughter.)

His lordship said he would consider his decision.

Ancient Church Restored.

Situated just below the steep slope of the Lincolnshire Wolds, near their southern extremity, lies the village of East Kirkby, which possesses one of the most interesting churches of the district. The original Saxon church was replaced by one of the fourteenth century; this building has undergone extensive restoration, and the work was dedicated on the 21st by the Bishop of Lincoln. The church contains an early perpendicular screen, which retains its panelled doors. In the north wall of the chancel is a remarkable recess, perhaps used as an eastern sepulchre, covered with diaper-work, below which are half-figures, probably of the three Marys, each holding a heart, or (as others explain) a box of spices. A singular basin projecting from the font is supposed to have been an offertory dish for the "creeping silver" offered during the penitential period from Maundy Thursday till Easter Eve. Thomas Goodrich, Bishop of Ely, Cranmer's coadjutor in the first communion office, was a native of East Kirkby. The funds for the restoration of the church were bequeathed by the late Mr. James Banks Stanhope, of Revesby Abbey.

Lived 70 Years Together.

The seventieth anniversary of their wedding was celebrated on May Day by Christopher Lawrence and wife, who were married at Epperstone Church, Notts, on May 1, 1836. The old couple are now living in a cottage at Hucknell Torkard, Notts. Dr. Harrison Coates, medical officer of the district, believes they are the oldest married couple in England. The old man is getting blind, but his wife is wonderfully well preserved. Both recovered from a bad attack of bronchitis during the winter.

Argonauts Are Going Strong.

Henley, June 20.—The Argonauts, of Toronto, were afloat twice to-day, and this evening were seen to advantage over nearly the full course. From the standpoint of physique the Canadians have made a splendid impression. Sir John Edward Moss, one of England's greatest amateur rowing authorities, says it is the most powerful crew he ever saw. Other experts express a similar opinion, saying the Argonauts have a good chance to take the Grand Challenge Cup from England for the first time. It is generally admitted in English rowing circles that the Third Trinity, Cambridge, is the only crew likely to trouble the Canadians, unless the Belgians should prove good.

Presentation to Ex-Mayor Johnson.

STUDENTS AND FACULTY TENDERED HIM AN ADDRESS AND TRAVELLING CASE YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

An exceedingly pleasant event took place yesterday afternoon at Ontario Business College, when Principal Johnson, who leaves this week for England, was presented with an address and a very fine travelling case. The following was the address,—

To J. W. Johnson, Esq., F. C. A.,

Dear Mr. Johnson, — As you are about to leave us for some time, on a trip to the Old Country, to be one of our city's representatives at the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, we, the teachers and students of Ontario Business College, of which institution you have been principal for nearly thirty years, desire, as a school, to wish you "bon voyage," and to extend to you our most sincere wishes for a safe and pleasant journey.

We wish you to accept, as a slight token of our esteem and good wishes, the accompanying travelling case.

We are proud of the fact that this institution will have two representatives at that great Congress, viz., yourself and our esteemed Law Lecturer, Colonel Ponton. We know full well that you will, as in the past, do credit to our fair city and Dominion.

We again unite in extending to Mrs. Johnson and yourself, and Colonel Ponton, our sincere wishes for a most enjoyable trip and a safe return home.

Ontario Business College, Belleville, Ont., June 20th, 1906.

Mr. Johnson was completely taken by surprise, but recovered sufficiently to express his sincere thanks to the teachers and students for their gift and kind words of appreciation. Col Ponton, who was present, also replied appropriately, and three hearty cheers for Mr. Johnson and the Colonel concluded one of the most pleasant events in the history of the College.

No Truth In Story

GENERAL MANAGER HAYS KNOWS NOTHING OF RUMORED CHANGES OF MECHANICAL WORKS.

A short time ago the report was current in different papers that the Grand Trunk intended to remove from Brockville and Belleville their mechanical works at each of those places, also that Kingston would, in the near future, be made the divisional point between Toronto and Montreal. Little notice was taken of this in Belleville, where the cry of "wolf" has grown to be an old story, but Brockville took it seriously, and the Mayor of Brockville, Mr. H. A. Stewart, wrote to Mr. Wainwright, of the G.T.R., asking if there were any truth in the story. The following reply was received;

H. A. Stewart, Esq., Mayor of Brockville, Ont.;

Dear Mr. Mayor, — I have your letter of the 11th, which I brought under the notice of Mr. Hays, 2nd Vice-Pres. and General Manager.

He informs me that he knows nothing about the rumor other than what he has seen in the newspapers, and therefore he thinks it can be simply put down to newspaper gossip.

Yours faithfully,
WM. WAINWRIGHT,
Gen'l Ass't and Comptroller.

Octogenarian on A Long Journey.

An old man named Freeman, whose home is at Perth, was a visiter in the city over last night. Although 80 years of age, Mr. Freeman is on a long drive, his destination being Brandon, Man. A year ago Mr. Freeman drove from Brandon to Perth and apparently enjoys this mode of travelling. His outfit, which consisted of a horse and small covered wagon, was an object of curiosity to many people in this city.

With the Gallant 49th Regiment.

FORTY-NINTH IS THE LARGEST REGIMENT AT COBOURG — RATIONS FIRST-CLASS — BANDS ARE THE BEST IN CAMP.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Camp Cobourg, June 19th, 1906.

Arrived in camp 3.30 yesterday afternoon. Found ground in fine condition, notwithstanding recent heavy rains.

First afternoon spent as usual in allotting tents to men and getting settled down for 10 days real soldiering.

Things are a little mixed on account of this being a new place for the camp, but the men took it all in good part and this afternoon found the Regiment out in full strength.

The 49th is by far the largest Regiment in camp, the parade state showing 348 officers, N. C. O.'s and men.

The Chaplain, Rev. Mr. Thompson, arrived in camp this morning and is busy shaking hands with old friends.

Rations this year are first-class and all we need to make a pleasant camp is fine weather for the next two weeks.

The 49th Bugle and Brass bands have already made a name for themselves, and are, without exception, counted the best bands in camp.

Tar Macadam Roads

SOMETHING ABOUT A PROCESS WHICH MIGHT BE A GOOD ONE FOR BELLEVILLE TO USE.

Tar macadam, as a substance for road-building, is much spoken of these days. A tar macadam pavement, it seems, is made like bitulithic, but the tar is not distilled and there is not an infringement of the patents. The process is thus described by the New York Commercial:

"The street which has a grade of five to seven per cent., and which was in fair condition, was swept clean, and the tar was spread over the surface thickly by means of sprinkling pots with holes about one-tenth of an inch in diameter. On this was spread stone dust, sifted through a screen with half-inch meshes, and the road was well rolled down with a ten-ton steam roller.

"The second coat of tar was then put on and covered with stone sifted through a sand screen; the surface was again rolled, putting on more of the smaller stone, until the whole road was smooth and compact, with no tar coming to the top. The result of this treatment has been most satisfactory. After nearly two years' wear the street is still in good order, the surface has not been broken up, and it has been free from dust all the time.

"In the case thus described, a street which has been in use for some time was merely resurfaced with the tar. During 1905 other stone roads were made, using tar as a binder instead of clay. Inch and a half stone was spread to a thickness of three to five inches, then covered with three-quarter inch stone, well rolled down. This was coated with tar and three-quarter and half-inch stone and rolled to a compact, smooth surface. These streets have also been free from dust, and the surface shows no evidence of wear, although they have had considerable heavy traffic.

"The process by which these results have been obtained is a simple one, requiring for equipment only a kettle or tank for heating the tar and sprinklers for spreading it. Care is used not to overheat the tar, and to strain it into sprinkling pots. In resurfacing, the results are more valuable if the tarring is done on a good roadbed. About six or eight barrels are required to treat the surface of 1,000 square yards of roadway

"It is considered from these experiments that tar may be successfully used as a cementing medium in road-making, producing an impervious surface."

The state of New Jersey has, it seems, experienced with these tar macadam roads, surfaced as herein described, and found them most serviceable. The treatment is easy. The materials for construction are easily procured. Tar is certainly a better binder than clay, and it has one distinguishing quality—it will never lose its ductile nature and adhesiveness, and the stone, when reduced or pulverized by heavy traffic, does not become the nuisance it usually is without its association with the tar.

It would appear that Belleville could lay tar macadam pavement to advantage. The city has all the road-building machinery required, and there should be an unlimited quantity of tar as a by-product at the gas works. Our energetic chairman of Public Works, Ald. Panter, might look into this matter in his spare time, if he has any.

Bears Caught In Faraday Township

Faraday P.O., June 19, 1906.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Mr. Editor,—I am on a visit in the north (in the Township of Faraday) and to-day Mr. Thos. Neal and Mr. P. Finnegan brought in a wagon to Mr. Wm. Neal, who is postmaster of Faraday P.O., two large bears, which they caught in traps. The skins are fine ones and the fur superb, and is of average depth of four inches. This makes five bears that these men have trapped within the past ten days.

Presented With A Purse of Gold

PASTOR OF BRIDGE ST. METHODIST CHURCH RECEIVED GRATIFYING TRIBUTE OF ESTEEM LAST EVENING.

The members of Bridge St. Methodist congregation had a delightful function in their Sunday School rooms last night. They could not have had anything else, for they met to honor their pastor, say kind things to him, and, by the presentation of a wallet of gold, express in that very tangible way how great was their appreciation of his services and deep their affection for him.

To evince their high esteem for him, Mr. Charles M. Reid, was unanimously selected as the chairman. Before the programme was reached a half-hour was spent in handshaking and conversation.

The chairman stated that for some time the congregation had intended to ask the pastor to take a holiday of sufficient length to enable him to cross the ocean and visit the British Isles and the continent, and that as now a most suitable supply could be obtained, one alike acceptable to the pastor and the congregation, Mr. Wilson had acceded to their request and would sail from Quebec on Saturday next, in company with some twelve others from Belleville. In the most spontaneous way the congregation had provided the funds for their pastor's trip and for his supply, and he now had much pleasure in presenting Mr. Wilson with a well-filled wallet of gold. The hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," was then sung, and Messrs. C. P. Holton and N. Vermilyea led in thanksgivings and prayers. Then followed brief addresses by Messrs. J. W. Johnson, F. E. O'Flynn, W. W. Chown, W. R. Aylsworth, S. Burrows and N. Vermilyea, all expressive of admiration of the Rev. Mr. Wilson. These addresses were interspersed by vocal solos from Miss Gertrude Price, Miss Mabel Vermilyea and Mr. Sanford Burrows and a vocal quartette composed of Miss G. Price, Miss M. Vermilyea, Mr. J. T. Burns and Mr. G. H. Vermilyea. Prof. V. P. Hunt was the accompanist. The Rev. Mr. Wilson replied, and as usual "said the right things in the right place."

Rev. Mr. Wilson then introduced Rev. J. Bruce Hunter as his locum tenens, and commended him to the congregation as one who both personally and as a preacher would be valued by them. The singing of the hymn "God be with you till we meet again" and prayer, led by Mr. Wm. Johnson and the Rev. R. H. Leitch, brought the not easily forgotten occasion to a close.

Zwick's Island Filtering Scheme.

MR. CHIPMAN, CIVIL ENGINEER, IS IN THE CITY IN CONNECTION WITH IT.

Mr Willis Chipman, civil engineer, of Toronto, was in the city to-day and met some members of the Water Committee. He also, in company with Manager Hulme, visited Zwick's Island. The object of his visit here was to confer with the members of the Water Committee in reference to the contemplated filtering scheme at Zwick's island. Acting Mayor Panter, Ald. Gordon, chairman of the Committee, and Ald. Marsh and Vermilyea were in attendance at the conference, held in the City building. It is estimated that the cost of the filtering scheme will be in the vicinity of $10,000. The matter will be considered more fully at a meeting of the Water Committee, which will be held this evening.

Bodies Recovered.

Although a diligent search was made for the bodies of the two victims of the drowning accident at Bridgewater, which occurred on Wednesday morning last, the bodies were not recovered for several days. The first body recovered was that of John Brill, which was found on Saturday afternoon about 300 yards below James' dam, just at the rear of the residence of Joseph Mayne. The body of Thomas Farrell, the other victim, was found Sunday afternoon about five o'clock, about two and a half miles north of Tweed, near the point where the side road past John Rath's touches the river. The coroner's jury viewed the remains of both bodies after which they were prepared for burial, Dr. Farrell, of Tweed, coroner, presiding. The jury consists of E. J. Thompson, foreman; John Barry, M. G. Kehoe, Walter Gray, Abraham Bentley, Robert Wiggins, Frank O. Diamond, Abraham Diamond, Robt. Robinson, Jas. Rhodes, Wm. Wiggins, Armour Jeffs, Eugene Johnston, Joseph H. Roberts.

Veterans Take Cash

Toronto, June 21. — Applications from veterans who have received certificates entitling them to land grants but have not yet located, to exchange their certificates for a cash payment of $50 under the act of last session are increasing rapidly. For some time it did not appear that many veterans would take advantage of the provision, but this opinion is now being dispelled. As soon as these applications are certified at the military land grants branch of the Lands, Forests and Mines Department they are passed on to the Treasury Department, where checks are issued to the applicants, with the least possible delay.

CONSERVATIVES GAIN FOUR.

Standing of the New Nova Scotian Legislature Will Be Liberal 32, Conservatives 6.

Halifax, N. S., June 21.—The general local election for this province took place yesterday and resulted in a victory for the Murray Government, but two members of the Government were defeated—Messrs. Patterson of Pictou and Wickwire of King's.

The Conservatives gained four seats, and there will be six Opposition members in the new House.

The last House was composed of 36 Liberals and 2 Conservatives.

The Liberals elected their three men in Halifax city and county by majorities ranging from 1,200 to 1,600.

In Pictou, Tanner, leader of the Opposition, heads the poll by over 400 majority. Summary:

TURKISH TROOPS MUTINY.

Stubborn Fight Between Loyal and Disaffected Soldiers.

Constantinople, June 21.—Marshal Feizi Pasha, commanding the Turkish troops in Yemen Province, whose hands are already full in attempting to subdue the rebellious Arabs, has been obliged to deplete his slim stock of ammunition in employing his artillery against his own mutinous soldiers.

Whole companies of regiments anxious to get home mutinied and decided to proceed to the coast. A stubborn fight between the loyal and disaffected troops ensued. The latter finally were vanquished by the fire of the artillery and surrendered after sustaining heavy losses.

Vote For Mutualization.

New York, June 21.—The directors of the Equitable Life Assurance Society yesterday voted unanimously to adopt the amended charter, which provides for the mutualization of the society. Thirty members of the board were present. The new charter provides among other things that the policyholders shall elect 28 directors out of the board of 52 members.

Killed By an Elevator.

Toronto, June 21.—Aleck Macdonald, upstairs porter in the Grand Union Hotel, was killed yesterday afternoon by the passenger elevator. He tried to slip out, when he neared the landing. The man was 23 years old, and had been in the country only six weeks. Coroner Crawford can see no blame attached to anyone but the man himself. His neck was broken.

Widow Identifies the Body.

Port Huron, Mich., June 21.—Reading that the body of an unknown sailor had been found since the collision of the Erin and the Cowles, May 31, Mrs. Charles Hill of St. Catharines, Ont., came to this city, fearing that the man might be her husband. The body was exhumed and she identified it. She has taken the remains to St. Catharines for burial.

Hackett Gets 25 Years.

Montreal, June 21.—Chief Justice Lacoste yesterday sentenced Hackett, found guilty of manslaughter in connection with the death of the Ahern child in April last, to twenty-five years in the penitentiary. In a statement the prisoner claimed that he was innocent of the crime.

Yields to French Demands.

Tangier, June 21.—The Moroccan Government yesterday announced that it yields to the French demands for an indemnity for the murder of M. Charbonnier, a French citizen, as the result of which a French squadron was despatched to Tangier.

THE "EXCELSIOR" LIFE

President Fasken and General Manager Marshall Testify.

President Held About Two-Fifths of the Stock and the Gooderham Estate About One-Fifth, But They Did Not Attempt to Control the Company, as Their Interests Were Not Common—Had No Call Loans.

Toronto, June 21.—The investigation into the affairs of the life insurance companies was resumed yesterday before the Dominion Commission. The counsel for the Dominion examined David Fasken, president of the Excelsior Life Insurance Co.

His evidence showed it to be the first concern taken up that came into existence through letters patent issued by the Province of Ontario; a license from the Dominion was received later.

Mr. Fasken, as well as being president owned about two-fifths of the stock, and the Gooderham estate holds about one-fifth more, but the witness said they did not work together to control the concern. He did not consider that their interests were common.

The Excelsior Co. did no business in call loans, railroads or with brokers, but confined their investments almost entirely to real estate mortgages and loans on policies.

The company had made a plunge into "industrial" insurance, but had given it up in a short time because it took too much money from "ordinary life" to develop it.

Mr. Geary subjected the witness to a very short examination.

Manager on the Stand.

Edwin Marshall, general manager of the Excelsior since 1900, was called to the stand at the beginning of the afternoon session. He told how the company was formed, that the inducements held out to shareholders were the same as Canada Life or Confederation Life. Under their agents' contract, commissions terminated with the contract.

The salary list was not a heavy one. President David Fasken receives $2,000 a year; Dr. Ferguson, medical referee, $1,200; General Manager Marshall, $3,500, and the next salary in head office was $1,000. The company paid its solicitors $300 a year for general advice.

To Stop Rebating.

They had made efforts to stop rebating, and witness thought straight salary would induce agents to work better than commission. The present method of loading on the ordinary life plan was 20 per cent. plus $3. Witness was opposed to "industrial" insurance by the company from the start, and after four years' experience that branch was dropped in 1900. In 1897 the expenditure in the industrials exceeded the receipts by $2,000; in 1898 by $9,083; in 1899 by $8,393. In 1900 another system was adopted and these losses were recovered in a few years.

The Agents' Manual.

Mr. Tilley then took up the agents' manual, over which he spent considerable time. He touched on the method adopted by the company in meeting lapsed premiums. The valuation of the basis of reserves was charged on a gradual process as the directors thought that the wisest move, instead of making the advance it would necessitate the doing away with a dividend.

LORD'S DAY BILL IS UP

Vitriolic Attack on the Measure by Mr. Bourassa.

Member for Labelle Characterized Bill as Most Antiquated, Immoral and Absurd Bit of Legislation Ever Introduced—Sir Wilfrid Laurier Criticized Bourassa's Speech as Illogical—Mr. Aylesworth's Explanations.

Ottawa, June 21.—The first morning sitting of the House of Commons was held yesterday morning, with a fair attendance, notwithstanding the meeting of several committees at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Fisher introduced a bill to amend the Manitoba grain act.

The Lord's Day Bill.

The Lord's Day bill was taken up. In response to Mr. Borden's request, Hon. Mr. Aylesworth made the explanations. He said the question had been thoroughly considered by the special committee, who had heard the interested parties and had reported the bill in its present form. The Minister of Justice said that Christianity was recognized as a constituent part of the law of Canada, as it had been the law of the British Empire. There had been for years in Canada and in Britain legislation making certain acts on the Lord's Day offences against the law. Mr. Aylesworth then glanced over some features of the bill and noted the conflict over transportation interests.

Col. Tisdale asked if the bill would interfere with street railways and tramways now operated on Sunday.

Not to Interfere With Street Railways.

Mr. Aylesworth replied that he proposed to amend the bill to provide that it would not interfere with them where they were not now prohibited by Provincial legislation. He went on to say that throughout the Dominion, except perhaps in a portion of Quebec, there had been agitation of a very pronounced kind for legislation in regard to the Lord's Day. The subject was necessarily one of very great difficulty. Business interests were in conflict with the convictions of other and well-meaning citizens of Canada. It was a matter in respect to which there was unquestionably a general demand for legislation. It was a matter in respect to which the Parliament of Canada was the only tribunal which could effectively pronounce.

It was a matter from every standpoint, therefore, in regard to which, in the general interests of the country, it was a necessity that there should be a spirit of compromise and concession. It was impossible that anyone deeply interested in the measure should have to the full extent his wish carried into legislation.

A Government Measure.

Mr. Aylesworth concluded: "We adopt this as a Government measure. It may not be perfect in all its details, but it is presented as the result of faithful, honest and laborious work on the part of the special committee of this House, as a bill for which in the main we accept responsibility before this House and as a measure calculated to serve the best interests of this country. We hope there will be no other view than that it is the duty of the members of this House to assist in making it as perfect as possible."

Dr. Daniel, Chairman of the special committee, responding to the request of Mr. Roche (Halifax), rather commended the amendment suggested by Mr. Fitzpatrick, but not adopted by the committee, including that providing for grain traffic to be uninterrupted in the fall. He regretted that the committee had not had more time to continue their work.

Mr. Bourassa's Attack.

Mr. Bourassa said he approved of the moral object of the bill, but so far as the legal principle was concerned he could not follow the Minister of Justice in his remarks. The bill, he said, was mediaeval in its spirit. If any legislation was desired, it should be in amendments to the criminal code. There was no country in the world in which Sunday was better observed than in Canada. Therefore, there was no need for legislation to make them Christian by law. It was taking away the personal liberty of the people to have their enjoyment interfered with. Mr. Bourassa characterized the bill as the most antiquated, immoral and absurd bit of legislation ever introduced. He also opposed the special privilege given to the Jews.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Reply.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier criticized Mr. Bourassa speech as illogical. "The basis of all Sunday legislation in all countries," said the Premier, "has been the recognition by the Christian people that there shall be a day rest on one day of the week, and that day shall be Sunday. What is the principle? The principle is that we abstain from work."

Certain exceptions had to be made. Sir Wilfrid desired there would be no interference with the liberty of the subject except that he must not work.

"I do not know of any Christian country in which there is not such a law as this," said Sir Wilfrid, who went on to say that it had been thought better to leave Sunday legislation to the provinces, but that such legislation had been declared ultra-vires by the provinces.

Sunday Amusements.

The Premier denied that the morality of girls employed as domestics was endangered by the bill. "Without labor," he said, did not mean "without supervision." But Sir Wilfrid agreed with Mr. Bourassa that a park should not be closed on Sunday because an entrance fee was charged, any more than a park where no entrance fee was charged should be closed.

As to amusements, the principle of the bill providing a day of rest applied to professional baseball players, cricketers, etc., as to any other class. There was no objection to men playing among themselves if they chose.

The House rose at one o'clock.

May Need More Amending.

The debate was continued at the afternoon and evening sessions of the House, and many amendments were offered without much avail.

In response to some criticism by R. L. Borden, Mr. Aylesworth said, that there had been great difficulty experienced in drafting the bill. It was a radical change, and further amendment might be found necessary. It was the intention of the Government to bring in a clause postponing the taking effect of the bill until some future day to be named in the act.

Supplementary Estimates.

Supplementary estimates to the amount of $4,667,916 for the nine months ending March 31, 1907, were tabled last night, making a total of $72,604,463 to be voted for the period named. Of this $54,184,698 is chargeable to consolidated fund, and $18,419,765 chargeable to capital.

DEATH IN RAILWAY TUNNEL.

Air Chamber Fills With Water After Two Workmen Are Killed.

New York, June 21.—Two men lost their lives, another was fatally injured and six more were severely injured as a result of an accident in the Pennsylvania tunnel yesterday. Twenty-four of the thirty-five men who were at work in the tunnel at the time of the accident escaped without serious injury, after having faced death by drowning.

The accident was caused by the tremendous air pressure necessary at the head of the tunnel to hold back the soft mud into which the shield is forced. The mud under this shield was blown out, and two of the workmen who were caught in the flow of air were swept down to death in the river. When the heading was emptied of air, water rushed in through the opening and threatened to drown the survivors. So rapidly did the water flow into the uncompleted compartment that before the last man's turn came to pass through the little door he was standing neck deep in the water.

SCHOONERS WRECKED.

Storms Along Newfoundland Coast Caused Loss of Life.

St. John's, Nfld., June 21.—Shipwrecks of the schooners Blossom and Reindeer were reported yesterday, parts of their hulls being found along the coast.

The vessels went to pieces in last week's hurricane, and it is feared the crews have perished.

Incoming vessels yesterday brought to port a large number of fishermen who were picked up from drifting boats.

The entire crew of the schooner Avenger was brought in, having been rescued from their ship just before she sank. Several fishermen adrift in small boats were drowned.

Lightning's Freaks.

London, June 21.—Probably the most remarkable dental operation on record is that performed by the electric storm which passed over this vicinity on Monday evening, when Chas. Evans of Byron, had nearly all his teeth knocked out by the lightning, but escaped without further injury.

Hespeler, June 21.—Yesterday afternoon, Wm. Rife, son of Ald. Rife, was struck by lightning and knocked unconscious. His neck is badly swollen and he cannot swallow. He will likely recover.

Writing Betrays Him.

Brockville, June 21.—Daniel Henry was committed for trial yesterday on a charge of sending an anonymous letter to the manager of the Prescott Fulminate of Mercury Works threatening to burn the plant unless non-union labor was employed. A decoy letter written by the prisoner to a Pinkerton detective, was produced in court and a handwriting expert from the Department of Finance, Ottawa, said the writing was exactly the same.

Bandits Attack Burauen.

Manila, June 21.—A band of 300 Pulajanes under Ceasario Pastor, attacked the Town of Burauen, on the Island of Leeyte, Tuesday. They killed five policemen, wounded five and captured the remainder of the force, except the lieutenant who was in command. Pastor, the Pulajane leader, was killed during the encounter. The loss of the Pulajanes is believed to have been great.

Farmer Instantly Killed.

Strathroy, June 21.—Duncan McKellar, a prosperous farmer of the Township of Caradoc, 9th concession, was instantly killed last evening between 5 and 6 o'clock. While helping Archie Campbell in taking down an old frame building on his farm, in lowering one of the bents, one of the others fell in on him, striking him on the head, killing him instantly.

Deserted to the "Enemy."

Niagara Camp, June 21.—Alex. McKenzie, 40 years old and a Boer war veteran, erstwhile private of the 39th regiment, walked into camp yesterday clad with a U. S. uniform. It is alleged he joined the U. S. army at Fort Niagara while on leave. He will be tried by courtmartial on Friday morning.

Spain's Foreign Minister Dying.

Madrid, June 21.—The illness of the Duke of Almodovar, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, has become grave. The sacrament of the dying has been administered to him, and King Alfonso has temporarily confided the portfolio of Foreign Affairs to Premier Moret.

Eye Destroyed by Dynamite.

Toronto, June 21.—Capt. John Harris, manager of the La Rose mine, Cobalt, is at the General Hospital as the result of a premature explosion of dynamite, which caused him to lose the sight of one eye.

Quebec Policyholders Organize.

Quebec, June 21.—The Quebec policyholders interested in the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York have formed a branch association for the protection of their mutual interests.

Death Dues From Ottawa Estate.

Toronto, June 21.—The estate of the late Mrs. F. E. W. Elliott of Ottawa has paid to the Provincial Treasury $13,272, in full settlement of succession duties.

Teddy's Expense Bill Passes.

WHOLE ARMY MUTINOUS

How the Signs Seem to Speak in Troubled Russia.

Battalion of Fortress Artillery at Sebastopol Refuses to Obey Orders—Batteries Taken Possession of, Guns Loaded and Trained on the City, Which Was Terror-Stricken—Many Sympathize With Revolutionists.

St. Petersburg, June 22.—A serious mutiny, which for a time threatened to place the fortress of Sebastopol in possession of the mutineers, was suppressed Wednesday, according to a special despatch to The Novoe Vremya. The mutiny was started by a battalion of fortress artillery, which declined to obey orders, whereupon the men were promptly disarmed. Two other battalions then mutinied and took possession of the guns in the north shore batteries, but on the appearance of several loyal regiments of infantry the mutineers abandoned the idea of fighting and returned to their barracks.

Gen. Neplouff, commander of the fortress of Sebastopol, is represented to be greatly concerned about the temper of the sailors as well as the soldiers of the fortress.

That the morale of the whole army is being shaken by the revolutionary propaganda is proved by the continual extension of the rebellious outbreaks among the troops. It appears to be confirmed that the Doltschoff Regiment at Ryazan has driven out its officers and burned the armory. Another report says the soldiers deliberately attacked the officers' club at Ryazan, killing one officer and wounding two others. A panic prevails in the town.

Got What They Wanted.

Four companies of the Viborg Regiment, stationed in St. Petersburg, have presented demands which were acceded to and they have now returned to duty.

The soldiers of the notorious Semenovsky Regiment, whose name became synonomous with repression owing to the deeds committed by these troops at Moscow, are reported to have held a meeting and to have decided that they cannot any longer endure the public opprobrium and must wipe out the stain of the regiment.

The tenderness with which the military authorities are treating these and recurring exhibitions of the mutinious spirit among the troops is sufficient evidence that they fear the entire army is infected.

Terror at Sebastopol.

Moscow, June 22.—The Viedmostie yesterday printed a special despatch from Sebastopol describing the mutiny there, according to which a company of the fortress artillery sent to disperse a meeting on the boulevard Tuesday night refused to do so and later were disarmed by the Brest Regiment. Wednesday a battalion of the same artillery, acting in sympathy with their comrades, took possession of the north side batteries, broke open the magazine, loaded the guns and trained them upon the city. The same night the Brest Regiment, reinforced by a regiment of Engineers, surrounded the mutineers, who submitted without a fight. The population of Sebastopol was terror-stricken, fearing that the mutineers would open fire on the city.

GROCERS GO TO TRIAL.

Investigation of Grocers" Guild Conspiracy Ends at Hamilton.

Hamilton, June 22.—The preliminary investigation into the grocers' guild conspiracy case was concluded at the Police Court at noon yesterday, when the defendants were committed for trial.

Injured Eye Removed.

Windsor, June 22.—Stanley, the 7-year-old son of Albert Phillips, was struck squarely in the left eye by a mud ball thrown by his 11-year-old cousin. The injured eye was removed at the hospital.

Laborer Drowns.

Port Colborne, June 22.—Jose Catalda, an Italian, aged 27 years, was drowned yesterday morning at Contractor Hogan's works, just outside the harbor. The man fell off a derrick scow.

$50,000 Short.

Hamilton, June 22.—Maitland, Young & Co., Toronto, accountants, startled the County Council yesterday by reporting that over $50,000 of the County's funds had been paid out irregularly. The accountants said that they could not check many accounts with the vouchers and that the accounts might be correct, only that they were not able to verify them. The Council will order a thorough investigation into the good roads and other accounts, and sensational developments are predicted.

Sentenced to Hang.

Oxbow, Sasks., June 22.—The trial of the Hungarian, V. Magyar, who shot and killed his employer, Donald Cameron, at Frobisher, some months ago in a slight altercation, was concluded yesterday. The prisoner was found guilty and sentenced to be hanged at Regina on Sept. 6. He pleaded self-defence.

Back to China.

San Francisco, June 22.—The Pacific mail steamer Korea sailed Wednesday for the Orient. She had on board about 500 destitute Chinese, rendered homeless by the big fire, who are going back to China at the expense of the Chinese Government.

The left side of the face is usually considered by artists to be more beautiful than the right.

British Trade Expansion.

The foreign trade of Great Britain has increased so rapidly since 1904 that a diminution in the rate of expansion would not have caused any very great surprise. The London Statist, in submitting a comparative statement of trade figures for the past two years, remarks that the rate of growth seems to have been accelerated instead of diminished. For the month of May of the present year, exports of British produce have increased £4,447,000 or 16.4 per cent. compared with May of last year, and £7,898,000 or 30.4 per cent. compared with May, 1904. These figures, remarkable in themselves, are the more satisfactory in that they represent not an abnormal but an average advance during the present year. For the first five months of 1906 exports from the United Kingdom showed an increase of £20,238,000 over the corresponding period of 1905, and £25,912,000 over the corresponding period of 1904. That is, the rate of increase since last year is 15.6 per cent., and since the previous year nearly 25 per cent. The returns for May raised the total increase for 22 months to the enormous sum of £59,067,000, and it is now probable that the total exports for 1906 will be over £350,000,000. The figures for 1905 were £330,000,000, and for 1904 £300,000,000. The expansion in the import and re-export trade has also been marked. For the first five months the increase was £23,089,000 or 10.05 per cent., in comparison with the first five months of 1905, and £23,909,000 in comparison with the corresponding period of 1904. The figures for May are in keeping with those of the previous months, showing comparative increases of 9.08 and 14.09 per cent. over May, of 1905 and 1904 On the 22 months from August, 1904, imports increased £39,284,000 and re-exports of colonial and foreign merchandise £11,110,000. The expansion in the export trade accordingly exceeded the growth in the net imports by £30,892,000.

Japan among the Asiatic, as Great Britain among the Europeans, also shows signs of the general prosperity. The war has strengthened the credit of Japan, and foreign money is seeking quantities. Recent industrial loans alone total over £115,000,000 United States Consul-General H. B Miller, in a statement forwarded from Yokohama, says that while the number of industrial companies operating in Japan in 1896 was 1,357, with a capital of $14,950,450, in 1904 they had increased to 2,384, with a capital of $81,416,000. The bulk of Japan's industrial exports are going to China and other Oriental countries where she is rapidly extending her trade

Fisher's Humbug About Free Trade.

It was a cheering sight to see the Hon. Sydney A. Fisher stand up at the Brodeur banquet the other evening and state that for the past ten years of unexampled prosperity Canada owed a great deal to the Government, which had allowed the people to reap the full benefit of their toil. This, says the Montreal Gazette, presumably meant that the Government had wiped away the last vestage of protection from the Canadian tariff. It may fairly be supposed that this is what is meant, for Mr. Fisher is the fiercest academical free trader in the Laurier Cabinet. When Sir Richard Cartwright talks free trade nowadays he does it in a mournful, apologetic manner. Mr. Fielding is likewise a free trader, but is yearly growing more and more discreet in proclaiming the fact. But Mr. Fisher is still rampant. He can see the effects of the application of a wide and beneficent policy of free trade in the prosperity of Canada. The figures, however, do not sustain the honorable gentleman. They show, for instance, that during the last 5 years of Conservative administration, the percentage of duty on the total value of goods imported into Canada, dutiable and free, averaged 16.30 per cent., while during the last 5 years of the Laurier administration the duty has averaged 15.50 per cent. Therefore, if we are to take Mr. Fisher as an authority, taxation at the rate of $16.30 on every $100.00 worth of goods imported is baneful protection, while taxation at the rate of $15.50 per $100 worth of imported goods is grand and glorious free trade. It would appear that a matter of 80 cents on every $100 worth of goods imported represents the difference between oppressing the people for the benefit of a few wealthy manufacturers and allowing the people to reap the full benefit of their toil. The average man may not be able to see it as clearly as Mr. Fisher.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Observe the almost indecent haste with which the Council are acting in regard to the Zwick's island filtering scheme! The by-law authorizing its construction was only passed about a year and a half ago, and here's the Council moving in the matter already!

• • •

Fishermen say the mosquitoes will take pretty nearly any kind of bait now.

Some people appear to think the Council might better go slow with the Zwick's island filtering scheme at present. They say the proposed $25,000 expenditure on the Gas works is about enough for just now. That looks reasonable, too, but it must not be forgotten that the by-law authorizing the Zwick's island expenditure was passed some considerable time ago, and that conditions in regard to the city water are not improving. The Intelligencer always thought that a pure and clean water supply was one of the best things a city could have, and the fact that the city has just made a profitable investment of $25,000 (which was the claim advanced before the Municipal Commission) should not block the carrying out of a scheme provided for in a by-law passed a year and a half ago, and which is badly needed.

The Ottawa Journal, independent, says: "Philip Wagner, a Dominion Government immigration official, swindled ignorant and helpless immigrants. He was convicted and sent to jail. A wolf in shepherd's clothing was in charge of the sheep. Having served his time in jail, he came to another good job from the government in part as an immigration official again. The sheep were again given to the wolf. The first time, possibly nobody knew. But evidently knowledge would have made no difference to the present government, for after it knew it didn't care and doesn't now This—well, this is of a piece with a good deal of the rest of what has been heard about this session.

From time to time we hear of people being buried alive, but we were not prepared to hear of the numerous cases stated to have occurred by Dr. Hadwen, of Gloucester, England, at a meeting of the London Society for the Prevention of Premature Burial. We do not know the extent of territory or the length of time covered by his figures, but under any circumstances they are rather startling. Here they are: Persons buried alive, 149; narrow escapes from being buried alive, 219; dissected alive, 10; narrow escapes from dissection alive, 3; embalmed alive, 2; cremated alive 1. Many people have a dread of being put under ground while breath is in the bodies, and these statistics will not tend to reassure them. The question arises are we in too great a hurry to bury our departed? Were decomposition allowed to begin before the body was put away, there would be no danger of such a fate overtaking any one. But are the statistics trusthworthy?

"What can we eat?" is the depairing cry that goes up as disclosure after disclosure proves one food product after another to be adulterated or dangerous. The Stratford Beacon finds a ready answer to that question. "Eat cheese," it says, "for cheese must be clean. The slightest dirt in the milk or uncleanliness in the making would at once discredit the article." It is a peculiar fact that cheese forms so small a part of the diet of the average Canadian, when cheese is one of our greatest articles of export. So little cheese is eaten in Canada that there is very little classification according to quality. It is all cheese to the consumer, who doesn't eat enough of it to know what kind suits his palate best. In England, on the other hand, there is a fine discrimination on the part of the buyers, and cheese is carefully graded according to quality and flavor.

UNION.

(Catholic Register.)

Talk about union with all the honeyed phrases the busy bees may gather—but be sure there is nothing catholic in the union. Sentiment and glib talk and spiritual sham may help to delude now Methodists, now Presbyterians; they can never graft the dead branches upon the living vine. You cannot have catholic union. To attempt it is to belie history. The only logical attempt in that direction is to knock for admission at the door of the Vatican.

SPORTING NOTES.

College Hill football team last evening played a game with a team at Corbyville. The score was 2 to 1 in favor of the city players.

KINGSFORD.

The St. Jude's church people held their annual picnic in James McHenry's woods south of the Salmon river. The day was fine and warm. There was a large attendance present. The people took great interest in the varous athletic contests. There was a baseball match between Lonsdale and Marlbank. The score stood five to three in favor of Lonsdale. The warm day caused the grocery stand to be well looked after. The people seemed to be thoroughly interested in the dancing platform. The rain came on at night and caused the people to hurry homewards. The picnic was a financial success.

BABIES CRIED

AND SO SAVED THEIR LIVES.

Paris, June 21. — Their ability to scream saved the lives of a number of babies at Bilancourt, a suburb of Paris People passing by there today heard a chorus of terrified infants. The sreaming was kept up for hours, and finally someone entered the place and found fifteen babies, under two years of age, the sole occupants. All were screaming distressfully. They had been alone for twenty-four hours and were hungry and helpless. The creche was established by Abbe Biagani, who lately, upon entering the house, found the matron had died suddenly. This so shocked him that he fell dead. The care of the creche then devolved upon a philanthropic, but infirm lady, eighty years of age, a relative of the Abbe. She was so overcome by distress and the overwhelming responsibility that on the day of the Abbe's funeral she fled, leaving the infants to their fate. The babies are now in the Founding Hospital.

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

"I suffered for five years with kidney and liver trouble, which caused severe pains across the back and a blinding headache. I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga Tenn. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s Drug Store.

A COMING ATTRACTION.

The Grand Trunk Railway System Exhibit car which has just concluded a most successful trip of three months, through a portion of the United States, is now visiting some of the principal towns and cities along the main line of the Grand Trunk It will be open for inspection of visitors at the G.T.R. station at this place on Saturday, June 23rd. All who can make it convenient should not miss this opportunity of seeing a novel and instructive art gallery on wheels, in which is found an extensive collection of large photographic prints depicting scenes in the many famous summer resort districts reached by this up-to-date railroad The special features of the crar are interesting to the tourist, sportsman or angler. Magnificent specimens of mounted fish and game are included in the exhibit.

The Intelligencer business office will close at 5 p.m. on Saturdays—other days at 6 p.m.

Literary Notes.

STRICTLY GERM-PROOF.

The Antiseptic Baby and the Prophylactic Pup
Were playing in the garden when the Bunny gamboled up;
They looked upon the Creature with a loathing undisguised—
It wasn't Disinfected and it wasn't Sterilized.

They said it was a microbe and a Hotbed of Disease.
They steamed it in a vapor of a thousand odd degrees;
They froze it in a freezer that was cold as Banished Hope,
And washed it in permanganate with carbolated soap.

In sulphuretted hydrogen they steeped its wiggly ears;
They trimmed its frisky whiskers with a pair of hard-boiled shears;
They donned their rubber mittens and they took it by the hand
And 'lected it a member of the Fumigated Band.

There's not a Micrococcus in the garden where they play;
They swim in pure iodoform a dozen times a day;
And each imbibes his rations from a Hygienic Cup—
The Bunny and the Baby and the Prophylactic Pup.

THE DRESS OF PARIS.

The frocks for small people are mostly made of mousseline, embroidered batiste trimmed with eyelet embroidery, Irish lace or Valenciennes. The coarse pongee or tussor is also very popular, as exemplified in a charming little creation of champagne color, with a loose blouse, plaited skirt, and a broad collar of Irish lace, lending a delicious cachet to the whole. And then the smart hats! Such dreams of fancy and beauty for framing a sweet face! The styles are quite numerous, too.

In the wider sphere of woman's dress, there are innovations which even at this late hour may be useful to those who are busy completing their summer outfit. There is the smart tailor-made gown, without the slightest touch of British raideur, and with all the chic so delightful to every true Parisienne. The belt skirt clings to the waist in its narrow corselet. It is made of fancy material with stripes or checks. A little straight coat with flowing lines, in serge, tussor or plain fabric, completes the natty costume. Beneath the coat, a blouse of embroidered lawn is worn.

The costume of blue serge—short skirt and small bolero—is of practical simplicity, while very smart.

Tussor is very appropriate for tailor-made gowns. This fabric is particularly fetching in blue, old red and tulip. The latter shade is quite new—a vague yellow or greenish tan. Since the advent of so many different shades, the supremacy of white has been slightly questioned; although its ardent admirers will scarcely admit it. Of course, it is most practical, as the influence of the salt air cannot discolor it; and then for tub frocks, nothing can take its place. It is becoming to most people and appropriate for any age.—Edouard La Fontaine in The Delineator for July.

Bigger Letters For Two Cents Next Year

Ottawa, June 21. — Beginning on New Year's Day, 1907, letters weighing an ounce will be carried throughout the British Empire for two cents, which will be double the weight now allowed, half an ounce. This increase in weight also applies to all foreign countries, the rate for which is three cents. At the instance of the British delegates to the Postal Union convention at Rome, just closed, this regulation was adopted.

Dr. R. M. Coulter, Deputy Postmaster-General of Canada, who was a delegate, has not yet returned to Ottawa, so no advices of the changes have been received by the post-offices.

Another postal reform which was adopted on motion of the British delegates is the introducton of a reply coupon, a little postal order to bearer, exchangeable in any country for a union postage stamp.

Spider That Eats Birds.

There has just been deposited in the insect house at the Zoo, a specimen of the bird eating spider which earns its name by occasionally including in its menu some of the brilliantly hued humming birds, and varicolored finches which abound in the South American tropics. It is doubtful whether the silken threads which he spins in profusion constitute his most effective tackle for securing his prey; indeed, it is more probable that the little birds get caught through alighting upon the banana and other leaves, in the twisted folds of which the spider makes his home. The similarity of his coloring to the bark of trees, to which he attaches himself, is also a powerful factor in enabling him to approach his prey. It has now no use for a web, for it is fed on the larger and more succulent variety of the ordinary cockroach.—Dundee Advertiser.

HARD ON HACKETT

CHIEF JUSTICE LACOSTE SCORES HIM SEVERELY BEFORE PASSING SENTENCE.

Montreal, June 20.—James T. Hackett was to-day sentenced to serve 25 years in the penitentiary for having directly or indirectly caused the death of little Edith May Ahern in a thicket at Cote St. Paul last April. A verdict of manslaughter had scarcely been expected from the jury, and even for that the general opinion was that so heinous a crime, no matter by what formal name it be designated, would provoke the maximum penalty of life imprisonment.

Upon being asked whether he had anything to say the prisoner said in a fairly firm voice; "I am innocent of the crime for which I have been tried, but as I have been found guilty I am ready to take my punishment."

In view of so unlikely a verdict as manslaughter in a case of this nature the following pronouncement by Chief Justice Lacoste is noteworthy; "You say you are innocent, but you have been proven guilty. You put your case in the hands of twelve men, twelve men, who were able to appreciate the nature of the evidence given. You were most ably defended The addresses to the jury were all as impartial as they possibly could be, and the jury rendered a verdict of manslaughter. These twelve men stood between you and public opinion. The cry of public opinion was that you had committed murder, but the jury, after listening in a most careful manner to all the evidence, after taking all the circumstances into consideration, after giving you all the benefit of what doubt there might be, came to a conclusion that you were the man that accompanied that little child on the night that it met its death. In the eyes of the law the court cannot say that you are a murderer, and the court must be guided by the verdict rendered. I am not allowed to tell you that you committed murder. I cannot say to you that you killed the little child with malice aforethought. I am not allowed to tell you that as a direct result of the exposure suffered by that child, through you, it died. I am not allowed to tell you these things, because the verdict is manslaughter. This verdict applies merely to the actual killing of the child, and it must be my law, and upon that law I have to measure out punishment. I can tell you, James Thomas Hackett that you were the man who accompanied that little child upon that afternoon. I can tell you that you are the man who kidnapped that little child. I can tell you that you are the man who stole her from her parents, who enticed her, by what remarkable means I cannot understand, to follow you, a drunken man as she did. You took her to parts far from where mankind could see you, you took criminal charge of that little child. I can tell you Hackett, that you are required to tell the law what you did to that child, and all the details surrounding your movements of that afternoon. All this I can say. I can say that this was a heinous crime and you are responsible for it all. To-day I am standing as a Judge between public opinion and yourself, and if I listened to that public opinion I would sentence you to spend the rest of your natural life behind prison walls. But the scales of justice must not be forgotten. I am bound to base my actions on the charge which I honestly made to the jury, and as a result you shall only suffer to the extent of twenty-five years in St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary."

Hackett is 32 years old. By good conduct he may be released at the age of 51.

Weddings in Wales.

Many and curious were the old customs in Wales relating to marriage. The following is an account of the bidding ceremony, an old custom which is said to be celebrated even to this day in rural parts of Wales: The bidder goes from house to house with a long pole and ribbons flying at the end of it, and standing in the middle floor in each house he repeats a long lesson with great formality. He mentions the day of the wedding, the place, the preparations made, etc. The following is a specimen: "The intention of the bidder is this: With kindness and amity, with decency and liberality for —— and ——, he invites you to come with your good will on the plate. Bring current money—a shilling or two or three or four or five—with cheese and butter. We invite the husband and wife, children and menservants, from the greatest to the least. Come there early. You shall have victuals freely and drink cheap, stools to sit on and fish if we can catch them, but if not hold us excusable, and they will attend on you when you call upon them in return. They set out from such a place and such a place."

Ghost or Illusion?

A minister of the gospel, according to this tale, was walking to and fro in a long passage that ran through the house and meditating upon his next sermon. There brushed by him a housemaid. He watched her pass and enter his study. Fearing that she would disarrange his papers, he hurried after her, went into his study—and no one was there. No means of egress was possible but by the one door through which he had seen the girl enter. He rang the bell and—the housemaid came down from the top of the house, where she had been performing her duties. And the unusual part of the story is that nothing happened—no one sickened and died. The young woman married happily. And yet that minister of the gospel is sure that he saw that housemaid pass him. Nor to this day does his stout and happy matron know that she was ever in two places at once.

In Dresden 300 years ago "epicures" used to eat Venetian oysters that had been on the way three weeks.

LOVE'S TRAMWAY.

(Life.)

Love is a rapid transit line
Much like the modern trolley—
Gold bonded, and, in short, a fine
Investment for your Folly.

Its cars are crowded, wet or fair;
Men, maids and widows hurry
To get aboard and pay their share
Of dividends in Worry.

From Sweetheart Square the line goes down
To Nuptial Park (suburban),
Connecting thence to Haremtown
For wearers of the turban.

A branch extends to Quarrelville,
To serve the Heavy Spenders;
And cars to Alimony Hill
Go loaded to the fenders.

Crowds get aboard at Rival Row,
But no one gives his seat up,
And those who sit no interest show
Except to draw their feet up.

At Fickle street there's quite a stir—
Some take a new direction,
Obtaining there a free transfer
To Avenue Rejection.

For those with hearts already caged,
The common public scorning,
The special parlor car "Engaged"
Is the run till early morning.

Dan Cupid is the motorman,
And the conductor, Hymen,
Shouts in a voice stentorian,
"Step lively, please!" to shy men.

The power plant is at the Mint,
And when the current ceases,
It's most amazing how that hint
The patronage decreases.

When there's an accident, it starts
The lawyers on their mettle,
With claims for fractured hopes and hearts,
And some one has to settle.

No threat of bankruptcy assails
A road financed as this is—
Men pay their fares in fairy tales
And maids pay theirs in kisses.

For womenfolk, however, there
Are two quite separate classes;
The lovely maids alone pay fare—
The others ride on passes.

The political condition of Russia seems to be going from bad to worse, but it may, after all, be a case of the darkest hour coming just before day. There are two grounds for the hope of betterment. One is the strengthening hold of the new Parliament on the common people, and the tactical skill of the popular leaders; the other is the impending necessity for another foreign loan to replenish an exhausted treasury. Driven by financial stress, the autocratic Government may choose to make terms with Parliament, all the more readily because of the disaffection of the troops returning from Manchuria. All real friends of Russia earnestly desire that there may be no attempt at armed revolution.

THE HAIR BRUSH.

Breeds Dandruff, Which Causes Falling Hair, and Finally Baldness,

Prof. Unna, Hamburg, Germany, European authority on skin diseases, says that dandruff is as contagious as any other malevolent disease, and that one common source of the spread of dandruff is the use of the same hair brush by different persons. The way to avoid catching dandruff or any other disease from another's brush, is to insist on the use of Newbro's Herpicide. It not only kills the dandruff germ, but it is also an antiseptic that will prevent the catching of any disease whatever through contagion of another's brush.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

VIRGINS' GARLANDS.

Memorials In an English Church to Girls True to First Love.

There are seven "virgins' garlands" still in existence in Minsterley church, Salop, the first of them bearing the date 1554 and the last 1751.

They consist of silk ribbons and paper, ball shaped, and are covered with rosettes, the inside center of the cane or wire frame supporting a pair of paper gloves. They represent a romantic custom of very ancient origin and are sacred to the memory of girls who while betrothed in their youth lost their intended husbands by death, yet remained true to their first loves.

Each maiden designed her own garland, and at her death this simple emblem was borne before her by the village lasses, the white gloves being afterward added. After the obsequies these garlands were suspended in the village church on a rod bearing at its extremity a heart in the shape of an escutcheon, upon which the initials and date were inscribed. These were originally fixed above the maiden's pew.

Some of the earliest and forgotten garlands were composed of real flowers, but later the covered hoops described were substituted.

There is a passing allusion to this "simple memorial of the early dead" in "Hamlet." "Yet here she is allowed her virgin crants," "crants" signifying garlands.—London Graphic.

Quick Witted.

"One day last week I was informed by telephone of a fire in my own office, not six feet away from where I was standing," said a prominent Wall street broker. "A client with whom I had been talking, after lighting a cigar, threw the burning match into the wastebasket under my desk. As I went to the door with him I heard the telephone bell ring violently. When I answered the call I was surprised to be told that there was a lively blaze under my desk, which had been seen by a bright office boy in the opposite building. The fire was hidden from me by a high filing cabinet, and might have done serious damage before I discovered it myself. I am now hunting for that boy," he added. "Any one quick witted enough to think of telephoning in such an emergency I can use in my business."

Pluto's Safety Valve.

A round, smooth hole in the side of a granite monument about nine miles out from the City of Mexico is locally known by a term which signifies "Pluto's safety valve." The hole is about nine inches in diameter at the opening, which is polished in a manner which suggests human workmanship. That man had nothing to do with drilling or polishing this hole will be readily surmised when it is known that it has occasionally emitted hot air and smoke during a period extending over 300 years.

The Man of Force.

There is always room for a man of force, and he makes room for many. Society is a troop of thinkers, and the best heads among them take the best places. A feeble man can see the farms that are fenced and tilled, the houses that are built. The strong man sees the possible houses and farms. His eye makes estates as fast as the sun breeds clouds.—Emerson.

Quite Familiar.

"There is not much in a name, perhaps," said a young Sunday school teacher. "Still it did give me a turn last Sunday when I asked a boy in my class how many apostles there were to have him look up and reply carelessly, 'Oh, a dozen or so!'"

Two and Two.

There is no difference between a mile square and a square mile. Each contains 640 acres. There is, however, a difference between two miles square and two square miles.

IN A POISON FACTORY.

The Deadly Drugs Have a Fascination For the Workmen.

"Slip on this glass mask," said the foreman. "You will need it."

The visitor donned the uncanny mask of glass, and the foreman led the way to the cyanide of potassium department.

"We make 1,000 tons of cyanide a year," he said. "A dose of five grains is a fatal one. Thus our annual product is enough to kill 2,500,000 people."

He opened a door, and a room filled with writhing flames, dense shadows, sparks, smoke and weird figures in glass masks was revealed. In the center of the room, in a great caldron, 100 pounds of molten cyanide of potassium bubbled and seethed. The flames glinted strangely on the glass masks.

The foreman coughed.

"These fumes," he said, "are wholesome. The men, you see, are all robust. I have known weakly chaps, working here among these strange fumes, to pick up health and strength."

In another clean, cool room the finished cyanide was stored. It looked like crystallized white sugar, good enough to eat.

"Good enough to eat," said the foreman gravely. "Well, we have had men eat it. Four men committed suicide in that way.

"The fumes seem to create in our men a desire to taste the drug. They fight this desire, most of them, successfully, but they all feel it, the same as workers in coffee plants want to chew the coffee beans, and some feel it so strongly as to succumb."

The open door offers no inducements to the knocker.

"Whence all but him had fled!" Her laughter rang out, interrupting him. "My room was on the fourth floor at St. Mary's, and I didn't mind climbing three flights this evening."

Crailey's good nature was always perfect. "You mock me, and you mock me!" he cried, and made her laughter but part of a gay duet. "I know I have gone too fast, have said things I should have waited to say, but, ah, remember the small chance I have against the others who can see you when they like. Don't flout me because I try to make the most of a rare, stolen moment with you."

"Do!" she exclaimed, grave upon the instant. "Do make the most of it! I have nothing but inexperience. Make the most by treating me seriously, won't you? I know you can, and I—I"— She faltered to a full stop. She was earnest and quiet, and there had been something in her tone, too, as very often there was, that showed how young she was. "Oh," she began again, turning to him impulsively, "I have thought about you since that evening in the garden, and I have wished I could know you. I can't be quite clear how it happened, but even those few minutes left a number of strong impressions about you. And the strongest was that you were one with whom I could talk of a great many things, if you would only be real with me. I believe, though I'm not sure why I do, that it is very difficult for you to be real. Perhaps because you are so different at different times that you aren't sure yourself which the real you is. But the person that you are beginning to be for my benefit must be the most trifling of all your selves, lighter and easier to put on than the little mask you carried the other night. If there were nothing better underneath the mask, I might play too."

"Did you learn this at the convent?" gasped Crailey.

"There was a world there in miniature," she answered, speaking very quickly. "I think all people are made of the same materials, only in such different proportions. I think a little world might hold as much as the largest, if you thought it all out hard enough, and your experience might be just as broad and deep in a small corner of the earth as anywhere else, but I don't know! I want to understand—I want to understand everything! I read books, and there are people, but no one who tells me what I want—I"—

"Stop!" He lifted his hand. A singular exaltation rose in him, together with the reckless impulse to speak from the mood her vehement confidence had inspired. He gave way to it.

"I know, I know," he said huskily. "I understand all you mean, all you feel, all you wish. It is all echoing here and here and here!" He touched his breast, his eyes and his forehead with the fingers of his long and slender hand. "We sigh and strain our eyes and stretch out our arms in the dark, groping always for the strange blessing that is just beyond our grasp, seeking for the precious unknown that lies just over the horizon! It's what they meant by the pot of gold where the rainbow ends—only, it may be there, after all!"

They stopped unconsciously and remained standing at the lower end of the Carewe hedge. The western glow had faded, and she was gazing at him through the darkness, leaning forward, never dreaming that her tight grasp had broken the sticks of the little pink fan.

"Yes," she whispered eagerly. "You are right; you understand!"

He went on, the words coming faster and faster: "We are haunted, you and I, by the wish to know all things, and by the question that lies under every thought we have, the agonizing Whither? Isn't it like that? It is really death that makes us think."

She shivered slightly, but her steadfast eyes did not shift from him. He threw back his head, and his face, uplifted to the jeweled sky of the moonless night, was beatific in its peacefulness as he continued in an altered tone, gentle and low:

"I think all questions are answered there. The stars tell it all. When you look at them you know. Do you see the constellations swinging above us, such unimaginable vastnesses, not roving or crashing through the illimitable at haphazard, but moving in more excellent measure and to a finer rhythm than the most delicate clockwork man ever made? Ah, when you wonder look above you—look above you in the night, I say," he cried, his hand upraised like his transfigured face. "Look above you and you will never fear that a sparrow's fall could go unmarked."

It was not to the stars that she looked, but to the orator, as long as he held that pose, which lasted until a hard ridden horse came galloping down the street. As it dashed by, though the rider looked neither to right nor left, Miss Betty unconsciously made a feverish clutch at her companion's sleeve, drawing him closer to the hedge.

"It is my father," she said hurriedly in a low voice. "He must not see you. You must never come here. Perhaps"— She paused, then quickly whispered: "You have been very kind to me. Good night."

"It is my father."

He did not speak again, but, taking a step backward, smiled faintly, bent his head in humble acquiescence and made a slight gesture of his hand for her to leave him. She waved him an uncertain farewell and ran into the garden, both palms against her burning cheeks.

CHAPTER VIII.

MR. CAREWE was already at the breakfast table, but the light of his countenance, hidden behind the Rouen Journal, was not vouchsafed to his daughter when she took her place opposite him, nor did he see fit to return her morning greeting, from which she generously concluded that the burning of the two warehouses had meant a severe loss to him.

"I am so sorry, father," she said gently. (She had not called him "papa" since the morning after her ball.) "I hope it isn't to be a great trouble to you." There was no response, and after waiting for some time she spoke again rather tremulously, yet not timidly, "Father?"

He rose, and upon his brow were marked the blackest lines of anger she had ever seen, so that she leaned back from him, startled, but he threw down the open paper before her on the table and struck it with his clinched fist.

"Read that!" he said, and he stood over her while she read.

There were some grandiloquent headlines: "Miss Elizabeth Carewe an Angel of Mercy! Charming Belle Saves the Lives of Five Prominent Citizens! Her Presence of Mind Prevents Conflagration From Wiping Out the City!" It may be noted that Will Cummings, editor and proprietor of the Journal, had written these tributes as well as the whole account of the evening's transactions, and Miss Betty loomed as large in Will's narrative as in his good and lovelorn heart. There was very little concerning the fire in the Journal. It was nearly all about Betty. That is one of the misfortunes which pursue a lady who allows an editor to fall in love with her.

However, there was a scant mention of the arrival of the volunteers "upon the scene," though none at all at the cause of their delay, and an eloquent paragraph was devoted to their handsome appearance, Mr. Cummings having been one of those who insisted that the new uniforms should be worn. "Soon," said the Journal, "through the daring of the chief of the department and the captain of the hook and ladder company, one of whom placed and mounted the grappling ladder, over which he was immediately followed by the other carrying the hose, a stream was sent to play upon the devouring element, a feat of derring-do personally witnessed by a majority of our readers. Mr. Vanrevel and Mr. Gray were joined by Eugene Madrillon, Tappingham Marsh and the editor of this paper, after which occurred the unfortunate accident to the long ladder, leaving the five named gentlemen in their terrible predicament, face to face with death in its most awful form. At this frightful moment"— And all the rest was about Miss Carewe.

As Will himself admitted, he had "laid himself out on that description." One paragraph was composed of short sentences, each beginning with the word "alone." "Alone she entered the shattered door! Alone she set foot upon the first flight of stairs! Alone she ascended the second! Alone she mounted the third! Alone she lifted her hand to the trap! Alone she opened it!" She was declared to have made her appearance to the unfortunate prisoners on the roof, even as "the palm laden dove to the despairing Noah," and Will also asserted repeatedly that she was the "heroine of the hour."

Zutoo
Is a purely vegetable headache remedy and must not be confounded with the drug cures, which in almost every instance, contain opium, morphine or chloral. Zutoo is a harmless
Cure for Headache.

Miss Betty blushed to see her name so blazoned forth in print, but she lacked one kind of vanity and failed to find good reason for more than a somewhat troubled laughter, the writer's purpose was so manifestly kind in spite of the bizarre result.

"Oh, I wish Mr. Cummings hadn't!" she exclaimed. "It would have been better not to speak of me at all, of course. But I can't see that there is anything to resent. It is so funny!"

"Funny!" Mr. Carewe repeated the word in a cracked falsetto, with the evident intention of mocking her, and at the same time hideously contorted his face into a grotesque idiocy of expression, pursing his lips so extremely and setting his brows so awry that his other features were carried out of all familiar likeness, effecting an alteration as shocking to behold in a man of his severe cast of countenance as was his falsetto mimicry to hear. She rose in a kind of terror, perceiving that this contortion was produced in burlesque of her own expression, and as he pressed nearer her stepped back, overturning her chair. She had little recollection of her father during her childhood, and as long as she could remember no one had spoken to her angrily or even roughly.

As she retreated from him he leaned forward, thrusting the hideous mask closer to her white and horror stricken face.

"You can't see anything to resent in that!" he gibbered. "It's so funny, is it? Funny! Funny! Funny! I'll show you whether it's funny or not! I'll show you!" His voice rose almost to a shriek. "You hang around fires, do you, on the public streets at night? You're a nice one for me to leave in charge of my house while I'm away, you trollop! What did you mean by going up on that roof? You knew that rascal Vanrevel was there! You did, I say, you knew it!"

She ran toward the door with a frightened cry. But he got between it and her, menacing her with his upraised open hands, shaking them over her.

"You're a lovely daughter, aren't you?" he shouted hoarsely. "You knew perfectly well who was on that roof, and you went. Didn't you go? Answer me that! If I'd had arms about me when I got there I'd have shot that man dead! He was on my property giving orders, the black hound! And when I ordered him out he told me if I interfered with his work before it was finished he'd have me thrown out—me that owned the whole place—and there wasn't a man that would lend me a pistol! 'Rescue!' You'd better rescue him from me, you palm laden dove, for I'll shoot him, I will! I'll kill that dog, and he knows it. He can bluster in a crowd, but he'll hide now! He's a coward and"—

"He came home with me. He brought me home last night!" Her voice rang out in the room like that of some other person, and she hardly knew that it was herself who spoke.

"You lie!" he screamed, and fell back from her, his face working as though under the dominance of some physical disorder, the flesh of it plastic beyond conception, so that she cried out and covered her face with her arm. "You lie! I saw you at the hedge with Crailey Gray, though you thought I didn't. What do you want to lie like that for? Vanrevel didn't even speak to you. I asked Madrillon. You lie!"

He choked upon the words. A racking cough shook him from head to foot. He staggered back and dropped upon her overturned chair, his arms beating the table in front of him, his head jerking spasmodically backward and forward as he gasped for breath.

"Ring the bell!" he panted thickly, with an incoherent gesture. "Nelson knows! Ring!"

Nelson evidently knew. He brought brandy and water from the sideboard with no stinting hand, and within ten minutes Mr. Carewe was in his accustomed seat, competent to finish his breakfast.

For Miss Betty had fled to her own room and had bolted the door. She lay upon the bed, shuddering and shivering with nausea and cold, though the day was warm. After a time she began to grow quieter, turned and lay with wet eyes staring unseeingly at the wall, her underlip quivering with the deep intake of each broken sigh.

"You're a lovely daughter, aren't you?"

"Missy!" There came a soft knock upon the door and the clink of silver upon china. "Missy!"

"What is it?"

So quick was Miss Betty that, although she answered almost at once, the tears were washed away and she was passing a cool, wet towel over her eyes at the moment she spoke.

"Jass me. I brung yo' breakfas', honey."

Old Nelson's voice was always low and gentle, with a quaver and hesitancy in the utterance. Now it was tender and comforting with the comprehension of one in suffering, the extraordinary tact which the old of his race nearly all come to possess. "Li'l chicken wing on piece brown toast, honey."

When she opened the door he came in, bending attentively over his tray, and without a glance toward his young mistress made some show of fuss and bustle as he placed it upon a table near the window and drew up a chair for her so that she could sit with her back to the light.

"Dah, now!" he exclaimed softly, removing the white napkin and displaying other dainties besides the chicken wing. "Dass de way! Dat ole Mamie in de kitchen, she got her fallin's an' her grievin' sins, but de way she do han'le chicken an' biscuit sutney ain't none on 'em. She plead fo' me to ax you how you like dem biscuit."

He kept his head bent low over the table, setting a fork closer to Betty's hand; arranging the plates, then rearranging them, but never turning his eyes in her direction.

"Has father gone out, Nelson?" asked Betty in a low voice.

"Yes'm; he uptown." The old man's tone sank at once to the level of her own; became confidential, as one speaks to another in a room where somebody is ill. "He mekkin' perpetration to go down de rivuh dis aft'noon. He say he done broke de news to you dat he goin' 'way. Dey goin' buil' dem wa'house righ up, an' yo' pa he necistate go way 'count de contrack. He be gone two week, honey," Nelson finished without too much the air of imparting cheery tidings, but with just enough.

"I am to stay here alone?"

"Law', no, missy! Dat big Miz Tanberry, dass de bes' frien' we all got, she home ag'in, an' yo' pa goin' invite her visit at de house whiles he gone, an' to stay a mont' aftuh he git back, too, soze she kin go to all de doin's an' junketin's wid you and talk wid de young mens dat you don' like whiles you talks wid dem you does like."

"What time will father come home?"

"Home? He be gone two week, honey!"

"No; I mean today."

"Law', he ain' comin' back! Bid me pack de trunk an' ca'y um down to de boat at noon. Den he bid me say far'-ye-well an' a kine goodby fo' him, honey. Say he thinks you ain't feelin' too well, soze he won't 'sturb ye hisself, an' dat he unestly do hope you goin' have splen'id time whiles he trabblin'." (Nelson's imagination covered many deficits in his master's courtesy.) "Say he reckon you an' ole Miz Tanberry goin' git 'long mighty nice wid one'nurr. An' dass what me an' Mamie reckon 'spechually boun' to take place, 'case dat a mighty gay lady, dat big Miz Tanberry, an' ole frien' 'er owah fambly. She 'uz a frien' er yo' momma's, honey."

Miss Betty had begun by making a pretense to eat only to please the old man, but the vain woman's cookery had not been unduly extolled, and Nelson laughed with pleasure to see the fluffy biscuits and the chicken wing not nibbled at, but actually eaten. He was an old house servant; therefore he had seen many young ladies go through unhappy hours, and he admired Miss Betty the more because she was the first who had indulged in strong weeping and did not snuffle at intervals afterward. He understood perfectly everything that had passed between father and daughter that morning.

When her breakfast was finished she turned slowly to the window, and, while her eyes did not refill, a slight twitching of the upper lids made him believe that she was going over the whole scene again in her mind, whereupon he began to move briskly about the room with a busy air, picking up her napkin, dusting a chair with his hand, exchanging the position of the andirons in the fireplace, and, apparently discovering that the portrait of Georges Meilhac was out of line, he set it awry, then straight again, the while he hummed an old "spiritual" of which only the words "Chain de lion down" were allowed to be quite audible. They were repeated often, and at each repetition of them he seemed profoundly, though decorously, amused in a way which might have led to a conjecture that the refrain bore some distant reference to his master's eccentricity of temper. At first he chuckled softly, but at the final iteration of "Chain de lion down" burst into outright laughter.

"Honey, my Law'," he exclaimed, "but yo' pa de 'ceivin'dest man! He mighty proud er you!"

"Proud of me!" She turned to him in astonishment.

Nelson's laughter increased. "Hain't he jass de 'ceivin'dest man? Yessuh, he de sot uppest man in dis town 'count what you done last night. What he say dis mawn', dat jass his way!"

"Ah, no!" said Miss Betty sadly.

"Yes'm! He proud er you, but he teabbul mad at dat man. He hain't mad at you, but he gotter cuss somebody. Jass reach out fo' de nighes' he kin lay han's on, an' dis mawn' it happen soze it were you, honey. Uhuh! You oughter hearn him las' night when he come home. Den it were me. Bless God, I ain't keerin'. He weren't mad at me, no mo'n he were at you. He jass mad."

Miss Betty looked at the old fellow keenly. He remained, however, apparently unconscious of her scrutiny and occupied himself with preparations for removing the tray.

"Nelson, what is the quarrel between my father and Mr. Vanrevel?"

He had lifted the tray, but set it down precipitately, bending upon her a surprised and sobered countenance.

"Missy," he said gravely, "dey big trouble 'twix dem two."

"I know," she returned quietly. "What is it?"

"Wha' fo' you ax me, missy?"

"Because you're the only one I can ask. I don't know any one here well enough except you."

Nelson's lips puckered solemnly. "Mist' Vanrevel vote Whig, but he ag'in Texas."

"Well, what if he is?"

"Yo' pa mighty strong fo' Texas."

"Is that all?"

"No'm, dat ain't hardly de beginnin'. Mist' Vanrevel he a ab'litionist."

"Well? Won't you tell me?"

"Honey, folks roun' heah mos' on 'em like Mist' Vanrevel so well dey ain't hole it up ag'in' him; but, missy, ef dey one thing topper God's worl' yo' pa do desp'itly and contestably despise, hate, cuss an' outrageously 'bominate wuss'n a yaller August spiduh it are a ab'litionist. He want stomple 'em eve'y las' one under he boot heel 'cep'n dat one Mist' Crailey Gray. Dey's a considabul sprinklin' er dem ab'litionist 'bout de kentry, honey. Dey's mo' dat don' know w'ich dey is, an' dey's mo' still dat don' keer. Soze dat why dey go git up a quo'l 'twix yo' pa an' dat man, an' 'range to have 'er on a platfawm de yeah 'fo' de las' campaign, an', suh, dey call de quo'l a debate, an' all de folks come in f'um de kentry, an' all de folks in town come too. De whole possetucky on 'em sit an' listen.

"Fus' yo' pa talk. Den Mist' Vanrevel, bofe on 'em mighty cole an' civilized. Den yo' pa git wo'm up, missy, like he do, 'case he so useter have his own way. 'Tain't his fault, he jass cain't help hollerin' an' cussin' if anybody 'pose him. But Mist' Vanrevel he jass as suvvige, but he stay cole, w'ich make yo' pa all de hotter. He holler mighty strong, missy, an' some de back ranks 'gun snickerin' at him. Uhuh! He fa'r jump, he did. An' den bimeby Mist' Vanrevel he say dat no man oughter be given de pilverige to sell another ner to wollop him wid a blacksnake, whether he 'buse dat pilverige er not. 'My honabul 'ponent,' s's he, 'Mist' Carewe, rep'sent in hisself de 'ristocratic slave ownin' class er de souf, do' he live in de nawf an' 'ploy free labor. Yit it sca'sely to be b'lieve dat any er you would willin'ly trus' him wid de powah er life an' death ovah yo' own chillun, w'ich is virchously what de slave ownah p'sess.'

"Honey, but yo' pa de 'ceivin'dest man!"

"Missy, you jass oughter see yo' pa den! He blue in de face an' dance de quadrille on de boa'ds. He leave his cha'h, git up an' run 'cross to de odder side de platfawm an' shake he fis' ovah dat man's head an' screech out how it all lies dat de slaves evah 'ceive sich treatments. 'Dat all lies, yo' pu'-juh!' he holler. 'All lies, you misabul thief!' he holler. 'All lies, an' yo' know it, yo' low bawn slandah' an' scoun'le!'

"An' wid dat Mist' Vanrevel he laff in yo' pa face an' tuhn to de crowd, he did, an' say, 'You reckon dat if dish yuh man a slave ownah an' a slave had anguhed him as I have anguhed him tonight, does any er you b'lieve dat dat slave wouldn' be tied up an' whipped tell de blood run an' den sole down de rivuh tomorrer?'

"Well, suh, 'co'se mos' on 'em b'lieve same as yo' pa, but dat sutney fotch 'em, an' win de debate, 'case dey jass natchully lay back an' roah, dey did, missy. Dey laff an' stomp an' holler tell you could 'a' hearn 'em a mild away. An', honey, yo' pa'd a milliyum times druther Mist' Vanrevel a kilt him dan tuhn de laff on him. He'd shoot a man, honey, ef he jass s'picion him to grin out de cornder his eye at him, an' to stan' up dah wid de whole county fa'r roahin' at him—it's de God's mussy he didn' have no ahms wid him dat night. Ole Mist' Chen'eth done brung him home, an' yo' pa reach out an' kick me squah out'n' de liberry winder soon's he ketch sight er me." The old man's gravity gave way to his enjoyment of the recollection, and he threw back his head to laugh. "He sho' did, honey! Uhuh! Ho, ho, ho! He sho' did, honey; he sho' did!"

Nevertheless, as he lifted the tray again and crossed the room to go, his solemnity returned. "Missy," he said earnestly, "ef dat young gelmun fall in love wid you, w'ich I knows he will ef he ketch sight er you, lemme say dis, an' please fo' to ba'h in mine—better have nuttin' do wid him 'tall fo' he own sake, an' 'bove all keep him fur 'way f'um dese p'emises. Don' let him come in a mild er dis house."

"Nelson, was that all the quarrel between them?"

"Blessed mussy, ain' dat 'nough? Ef dey's any mo' I ain' hearn what dat part were," he answered quickly, but with a dogged tightening of the lips which convinced Miss Betty that he knew very well.

"Nelson, what was the rest of it?"

"Please, missy, I got pack yo' pa trunk, an' it time long ago fer me to be at my wu'k." He was half out of the door.

"What was the rest of it?" she repeated quietly.

"Now, honey," he returned, with a deprecatory shake of his head, "I got my own wu'k 'tend to, an' I ain't nevah ax nobody what 'twas, an' I ain't goin' ax 'em. An' lemme jass beg you foller de ole man's advice. You do de same, 'case nobody ain't goin' tell you. All I know is dat it come later and were somep'n 'bout dat riprarin' Crailey Gray. Yo' pa he sent a channelge to Mist' Vanrevel, an' Mist' Vanrevel 'fuse to fight him 'case he say he don' b'lieve shootin' yo' pa goin' do yo' pa any good, an' he still got hope mekkin' good citizen outer him. Dat brung de laff on yo' pa ag'in, an' he 'clare to God ef he ketch Vanrevel on any groun' er his'n he shoot him like a mad dog. 'Pon my livin' soul, he mean dem wuds, missy! Dey had hard 'nough time las' night keepin' him fum teahin' dat man to pieces at de fiah. You mus' keep dat young gelmun 'way fum heah!"

"He came home with me last night, Nelson. I told father so."

"Yes'm. Yo' pa tole me you say dat, but he reckon you done it to mek him madder, 'case you mad too. He say he done see dat Crailey Gray comin' 'long de hedge wid you."

"He was mistaken. It was Mr. Vanrevel."

Nelson rolled his eyes fervently to heaven. "Den dat young man run pintedly on he death! Ef you want keep us all dis side er de Jawdan rivuh don' let him set foot in dis neighbo'hood when yo' pa come back! An', honey"—his voice sank to a penetrating whisper—"'fo' I do a lick er wu'k I goin' out in de stable an' git down on my knees an' retu'n thanksgivin' to de good God 'case he hole Carewe street in de dahkness las' night!"

This was the speech he chose for his exit, but after closing the door behind him he opened it again and said cheerfully:

"Soon's I git de trunk fix f' yo' pa I bring 'roun' dat bay colt wid de sidesaddle. Yo' better set 'bout gittin' on yo' ridin' habit, missy. De roads is mighty good dis sunshiny wedduh."

"Nelson."

"Yes'm."

"Do you think such an attack as father had this morning—is—dangerous?"

He had hoped for another chance to laugh violently before he left her, and this completely fitted his desire. "Ho, ho, ho!" he shouted. "No'm; no, no, honey! He jass git so mad it mek him sick! You couldn't kill dat man wid a broadax, missy!"

And he went down the hall leaving the reverberations of his hilarity behind him. The purpose of his visit had been effected, for when Miss Betty appeared upon the horse block in her green habit and gauntlets she was smiling, so that only a woman—or a wise old man—could have guessed that she had wept bitterly that morning.

She cantered out to the flat, open country to the east, where she found soft dirt roads that were good for the bay colt's feet, and she reached a crossroad several miles from town before she was overcome by the conviction that she was a wicked and ungrateful girl. She could not place the exact spot of her guilt, but she knew it was there, somewhere, since she felt herself a guilty thing.

For the picture which Nelson had drawn rose before her—the one man standing alone in his rage on the platform, overwhelmed by his calm young adversary, beaten and made the butt of laughter for a thousand. Her father had been in the wrong in that quarrel, and somehow she was sure, too, he must have been wrong in the "personal" one as well—the mysterious difficulty over Fanchon's Mr. Gray, who had looked so ashamed last night. What feud could they make over him, of all people in the world? He looked strong enough to take care of his own quarrels, even if he was so rigorously bound by Fanchon's apron string when it came to a word with another girl.

But the conclusion that her father had been in error did not lessen the pathetic appeal of the solitary figure facing the ridicule of the crowd. She felt that he always honestly believed himself in the right. She knew that he was vain; that he had an almost monstrous conception of his dignity, and realizing the bitterness of that public humiliation which he had undergone she understood the wrath, the unspeakable pain and sense of outrage which must have possessed him.

And now she was letting him go forth upon a journey, his way beset with the chances of illness and accident, whence he might never return. She was letting him go without seeing him again, letting him go with no word of farewell from his daughter. In brief, she was a wicked girl. She turned the colt's head abruptly to the west and touched his flanks with her whip.

So it fell out that as the packet foamed its passage backward from Carewe's wharf into the current the owner of the boat, standing upon the hurricane deck, heard a cry from the shore and turned to behold his daughter dash down to the very end of the wharf on the well lathered colt. Miss Betty's hair was blown about her face, her cheeks were rosy, her eager eyes sparkling from more than the hard riding.

"Papa," she cried, "I'm sorry!"

She leaned forward out of the saddle, extending her arms to him appealingly in a charming gesture and, absolutely ignoring the idlers on the wharf and the passengers on the steamer, was singly intent upon the tall figure on the hurricane deck. "Papa, goodby. Please forgive me!"

"By the Almighty, but that's a fine woman!" said the captain of the boat to a passenger from Rouen. "Is she his daughter?"

"Please forgive me!" the clear voice came again, with its quaver of entreaty, across the widening water, and then as Mr. Carewe made no sign by word or movement of hearing her and stood without the slightest alteration of his attitude she cried to him once more:

"Goodby!"

The paddle wheels reversed, the boat swung down the river, Mr. Carewe still standing immovable on the hurricane deck, while to the gaze of those on the steamer the figure on the bay colt at the end of the wharf began to grow smaller and smaller. She was waving her handkerchief in farewell, and they could see the little white speck in the distance, dimmer and dimmer, yet fluttering still as they passed out of sight round the bend nearly three-quarters of a mile below.

CHAPTER IX.

BETTY never forgot her first sight of the old friend of her family. Returning with a sad heart, she was walking the colt slowly through the carriage gates, when an extravagantly stout lady in green muslin, illustrated with huge red flowers, came out upon the porch and waved a fat arm to the girl. The visitor wore a dark green turban and a cashmere shawl, while the expanse of her skirts was nothing short of magnificent. Some cathedral dome seemed to have been misplaced and the lady dropped into it. Her outstretched hand terrified Betty. How was she to approach near enough to take it?

Mrs. Tanberry was about sixty, looked forty, and at first you might have guessed she weighed nearly 300, but the lightness of her smile and the actual buoyancy which she somehow imparted to her whole dominion lessened that by at least a hundredweight. She ballooned out to the horse block with a billowy rush somewhere between bounding and soaring, and Miss Betty slid down from the colt, who shied violently, to find herself enveloped, in spite of the dome, in a vast surf of green and red muslin.

"My charming girl!" exclaimed the lady vehemently in a voice of such husky richness, of such merriment and unction of delight, that it fell upon Miss Betty's ear with more of the quality of sheer gayety than any she had ever heard. "Beautiful child! What a beautiful child you are!"

She kissed the girl resoundingly on both cheeks, stepped back from her and laughed and clapped her fat hands, which were covered with flashing rings. "Oh, but you are a true blue beauty! You're a princess! I am Mrs. Tanberry, Jane Tanberry, young Janie Tanberry. I haven't seen you since you were a baby and your pretty mother was a girl like us!"

"You are so kind to come," said Betty hesitatingly. "I shall try to be very obedient."

"Obedient!" Mrs. Tanberry uttered the word with a shriek. "You'll be nothing of the kind. I am the light mindedest woman in the universe, and any one who obeyed me would be embroiled in everlasting trouble every second in the day. You'll find that I am the one that needs looking after, my charmer."

She tapped Miss Betty's cheek with her jeweled fingers as the two mounted the veranda steps. "It will be worry enough for you to obey yourself. A body sees that at the first blush. You have conscience in your forehead and rebellion in your chin. Ha, ha, ha!" Here Mrs. Tanberry sat upon and obliterated a large chair, Miss Carewe taking a stool at her knee.

"People of our age oughtn't to be bothered with obeying. There'll be time enough for that when we get old and can't enjoy anything. Ha, ha!"

Mrs. Tanberry punctuated her observations with short volleys of husky laughter, so abrupt in both discharge and cessation that, until Miss Betty became accustomed to the habit, she was apt to start slightly at each salvo. "I had a husband—once," the lady resumed, "but only once, my friend! He had ideas like your father's—your father is such an imbecile—and he thought that wives, sisters, daughters and such like ought to be obedient—that is, the rest of the world was wrong unless it was right, and right was just his own little teeny squeeny prejudices and emotions dressed up for a crazy masquerade as facts. Poor man! He lasted only about a year!" And Mrs. Tanberry laughed heartily.

"My charming girl!"

"They've been at me time and again to take another." She lowered her voice and leaned toward Betty confidentially. "Not I! I'd be willing to engage myself to Crailey Gray (though Crailey hasn't got round to me yet), for I don't mind just being engaged, my dear, but they'll have to invent something better than a man before I marry

The "Arctic" Expedition.

SPEECH OF MR. W. B. NORTHRUP, M.P., IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON THE ABOVE SUBJECT.

Mr. A. K. Maclean. Would the hon. gentleman ask the minister if these bags were returned and are still in store?

Mr. Northrup. I am not discussing that.

Mr. A. K. Maclean. But I would like my hon. friend to discuss that side of the case, because his figures will be out very considerably unless he does.

Mr. Northrup. My hon. friend forgets the remark made, I think, by Artemus Ward, that no man can be in two places at once, barring he's a bird. I am questioning what this economical administration paid for the goods, regardless of what became of the goods.

Mr. Brodeur. With regard to the sleeping bags, there were 111 purchased and there are on hand 104.

Mr. Osler. Was the hon. minister buying them on speculation, thinking that furs would rise?

Mr. Brodeur. They were bought for use by the men and are now in store.

Mr. Northrup. The hon. minister says 111 bags were bought. I believe 40 of these were got from Hamilton & Co., but Woods & Co. were not forgotten. Did the minister imagine that any bill of goods could be made out by the Government in which Woods & Co. did not appear? He was forgetting his duty and was recalled to it by that firm and they furnished eighty bags at $25 each. I would be afraid to say how many suits the hon. minister bought—four or five for each man. He bought eighty blue suits. Not only was every man supplied with uniforms a couple of times over, but also with three blue suits. It is not to be supposed that these men could wear these blue suits along the shores of Hudson bay. If they could wear them, they did not require the fur suits.

Now, we have been discussing the Arctic, but this item covers the ice-boats as well, and let me say here, in justice to the Minister of Marine, that the extravagance in the expenditure on the Arctic is quite mild in character compared with the expenditure on the ice-breakers. Let me give two or three items as samples. These brave mariners who broke the ice in the Montcalm worked 208 hours last year and were given 72 breakfast cups at $1.04 a piece. How many members of this House take their tea and coffee in breakfast cups that cost $1.04 each? For these hardy mariners 72 tea cups were purchased at 69 cents each, 24 cover dishes at $2.56. For these dishes there had to be some covers. They bought six, for which they paid $118. Would the average member of Parliament be able to afford or be likely to want table service of that expensive character? Then for these hardy mariners on the Montcalm were purchased two cruets at $115.50, two pickle frames at $15, two jelly frames at $13, two coffee pots at $46 for the two or $23 apiece. Two teapots at $42 for the two. They paid $68 for four milk jugs. I should have thought that two would have done, but no, they bought four and paid for the lot $68 or $17 each. Then they had to get cream jugs and four were bought at $50. Also two sugar bowls at $54 for the two. Then there were fruit stands—you could not expect a man who stands before the mast to take his dinner without fruit. These fruit stands cost $148.50 for six of them. Besides these, three ice pitchers were bought, which cost $60. Three trays, for which the Government only paid $33. They got off cheap with the trays.

You bought three dozen English plated fish-eaters at $90. And so precious were they that you had to [illegible] three cases to keep them in, [illegible] you paid $12.75 for the cases [illegible] conceal and protect these precious fish-eaters. Then, of course, [illegible] had to have appropriate fish [illegible]rvers, and you paid $13.50 for two pairs. The same boat, of course, had to have bread plates and knives. These are not ordinarily a very expensive article. But the man on an ice-breaker is more particular than the ordinary man, so he had to pay—or the country had to pay—$24.50 for two bread plates and knives. But it is written that a man cannot live by bread alone; he must have soup. And, if he has soup he must have a soup tureen. Two soup tureens were procured and $26.25 was paid for them. But I suppose that on an ice-breaker a man is not busy all the day; he must have time for his afternoon tea, and here it is by name—an who needs a $40 teapot he must have other things in keeping. Therefore, it was quite proper that $30.25 should have been paid for two cake baskets for these hardy mariners. And, while—yes, I thought there would be something about afternoon tea, and hmere it is by name—an afternoon tea, sugar and cream. Of an afternoon, while the wind is blowing and the vessel is breaking ice, the men gather round the mast or smoke-stack or somewhere else and tea is served in appropriate fashion with an 'afternoon, tea, sugar and cream,' which cost $22.50. But some of these sturdy mariners, evidently do not care for afternoon tea; they prefer a biscuit and a glass of beer. For these it was most necessary to provide two cheese dishes and covers at $32 for the two. Then we have six peppers, plumed, whatever that means, 'plumed.' That may have some reference to the price, for I see that they cost $22.50. When 74 sherry glasses were provided, of course, they had to be cut and edged. Nobody could imagine the mariners on an ice-breaker tossed on the rough St. Lawrence on a January day drinking sherry from an inexpensive glass, so it seems quite in keeping that $30 should be paid for these sherry glasses. But it is not everybody who drinks sherry; some people prefer hock. Therefore, 72 ruby hock glasses were provided at an expense of $52.55. Of course, there are some people who insist upon champagne, and perhaps to be prepared for the return visit to the Arctic—72 champagne glasses were provided at $42.58. If a man will drink plain water, or water with something in a tumbler, his taste must not be disregarded. We find that 73 tumblers were provided at an expense of $32.87.

FUNERAL OF PREMIER SEDDON.

All New Zealand In Respect Observed the Day as a Holiday.

Wellington, N. Z., June 22.—The funeral of Premier Seddon, who died suddenly on a steamer while on his way from Sydney to New Zealand, took place here yesterday and was a striking demonstration of public grief.

An enormous number of people followed the hearse on foot to the grave, through streets packed with spectators from all parts of the colony. The day was observed as a general holiday throughout New Zealand.

"Holy Ann" Preston Dead.

Toronto, June 23.—The passing of "Holy Ann" Preston at her home, the residence of Mrs. Podlow, 211 Ontario street, last night, at 6 o'clock, removes from the community a remarkable character. Born in 1810 in Mayo County, Ireland, Ann Preston came to this country with the late Dr. John Reed of Thornhill in the capacity of domestic. When in her teens she joined the Methodist Church, and since that time has been known throughout the denomination for her unswerving faith in God. Although ignorant of the alphabet she knew her Bible and had led prayer meetings during the past year.

Liverpool, June 21.—Closing—Wheat—Spot nominal; No. 1 California (in Manchester), 6s 5½d; futures quiet; July, 6s 7⅛d; Sept., 6s 8¼d; Dec., 6s 8¼d.

Corn—Spot firm; American mixed, old, 4s 11½d; futures firm; July, 4s 8¼d; Sept., 4s 7⅛d.

Bacon—Short clear backs steady, 29s 6d; clear bellies steady, 50s 6d.

Lard—American refined quiet, 44s 6d.

NEW YORK DAILY MARKET.

New York, June 21.—Butter—Quiet, unchanged; receipts, 11,794.

Cheese—Firm, unchanged; receipts, 5720.

Eggs—Quiet; receipts, 21,008; southerns, 14c to 15½c.

CATTLE MARKETS.

British Cables Steady—Few Changes in American Markets.

London, June 21.—Cattle are quoted at 10¾c to 11¾c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8¼c to 8¾c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 14c to 15c per lb.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, June 21.—Receipts of live stock at the city market as reported by the railways since Tuesday were 74 car loads, composed of 1066 cattle, 982 hogs, 1092 sheep and lambs, with about 300 calves.

Exporters.

Prices for export cattle ranged from $4.80 to $5.25, with few at the latter price, the bulk selling from $5 to $5.15 per cwt. Export bulls sold from $3.75 to $4.25 per cwt.

Butchers.

Choice to prime picked lots of stall-fed butchers' cattle were scarce, and the export class was invaded to get a supply, and as high as $5.20 was paid for one load of light exporters, 1240 lbs. each, but $4.90 to $5.12½ was paid for choice picked butchers, 1000 to 1150 lbs. each. Corbett & Henderson topped the market for 20 prime cattle, 1000 lbs. each, at $5.12½ per cwt. Loads of good sold at $4.70 to $4.90; medium $4.30 to $4.60; common mixed loads, $3.50 to $3.85; stall fed cows, $3.50 to $4.25; grass cows, $3 to $3.25; canners, $1.00 to $2.50 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Harry Murby reports deliveries of stockers and feeders at the market this week as being light, but quite equal to the demand. There is nothing doing in short-keep feeders, as all cattle at all fleshy were bought up for killing purposes. Mr. Murby reports having handled 200 cattle during the week at following prices: good steers, 900 to 1050 lbs., at $4 to $4.25; good steers, 800 to 900 lbs., at $3.90 to $4.10; light stockers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, $3 to $3.25; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Milch Cows.

Between 30 and 60 milch cows and springers, the bulk of which were of common to medium quality, were on sale. Few, if any, outside buyers were operating, the result being the worst market for the year. Prices were off about $10 per head. The best cow on the market sold at $52 and only one was quoted at that price. There would be about 12 good to choice; these would probably range from $30 to $48 each. Fred Rountree bought 22 cows that averaged $36.50 each, and he stated that prices were off from $10 to $15 each.

Veal Calves.

Trade in veal calves was good, with prices steady at $3.50 to $6 per cwt. Choice new milk fed calves are worth $6.50 to $7.

Sheep and Lambs.

There was a fair delivery of sheep and lambs, which met a good market, everything being bought up early at good prices all round. Export ewes sold at $4.25 to $4.50; bucks, $3.50 to $3.75 per cwt.; yearling lambs and handy butcher sheep, $5 to $6.50 per cwt.; spring lambs sold at $3.50 to $6 and one or two lots of choice picked lambs brought $6.25 each. There are too many skinny lambs, with little flesh on them, being marketed. Butchers all over Toronto complain of the quality of the lambs being offered them.

Hogs.

About 1000 hogs were sold on the market to-day. Mr. Harris quotes prices unchanged at $7.25 for selects, $7 for fats and lights; stags at $2.50 to $3.50; sows at $4 to $5 per cwt.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

East Buffalo, June 21.—Cattle—Slow; prime steers, $5.50 to $5.90; shipping, $5 to $5.40; butchers, $4.50 to $5.25.

Veals—Receipts, 75 head; active and steady; $4.50 to $7.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 2600 head; slow and lower; heavy, mixed and Yorkers, $6.80 to $6.82½; pigs, $6.75; roughs, $5.75 to $5.95; dairies, $6.60 to $6.70.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 1200 head; active and steady; lambs, $5.50 to $7; yearlings, $6 to $6.50; wethers, $6 to $6.25; ewes, $5 to $5.25; sheep, mixed, $3 to $5.75.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, June 21.—Beeves—Receipts, 252, all for slaughterers; nothing doing; feeling steady.

Calves—Receipts, 127; no demand for veals; very little for buttermilks, which were 50c to 75c lower; good buttermilks sold at $3.50.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 4605; sheep easier; lambs 10c to 15c higher; yearlings steady; sheep, $4 to $5.50; choice, $5.65; culls, $3; lambs, $8.25 to $9; yearlings, $6 to $6.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 1358; market nominally steady; no sales reported.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

Chicago, June 21.—Cattle—Receipts, 5000; strong; common to prime steers, $4 to $6.10; cows, $3 to $4.50; heifers, $2.75 to $5.25; bulls, $2.75 to $4.25; calves, $5.75 to $6.50; stockers and feeders, $2.75 to $4.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 22,000; 5c to 10c lower; choice to prime heavy, $6.62½ to $6.67½; medium to good heavy, $6.62½ to $6.65; butchers' weights, $6.55 to $6.60; good to choice heavy, mixed, $6.52½ to $6.55; packing, $6 to $6.02½.

Sheep—Receipts, 10,000; steady; sheep, $4.50 to $6.85; yearlings, $6 to $6.75; shorn lambs, $5.25 to $7.60.

Danish Schooner Sinks.

Dover, Eng., June 22.—The Danish schooner Bertha was sunk near South Goodwin Lightship yesterday, as the result of a collision with the Dutch tank steamer America, from Antwerp for New York. Eight of the schooner's crew were drowned. The captain's son was the only survivor. The America sustained no damage.

A BLOOD RED LAKE.

Peculiarity Manifested by a Sheet of Water in Switzerland.

Lake Morat, in Switzerland, has a queer habit of turning red about two or three times every ten years. It is a pretty lake, like most of the sheets of water in that picturesque country, and its peculiar freak is attributed to a disposition to celebrate the slaughter of the Burgundians under Charles the Bold on June 22, 1476, but the French say that it blushes for the conduct of the Swiss, who in that battle gave the Burgundians no quarter.

This phenomenon, of course, has its legend. The old fishermen of the lake, who catch enormous fish called silures that weigh between twenty-five and forty kilograms, say when they see the waters of the lake reddening that it is the blood of the Burgundians. As a matter of fact, some of the bodies of the Burgundians killed in the battle were thrown into the lake, while others were tossed into a grave filled with quicklime. This historical recollection angered the Burgundian soldiers of the victorious armies of the republic in 1798 so much that they destroyed the monument raised in honor of their compatriots who fell heroically in that battle, and Henri Martin very justly reproached them for that piece of vandalism.

It would hardly do to attribute the reddening of the waters of the lake to the blood of the soldiers of Charles the Bold. The coloring is due simply to the presence in large quantities of little aquatic plants called by naturalists Oscillatoria rubescens. The curious thing about it is that Lake Morat is the only lake in which this curious growth is developed.

THE TURKISH KAIK.

It More Closely Resembles the Gondola Than Any Other Craft.

Crawford, the author, to whose skillful pen Constantinople is indebted for one of the most charming volumes ever issued in its praise, has a word to say about the Turkish boatmen and their vehicle, the kaik.

"Constantinople owes much," writes he, "to the matchless beauty of the three waters which run together beneath its walls, and much of their reputation again has become worldwide by the kaik. It is disputed and disputable whether the Turks copied the Venetian gondola or whether the Venetians imitated the Turkish kaik, but the resemblance between them is so strong as to make it certain that they have a common origin. Take from the gondola the 'felse,' or hood, and the rostrated stem and the remainder is practically the kaik. It is of all craft of its size the swiftest, the most easy to handle and the most comfortable, and the Turks generally are admitted to be the best oarsmen in Europe.

"Indeed, they have need to be, for both the Bosporus and the Golden Horn are crowded with craft of every kind and made dangerous by the swiftest of currents. The distances, too, are very great and such as no ordinary oarsman would undertake for pleasure or for the sake of exercise. It is no joke to pull fifteen or sixteen miles against a stream which in some places runs four or five knots an hour."

Gardening In America.

Gardening in America has reached what one might call the "awkward age." Neither a man nor a country goes a-gardening in early youth. "Men come to build stately sooner than to garden finely," as Bacon once said, and as every garden writing body has repeated until Sir Francis in Elysium must regret he ever made the remark, which none the less is true. Gardening is essentially a middle aged enjoyment, and America being, as nations go, still young, her garden craft has the faults of youth. It has its incongruities, inharmonies, and it often mistakes size and expenditure for excellence.—Century.

In the Same Boat.

The Duke of Leeds before succeeding to his title was active in politics. Once when canvassing he came upon an English shoemaker, whose vote he solicited. "Sorry," said the shoemaker, "but I'm not going to vote for any bloomin' aristocrat. I can't afford it. I've got four children to bring up." "That's nothing," replied the duke, "I've got five, and they are all girls." The shoemaker came up and touched him on the arm. "All right, old chap," he said. "You shall have my vote. It seems to me we are both in the same boat, and we'd better stick together."

Doctors and Medicine.

When a doctor does not have much faith in medicine it is a sign that he is a good doctor. The best doctors are those who give good advice rather than medicine; advice that is simple and has common sense back of it. Too many people imagine they can abuse themselves and hire a doctor to make them as well as ever for $2. Nothing in it.

Misunderstood.

Farmer—Where have you been all this time? And where's the old chestnut mare? Didn't you have her shod, as I told you? Jarge—Shod! Law, ne, master! I bin a-buryin' she. Didn't I think thee said "shot?"—London Globe.

A Good Character.

A good character is the best tombstone. Those who loved you and were helped by you will remember you when forgetmenots are withered. Carve your name on hearts and not on marble.

By imagination a man in a dungeon is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature.—Addison.

Substitution—And Weddings

By Martha McCulloch-Williams

Copyright, 1906, by W. R. Caldwell

Elizabeth crossed the turf so loathly, so laggardly, she left a waving trail of deep green footprints athwart the dew grayed grass. The line was blotched here and there where she had stopped and half turned about, but from the last and lightest of the blotches it ran straight to the wicket gate in the hedge. The path to the gate led around, almost under the library windows. Therefore she had avoided it. She did not want to be spied upon, and, though the library commonly was empty until long after sunrise, she had come to believe there was no counting on where Miss Prudence Weir would be at any special hour.

The wicket gave upon a lane shady and secluded, yet a public passway notwithstanding both sides of it belonged to Elizabeth's uncle, Dan. He had been trying to close it ever since he bought the old Mears place, but his rustic neighbors had held stoutly to their right of way. So the young man walking slowly along the lane was no trespasser, albeit he walked warily, keeping close to the hedge. Elizabeth smiled shamelessly to see him. Now that she had really brought herself to a clandestine meeting she was all in a happy flutter and amazed at her own hesitancy.

Yet she said, smiling up at her tall sweetheart: "You must go right back, Billy—must. Do you hear? Miss Prudence Weir sleeps with both ears and one eye open. Besides, she gets up early more than half the time. And you know she can make Dandy believe anything in the world, except that he ought to marry her."

"H-m! That's a pity! Skepticism on any other point would be less inconvenient," Billy Medwin panted, hurrying Elizabeth along the lane toward the woods beyond the main traveled road. It was not at all the way he should go to go home, but somehow Elizabeth made no protest.

Soon they were walking through dew sweet shade, with birds singing thin and sweet above their heads. And presently Billy had his arms about Elizabeth and was saying, with his lips in her hair: "Honey girl, I've been thinking—hard. Miss Weir is the lion in our path, and there's just one way to get round her"—

"What?" Elizabeth interrupted, lifting her head a little. Billy looked up among the leaves and colored faintly as he answered: "Oh, we must show Dandy how deceitful she is. She's made him believe it would be sin to let me have you. Don't you think it would shake his faith in her if he knew she was willing to take me herself?"

"Billy," Elizabeth exploded, shaking with laughter, "you wouldn't dare propose to her. Can you live through a breach of promise suit? If only you could do it! But you never in the world can."

"Sure you won't be jealous?" Billy asked, pinching her ear.

She made a face at him as she answered: "Just you try it. Why, even if the worst happened—if you got tangled past getting out—I should have at least the heavenly satisfaction of knowing she had showed herself to Dandy the cat she is."

"Trust me not to get tangled," Billy protested. What else he said is not strictly material to this narrative, although it sent Elizabeth home at last with happy eyes and the color of a wild rose.

• • • • • • •

Ofttimes fortune favors the daring. The execution began with his rescue of the pudgy Miss Weir from a runaway that was not in the least dangerous, but which gave her a mortal scare. Of course he went back with her to the gate, stopping there to explain elaborately that he had somehow incurred the displeasure of Mr. Daniel Goodwood and been forbidden the premises. That, of course, gave him excuse to ask if he might inquire by letter after Miss Weir's health. One letter quickly and easily bred another, and from writing it was but a step to meeting, either in the lane or in the wood beyond, and talking of many things.

Miss Weir was rising thirty, just five years Billy's elder, but so light colored and plump she flattered herself it looked the other way. She loved ease and consequence—witness that for five years past she had been trying delicately to marry Uncle Dandy. She had only succeeded in becoming after a sort his social watchdog.

He had a great opinion of Elizabeth, his heiress, and wanted to match her well if she was to be matched at all. Miss Weir had about lost hope of Uncle Dandy when Billy came on the scene. Billy knew pretty well all there was to know of lovemaking. This time he chose to make it in hypothetical fashion. He began impersonally by describing a young fellow who had set his eyes and heart upon one so far above his dessert he had become quite hopeless of winning her and had descended to trifling with mere ordinary girls by way of filling an aching void. Then he pictured the lady. Her eyes were heaven blue, her skin all lily and rose, her hair like spun sunshine, her voice a flute. But that was as nothing beside her loftier charms—her soul, her spirit, her angelic nature—which made a mere ordinary sinner grovel in dust whenever he let himself feel what temerity it was to love her. Thus far Billy got by the end of the second week. Naturally it was but little later that the lady was forced to discover herself in the fair unknown.

Then Billy played finer than ever. He would not speak the worshiper's name; she must guess it. But he would with her permission send her a letter unsigned from the worshiper, one in some faint way setting forth all that was in his heart. And she bound herself to reply to it—reply as her heart directed. Billy had hard work to keep from shouting when he heard that, but by holding himself hard in hand he kept a proper face and hurried off to consult is best chum, also a very ancient "complete letter writer."

Miss Weir did reply from a full heart. Indeed, the heart slopped over a bit—she called names—Billy's name with endearing variations. More, she whistled down the wind his pleas of unworthiness—he was a demigod at least among men—she rejoiced to hail and own him, king of her affections. Marry him? She would be happier as his wife than any crowned queen. His "modest fortune" did not count at all. Her tastes were even more modest—and so on, and so on.

To do the lady justice she knew Billy had really a handsome competence; also that he was no sluggard. And her own position was far from enviable. Moreover, she was dreadfully crabbed over Prudence's tardy settlement. "Here you are a nagging old maid when you ought to be a grandmother—almost," she said now and then brutally. Really the stars in their course fought for Billy—Billy the unregenerate, who as soon as he got the letter put it in his pocket and bore down on Uncle Dandy.

Just what happened between them is to this day a dark secret. Folks outside heard first a lot of growling from Uncle Dandy, followed later on by shouted laughter, but nothing audible until the pair came out together, with Uncle Dandy slapping Billy on the back at every other step. And this was what he was saying: "We've got to hire you a substitute, Billy, and I know just the man. It's Amos Flack—he needs a wife if ever a man did—a preacher, with five of the worst children going. Any endowed proposition will be tempting to him. Besides, I've already detected him casting sheep's eyes up this way. So you trot along and find Elizabeth while I look him up. And be sure you burn that letter. It must be thought to have got lost in transit. You may tell whoever you see there's going to be a double wedding up this way soon."

"Yes, sir; I will," Billy said obediently. "But I shan't tell 'em I had a hand in bringing on both matches."

Sure enough there was a double wedding, with Uncle Dandy playing fairy godfather to both brides.

The Vanity of Man.

Every woman in the car saw him do it, and they told the men of their families about it when they got home, as proof that the weaker sex has no monopoly of vanity. He had on gloves that fitted closely. As soon as he got wedged in between the fat man and the thin woman he took them off. If the performance had stopped there nobody would have given him a second thought, but the removal of the gloves was a curtain raiser for the real exhibition. The minute his hands were bared he took three rings from his inside pocket and slipped them on three different fingers. The rings looked to be the real thing. If they were not they made up in quantity what they lacked in quality, and the man certainly had something to show for his money. He showed it too. The paper he pretended to read was folded and refolded every few minutes, and with every movement of his hands a shower of many colored stars glinted from the three large stones. At Fifty-eighth street the astral display ended. Carefully the rings were removed and deposited in his waistcoat pocket, the gloves were drawn on again, and the man left the car, looking the satisfaction he evidently felt at having made an impression.—New York Press.

The Apaches Are Sun Worshipers.

The Apaches, like many other North American tribes, are sun worshipers. Their myths tell them that the sun is the all powerful deity, and to it all supplications are addressed. On going into battle, planting corn or on starting on a cattle stealing expedition, the sun is asked to look with favor. That they believe in a future world is proved by their custom of killing horses and burying them, as well as their clothing and implements of the chase, for life in the future world. Not only the medicine men but the people claim to hold communion with the Chindi, or spirits of their ancestors. They are also great believers in omens, talismans and amulets, but are very conservative, and it is with difficulty that one gets them to discuss things supernatural. They will not talk about God among their own people with familiarity and scarcely at all with the white man.—E. S. Curtis in Scribner's.

The Center of the Globe.

The city of London is said to be the center of the land hemisphere of our globe. In other words, it is claimed that a radius of 6,000 miles on the curved surface of the earth would describe a circumference inclosing more land, from London as a center, than from any other city on the planet. Several other places have been claimed as the "axle of the globe," C. Piazzi Smith, the famous "pyramid astronomer," endeavoring to prove that the great pyramid is situated on the center spot of the land surface. In ancient times it was claimed that the temple of Delphi stood on the "navel of the universe." Several of the petty oriental kingdoms have at different times laid claims to being "the universal center," and at one time the Chinese claimed that the celebrated "porcelain pagoda" was the center around which the sun, moon and stars revolved.

A PECULIAR FISH.

The Turbot's Ball and Socket Eye of Black and Gold.

Lying limp and slimy on a fishmonger's slab, or dry and sandy in the fishwives' baskets, the turbot is, perhaps, the least interesting of fish. When swimming in an artificial sea or lying on the sandy bottom it is the most attractive of all of the denizens of this mock ocean and whether at rest or in motion has an air of vigilance, vivacity and intelligence greater than that of any of the normally shaped fish. This is in part due to its habits and in part to the expression of the flat fish's eye. This, which is sunk and invisible in the dead fish, is raised on a kind of turret in the living turbot, or sole, and set there in a half revolving apparatus, working almost as independently as the "ball and socket" eyes of the chameleon. There is this difference, however, in the eye of the lizard and of the fish—the iris of the chameleon is a mere pinhole at the top of the eyeball, which is thus absolutely without expression. The turbot's, or "butt's," eyes are black and gold and intensely bright, with none of the fixed, staring stupid appearance of ordinary fishes' eyes. It lies upon the sand and jerks its eyes independently into position to survey any part of the ground surface, the water above, or that on either side at any angle.

If it had light rays to project from its eyes instead of to receive, the effect would be precisely that made by the sudden shifting of the jointed apparatus which casts the electric light from a warship at any angle on to sea, sky or horizon. The turbots, though ready, graceful swimmers, moving in wavelike undulations across the water or dashing off like a flash when so disposed, usually lie perfectly still upon the bottom. They do not, like the dabs and the flounders, cover themselves with sand, for they mimic the color of the ground with such absolute fidelity that except for the shining eye it is almost impossible to distinguish them. It would appear that volition plays some part in this subtle conformity to environment, for one turbot, which is blind, has changed to a tint too light and not at all in harmony with that of the sand.—London Spectator.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

No man is as dangerous as his threats.

When some men have nothing to do they become reformers.

If a man asks a candid opinion from a friend and gets it, it makes him mad.

Some people invariably get the worst of it, because they are always demanding the best of it.

As soon as a man gets a notion that his employer can't get along without him he is getting ready to lose his job.

There is always the danger that every man will become the hired man and every mother the hired girl to their family.

When a young man begins to make regular visits to a girl, how it would knock out the romance if it were said that he was calling on her to make arrangements for hiring a cook.

Where Kit Marlowe Was Buried.

St. Nicholas, Deptford, possesses richer literary, artistic and naval associations than most churches of the river side. It was the parish church of John Evelyn and his tenant, Peter the Great, who delighted to make the parson drunk, as well as of a long line of naval heroes. One of the many historic monuments quaintly commemorates Peter Pett, "the Noah of his age," who invented the frigate. A weird wood carving, representing the prophet Ezekiel in the valley of dry bones, is by Grinling Gibbons, who was "discovered" here by Evelyn. The parish register records the burial of Christopher Marlowe, "slaine by ffrancis Archer" on June 1, 1593.—Westminster Gazette.

Oddly Shaped Spiders.

The most peculiar spiders in the world, as well as the largest ones, inhabit the island of Sumatra. They are of all conceivable forms and colors, and some of them spin threads almost as large and strong as the grocer's twine. Some queerly shaped spiders have square bodies poised on long red legs, and others have crooked green and yellow legs which support heart shaped bodies. One of the very oddest of the lot has a body that looks like that of a young turtle, the "shell" having round knobs and pear shaped projections all over it.

Monument to a Fish.

A "tombstone" which is to be seen in the garden of Fish cottage, Blockley, a picturesque village in South Worcestershire, is believed to be the only fish's tombstone in existence. The inscription is as follows:

In Memory of the Old Fish.
Under the soil the old Fish, do, lie.
Twenty years, he, lived and then, did, die.
He was so tame you, understand
He would, come, and eat, out, of, our, hand.
Died April the 20th, 1855.
Aged 20 years.

Sad Story.

Kind Lady—Do you mean to tell me that reading Shakespeare brought you to prison? What works did you read? No. 411—"Romeo an' Juliet," mum. Kind Lady—But what evil influence could that have on you? No. 411—Why, it learned me to be a porch climber, mum.

Mistaken Identity.

"I just dropped in again today," said the lady, "to see those lovely sideboards you had last week"—

"Not me, ma'am," replied the callow furniture salesman. "I ain't never been able to raise even a mustache."—Philadelphia Press.

MURDERER ESCAPED DEATH PENALTY IN A PECULIAR WAY.

A Vienna despatch says; Arnold Sippel, a compositor, aged 21, was today sentenced to twenty years' hard labor at Feldkirch, for the murder of the Scotch teacher, Thos. Reid, of Paisley, at Heidelberg, last summer.

Accused made a full confession. He said that he lost his situation and was penniless, and in order to get money to stay in Heidelberg, where his mistress lived, he resolved to attack and rob the first likely individual. On July 30 he happened to see Reid sitting alone on a bench, sneaked up to him, and at close quarters fired a revolver. Reid turned round, groaned, fell to the ground, and immediately expired.

Sippel dragged the body into the wood, took the money and valuables, put on Reid's clothes, and covered the body with earth.

Despite the confession and the jury's unanimous verdict of guilty, Court could not pass the capital sentence, as according to Austrian law the death sentence is impossible when the accused since the murder has been punished for another offence, and Sippel meantime had served one week imprisonment for theft.

It will be remembered that at the time of the murder of Thomas Reid the fact was disclosed that the victim was born in a town in Ontario.

CHANGE IN TIME ON NEW YORK CENTRAL, SUNDAY, JUNE 17.

The summer train schedule of the New York Central will take effect Sunday, June 17th, and on that date popular low rate excursions to the various resorts will be resumed. Most of the present trains will be continued, though in some cases the time may be slightly changed, and many new trains will be added. Complete information may be obtained at New York Central Ticket Offices.

CANADIAN ORDER OF ODDFELLOWS.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE ORDER IN TORONTO THIS WEEK.

Toronto, June 21. — The Grand Lodge of the Canadian Order of Oddfellows assembled in annual session in the Temple Building Tuesday. The following officers were present: Past Grand Master C. A. Lapp, Brighton, Ont.; Grand Master D. A. Young, Montreal; Deputy Grand Master W. T. Junkin, Fenelon Falls; Grand Secretary Ald. R. Fleming, P.G.M., Toronto; Grand Treasurer W. H. Shaw, P.G.M., Toronto; Grand Chaplain, Rev. Dr. W. D. P. Wilson, P.G.M., Keene, Ont.; Grand Medical Referee H. S. Bingham, M.D., P.G.M., Cannington, Ont.; Grand Auditors W. L. Young, Markdale, Ont., and C. J. Musson, Toronto; Grand Lodge Representatives Wm. Irwin, St. Thomas, Ont., and John Moore, Mount Albert, Ont.; also the following Past Grand Masters; Robert Clark, Troy, Ont., and T. V. Gearing, Toronto.

Delegates were present from Montreal to Winnipeg, to the number of 112. The report of the Executive Committee showed the institution of 11 new lodges, at Guelph, Plevna, Burford, Norwich, Cayuga and Thorndale, in Ontario, Winnipeg, Sidney, Ashville, Brandon, in Manitoba, and Montreal. The insurance department shows claims paid to Dec. 31 last aggregating $26,450, an increase of $9,500. During the year 908 new policies were issued for $687,250, making a total insurance now in force of $3,632,550.

Ald. Graham, chairman of the civic legislation and reception committee, extended a civic welcome on behalf of the Mayor and City Council.

A resolution yesterday to expend the sum of $10,000 in organization work, brought out a spirited discussion. The motion was later endorsed by a large majority, and referred the finance committee. Grand Secretary Fleming made a strong appeal for the holding of the annual meeting in the second week in March instead of June, as at present, but the motion was negatived by an overwhelming majority. Grand Treasurer Shaw likewise threw out the suggestion that biennial sessions would result in a substantial saving, but the motion was not entertained. The Davis Trophy was again won by Parkdale, with a total number of new members of 61. Winchester Lodge was second, with 53 initiations.

In future the beneficiaries of members committing suicide within one year of their admission into the order will receive no part of the benefit fund. The election of officers resulted as follows: Bro. D. A. Young, Grand Master; Bro. W. J. Junkin, Deputy Grand Master; Bro. W. H. Shaw, Grand Treasurer; Bro. Robert Fleming, Grand Secretary; Rev. Dr W. D. P. Wilson, Grand Chaplain; Dr. H. S. Bingham, Grand Medical Referee; Bros. W. L. Young and C. J. Musson, Grand Auditors; Thomas V. Gearing, William Quinn, Grand Representatives.

Water Committee Only One to Meet.

The only civic committee which met last night was the Water committee, and the business transacted was puerly routine. Ald. Gordon, chairman, presided, and Ald. Marsh and Vermilyea were the other members present.

The following accounts were passed;

Pay sheet	$83.25
R. McDougall	30.36
Treasurer's disbursements	17.22
G. Walton	15.00

Moved by Ald. Marsh, that Mr. Colden be paid $48 per month, dating from June 1st, 1906.—Carried.

Rous-Crane Nuptials.

The Toronto News gives the following particulars of a wedding in which many Belleville people are interested;

The residence of Mr. Samuel Crane, 30 Walmer Road, was gaily decorated last night with palms and marguerites in honor of the marriage of his eldest daughter, Miss Clara C. Crane, to Mr Carl W. Rous, which was solemnized by the Rev. Dr. Wallace, of Bloor St. Presbyterian Church. Miss Edith A. Crane, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, Mr. H. L. Rous supported the groom, and Mr. D. A. Brebner and George Black, of Hamilton, were ushers.

After the reception and wedding breakfast, Mr. and Mrs. Rous left for a trip to Montreal and Quebec.

ALLEGED FRAUD.

Wesley Deshane was charged that he did, during the month of March and April, by means of false and fraudulent representation obtain from James Shappee the sum of $425. From the evidence of the complainant it appears that Deshane induced him to invest this money in a business enterprise and it is alleged that the business was not as represented, and the money so obtained was by false misrepresentation. Case not concluded. Mr. Carnew for the plaintiff, and Mr. McMahon for the defendant.

HE HAD ON THE KING'S UNIFORM

TWEED MAN WHO SAYS HE LEFT THE COBOURG CAMP.

The police yesterday afternoon received a call to the effect that a man was asleep in a wood yard on the west side of the river and from appearance was a soldier. An officer responded and arrested the party, who proved to be a man who was wearing the King's uniform, but it was somewhat hidden from view by the fact that he had on a pair of overalls and a smock. He gave his name as Wm. Lewis and his home as Tweed. He had been at the camp at Cobourg, and, according to his story, had been allowed to return home.

Lewis was brought up before the Magistrate this morning and allowed to go.

SUPREME LODGE NOW IN SESSION AT MONTREAL — ACTUARY THINKS UNIFORM ASSESSMENT IS NEEDED.

Montreal, June 21.—The Supreme Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, which is in private session here, is making a determined effort to avert the financial crisis with which the big order is threatened, and the first announcement of the recommendations that will be made to the Grand Lodge is made by Mr. Myles Dawson, the well-known insurance actuary, who is assisting the special committee of fifteen appointed by the Supreme Councillor to deal with the crisis. The indebtedness of the order now stands at $2,500,000, and the membership has fallen from close to 500,000 to less than 200,000.

Discussing the necessity of prompt action being taken, Mr. Dawson said; "The condition must come before the public, and it is just as well it should come out now. The trouble that has arisen is due to one cause, and one cause alone—the low assessments that have been made in the past to meet the death liabilities. The Grand Lodge in the golden days failed to create reserves to provide for the time when the hand of death would fall heavily upon the order. In the early days the assessment of $1 a month was asked for a $2,000 policy, and if continued losses are to be avoided beyond a certain age $10 a month for a policy of $1000 would have to be charged, which is a prohibitory rate. In my opinion a uniform general assessment would be the ideal solution of the question, but the Supreme Lodge has not the power to make said assessment. It can only recommend it to the Grand Lodge, and the latter are divided on the question. The lodges that are financially in a strong position would have to come to the assistance of the weaker ones."

PENITENCE, PARDON AND PEACE.

SACRED CANTATA PRESENTED IN BRIDGE STREET CHURCH BY ALBERT COLLEGE CHORAL SOCIETY.

Quite a large number of the people of Belleville found their way to Bridge St. Church last night to listen to the sacred Cantata, Penitence, Pardon and Peace, by the Albert College Choral Society.

The entire programme was worthy of the highest commendation. Those participating did excellently. It is unnecessary to comment personally for the same term "excellent" may be aptly applied to each. The choruses were without fault; a perfect blending of over 50 voices, while the solos taken by Miss Vermilyea and Prof. Dan A. Cameron were charmingly sung.

The entertainment as a whole was one of the most pleasing and enjoyable ever presented to a Belleville audience.

A Quiet Wedding.

Mr. Russell Day Weller, of Colborne, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Weller, of this city, and Miss Margaret Helena Cumming, of Trenton, were married last evening at the Rectory, Bridge St., by Rev. Rural Dean Beamish. The bride and groom were unattended, and the marriage was a very quiet one. Mr. and Mrs. Weller left on the midnight train for Montreal.

Fishery Regulations.

The close seasons are:—Bass and maskinonge, April 15-June 15, pickerel, April 15-May 15; speckled trout, September 1-April 30. Both days inclusive in all cases.

The penalty for violation of any of these provisions is $10 to $50 for first offence and $20 to $100 for second or subsequent offence.

"No one shall fish for, catch or kill in any of the waters of the province, in one day, by angling or shall carry away a greater number than eight small or large-mouthed black bass, four maskinonge, twelve pickerel (dore) or four lake trout.

"No one shall fish for, catch or kill in any of the waters of the province, in any one day by angling or shall carry away a greater number of speckled trout or brook trout than in the aggregate shall weigh more than ten pounds, and no greater number than thirty speckled trout or brook trout, though said number weigh less than ten pounds.

"No small or large mouth black bass less than ten inches in length, no speckled trout less than six inches in length, no pickerel (dore) less than fifteen inches in length, or no maskinonge less than twenty-four inches in length shall be retained or kept out of the water, sold, offered or exposed for sale or had in possession, but any of the fish mentioned less than the minimum measurement named—which measurement shall be from the point of the nose to the centre of the tail—shall immediately be returned to the water from which it is taken, alive and uninjured.

"The sale and export of speckled trout, black bass and maskinonge, is hereby prohibited for a period of five years from the date of this order in council, provided, however, that any persons from a foreign country, fishing in the waters of the province, and applying and paying for an angler's permit, may, upon leaving the province, when the same are accompanied by him, take with him the lawful catch of two days' fishing."

Genial Englishman Died This Morning

MR. WALTER CHILDS PASSED AWAY AT THE HOME OF HIS DAUGHTER.

Mr. Walter Childs died this morning at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Walter Turner, Park street. Deceased, who was 65 years of age, was born in England, but had spent the greater portion of his life in this city, where he was favorably known. For upwards of 25 years he was an employee of the Grand Trunk Railway, and a few years ago had the misfortune to lose an arm by being run over by an engine. Some two years ago the deceased underwent an operation for a cancerous growth in the stomach. This growth was the cause of his death. Mr. Childs was a genial Englishman, respected by all who knew him. Mrs. Childs died a few years ago. The deceased was a member of Oxford Lodge, Sons of England. One son, William, of Fort Stewart, and four daughters; Mrs. Walter Turner, of this city; Mrs. Barrett, of Peterboro, and Misses Emma and Nellie, of this city, survive

The East Hastings Woman's Institute.

SLIMLY ATTENDED BUT INTERESTING MEETING IN THE CITY HALL YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

The meeting called for yesterday afternoon, to be held under the auspices of the East Hastings Woman's Institute, in the City Hall here, was very slimly attended. In all there were present about one dozen ladies, and these assembled in the Council Chamber.

Mrs. W. Purves, of Columbus, Ont., spoke briefly and answered a number of questions which were asked her. Her subjects embraced "Home Opportunities," "Character Building," "Preserving and Canning."

Miss Bella Millar, of Guelph, read a paper, in which she referred to "Home and School," "The Reason Why in Buttermaking," "Health in the Home," "Hints for the Home Nurse" and "Domestic Education."

Both speakers ably handled the various subjects and answered the questions asked in a manner which demonstrated that they had given much time and thought to the matters presented.

At the conclusion of the meeting a vote of thanks was heartily tendered to the speakers.

Off For Europe.

A large number of friends were at the G.T.R. station at noon to-day to say good-bye to the party now en route to Montreal on their way to the Mother Country. The O.B.C. students and staff turned out en masse and gave three rousing college yells for Principal Johnson, Mrs. Johnson and their law lecturer, Col. Ponton.

THE "CROWN" LIFE CO

Scrutiny Reveals Discrepancy in Loss and Gain of $9,000.

Difference Between Returns to Government and Prepared Statement Handed In to Commission—Meagre Information From Chief Officer—Extravagant Methods of "Excelsior" Brought Out by Dominion Counsel.

Toronto, June 22.—Mr. Tilley continued his examination of Edwin Marshall, manager of the Excelsior Life yesterday morning before the Royal Commission on Insurance. The subject of commission was first dealt with. The office staff received commissions on all business they procured. The first year's commission on new business ran up as high as 75 per cent., but no renewals were allowed. Mr. Marshall's salary amounted to $2,500 a year with a bonus or a share of commissions.

Mr. Tilley asked the witness if there was any clause in the policies which definitely guaranteed to any policyholder a dollar of profits, and Mr. Marshall answered in the negative. The directors fixed the amount the policyholder should receive.

The question of percentage of expenses to income was next. For nine years the premium income of the Excelsior amounted to $1,335,499, with expenses of $591,543, making the average expense 44.6 per cent. of premium income, and 36.9 per cent. of total income.

"Rebating was wrong," said the witness, "but unless the Government took the matter in hand and penalized the guilty parties the companies were powerless to remedy the evil." The Excelsior Life did a lot of rebating.

The extravagant methods of the Excelsior were brought out by Mr. Tilley. The statement of 1900 showed expenses of $109,341, on a premium income of $56,198. Mr. Marshall explained this by saying that only two Canadian companies had a lower expense rate.

The Proper Kind.

Commissioner Kent here made the following statement: "It has been my belief all through the course of this enquiry that the proper kind of insurance is the straight life without profits."

This concluded the examination of the Excelsior Life.

Chas. J. Hughes, managing director and actuary of the Crown Life, was called at the afternoon session. Mr. Hughes has been actuary and manager since February last. He succeeded his brother as actuary, who was previously actuary for the Manufacturers' Life and now connected with an American company, and Geo. H. Roberts, as manager, the founder of the company. The company was chartered in 1901. The capital stock was put at $1,000,000 with $250,000 subscribed.

Excluded the Policyholders.

Mr. Tilley then took up the clauses of the charter. One point was the fact that no person could be a director unless he owned twenty-five shares. This, Mr. Tilley said, excluded the policyholders from holding a seat on the board, and the witness assented.

The subscribed capital was now $609,000, and the paid-up capital was $129,000, and the company would accept subscriptions though not endeavoring to get subscriptions, not because there was capital enough, but because witness did not think it was an opportune time to seek subscriptions. The stock was sold at a premium of 25 per cent. The first was a call of 25 per cent., of which 800 shares were paid on the instalment plan, which permitted the shareholder to pay for his shares in ten different instalments. No shares had been forfeited by the company for non-payment of call. There were no shareholders who had not paid anything on their stock. There were no directors who held unpaid stock. Promissory notes had been accepted.

"How were these treated in the annual statement, as 'bills receivable'?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"No, they were treated as cash."

"What method was involved in getting these notes into cash?"

"They were discounted toward the end of the year by the Sovereign and Union Banks, and taken up three months later, the maker of the note paying the discount."

"The note was not endorsed by the company," suggested Mr. Marks, the secretary of the company, who assisted the witness in his answers.

Agents on Commission.

Mr. Tilley took up the agents next. He elicited the fact that all agents of the Crown were paid on a commission basis with a certain guarantee each month that is not to be returned. This, however, is not stipulated in the agents' contract. Agents' advances for 1905 were over $6,000. This amount was written off. Witness said that about $5,000 a year for the past few years.

Mr. Tilley asked if this was not an odd condition of insurance business, rather than a normal.

"It is the normal condition," said the witness. "A young company cannot afford to treat this item as older companies do. A large company would keep it out of their books altogether."

Surrender values was the next item. The clause relating to this provided that such value be paid as the directors may fix. The policy went farther than the act in this regard and stipulated that the insured is entitled to a cash surrender value at any time.

"Have you ever given policyholders the right to vote, as set forth in the charter?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"No. I don't think policyholders should have a right to vote, for in the early stages of a company there were so many difficulties to meet it was not desirable to have too many masters. I would not like proxy voting at all. If you leave it to one person to guide the hand you will have a sorry state of affairs."

The Crown carried on general business, an industrial business, an abstainers department and a woman's department. The non participating and participating were all treated in one set of books. He could see no gain in separating them.

A Guarded Secret.

Mr. Tilley spent considerable time in trying to find out what was due the policyholders, but Mr. Hughes, like other insurance men, objected to showing what participating policyholders should get.

Mr. Hughes is opposed to rebating, claiming that business obtained by giving rebates is not persistent.

Witness then told the Commission that Sir Charles Tupper, president of the Crown Life until 1905, had a contract with the company by which he received a straight salary of $2,000, 1 per cent. of all calls on stock over $100,000, 1 per cent. on all premiums on subscribed stock, and 1 per cent. on all first year premiums.

G. H. Roberts as manager received $5,000, the same salary was paid the witness—a year from the inception of the company, which witness thought was too high for any young company and that the Tupper arrangement was a poor one.

Witness gave particulars of a dispute between a policyholder and the company. The application for policy had held instalments and the beneficiaries applied for the insurance; the company would not come up. Not wishing to quarrel with the complainant the company offered $1,000 settlement, which was still open.

In the matter of estimates of profits the Crown Life had followed the same line as older companies. Their estimates, as Mr. Tilley proved in a searching examination, were altogether too high, and witness acquiesced.

The "not taken policies," said Mr. Tilley, were 16 per cent. in 1902, 20 per cent. in 1903, 25 per cent. in 1904, and 17 per cent. in 1905.

"Do you find that most of these policies were issued last month to swell returns?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"We have never done anything out of the ordinary, except tell agents that the end of the year was coming, and that it was desirable to make a good showing. These 'not taken' policies were scattered over the whole year."

A rather loose method was certain discrimination of policies. For instance, in some cases to alter the policy it was dated back to last birthday, giving the insurer a sort of rebate, and according to Mr. Tilley, an unfair advantage.

The lapse ratio was about 10 per cent.

Mrs. Tilley prepared a statement showing percentage of commission on new premiums. In 1901 it was 85.4 per cent.; in 1902, 64.5 per cent.; in 1903, 59.2 per cent.; in 1904, 68.7 per cent.; in 1905, 79.1 per cent.

When asked why the commission had gone as high as 85 per cent. the witness could not say.

A Discrepancy of $9,000.

The loss and gain statement prepared by Mr. Hughes was dissected.

Mr. Tilley asked Mr. Hughes, in reference to the "loss and gain" statement, which he had handed in to the commission and pointed out that it did not agree with the Government return. The return showed a loss of $22,000, while Mr. Hughes' statement showed only a loss of $9,000.

"Where did the rest go?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"I don't know," said the manager of the Crown Life.

It was shown that the loss incurred in the first year's business would take four or five years to make up. It was over $42,000. This, of course, was due to heavy expenses in connection with agents' commissions. The Crown Life had never tried to remedy the rebating evil.

The Crown Life investments were in municipal bonds and bank stocks. Investments showed no particular losses.

The Crown Life suffered the usual impairment of capital, which amounted to $100,000.

The company made loans on policies at a rate of 5 per cent.

G. R. Geary took the witness just before adjournment.

The company did business all over the country and had offices at Montreal and Halifax.

MORE LORD'S DAY BILL

Section Four, re Sunday Labor, Discussed For Hours.

But the Section Stands Over—Premier's Insistence on Park Closing Clause of Bill Brings Forth a Phillipic From Mr. Bourassa—The Original Clause Carries—Censure of the Moncton Land Deal Voted Down.

Ottawa, June 22.—After fifteen hours of hard work in committee yesterday the House decided to rest from its labors on the Lord's Day bill. The progress so far has been unsatisfactory.

Nearly all of the day was consumed in discussing section four, which, in substance, provides that any employer who requires an employe to work on Sunday must give him twenty-four consecutive hours of rest during the next six days.

After hours of effort, the Minister of Justice asked to have this section stand over, and the committee proceeded to section five, which deals with the matter of closing parks on Sunday. The Premier's insistence upon this clause brought forth a phillipic from Mr. Bourassa. He spoke dramatically, and at times he quivered with passion.

In the morning Henry Bourassa submitted two amendments, making additional exemptions in favor of the driving of logs on Sunday and the saving of crops on Sunday.

Louis Lavergne offered another amendment to permit Sunday labor in the sugar bush.

Sunday Labor.

Mr. Aylesworth said that the bill was intended to give 24 consecutive hours of rest.

In the afternoon, Mr. Bourassa moved an hour-for-hour amendment.

Ralph Smith moved another amendment to provide that Sunday labor under two hours should not entitle the worker to a full 24-hour rest day.

Mr. Pringle (Cornwall and Stormont) offered a substitute. He allowed 24 consecutive hours of rest, but they might commence or terminate on Sunday.

Mr. Aylesworth said that the employer who required his employe to work on Sunday was compelled to give him a holiday during the week. But although the employer "must give" the holiday, the employe was not compelled to "take it."

Section four will stand for the present.

Parks and Games.

Section five, forbidding any parks to be open to the public where an admission fee is charged, and forbidding any game or contest for a prize or reward, aroused a double-barrelled opposition.

Mr. Rivet (Montreal) moved an amendment permitting parks to be open "where authorized by provincial or municipal authority."

Mr. Taylor (Leeds) moved an amendment forbidding any person to engage in any game on Sunday or to witness the same.

Sir Wilfrid's Dilemnas.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier refused both amendments. He could not yield everything demanded by the Protestants of Ontario or by the Catholics of Quebec. Last year he had been accused of being ridden by Sbaretti; this year he was accused of being ridden by Shearer.

Mr. Bourassa made an impassioned reply. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was destroying the great work of his life. The keystone of our national fabric is toleration; each race, creed, and province must respect the others. He favored the law, but each province should be at liberty to administer, regulate or suspend it to meet the religious views and social customs of the people.

The amendments were voted down, and the section passed as reported by the committee.

Sunday Excursions.

Mr. Conmee (Rainy River) opposed section six forbidding Sunday excursions.

Mr. Pringle said the bill as agreed upon by the committee only forbade "organized excursions." Why had this word been dropped in reprinting the bill? He insisted that Mr. Shearer had no objection to the amendment. Mr. Aylesworth refused to accept it.

The Moncton Land Deal.

Upon motion to go into supply Mr. Ames (Montreal), offered a resolution of censure respecting the Moncton land deal, which he denounced as a glaring instance of the rake-off which followed all dealings between Matthew Lodge and Mr. Emmerson's department.

Mr. Emmerson said that at the time he purchased the land he believed that he was getting a splendid bargain. He made a sweeping denial of any corrupt action on his part.

Mr. Foster (North Toronto), opined that a nod was as good as a wink to a blind person. Mr. Lodge was a sharp fellow and Mr. Emmerson was no fool. The Minister admittedly gave the tip to Lodge that the Government was going to buy.

Mr. Fielding said that Moncton real estate was rapidly growing in value. It was to be the terminus of the G. T. P., and that fact had boomed the city.

R. L. Borden thought that Mr. Fielding was easily satisfied. He wished us to believe that Mr. Lodge by blind chance had bought lot after lot in Moncton until he controlled some 18 acres, and that by equally blind chance the Government had not only purchased the lots just acquired by Mr. Lodge; and, stranger still, had purchased neither more nor less than what Lodge was prepared to sell.

Upon division Mr. Ames' motion of censure was lost—yeas, 46; nays, 89. Mr. Bourassa was not present. Mr. Verville voted with the Government.

Relieved of One Duty.

Ottawa, June 22.—Hon. Mr. Aylesworth has been relieved of the Department of Labor, and is succeeded by Hon. Mr. Lemieux.

Papers Go to the House.

Ottawa, June 22.—Mr. W. T. R. Preston was called again yesterday by the Public Accounts' Committee. Being examined by Mr. Barker he said that he was not aware that Mr. D. Somerville, who had endorsed the cheques, was Dorothy Somerville, wife of Roy Somerville. Witness said that when he told Lord Strathcona last April that he did not know the names of the North Atlantic Trading Co., he was candid with Lord Strathcona.

The papers in the Arundel Printing Co., the North Atlantic Trading Co., the Leopold affair, and the George T. Merwin matter were ordered to be reported to the House.

Paid Double For Tobacco.

Ottawa, June 22.—At the afternoon meeting of the Arctic committee, Capt. Bernier was again on the stand, and it developed that there was considerable ill-feeling between him and Major Moodie. W. F. Cockshutt (Brantford) testified that T. & B. tobacco was worth 67 cents per pound, including excise duty. The Government bought it for the Arctic at the rate of $1.34 a pound.

BIG FIRE AT NICOLET.

Cathedral and Other Church Buildings Were Destroyed.

Montreal, June 22.—The new cathedral, the old parish church, the residence of Mgr. Suzor, former bishop of the diocese, and the convent of the Sisters of the Assumption, were all destroyed by fire at Nicolet last night.

No one was injured, although there were 300 sisters in the convent.

The fire started in the church, but how is not known. Loss about $400,000.

SENTENCED FOR WOUNDING.

Farmer Who Shot Wm. Scott, C. P. R. Contractor, Goes to Prison.

Bracebridge, June 22.—John Kelity, a farmer, living at Footes' Bay, Lake Joseph, was sentenced to two years less one day, for shooting William Scott, a C. P. R. contractor.

Kelity shot at Scott with a Winchester rifle for trespassing on his property, the bullet taking effect in his right side. Scott will recover.

Raid on Small Gamblers.

Toronto, June 22.—The police suddenly went out with a drag-net yesterday afternoon. They paid their attention to the alleged bucket shops and hand-book men, with the result that some 20 of the layers of odds were landed in No. 1 police station and summonses were issued to about the same number for those who "deal" in stocks. This raid had been planned for the past three weeks. Sixty police and detectives were sent to certain points and they simultaneously visited the suspected places and made a round-up.

To Boom British Trade.

Ottawa, June 22.—A despatch received from Lord Elgin, as Secretary of State for the colonies, states that Richard Gregg of the Middleborough Chamber of Commerce is being sent to Canada by the imperial board of trade to select suitable persons in the chief Canadian business centres to act as local correspondents of the British board of trade and to report from time to time such opportunities for British trade as may occur. He is due to arrive in Canada on July 3.

Queenston Heights Defended.

Niagara Camp, June 22.—Queenston Heights with an inferior force can't be taken by a much superior force. This was demonstrated by the sham fight which lasted from Wednesday night until the last unit came in last evening. In this fight the forces came close enough to hit opponents on the heads with guns and pleasantly prod them with bayonets, while the firing on the ridges was so close that some of the warriors got faces filled with powder.

Owen Sound Celebrates.

Owen Sound, June 22.—This town's semi-centennial celebration yesterday was a pronounced success in every respect. The feature of the morning was the laying of the corner-stone of the magnificent new cement bridge on Poleit street. Mayor Joyce presided and the ceremony was performed by David Creighton, ex-M. P. P., of Toronto, one of Owen Sound's pioneer residents. In the evening the sky was brightened by a display of fireworks.

Regal Beer Seized.

Toronto, June 22.—Officers of the license branch of the Provincial Secretary's department have seized large quantities of Regal beer in Cobalt and other New Ontario centres. Altogether twenty-four places were raided. In one hotel 150 barrels of the beverage were taken. The beer will be destroyed. The action of the department is the result of an analysis which shows the beer to contain more than 2 1-2 per cent. of proof spirits.

Go-Between Wins the $20,000.

New York, June 22.—Alex. Shields' (Toronto) 5-year-old Meddler—Indigo gelding Go-Between, carrying 116 pounds, and third choice in the betting, at 6 to 1, won the $20,000 Suburban handicap yesterday at the Sheepshead Bay course of the Coney Island Jockey Club. The finish of the race was a terrific drive, and 30,000 racing enthusiasts rose to their feet and wildly shouted encouragement. Time, 2.05 1-5.

Wife Says Husband Is Bigamist.

Detroit, June 22.—George A. McMichaels, 40 years old, wanted in Woodstock, Ont., for bigamy, was arrested at Grace Hospital yesterday and taken to Windsor. Mrs. McMichaels in Woodstock declares her husband was married to the Detroit woman several months ago, and has been living here ever since. McMichaels declares that he was not married to any one except the wife in Woodstock.

Survives 25,000 Volts.

Ottawa, June 22.—Dr. Lee DeForest, while experimenting yesterday at the wireless telegraph station, met with a narrow escape from death. The whole out put of 25,000 volts passed through Dr. DeForest's body, enough to produce instant death in nine times out of ten. DeForest was knocked unconscious, but quickly revived, and aside from a partial paralysis of the limbs, which shortly passed away, has left no serious effects.

Conservatives Censure Government.

Brockville, June 22.—At the meeting of the County Council of Leeds and Grenville Wednesday night the committee on education in a report which was adopted strongly condemned the action of the Whitney Government for abolishing model schools. A majority of the council are Conservatives.

NORWAY'S NEW RULERS

King and Queen of the People Crowned at Trondhjem.

Impressive Religious Ceremony at the Cathedral—People Were Euthusiastic, But Silent, and Occasionally Broke Into Cheers—President of the Storthing Gave the First "God Save the King and Queen."

Trondhjem, June 23.—Coronation Day opened yesterday with a glowing but cold sun shining. The city was alive at an early hour, and by 8 o'clock the avenues reaching to the cathedral were filled with straggling lines of people making for the choicest points of vantage from which to see King Haakon and Queen Maud, both in ermine robes, and the distinguished guests enter the cathedral. The doors were opened at 10 a. m., and soon afterwards three bishops, robed in black and white, drove up in a phaeton. The crowd uncovered when the bishops entered the cathedral.

The arrival of the bishops was followed by the appearance of a number of priests, all robed in white. The royal and special embassies soon afterwards began arriving. The Prince and Princess of Wales entered last at 10.55 a. m.

King and Queen Start.

The King and Queen after a brief delay in arranging the carriages and cavalry escort started for the cathedral, preceded by their suites. A great cheer announced the departure of the royal party. The King smiled and saluted in reply to the salutations of the people. The crowd seemingly was impressed by the coming religious ceremony, and the people generally were silent. Occasionally, however, there was an outbreak of cheers.

The royal coach, drawn by four handsome bays, led by footmen, reached the cathedral at 11.10 a. m., where their Majesties were received by the clergy.

The Ceremony.

When the royal party entered all present in the cathedral arose and the ceremonial began immediately, which was conducted by the Bishop of Trondhjem and the Chief Justice, Prime Minister, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Minister of War, and concluded by the bishop in an invocation.

The completion of the crowning of King Haakon was communicated by two army signallers, wi-wagging, across the city, from the cathedral to the hill batteries, whose booming carried the tidings over the city and harbor.

The crowning of Queen Maud commenced immediately afterwards. Her Majesty, who is of a naturally timid and retiring disposition, bravely faced the ceremony. She looked dainty and attractive.

The ceremony of crowning King Haakon and Queen Maud was striking and sombre in its simplicity. There were no unfortunate attempt at decoration to mar the granite grandeur of the background furnished by the noble cathedral.

God Save King and Queen.

When the newly-crowned King and Queen returned to their thrones after the Episcopal benediction all the royal guests and special ambassadors saluted their Majesties with deep reverences.

At the termination of the proceedings the president of the Storthing called out "God save the King and Queen," and the whole distinguished company heartily took up the cry.

Nothing occurred throughout the ceremony to cause the principal participants the slightest uneasiness.

Congratulations.

On their return to the palace the King and Queen received the congratulations of a deputation from the Storthing and the members of the Government.

The vast throng outside the palace broke out into cheering in response to their Majesties' appearance at the window, still wearing the coronation robes.

Celebrated at London.

London, June 23.—All the British naval and military stations yesterday celebrated the coronation of King Haakon and Queen Maud of Norway with firing of salutes. In addition the warships "dressed ship" and the bells of Windsor were rung.

Boy's Serious Condition.

London, June 23.—The 14-year-old son of Joseph Moisse was taken to the hospital Thursday night. The young lad had some firecrackers in his pocket on May 24, and they ignited and burned his hip very badly. It has been discovered that blood poisoning had set in and his condition is serious.

Teller Has Disappeared.

Medicine Hat, Alta., June 23.—W. E. Compton, teller in the Union Bank here, has disappeared, and there is a shortage in his books, but the amount cannot be learned. He is a young Englishman and had no relatives in Canada. Compton has been traced to Vancouver.

Cotton Weavers Strike.

Montreal, June 23.—The weavers and spinners at the Dominion Cotton Co.'s mill, at Magog, are on strike. They demand increase in the wages and recognition of the union. The company refuses recognition of the union. One hundred and fifty men are out.

School Question in Calgary.

Calgary, June 23.—At a meeting of the Synod of Calgary, Bishop Pinkham introduced the school question, complaining that, though Anglicans had asked for similar privileges as the Catholics in school matters, the same were not granted.

The Worst of a Bad Lot.

The case of Philip Wagner, assistant land agent and interpreter for the Department of the Interior, is the worst of a bad lot to attract attention in Parliament during the past few years. Wagner was appointed an interpreter at Edmonton, seemingly on the advice of Mr. Oliver, then M.P. for the constituency. He used his position to defraud certain of the Galician immigrants, whose language he understood, and who regarded him as their friend. Many charges were made against him. He was prosecuted by the Department of Justice at the instance of the Department of the Interior, and sentenced to imprisonment with hard labor, on one charge, for two months, and on another for three. This was in Mr. Sifton's time. As soon as Mr. Oliver succeeded to the charge of the ministry of the interior, Wagner was put back in his old position at an increased rate of pay. He seems to have been useful to the Liberal party at election times, and this alone can be held to account for the favor he received. In his election activities he was breaking a rule of Government laid down by the Prime Minister, to the effect that a public employee might vote, but should not actively share in an election campaign. Wagner is alleged to have been especially active in getting out the Galician vote in the recent Alberta elections. There is a double charge against him. It is in connection with his prison record, however, that the real objection to him lies. It is not desirable that an offence expiated by duly administered punishment shall be continuously remembered against a man. It is less desirable, though, as the Montreal Gazette very aptly points out, that a paid officer of the Government, who has been convicted of using his position to rob ignorant immigrants, should be put back where it will be in his power to repeat his offence. For having so put Wagner back the Government is to be condemned. Moreover, it is not the first case of the kind. There were the Thessalon post office case and the Nixon land agency case on practically similar lines, the main difference being that in them the Government was the sufferer, while in this Edmonton instance the Government's wards were the losers by the official's improper acts. It is a degradation of the public service that such conduct should be encouraged, as it has been in the instances referred to. Under the Laurier administration at Ottawa things as rotten as any that helped to ruin Ross at Toronto are being regularly perpetrated and as regularly defended by ministers and their supporters in Parliament. Long continued success seems to create in the ministerial mind an idea that the decent opinion of the country can be disregarded. It is an evil idea resulting in evil work, but surely bringing those who indulge in it to destruction.

The lowest birth-rate in any first quarter of a year since civil registration was established was recorded during the first three months of the present year, according to the quarterly return of marriages, births, and deaths in England and Wales. The actual number of births during this period was 237,396, in the proportion of 27.9 annually per 1,000 of the population. In the ten preceding first quarters the mean rate was 29.2. While the birth-rate has fallen so heavily it is a remarkable fact that, owing to an even greater decline in the death-rate, the natural increase of population in England and Wales during the quarter was 96,934, as compared with 96,758, 87,166, and 89,740 in the first quarters of 1903, 1904, and 1905 respectively.

THISTLES AND DANDRUFF.

An Interesting Parallel And a Valuable Deduction Therefrom.

Cutting down thistles no more relieves the land of thistles than does scouring the scalp cure dandruff. In each case permanent relief can only come from eradicating permanently the cause. A germ that plows up the scalp in searching for the hair root where it saps the vitality, causes dandruff, falling hair, and baldness. If you kill that germ, you'll have no dandruff but a luxuriant suit of hair. Newbro's Herpicide is the only hair preparation in the world that cures dandruff and falling hair by killing the germ. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect."

For Coughs

We know a remedy over sixty years old. Thousands of people have never been without it during all those years. Once in the family, it stays; the one household remedy for coughs and colds. The more you consult your doctor about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, the better for you, and the better for us as well. Ask him all about it.

We have no secrets! We publish the formulas of all our medicines! J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets Will Make her Pleasant

Many a woman is irritable, melancholy and hard to live with, just because she is run-down in health. Or perhaps she is suffering from something peculiar to her sex.

Such a woman should get sympathy not blame.

It is really remarkable, however, how soon Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets will make a change in such a woman.

Mrs. D. McDonald, 12 Outremont Terrace, Montreal, says:
"Shortly after taking them I forgot I had any nerves."
Mrs. James Arthur, North Rustico, P.E.I., says:
"Since commencing their use I feel more buoyant, more vitality."

We might go on indefinitely citing the words of those who have had the old time spirits and vigor restored by this remarkable twentieth century preparation for women.

Talks on Orange Meat

No. 3

(The Pure Food)

Popping Corn and Popping Wheat

Ever pop corn? Take a handful of tiny grains—heat them over the fire—and you have "about a peck" of pop-corn.

Corn is pretty nearly all carbo-hydrates, or starch. And it would take a lot of chewing to break up all the tiny cells so that the starch could be acted on by saliva in the mouth and be converted into sugars. Heat does it better than chewing.

Wheat is 75% carbohydrates. Like popcorn, the tough cell walls in wheat are broken by heat. That is why we cook the wheat in making ORANGE MEAT. It goes in huge steam cookers under 20 pounds steam pressure. Steam and moisture soften the cell tissues—the heat causes the starch to swell and burst the cells—the carbohydrates are free. That is why Dyspeptics, Rheumatics and all who can't eat "starchy" foods, may enjoy ORANGE MEAT. By adding malt, all the starch is converted into wheat sugar.

Orange Meat

Orange Meat weighs 1/3 more than any other package. 15c. and 25c. a package. At all grocers. Mercerized paper lining of the cartons insure Orange Meat being always fresh, crisp and clean. 15c. pkg. contains a coupon, good for premiums. 25c. size contains 2 1/2 times as much as 15c. size. Write "Orange Meat, Kingston," for new premium catalogue.

DRS. KENNEDY & KERGAN

148 SHELBY STREET, DETROIT, MICH.

The "Arctic" Expedition.

SPEECH OF MR. W. B. NORTHRUP, M.P., IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON THE ABOVE SUBJECT.

But the Montcalm had an officers' quarters, and naturally, those who occupied these quarters required something particularly good for themselves. So, they bought two ice-pitchers and paid $40 for them, and two trays and paid $46. They were also provided with two cruets at an expense of $12, and a coffee pot at an expense of $7, and a teapot for $6. I suppose these were provided for off-days, or days when the sea was rough and the dishes likely to be broken. And, that the table might be perfectly clear; and, that there might be no question of switching off the crumbs with a napkin, a crumb scoop, brush and tray at $9.25 would not do so badly. Requiring fruit stands, they provided two of them at $22.50. There was also a bread tray and knife. I have forgotten what the other one cost, but this one was only $6.75. The other soup tureen was not good enough for them, so they bought one for themselves, and paid—that is the country paid—$23.25 for it.

It might be said that there was something exceptional about the Montcalm, that perhaps, the men aboard the Montcalm incurred greater danger than others and so had to be more carefully provided for. But the Champlain was also an ice-breaker and upon her money was squandered in the same way. Let me give you, Mr. Chairman, a few specimen bricks. There were twelve English dessert forks, chased on one side, at $22. This vessel also had an ice pitcher, but only paid $20 for it. She had a tray at $14, but this was not good enough for every occasion, and so a tray of an oval pattern was provided fokr, at a cost of $20. There were two sugars—I suppose that means sugar bowels not lumps of sugar—at $12; two entree dishes — a very appropriate thing—for which the country paid $40. There were two sugars and creams at $10 and two side dishes at $24.25.

I am giving these figures to show that what I said in the early part of my remarks was well founded—that there was nothing in the expenditure of the Arctic that should cause the blush of shame to mantle the brow of the Department of the Interior. But, if any hon. gentleman wants the height of extravagance that even a Department of Marine and Fisheries may attain, let him not think that it is referred to in these figures, but let him study the history and accounts of that precious little private yacht, the Maisonneuve.

Mr. Northrup. The leader of the Opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) placed in my hands before he left a statement which I believe was handed to him by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, purporting to be a copy of a requisition sent by Captain Bernier to the Department, of goods needed for the expedition and under which purchases were made. I have not had the opportunity of examining this at all fully, for it is only a few minutes since it came into my hands. But assuming that it is correct, I would call attention to one or two points. The statement was made by the Minister this afternoon that the Department had purchased these supplies relying on the requisition of Captain Bernier. The First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has suggested—and I think properly—that it would be a justification of the Ministers if they had followed in good faith the requisition of the gentleman commanding the expedition. But on hurriedly examining this requisition of Captain Bernier I find no requisition for fur bags. Some woollen bags are asked for. One of the items that struck us as rather extravagant was the payment of $3,025 to Hamilton, of Montreal, for fur bags and of $2,000 to Woods, of Ottawa, for the same. The Auditor-General's report shows a total payment by the Government of $5,000 for fur bags, while none were asked for by Captain Bernier. Then as to the fur coats, I am not an expert in furs, but I am inclined to believe that there is no mention in the requisition for fur goods of the kind actually provided. The only reference to fur goods in the requisition is forty reindeer suits and forty others. I doubt if the requisition for eighty suits would involve an expenditure of anything like the amount spent by the Government for different fur coats. There is a requisition for 2,200 pounds of tobacco by Captain Bernier, which was fulfilled by the Government providing 4,208 pounds. I do not find in Captain Bernier's requisition any reference to cigars, but the Government purchased for this expedition 8,500 cigars. The requisition for some lime juice I said early in the evening seemed to me very proper, but this requisition was was complied with by the Government purchasing 1,200 gallons of lime juice where 300 gallons were asked for. There is no requisition for cigarettes, but 5,000 were purchased by the Government. Captain Bernier's requisition called for 5,000 pounds of canned soup. The Government complied with this by buying 9,500 pounds of bovril, 20 dozen of soup and bouillon at $2.50, and 160 dozen of ox-tail soup at $1.75. I have no doubt that on a fuller investigation I shall find other similar items. But, even on this cursory glance, I think I am justified in saying that if the Minister thinks that his Department complied with the requisition of Captain Bernier he is misinformed. It is only just to Captain Bernier to say this. Whatever the result of the investigation, I think it is abundantly clear from the figures that I have given that the Department did not actually follow Captain Bernier's requisition, and that if they had done so they would have bought a much smaller quantity of provisions than they actually did buy.

Mr. Brodeur. I am informed that the list which has been given covers only the provisions.

Mr. Northrup. And the clothing, too.

Mended It.

"I have never given you credit for knowing very much, madam," said a blunt old bachelor, "but"—

"Sir!" she interrupted. "Do you wish to insult"—

"But," he continued, "I have always admired your grace and beauty."

"I accept your apology," said the lady.

SAFETY.

Never in all the history of transportation has travel been safer than it is to-day. Seated in perfect comfort in any of the mile-a-minute trains of the Lake Shore Railway you are in less danger by far than was your grandfather in the lumbering six-mile-an-hour stage of a half or three-quarters of a century ago. Trains over this line are protected and guarded in a way that is but little short of marvellous. Every device that skill or money can provide is used without regard to the expense and in spite of the high speed—the fastest in the world—you are as safe here as in your own home. Combined with safety and high speed are luxurious comfort and punctuality, all combined to make a service unequaled the world over. See that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief Ass't G. P. A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. Little Bell Biographies

Mozart

WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART, though but 35 years old at his death, left a name second only to Bach's. He was born in 1756 and died in 1791. He was the first "infant prodigy" of the musical world, and his career proves the necessity of having good music in the home for the making of a musician.

When the merest child, Mozart would always be found at the clavier picking out sweet little melodies. When four he was placed under a teacher and even then composed short pieces which astonished his parents and instructor. At seven he played so wonderfully that he made a concert tour of Europe. Before he was ten he had written six sonatas, one composition for full orchestra, and an oratorio. At twelve he wielded the conductor's baton. Of his many compositions the most popular are his opera, "The Magic Flute," and his "Requiem," the latter sung by some friends and himself as his eyes closed in death.

As a pianist Mozart was the originator of the concert tour, and as great in his day as Paderewski in ours. But, like Bach, he was handicapped by the instrument he used—the clavier. How wonderful had been his music if he could only have played upon

THE NOBLE SIX HUNDRED.

(Exchange.)

(Another one of the noble Six Hundred has just died.)

They were a noble band of fellows in that charge,
No finer brand of fighters if you took 'em by and large,
The pesky Russian gunners did in vain essay to kill 'em.
But didn't hurt 'em greatly, tho' with shot they seemed to fill 'em.

They've been a long time dying; there cannot be many left;
This world won't seem itself when of the last we are bereft,
Some thousands now have passed away, there can't be many more,
The noble old Six Hundred who once soaked in Russian gore,
They lived full long and prospered and we do not really know
What made 'em seem so many since that battle long ago,

But we have a sort of notion that the chap who called the roll
On the Plains of Balaclava was a sort of waggish soul,
Either he'd a stock of humor of an extra large amount,
Or he lacked in mathematics and could not correctly count.

Then we have another notion, and we shouldn't really wonder,
If they'd lost a pair of ciphers, making thus a printer's blunder,
And instead of just 600, as the ancient story runs,
Sixty thousand seasoned troopers charged those blazing Russian guns!

Great public interest is being manifested in the case of a man who has been prosecuted for sneezing in a public street. The hero of the incident is one Johann Furtmann, a resident of Muhlhausen, a small town in Prussian Saxony, Furtmann, who is highly respected by his fellow-citizens, sneezed somewhat loudly in the main street at Muhlhausen. A policeman arrested him on a charge of creating a disturbance. The local police authorities prosecuted Furtmann, on a charge of gross misdemeanor and rendering himself a public nuisance After a lengthy trial Furtmann was acquitted. The police authorities appealed against the decision, and a new trial is necessary. Furtmann announces that he will call medical evidence to prove that a polypus in the nose prevented him sneezing less loudly than was the case when the arrest occurred

A Jamaican inventor has constructed a remarkable combination lock that seems likely to defy the most expert lock-picker. The combination is arranged in four sets of letters twenty-four letters in each, and each letter represented by a figure. It can be set to a sentence in almost any modern language, one letter being taken from one stem from another, and so on. The person who would open the lock must first know what letter such figure represents and then what language the sentence, is in. The "Scientific American" considers that one trying to pick the lock would have to work over 96,000,000 years at the rate of sixty numbers a minute before arriving at the correct combination.

The following, from the Vancouver Province, Liberal, shows that things must have been pretty bad in the Yukon under Grit rule: "In looking over the past ten years of administration in Yukon, the conclusion is forced upon any impartial mind that all, or nearly all, the evils which have afflicted that country have sprung from its domination by officials who received their appointment from Ottawa. There has existed an unending strife between the people and their rulers, and it would be difficult to discover an occasion when the rulers were not in the wrong. There is a settled conviction in the minds, not only of the people of the Yukon, but of the whole Dominion, that the administration was under the strictest party compact, and had for its aim the pillage of the country."

Mrs. Green, of East James street, has proven what Anti-Pill can and will do.

"I think Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill is the best medicine I have ever known," says Mrs. A. V. Green. "For years I have suffered with constipation, and I got so bad at last that no ordinary dose of medicine would help me. I suffered with piles a great deal.

"I am a working woman and always very busy, and I got nothing to help me till I tried Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill. I found this a very satisfactory remedy and can cheerfully recommend it to any who may be suffering as I did."

Right at home here in Belleville is this case, and Mrs. Green will cheerfully testify to anyone in earnest what she knows of Anti-Pill, the Twentieth Century Cure for Constipation.

KEEN SENSE OF HUMOR.

(Washington Star.)

"There's nothing like a sense of humor," said Rear Admiral Buhler at Atlantic City. "In a woman, in a soldier, in a sailor, in a clerk, a sense of humor is a help and a blessing through life.

'At the same time, even a sense of humor may exist in excess. I, for my part, shouldn't care to have so great a sense of humor as a British soldier I once heard about.

'This soldier was ordered to be flogged. During the flogging he laughed continually. The lash was laid on all the harder, but under the rain of blows the soldier laughed like a man at an R. H. Davis farce.

'What are you laughing at?' the Sergeant finally asked.

"Why," the soldier chuckled, 'I'm the wrong man."

Platform Reading and Musical Recitals.

MISS ALICE STORY WINS GOLD MEDAL — CHARMING RECITAL AT ALBERT COLLEGE.

Massey Hall at Albert College was filled to the utmost last evening, it being the annual contest recital in platform reading for the prize in gold donated by Mr. S. Russell.

The contestants, Misses Leafa Johnson, Margaret Saunders, Jessie Tuite Dora Spencer and Alice Story, pupils of the department of expression were at their best and the readings showed careful training and preparation. They were assisted by pupils of the departments of music and physical culture.

Dr. Dyer occupied the chair and after explaining the origin and rules of the contest, called upon Messrs. Rev Amos Campbell, Nathaniel Vermilyea and W. R. Aylesworth to act as judges. Their decision in favor of Miss Alice Story was received with applause.

Special mention should also be made of Miss Jessie Tuite, whose performance was most creditable.

MISS LaVOIE'S PUPILS ENTERTAIN.

The Piano Recital at Albert College at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon was of great interest, and not a few lovers of music found their way to the temple of learning on the hill to enjoy the rendition of their favorite music by the younger pupil of the school.

Manitoba Elections Probable.

COMING CAMPAIGN IS NOW BEING ARRANGED—LUMBER MARKET CONDITIONS.

Winnipeg, Man., June 23.—(Special)—Everything indicates that Premier Roblin will shortly appeal to the country, retiring from office before the term of the present Legislature expires. W. H. Hastings, who successfully organized the Conservative party in 1896, when they were returned to power after sitting in the Opposition benches for some seventeen years, has resigned his position in the office of the Attorney-General and is quietly arranging the coming campaign. It is understood that Mr. Roblin will dispense with the services of Hon. Colin H. Campbell, the Attorney-General, it being admitted by both parties that he has not filled the office with success. Another rumor, emanating from a source which has always proved reliable, is to the effect that the Government will guarantee the bonds of an American company now being formed for the purpose of building a line due north from this city to Hudson's Bay, this being the main plank of the Conservative party in the coming campaign.

LUMBER MAY ADVANCE FURTHER IN PRICE.

Winnipeg, Man., June 23.—(Special)—The recent rise in the price of lumber is being much discussed throughout the province and in the interior generally. A prominent lumberman, in talking over the situation recently said the advance is simply and inevitably the result of the market. Less money is being made in lumber to-day than in 1903, and the price of supplies is now higher and labor has also increased. One point that is the direct result of the development which has taken place since then is that it takes three donkey engines to do the work that was done in 1903 by six horses, the distance from which the logs have to be brought to water being so much greater now than then. At present, too, most of the mill men are shipping green logs and the freight on green lumber is nearly $2 per ton more than on the seasoned lumber, on account of the additional weight. Even at the present prices the supply is far short of the demand. The output from the interior this year is short, because of the small amount of snow which fell during the winter, preventing much logging being done. However, the summer logging in the interior is being carried on in a more extensive way than ever before, but the demand is so great that another increase in price is quite likely during the next few weeks. This year there is at least twice as much building being done in the Northwest as in any previous year and, added to that, San Francisco builders are sending representatives to the British Columbia mills to buy up all the available supply.

Growing Boys and Girls

While it is very gratifying to parents to see their boys and girls grow rapidly, it should not be forgotten that this is a very critical period. There is danger that they may outgrow their strength; there is also danger that the development may not be uniform, that one part of the system is being built up at the expense of the rest, that the bone may not be developing properly, that nerve and brain may lack tone or the muscle may be soft and flabby.

To ensure proper, all round development it is absolutely necessary that the food should be entirely suitable and contain the elements necessary to develop every part of the system.

The ideal food for this purpose is which contains, in proper proportions, the very essentials of life and development, viz: Fat, Iron and Phosphorus. Fat to develop flesh and muscle; Iron for the blood; Phosphorus for the bone, nerve and brain.

If you want your boys and girls to have strong lungs, robust frames, well developed muscles, strong nerves, vigorous brains and rosy cheeks give them FERROL. They will like it, and FERROL never fails.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

LACROSSE.

Souris Lacrosse Team for Montreal.

Souris, Man., June 23.—The Souris lacrosse team, champions of the Northwest, leave on the 28th for Montreal, where they will tackle the Shamrocks in a series of games for the Minto Cup. The local team is practically invincible in this part of Canada and includes some of the best players ever seen west of the Great Lakes. From the form they have shown this season it is expected they will make a very creditable showing in the east, and many feel confident they will return with the much coveted cup.

A MAGNIFICIENT EXHIBIT.

THE G.T.R. TRAVELLING EXHIBITION CAR ATTRACTS MANY VSIITORS.

The announcement made in The Intelligencer yesterday that the Grand Trunk Railway exhibition car would be on view in Belleville today attracted a large number of visitors to this novel and pleasing exhibit. The car was brought down town and was left near the post office. The scores of visitors who passed through the car were delighted with this miniature picture gallery on wheels. Every detail of the arrangement of the interior is planned to enhance the charms of the views and the attractiveness of the fish and game display.

On panels along the sides of the car are prints showing forth the scenic beauties of Georgian Bay, Quebec, Trail of the Red Deer, Temagami Forest Reserve, Among the 5,000 Islands of Georgian Bay, Algonquin National Park, New England and the Sea, St. Anne de Bellevue, 1,000 Islands and the Rideau, Kawartha Lakes, Simcoe and Couchiching, Muskoka Lakes—"Highlands of Ontario," Lake of Bays, French River. There is also a panel full of pictures of the fine train equipment and "flyers" of the system.

In addition to these superb pictures were trout, bass, pike and salmon skins of the sort the angler dreams of, displayed upon wooden plaques; partridges and a royal moose-head—all actual specimens of the sport which awaits the tourist who goes to the happy hunting grounds made accessible by the Grand Trunk Railway. Instead of ordinary windows the sashes of the car are filled by alluring photographs of Canadian scenes.

This car has just completed a three months' tour of 6,000 miles through the Southern States and the Mississippi Valley after entertaining an audience of over 50,000 persons. It is now on its way home via Buffalo, stopping at the larger towns, and will take a rest in Montreal preparatory to another tour through the States showing all the beauties and attractions of the Dominion.

Mr. R. McC. Smith Southern, Passenger Agent at Detroit, Mich., is in charge of the exhibit, which is in all respects a credit to the country and to the Grand Trunk Railway.

Former Bellevillian Married.

A pretty wedding occurred at Winnipeg, Man., on Thursday evening last when Mr. Archie Vine, formerly of Napanee, was married to Miss Nellie Cook who was at one time a resident of this city. The couple were married at their new home, 481 Yonge street, where they are now residing.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that By-law No. 1288 was passed by the Municipal Council of the Corporation of the City of Belleville, on the 18th day of June, A.D., 1906, providing for the issue of debentures to the amount of Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) for the purpose of improving and extending the plant of the Belleville Gas Works System, and that such By-law was registered in the Registry Office of the County of Hastings on the 23rd day of June, A.D., 1906.

Any motion to quash or set aside the same or any part thereof must be made within three months after the first publication of this Notice, which was the 23rd day of June, A.D., 1906, and cannot be made thereafter.

A Man's Strange Actions

Last night about 9 o'clock it was reported to the police that a man was lying across the Grand Trunk Railway track in rear of Mr. Graham's building on Station road. An officer visited the place but no trace of the party could be found. It was surmised that the man was either intoxicated or his mind was deranged.

The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of "The Gentleman From Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

any one of 'em again! But I love 'em, I do, the charming Billies! And you'll see how they follow me!" She patted the girl's shoulder, her small eyes beaming quizzically. "We'll have the gayest house in Rouen, ladybird! The young men all go to the Bareauds', but they'll come here now, and we'll have the Bareauds along with 'em. I've been away a long time; just finished unpacking yesterday night when your father came in after the fire. Whee! What a state he was in, with that temper of his! Didn't I snap him up when he asked me to come and stay with you? Ha, ha! I'd have come even if you hadn't been beautiful, but I was wild to be your playmate, for I'd heard nothing but 'Miss Betty Carewe, Miss Betty Carewe,' from everybody I saw since the minute my stage came in. You set 'em all mad at your ball, and I knew we'd make a glorious houseful, you and I! Some of the vagabonds will turn up this very evening, you'll see if they don't. Ha, ha! The way they follow me!"

Mrs. Tanberry was irresistible. She filled the whole place otherwise than by the mere material voluminousness of her, bubbling over with froth of nonsense which flew through the house, driven by her energy, like sea foam on a spring gale, and the day, so discordantly begun for Miss Betty, grew musical with her own laughter, answering the husky staccato of the vivacious newcomer. Nelson waited upon them at table, radiant, his smile like the keyboard of an ebony piano, and his disappearances into the kitchen were accomplished by means of a surreptitious double shuffle and followed by the cachinnating echoes of the vain Mamie's reception of the visitor's sallies, which Nelson hastily retailed in passing.

Nor was Mrs. Tanberry's prediction allowed to go unfulfilled regarding the advent of those persons whom she had designated as vagabonds. It may have been out of deference to Mr. Carewe's sense of decorum or from a cautious regard of what he was liable to do when he considered that sense outraged that the gallants of Rouen had placed themselves under the severe restraint of allowing three days to elapse after their introduction to Miss Carewe before they "paid their respects at the house;" but, be that as it may, the dictator was now safely under way down the Rouen river, and Mrs. Tanberry reigned in his stead. Thus, at about 8 o'clock that evening, the two ladies sat in the library engaged in conversation, though, for the sake of accuracy, it should be said that Mrs. Tanberry was engaged in conversation, Miss Betty in giving ear, when their attention was arrested by sounds of a somewhat musical nature from the lawn, which sounds were immediately identified as emanating from a flute and violin.

Mrs. Tanberry bounded across the room like a public building caught by a cyclone, and, dashing at the candles, "Blow 'em out, blow 'em out!" she exclaimed, suiting the action to the word in a fluster of excitement.

"Why?" asked Miss Carewe, startled, as she rose to her feet. The candles were out before the question.

"Why!" repeated the merry, husky voice in the darkness. "My goodness, child precious, those vagabonds are here! To think of your never having been serenaded before!"

She drew the girl to the window and pointed to a group of dim figures near the lilac bushes. "The dear, delightful vagabonds!" she chuckled. "I knew they'd come! It's the beautiful Tappingham Marsh with his fiddle and young Jeff Bareaud with his flute and 'Gene Madrillon and little Frank Chenoweth and thin Will Cummings to sing. Hark to the rascals!"

It is perfectly truthful to say that the violin and flute executed the prelude, and then the trio sounded full on the evening air, the more effective chords obligingly drawn out as long as the breath in the singers could hold them in order to allow the two fair auditors complete benefit of the harmony. They sang "The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls" and followed it with "Long, Long Ago."

"That," Mrs. Tanberry whispered between stifled gusts of almost uncontrollable laughter, "is meant for just me."

"Tell me the tales that to me were so dear," entreated the trio.

"I told 'em plenty," gurgled the enlivening widow, "and I expect between us we can get up some more."

"Now you are come my grief is removed," they sang.

"They mean your father is on his way to St. Louis," remarked Mrs. Tanberry.

"Let me forget that so long you have roved,
Let me believe that you love as you loved
Long, long ago, long ago."

"Applaud, applaud!" whispered Mrs. Tanberry, encouraging the minstrels by a hearty clapping of hands.

Then the candles were relit and the serenaders invited within. Nelson came bearing cake and wine, and the house was made merry. Presently the romp, Virginia Bareaud, making her appearance on the arm of General Trumble, Mrs. Tanberry led them all in a hearty game of blind man's buff, followed by as hearty a dancing of Dan Tucker. After that, a quadrille being proposed, Mrs. Tanberry suggested that Jefferson should run home and bring Fanchon for the fourth lady. However, Virginia explained that she had endeavored to persuade both her sister and Mr. Gray to accompany the general and herself, but that Mr. Gray had complained of indisposition, having suffered greatly from headache on account of inhaling so much smoke at the warehouse fire, and, of course, Fanchon would not leave him. (Miss Carewe permitted herself the slightest shrug of the shoulders.)

So they danced the quadrille with Jefferson at the piano and Mr. Marsh performing in the character of a lady, a proceeding most unacceptable to the general, whom Mrs. Tanberry forced to be his partner. And thus the evening passed gayly away. Tappingham Marsh spoke the truth, indeed, when he exclaimed in parting, "Oh, rare Mrs. Tanberry!"

But the house had not done with serenades that night. The guests had long since departed; the windows were still and dark under the wan old moon, which had risen lamely, looking unfamiliar and not half itself; the air bore an odor of lateness, and nothing moved, when a delicate harmony stole out of the shadows beyond the misty garden. Low but resonant chords sounded on the heavier strings of a guitar, while above them, upon the lighter wires, rippled a slender, tinkling melody that wooed the slumberer to a delicious half wakefulness as dreamily, as tenderly as the croon of rain on the roof soothes a child to sleep. Under the artist's cunning touch the instrument was both the accompaniment and the song, and Miss Betty, at first taking the music to be a wandering thread in the fabric of her own bright dreams, drifted gradually to consciousness to find herself smiling. Her eyes opened wide, but half closed again with the ineffable sweetness of the sound.

Then a voice was heard, eerily low, yet gallant and clear, a vibrant baritone, singing to the guitar:

"My lady's hair,
That dark delight,
Is both as fair
And dusk as night.
I know some lovelorn hearts that beat
In time to moonbeam twinklings fleet,
That dance and glance like jewels there,
Emblazoning the raven hair.

"Ah, raven hair,
So dark and bright!
What love lies there
Enmeshed tonight?
I know some sighing lads that say
Their hearts were snared and torn away,
And now as pearls one fate they share
Entangled in the raven hair.

"Ah, raven hair,
From such a plight
Could you not spare
One acolyte?
I knew a broken heart that went
To serve you but as ornament.
Alas, a ruby now you wear,
Ensanguining the raven hair!"

The song had grown fainter and fainter, the singer moving away as he sang, and the last lines were almost inaudible in the distance. The guitar could be heard for a moment or two more, then silence came again. It was broken by a rustling in the room next to Miss Betty's, and Mrs. Tanberry called softly through the open door:

"Princess, are you awake? Did you hear that serenade?"

After a pause the answer came hesitatingly in a small, faltering voice: "Yes—if it was one. I thought perhaps he was only singing as he passed along the street."

"Aha!" ejaculated Mrs. Tanberry abruptly, as though she had made an unexpected discovery. "You knew better, and this was a serenade that you did not laugh at. Beautiful, I wouldn't let it go any further, even while your father is gone. Something might occur that would bring him home without warning. Such things have happened. Tom Vanrevel ought to be kept far away from this house."

"Oh, it was not he," returned Miss Betty quickly. "It was Mr. Gray. Did not you"—

"My dear," interrupted the other, "Crailey Gray's specialty is talking. Most of the vagabonds can sing and play a bit, and so can Crailey, particularly when he's had a few bowls of punch, but when Tom Vanrevel touches the guitar and lifts up his voice to sing there isn't an angel in heaven that wouldn't quit the place and come to hear him! Crailey wrote those words to Virginia Bareaud. (Her hair is even darker than yours, you know.) That was when he was being engaged to her, and Tom must have set the music to 'em lately and now comes here to sing 'em to you, and well enough they fit you. But you must keep him away, princess."

Nevertheless Betty knew the voice was not that which had bid her look to the stars, and she remained convinced that it belonged to Mr. Crailey Gray, who had been too ill a few hours earlier to leave the Bareaud house, and now, with Fanchon's kisses on his lips, came stealing into her garden and sang to her a song he had made for another girl.

So they danced the quadrille.

If there was one person in the world whom Miss Betty held in bitter contempt and scorn, it was the owner of that voice and that guitar.

CHAPTER X.

MORE than three gentlemen of Rouen wore their hearts in their eyes for any fool to gaze upon, but three was the number of those who told their love before the end of the first week of Mr. Carewe's absence, and told it in spite of Mrs. Tanberry's utmost effort to preserve, at all times, a conjunction between herself and Miss Betty.

Miss Carewe honored each of the lorn three with a few minutes of gravity, but the gentle refusal prevented never a swain from being as truly her follower as before, not that she resorted to the poor device of half dismissal, the everyday method of the schoolgirl flirt, who thus keeps the lads in dalliance, but because, even for the rejected, it was a delight to be near her. For that matter, it is said that no one ever had enough of the mere looking at her. Also, her talk was enlivening even to the lively, being spiced with surprising turns and amiably seasoned with the art of badinage. To use the phrase of the time, she possessed the accomplishments, an antiquated charm now on the point of disappearing, so carefully has it been snubbed under whenever exhibited.

She sketched magnificently. This is the very strongest support for the assertion: Frank Chenoweth and Tappingham Marsh agreed, with tears of enthusiasm, that "magnificently" was the only word. They came to this conclusion as they sat together at the end of a long dinner, at which very little had been eaten, after a day's picnic by the river. Miss Carewe had been of their company, and Tappingham and Chenoweth found each his opportunity in the afternoon. The party was small and no one had been able to effect a total unconsciousness of the maneuvers of the two gentlemen. Even Fanchon Bareaud comprehended languidly, though she was more blurred than ever, and her faraway eyes belied the mechanical vivacity of her manner, for

No range can bake so well as the Imperial Oxford, because no other range has the Diffusive Oven Flue that draws in pure air constantly, heats it just as hot as you want it heated, and sends it through every part of the whole oven every second. That flue, found only in this perfect range, keeps that heated pure air—DRY air—constantly moving DOWNWARD through the oven, over the baking food, and out up the chimney. When it enters the oven it's hot and dry; when it leaves it, it's wet air,—carries with it all the moisture, all the odors, but NONE of the juices of the food that's being baked.

Please visit any of our stores and see why this is the right range for your kitchen.

Clothes of the Hour

To be of the world—a part of it, a man must be in step with the times.

Clothes are one of the most important factors in the make up of the Twentieth Century Man.

With the traditions and customs, to which so many makers of Clothes for Men still cling, we have no concern.

We're Clothiers Of To-day

In our Spring and Summer Suits are incorporated every knack, vagary and trend of fashion in Single and Double Breasted Models.

The fabrics are new and come in a diversity of color schemes and weaves. Smooth surface and undressed Worsteds, Cheviots in plain or fancy designs, Cassimeres in new tones and effects.

Suits, $5, 6, 8, 10, 12 to $20

Men's Toggery

We've oftentimes shown exceptional and unusually fine lines of Men's Haberdashery, but we're confident that our display this spring eclipse all our previous efforts.

MANY OF OUR STYLES ARE EXCLUSIVE

It matters not what you may want in the way of Shirts, Ties, Collars, Gloves, Underwear, Hosiery, Hats or Caps, we can fill your mind's eye and please your purse.

Fish Drink Whiskey; Become Enebriated.

THIRTEEN THOUSAND GALLONS OF LIQUOR CAUSE TROUBLE IN SMALL CREEK.

Frankfort, Ky., June 21. — Farmers along the banks of Benson Creek have been gathering in baskets and catching with their hands thousands of live fish that were rendered temporarily hors de combat by the breaking of the flake stand at the Fitzgerald distillery.

More than thirteen thousand gallons of pure whiskey were turned into the stream, and as a result of this accident the fish were made drunk. In droves they came to the surface sported around and cut the most fantastic capers.

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

"I suffered for five years with kidney and liver trouble, which caused severe pains across the back and a blinding headache. I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga Tenn. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s Drug Store.

LOW SUMMER TOURIST RATES WEST.

During the entire summer the Chicago and North Western Ry. will have in effect very low round trip tourist rates to Colorado, Utah, California, Oregon, Washington and British Columbia points. To-morrow's International Sunday School Lesson.

REVIEW SUNDAY—GOLDEN TEXT IS "NEVER MAN SPOKE LIKE THIS BEFORE."

The teacher will find it an advantage to have several forms of review suggested. Among these the one should be selected that seems best adapted to the age and needs of the class. In many cases, doubtless, it will be found a good method to combine two or more of the following plans:

I.—THE "ADJECTIVE" REVIEW.

Ask the scholars to select, at home, the most appropriate adjective they can find for each character of every lesson. The lists will be compared in each class, and the best adjective in each case will be chosen for a model list; sometimes it will be best to select for this final list more than one adjective for certain characters. The model list may read somewhat as follows:

Lesson IV.—Jesus—merciful (or loving, or just). The Pharisee—proud (or harsh.)

Lesson IX.—Jesus— bountiful. Disciples—wondering. People— grateful. The lad—helpful.

II.—"FROM MOUNT TO MOUNT" REVIEW.

The title alludes to the fact that our lessons began with the Horns of Hattin (the Sermon on the Mount) and closed with Mt. Hermon (the transfiguration). Get the scholars to write at home summaries of the quarter's history, each lesson in fifty words. "Give them for this purpose little blank books, and ask them to use "From Mount to Mount" as the title, and begin each of the twelve chapters on a new page. In the class one will read chapter one of his book, the next chapter two of his, and so on. Thus you may have time to go over the review more than once, using new chapters each time.

III. — THE "LIFE-SUMMARY" REVIEW.

It will clarify the minds of the scholars to go back to the beginning and construct a chart showing the principal events in Christ's life up to the transfiguration. This chart the teacher may form before the class, then cover it, and ask the scholars to reconstruct it, in writing, on the spot. (Stephens and Burton are followed.)

I.—Thirty Years of Private Life.
5 B.C. to the summer of 26 A.D.
Birth. In Egypt. In the temple.

II.—Opening Events of His Ministry.

Summer, 26 A.D., to Passover, spring, 27 A.D.

John the Baptist. Baptism. Temptation. First disciples. First miracle.

III.—Early Judean Ministry.

Spring, 27 A.D., to December, 27 A.D.

Temple cleansed. Nicodemus. At Sychar.

IV.—First Period of the Galilean Ministry.

December, 27 A.D., to early summer, 28 A.D.

John in prison. Rejected at Nazareth. First preaching tour.

V.—Second Period of the Galilean Ministry.

Early summer, 28 A.D., to Passover, spring, 29 A.D.

The Twelve chosen.
Sermon on the Mount (Lesson 1.)
Jesus and the Sabbath. (Lesson 2.)
Second preaching tour.
Widow's son at Nain. (Lesson 3.)
In Simon's house (Lesson 4.)
Parables by the sea. (Lessons 5, 6.)
Gadarene demoniacs (Lesson 7.)
Third preaching tour.
Twelve sent forth.
John the Baptist killed. (Lesson 8.)
Feeding of the five thousand. (Lesson 9.)

VI.—Third Period of the Galilean Ministry.

From the Passover, spring, 29 A.D., to November, 29 A.D.

The Syrophencian woman. (Lesson 9.)
Four thousand fed.
Peter's confession. (Lesson 11.)
The transfiguration. (Lesson 12.)

IV.—THE "MIRACLE AND PARABLES" REVIEW.

Most of our quarter's lessons are either miracles or parables. Give each scholar a copy of the following list of questions;

1—What was the miracle (or parable?)

2.—What does it show of Christ's character?

3.—What lesson had it for Christ's immediate hearers?

4.—What lesson has it, for us?

Ask the scholars to come prepared to answer these questions for each of the nine miracles and parables we have studied, and to apply the questions also to the other three lessons, so far as they are appropriate.

V.—THE "FAVORITE" REVIEW.

Ask the scholars to review all the lessons and come prepared to say who is their favorte of the characters studied (except Christ), and why. Also, to select their favorite deed among Christ's acts of the quarter, and their favorite saying among his words studied this quarter, giving their reasons in each case.

VI.—THE "MAP AND PEG" REVIEW.

Mount upon a board an outline map of Palestine. Make holes at the various places where our twelve lessons are located, and fit pegs to the holes. The scholars will insert the pegs in order, as each lesson is discussed, winding strings from peg to peg, to show Christ's journeys. Use a string of different color for each new journey.

VII—THE "KINGDOM" REVIEW.

This review requires much thoguht and is adapted especially to the senior department. Assign the lessons to different scholars, and request each to point out in the class the bearing of his lesson on the larger aspects of Christ's work, the progress of his kingdom.

VIII.—THE "PICTURE GALLERY" REVIEW.

This is particularly suited to the primary department. Draw on the blackboard or on a large sheet of paper a series of frames. Write in each a single word, that will serve to bring to mind a lesson of the quarter; as, "foundations," "Sabbath,' 'mother,' 'bread.' Cover each "frame" with a separate piece of paper. Remove these one by one, and ask the children to tell you what picture they see in each frame. You may need to describe the picture yourself. In that case, replace the covering and return to that picture later.

Their Silver Wedding.

A very jolly party assembled last night at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. B. Warham, Bridge street west, the occasion being the silver wedding anniversary of that popular couple. A large number of guests were present, and the tributes of good will and esteem were beautiful, numerous and costly, amply attesting the popularity of Mr. and Mrs. Warham among their many friends. The evening was pleasantly spent in games, vocal and instrumental music and social converse. Recherhce and dainty refreshments were served by Mr. Ed F. Dickens, the spread being a most tempting one. At the conclusion of the lunch the health of the bride and groom of twenty-five years was proposed and enthusiastically drunk short but pithy congratulatory speeches being made by Rev. A. M. Hubly and others, and gracefully replied to by Mr. Warham. At a seasonable hour the merry party broke up, with warm thanks to the host and hostess for a pleasant evening which would not soon be forgotten.

First Airship For Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Man., June 23.—(Special) —C. Westeryard, proprietor of the National Hotel, has ordered an airship from the Paris and New York Aerial Navigation Co. Mr. Westeryard agreed to purchase the machine with no more fuss than if he were ordering a sample box of some new brand of cigars. Upon its arrival here in a few weeks' time he intends to take little trips around the country. It is understood that the airship is being made in Paris, and from there will be shipped to New York, where it will be put together and then started on its way to Winnipeg, arriving here in September.

READY FOR SERVICE

STEAMER CASPIAN STARTS ON REGULAR RUN — MANY IMPROVEMENTS MADE TO HER—LIST OF OFFICERS — A BUSY SEASON PREDICTED BY GENERAL MANAGER HORSEY.

In many respects the steamer Caspian commences her season a new boat, and more than ever ready of acceptance of implicit faith from the excursion travelling public. After a winter's thorough overhauling in the government dry-docks portions of a new steel hull and several other additional improvements to keep up with the march of time, give her an added staunchness. She is, in truth, a neat, speedy craft.

The usual "spring cleaning" under the hands of the scrubbers' and painters' brushes, has had the desired effect in brightening and putting all in spick and span condition. As in previous years she is painted "white as a swan."

"When you take a trip on the North King or Caspian, be sure and get a meal on board," is such a familiar phrase that it seems like a proverb. Excellent cruisine of former seasons has gained for these boats an enviable reputation and a silent tribute goes up to the chief steward, J. Tilton, of Moulinette. Though he has the overseeing of the two steamers, in immediate charge on the Caspian will be H. McCrodan, Belleville

In command this year, as last season, will be Capt. Bloomfield, than whom there are few better known or more popular masters of the lake and river plying boats. The other officers will be; Mate, George Smith, Picton, chief engineer, O. J. Hickey, Kingston; second engineer, G. Sauve, Kingston; purser, Frederick Maund, Kingston.

E. E. Horsey, general manager of the L.O. & B. of Q. SS. Co., predicts a busy summer for tourist traffic on their steamers. Despite the earliness of the season, already the steamer North King has been doing a good business, and the coming of the warm days will but serve to drive city folk on the water and few more charming and thoroughly pleasing trips could be taken than that out of Rochester to the Thousand Islands and return.

A strong factor considered by people of "the Flower city," is that they may take the trip and yet not miss work. Leaving there, Saturday, they spend all Sunday on the water, see, perhaps, some of the choicest scenic bits of the fair Dominion and are returned to Uncle Sam's domains in time for business Monday morning.

Octopus and Conger Eel.

Conger eels hunt for the octopus and, when found, proceed to browse on its limbs. The octopus tries to hug the slippery, slimy conger tight, but in vain, and, finding its limbs growing less, discharges its ink in the face of the foe and, under cover of the turbid water, beats a hasty retreat. It is to escape the too pressing attention of its foes that the octopus possesses the power of changing its color to correspond with that of its surroundings.

Schoolboy Answers.

Here are some assertions from compositions by American schoolboys: "Franklin's father was a tallow chandelier." "The climate of North America is embracing." "This song is in the key of B flap." "There are five bowels—a, e, i, o and u." "The snow is painting the town white." "He lived in Cambridgepork." "Man is in the muscular gender because it denotes a male." "They went to the foolish (Polish) church." Question: "What is geography?" Answer: "Geography is round, like a ball."

Fame.

It is an indiscreet and troublesome ambition that cares so much about fame, about what the world says of us; to be always looking in the faces of others for approval; to be always anxious about the effect of what we do or say; to be always shouting to hear the echoes of our own voices.—Longfellow.

McINTOSH BROS.

LOST IN ATLAS LOAN CO

Effort to Conceal Old Loss in Continental Life.

Losing Venture in Atlas Loan Debentures Resulted in Odd Agreement and Peculiar Transactions Afterwards—Manager Woods Rebuked by Commissioner For Unsatisfactory Replies—A Little Speculation.

Toronto, June 23.—From the evidence taken in connection with the affairs of the Continental Life before the Insurance Commission yesterday morning, it appears that the company lost over $20,000 through the failure of the Atlas Loan Co. Mr. Wallace, manager of the St. Thomas concern, was a director of the insurance company, and got the other members of the management to purchase debentures and make deposits with the Atlas Loan. At the time of the failure, these amounted to about $45,000, of which a deposit of $15,000 was secured by Metropolitan Bank stock furnished by Mr. Ames. The Continental Life has received 37 per cent, of the remainder in dividends.

Does Not Show On Books.

Part of this loss does not show on the books, however, as Mr. Somers, now vice-president, took over the debentures and paid for them, but the company agreed to make good any amount he might lose on the transaction.

At 10.30 o'clock Mr. Geo. B. Wood, general manager of the Continental Life Insurance Co., went into the witness-box. Mr. Tilley took up the history of the company since it took over the Farmers' and Traders' Life Insurance Co. The amalgamation took place in 1900; both companies had done business for several years previously.

Candid About Rebating.

Mr. Wood was very candid in his evidence regarding rebates. He said that many agents gave rebates amounting to 40 or 50 per cent. of the premiums. As their commission was 65 per cent. they had about 15 to 25 per cent. of the commission left. The agents were giving away as much as 77 per cent. of their commissions. The witness declared that the giving of such rebates was a very common practice.

Mr. Tilley wanted to know if rebates were ever given at head office. The witness said if business could be secured by rebating, the head office did not refuse the offer.

Mr. Wood said that the business of the Continental Life cost 120 per cent. of the first year's premiums.

A Speculation.

The examination of Mr. Wood was continued at the afternoon session.

The Continental Life wrote a twenty-year endowment policy for $30,000 on the life of W. H. Murch, president of the Atlas Loan, St. Thomas. The beneficiary was the Atlas Loan Co., and the premium was $1,347.50, to be paid by debentures of Atlas Loan Co. so long as they were worth par on the bond market.

Witness said that the whole transaction was a little speculation on the part of Mr. Wallace, who received 40 per cent. on the first premium. The liquidator of the Atlas Loan afterwards surrendered the policy and it was paid in Atlas debentures, that is, the company surrendered it to themselves.

Mr. Wood admitted that the transaction was a species of rebating. All the company got was the interest.

The Somers transaction of Atlas debentures was then dissected.

The Salary List.

Mr. Tilley then took up the salary lists. Mr. Wood had a contract. In 1901 he received $2,000, in 1903 $2,250, in 1904 $2,500, in 1905 $2,750, in 1906 $3,000, and he has also a contract for next five years at an average of $5,000 per year. Mr. Fuller received $1,500 in 1901, $1,800 in 1902, $1,800 in 1903 and 1904, and $2,000 in 1905. He had no contract. Dr. Aiken received $1,000 per year. Hon. John Dryden received $5,000 per year.

Returning to the document closing the Atlas deal, Mr. Wood's answers were "I don't know," and such like phrases.

A Call-Down.

At this juncture Commissioner Kent became greatly annoyed at the replies of the witness. "I don't like the way the witness replies. I am bound to say that he has been playing with the commission since the start. Those 'I don't know,' 'I suppose' and 'I don't remember' are not proper answers."

The directors gave a note for the liability, each agreeing to pay one-tenth, and witness had his salary increased to enable him to pay his $1,200.

"Are any other persons on the note receiving any remuneration?"

"None whatever."

Three Denials One Affirmative.

At this juncture Judge MacTavish asked the witness if there was not another document still setting forth what the directors were to do in the case.

After thrice denying to Mr. Tilley that there was no further document or agreement, witness answered the judge's question in the affirmative.

Mr. Tilley told the witness that he had asked him if there was any other agreement and he had said there was not.

"I thought you meant with the Continental," explained the witness. "Anyway it has nothing to do with the investigation."

"We will see just how much it has to do," said Mr. Tilley, hotly. "Get me the agreement."

Mr. Fuller left for the document.

Subsidiary Companies.

Mr. Tilley took up the organization of the Ontario Securities Limited, and the Sterling Bank, two off-shoots of the Continental, in the interval.

Mr. Somers was the centre of all eyes when he came in. He handed Mr. Tilley the agreement, which was as follows:

"G. S. Somers, Esq.—I am willing that you should release the Continental Life from the agreement made in October, 1903, in regard to certain commissions on premiums."

This was signed by several directors, including the witness.

"Did you obtain these signatures?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"I did not."

"When did you sign it?"

"When I returned from Manitoba."

"When was that?"

In a Hurry.

"Last night," said Mr. Wood, and there was a ripple in the court room.

"Were the rest of the names on the document?"

"Yes."

"Where did you get it?"

"Mr. Fuller gave it to me."

Mr. Fuller took the stand.

"When did you get it?"

"Some little time ago. A few days ago, Tuesday of this week," he answered.

"Why was this agreement gone into?"

"Just to prevent the company being under the liability."

"It seems funny for these men to pay it out of their own pockets."

Owing to the wish of the commission to adjourn early, Mr. Tilley will probe the Continental Life dealings again on Monday at 10.30.

COMMISSION ON GRAIN

Will Inquire Into Question and Report to Parliament.

During Discussion of Yukon Estimates, W. F. Maclean Wins Admission From the Minister That Transportation Problem Lay at Very Foundation of the Yukon—But There Is No Move to Solve It.

Ottawa, June 23.—The House of Commons began work yesterday morning on the bill to amend the Manitoba grain act.

Hon. Mr. Fisher explained the bill, and announced that a commission will be appointed to go over the whole grain trade question and will report to Parliament next session.

Under this bill the grade known as extra Manitoba hard is abolished and the word "plump" is eliminated from the definition of Manitoba No. 1 hard.

A new grade of winter wheat is established, No. 1 Alberta red, No. 2 and No. 3, which, it is believed, will give winter wheat a better standing in the grain market.

Yukon Estimates.

The House went into Committee of Supply on the Yukon estimates. Mr. Foster suggested that the expenses of administration there should be reduced, as the cost of living had been.

Mr. Oliver said a year or so ago the staff had been cut down, reducing the Yukon expenses some $50,000.

In the afternoon, W. F. Maclean (South York) asked what effort the Government was making in regard to transportation. The decay of the Yukon was largely due to the enormous charges for transportation. Had the Government any policy? The transportation problem must be solved, if anything was to be accomplished in that territory.

Mr. Oliver admitted that the transportation problem lay at the very foundation of the Yukon. The Government appreciated the duty of doing something, but what to do was the serious question. One railroad had a complete monopoly, and as it carried freight partly through American territory, the Railway Commission was helpless.

Must Approach Problem at Once.

Mr. Maclean enquired as to whether a road could not go into the Yukon from Edmonton or from British Columbia. If the Yukon is valuable, Canada must approach this problem at once.

Mr. Paterson said that the House had provided for a railroad in 1898, but the Senate killed the bill.

Mr. Bennett: "But since then you gained control of the Senate."

Mr. Paterson: "And do you say that we were right and ought to try it again?" The Conservative party had opposed this bill. The member from South York (Mr. Maclean) had been mainly instrumental in its defeat. He was too modest to say so, but that was the fact.

Mr. Maclean said that he did not regret his action then, but what happened in 1898 was unimportant. It was now the duty of the Government to solve this problem. Every one admitted that the need was urgent. The Government must either move in the matter or admit incapacity and give way to others.

A Prisoner's Ill-Treatment.

Dr. Sproule called the attention of the Government to a grave abuse of authority by certain officers in the Yukon.

One Campbell, was unjustly accused of assault and sentenced to four months' imprisonment. He desires to make an appeal, but the clerk of the court refused to furnish him with a copy of the evidence, and justified his refusal by saying that the judge, Mr. Justice Dugas, had directed him not to give it.

Campbell applied for a writ of mandamus, but, when the transcript was given, material evidence in the defendant's favor was omitted. He applied personally and through Dr. Thompson (Yukon) to the Department of Justice, and some rather curt and discourteous replies were received from Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier suggested that the judge might be impeached, but that it was improper to discuss his rulings in the House.

W. F. Maclean (South York) said that in England the House was finding a way to discuss a miscarriage or justice.

Borden Does Not Shrink.

Two recent decisions in elections in cases were to be considered this week by the Commons. R. L. Borden said there could be no course of conduct more wrong than for a judge and clerk of the trial court to prevent a defendant from obtaining a review of a judgment against him in a criminal case. The clerk was a ministerial officer, and if guilty of this outrage should be dismissed summarily.

He did not shrink from criticizing a judge whose conduct was improper. Neither was he forbidden from commenting upon his rulings. There was an idea in this country that judges were above criticism. In England the press and people freely commented upon the courts and without any serious injury. The Premier promised attention.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster made merry again respecting the contract with Hatfield, the American rainmaker.

Railway Subsidies.

The railway subsidies were brought down by the Minister of Railways last night. They call for subsidies of $3,200 per mile up to a cost of $15,000 per mile for construction, and above that sum 50 per cent. of the cost of construction up to a maximum of $6,400 per mile. There are 43 lines to be subsidized, which cover a length of 2,835 miles, and on the basis of the minimum subsidy of $3,200 per mile represent a total of $9,320,000, including the lump subsidy of $66,800 to the Brockville, Westport & Sault Ste. Marie Railway.

Express Company Withdraws.

Ottawa, June 23.—The special committee to consider the telephone and express company amendments to the Railway Act made progress yesterday respecting express companies, but no other subject was reached as this important matter occupied the entire attention of the committee. F. H. Chrysler, K. C., appeared for the express companies and stated the clients would not further contest the jurisdiction of the Dominion Government.

TWO REPORTS ON ARCTIC.

Conservative Minority Will Hardly Agree With Others.

Ottawa, June 23.—The inquiry into the supplies for the Arctic terminated suddenly yesterday morning, and a report will be made to the House probably on Wednesday next.

The Conservative members of the committee, it is expected, will present a minority report, as it is not probable that there will be an agreement on all points.

When the committee met yesterday morning, Mr. Northrup, who has been the chief examiner of witnesses for the Opposition, made a brief statement.

He said that the Conservative members were prepared to call a couple of witnesses to give evidence as to the conduct of the crew of the Arctic with the Eskimos during the eight months the ship was icebound at Fullerton.

Mr. Pardee assured Mr. Northrup that it would be useless to summon the witnesses, and it was mutually agreed to close the inquiry.

The members of the committee then settled down to work to select the evidence it will be necessary to print.

SHOULD BE ANALYZED.

Government Action In Regard to Proprietary Medicines.

Ottawa, June 23.—Dr. Roddick, of Montreal, appeared before the committee on patent medicines yesterday morning. He strongly urged that the formulae of all patent medicines should be submitted to the Government for examination. He condemned soothing syrups, and said they should be abolished altogether, as their careless use led to many infantile deaths.

Dr. Roddick claimed that the public was entitled to know the contents of preparations containing dangerous drugs.

Mr. Watters, an Ottawa druggist, gave evidence along much the same lines. He said that from one to ninety per cent. of the patent medicines sold were harmless—and useless.

A draft bill prepared by Mr. MacFarlane, the chief analyst, was explained by its author. It requires all patent medicine manufacturers to submit samples to the department. The proprietory medicine manufacturers have themselves offered to furnish the Government with samples and affidavits that their preparations do not contain any excess of alcohol and other dangerous poisons, and giving the Minister power to prohibit the sale of preparations which after analysis are judged unsafe.

WHO ORDERED THE FILES?

Prefontaine's Son First Had Them Charged Up Against Him.

Ottawa, June 23.—George J. Desbarats, of the Public Works, was examined at the public accounts committee yesterday. He said that he did not purchase the steel files and bars from Mr. Strubbe, but he received the goods at Sorel. In the first instance he was asked by Mr. Prefontaine to go and see the files and find out if they could be utilized at Sorel. He would not have purchased so many if he had been ordering them. He might have ordered 25 or 30 dozen. This order amounted to 264 dozen. Strubbe gave fifteen per cent. discount.

Mr. Busteed, of Busteed & Lane, Montreal, said that the files were invoiced in the first instance to Rolland Prefontaine, son of Hon. R. Prefontaine. Rolland Prefontaine said that either he did not order the files or that he did not order so many, and would not accept them. Mr. Busteed said that he asked the Minister about the order, but he said that he knew nothing about it. The goods were finally sold to Mr. Strubbe for $2,234, who apparently resold them to the Government for $4,700.

Mr. Geoffrion was appointed chairman of the committee as Mr. Belcourt is leaving for Europe.

Lieut. Donnelly Injured.

Montreal, June 23.—Lieut. Donnelly of Shefford Field Battery was seriously injured internally in camp at Sherbrooke, his horse falling back on him.

Inspector Murray's Will.

Toronto, June 23.—The will of John Wilson Murray, Government detective, disposes of an estate of $40,676.

WHAT Fruit-a-tives OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS" ARE

Fruit-a-tives are the marvels of modern medicine. They have accomplished more actual cures—done more good to more people—than any other medicine ever introduced in Canada for the time they have been on sale.

Fruit-a-tives are fruit juices. They are nature's cure for —CONSTIPATION

—BILIOUSNESS
—BAD STOMACH
—DYSPEPSIA
—HEADACHES
—IMPURE BLOOD
—SKIN DISEASES
—KIDNEY TROUBLE
—RHEUMATISM
—IRRITATED HEART

Fruit-a-tives are the juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes. These juices are concentrated—and by a secret process, the juices are combined in a peculiar manner. This new combination is much more active medicinally than fresh juices—yet so perfect is the union that Fruit-a-tives act on the system as if they were in truth a natural fruit, medicinally stronger than any other known fruit.

To this combination of fruit juices, tonics and internal antiseptics are added, and the whole made into tablets.

These are Fruit-a-tives—sold everywhere for 50c a box or 6 boxes for $2.50.

KILLS SELF WITH SHOTGUN.

Young Scotchman, Two Months In Toronto, Ends His Life.

Toronto, June 25.—Donald McCallum, who arrived from Scotland two months ago, committed suicide Saturday morning at his boarding house, 836 West King street. He was 25 years of age and employed as a laborer in the city yards. He committed the deed with a shotgun. Mrs. Kinsella, the landlady, heard the report of the gun at 6.15. The door of McCallum's room was forced open and he was found dead. As far as was known he had no relatives in this country.

A Fifty Year Franchise.

Windsor, June 25.—At a special meeting of the Windsor Council Friday night, the Windsor, Essex and Lake Shore Electric Railway was given a 50-year franchise through the city, and was permitted to use "T" rails wherever the company wishes, but it is to substitute girder rail after three years if the city so orders.

Elections At Colon.

Colon, June 25.—The municipal elections in Colon yesterday passed off with very little disturbance. It is understood the Government was victorious but the results have not been announced. Yesterday morning clubs were freely used by both the political factions and several persons received broken heads.

STATE DINNER.

Municipal Honors Paid to King Haakon at Trondhjem.

Trondhjem, June 25.—A state dinner and ball were given last night by the municipality of Trondhjem, in honor of the King and Queen and foreign princes.

There were present members of the diplomatic corps and a brilliant assembly of 900 persons.

King Haakon's First Levee.

Trondhjem, Norway, June 25.—King Haakon and Queen Maud Saturday held their first levee, commencing at 11 o'clock in the morning, and the palace was again the town's centre of interest. All the special embassies, statesmen, officials and other prominent persons attended.

ROYAL COUPLE IN DANGER.

Spaniard Tries to Intercept King Alfonso and Queen Victoria.

Lagranja, Spain, June 26.—At the moment when the royal automobile, containing King Alfonso and Queen Victoria arrived here from the theatre Friday night, a well-dressed individual evaded the guards and sought to intercept the royal couple. He was arrested and gave the name of Jos Maria of Madrid.

When searched papers of a suspicious nature and considerable money were found upon him.

An Italian who was acting in a strange manner was also arrested. He claimed that he was on his way to Bilbao, looking for work.

Man At Point Of Death

Result of Saturday Night Fight At Toronto Island.

Revolver and Razor Used on Wesley Spence in an Attack Details of Which Are Obscure—Spence Frightfully Cut Loses an Immense Quantity of Blood—Two Men Arrested on a Charge of Wounding Spence.

Toronto, June 25.—Wesley Spence, aged 28, expressman, 29 Elm street, is lying in St. Michael's Hospital, hovering between life and death.

Pietro Laber, aged 21,—laborer, 118 Centre avenue, and Robert Kennedy, aged 26, moulder, 298 Perth avenue, are in jail on the charge of wounding Spence.

The affray occurred shortly before 10 o'clock Saturday night on the bridge across the lagoon leading to Turner's baths. The three men earlier in the evening had gone over to the sand bar, having with them a bottle of whisky, which they had brought from the city. After drinking this they commenced to wrangle.

Before the men were seen a revolver shot was heard by some of the cottagers.

"Help, Help, or I'll Be Dead."

Their loud talk and threats to each other attracted the attention of Mr. Chamberlain, who notified P. C. Johnston of their rowdyism. On his return he was met by Spence, who cried "Help! help! for God's sake, or I'll be dead in a few minutes."

Mr. Chamberlain seeing the man was wounded, took him to Eddie Durnan's boathouse, and Dr. Sphon was telephoned for at the Lakeside Home. He dressed the wounds.

Mr. Chamberlain took a revolver away from Spence when he met him and asked Spence if he was shot and how he came to have the revolver.

Spence replied he had taken it away from the fellow who attacked him.

Arrests Two.

Inspector Davis, who was in the vicinity, heard of the row and was soon on the scene. The two companions of Spence had disappeared. They were subsequently picked out of the crowd and promptly arrested by Davis, who brought them to the city and locked them up in No. 1 station. When searched Laber had a razor case in his pocket, but no razor, and his hands were covered with blood. The revolver, which was taken from Spence, contained three loaded and two empty shells. The smell of powder from the revolver showed it had been recently fired.

The wounded man did not wish the others arrested. All refused to talk about the fight, and claimed there was a fourth man who did the cutting. They did not know his name.

Spence's Terrible Wounds.

Spence lost an immense quantity of blood. His coat was slashed in three places, and his clothing was saturated with blood. In St. Michael's Dr. Killoran worked for three hours before the flow of blood was stopped, from a deep, ugly wound 8 inches long, extending from the top of and around the ear across the throat. There was another wound on the head, and a slash under the arm. He was resting quietly last night, but his recovery is still in doubt.

"He escaped early death by that," said the doctor, and his fingers measured the space of a quarter of an inch.

MYSTERIES IN MONTREAL.

Police Are Working on Three Cases in That City.

Montreal, June 25.—Three suspected cases of murder or manslaughter are being investigated here.

Joseph Chaput, N. de la Sablonnier and Thomas Leithead appeared before Judge Lafontaine charged with having murdered Emile Clermont on Monday, 18th June.

When Charles Wm. Horton, a colored man, died in jail a coroner's jury was called. It was found that Horton had been thrown out of a saloon just before he was arrested, and there were marks of violence on his head.

The jury advised further investigation.

William Dayton, 22 years old, has been saved from the effects of swallowing a dose of Paris green. He says he cannot remember the circumstances under which he took the poison. He is expected to entirely recover.

A SHOCK TO SOCIETY.

Absconding Bank Teller Was a Mover Among "the Best."

Medicine Hat, June 25.—W. E. Crompton, teller of the Union Bank, who has absconded, was popular in society circles.

A number of Medicine Hat young people with artistic aspirations formed an organization known as the Dominion Concert Co., and toured a number of the neighboring towns and cities. Crompton spent his two weeks' holidays acting as advance agent for the company. A week ago Saturday night he was in Wetaskiwin, and was to return to Medicine Hat by Monday morning. As he had not shown up by Wednesday, the inspector of the bank was summoned from Lethbridge and it was ascertained that there was a shortage.

Crompton is an Englishman, and came here from one of the bank's mercantile branches. He has been here three years, and was a great society man, an ardent polo player, and solo singer in the Presbyterian choir. The police have traced him to Vancouver. Being a wonderful mimic and clever at private theatricals, Crompton could disguise himself.

NEW TRIAL FOR OUTLAWS.

Unusual Course in B. C.—Grounds Upon Which Appeal Is Made.

Victoria, B. C., June 25.—Edwards (Bill Miner), Dunn and Colquhoun the three outlaws convicted of the hold-up of the C. P. R. train and sentenced to life and 25 year terms in the penitentiary, are making strenuous efforts through their counsel, Mr. Macintyre, to secure a new trial.

This is unusual in criminal matters in British Columbia, where in 99 cases out of 100, a conviction is accepted as finally disposing of the matter in issue.

The prisoners' counsel, in presenting his application to Mr. Justice Irving, urged two points—that the prisoners were not asked to plead at their second trial, and that counsel for the Crown had referred to the identification of a belt by one of the prisoners, no evidence being offered in this regard upon which such comment would properly rest.

His lordship held that there had been no point ruled upon at the trial which was unfair to the prisoners, and refused to grant a case stated.

Mr. Macintyre will now appeal from this ruling to the full court at its autumnal session.

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton.

Are Decent Liberals Satisfied.

Are all the decent Loberals satisfied that a man with so unsavery a past as this man Preston has, was appointed to a high office under the Government? Are not a few of them ashamed at what has leaked out regarding his share in the North Atlantic Trading Company's dealings?

There is a deep mystery remaining about this bogus company which Sir Wilfrid has seemingly determined to keep dark. He refuses to have the light shed upon it that the Opposition ask for. Would a thoroughly "upright, conscientious" party leader, and Premier, want to shelter an official who had handled hundreds of thousands of dollars belonging to the people of Canada, and refused point blank to answer vital questions put to him by order of the House of Commons?

But Preston is not alone among officials of shady reputation appointed under Sir Wilfrid's direction. The lawyer Jackson, who procured perjury before the election court, to unseat Mr. Donald Sutherland, was favored with a lucrative post as commercial agent in England. Are all the good, honest, and decent Liberals satisfied that such a man was so well rewarded? Surely they cannot agree that a high-minded, "upright and conscientious Premier" would choose this class of men for high office under the Government.

It is an old saying that one is known by the company he keeps. Some, however, are forced at times into undesirable company, which they are glad to "shake" at the first opportunity. It is likely that this man Preston was forced upon the Government on account of certain dirty work at election time, as Jackson certainly was for the dirty work done after election. It can be understood that Sir Wilfrid was forced to bow to the peculiar circumstances which made Mr. Preston's absence from Canada desirable to so many, after the notorious bye-election in 1890 and that he was willing to let it go as one of the things that a politician has to do at times. But when the person is found to have persisted in dubious if not criminal ways which commended him to office, how can any decent citizen support Sir Wilfrid in condoning his conduct and retaining him in the country's service?

That is the point. There is no lingering doubt that Preston has proven his unfitness as an immigration commissioner. His tricks and mysteries, connected with the drawing of vast sums from the Dominion Treasury, for alleged work and in the names of persons whom he refuses to make known, stamp him as an agent not to be trusted further. But instead of dismissing him from the Canadian pay roll, Sir Wilfrid shields him from the questions of members of Parliament desirous to hear the truth, and appears in all respects to be his firm friend and protector.

Is this attitude that of "the most upright and conscientious Premier Canada has ever had?" How does it compare with the course taken by Sir John Thompson in consigning to prison men who had been shown to be corrupt?

When Ellison Capers, bishop of South Carolina, was rector of Christ Church, in Greenville, he would often go to other cities to preach, for his powerful eloquence made him much sought after.

Bishop Capers, in those days, had an incisive way with him. One Sunady he preached in a parish where he chose for his subject "Economy."

At the end of the service a couple of prominent vestrymen congratulated the bishop.

"Your sermon on economy, sir," they said, "was a very sensible discourse."

"Thanks," said the bishop. "It seems to have been appreciated; judging from the appearance of the collection plate."

The Rev. Frederick B. Bridgman, a missionary to the Zulus, was praising this savage people.

"They are often blasphemous," he said. "They are often unjust and cruel. But for the most part it is unconsciously, innocently, that they err. They want to do right. They try to do right. Their sins and blasphemies are as unintentional as the blasphemy of a little girl I used to know.

"This little girl set off for school one morning, and her dog, escaping from the house, followed her.

"Go back!" she cried.

"And the dog pretended to go back, and then slunk up behind her again.

"When she discovered the dog a second time, she turned and shook her finger at it, and said passionately, "Go back! It's bad enough to have God always looking after me, without you following me every place I go."

The Convent Priest.

A couple of weeks ago Canadian papers published a Montreal despatch telling of the conversion of Rev. C. A. Fournier, for ten years a R. C. priest in Saskatchewan and North Dakota. He was, according to the despatch, baptized and received into the fellowship of the Baptist Church at Grande Ligne. The despatch concluded thusly; "He is the son of the late Charles Fournier, M. D.A., who for upwards of fifteen years represented L'Islet in the Quebec Legislature, and a nephew of the late lamented Bishop Panet, of Quebec. He has been appointed a missionary by the Grande mission and will labor for the present at Roxton Pond, Quebec." It now appears, accoridng to the Northwest Review, that Rev. C. A. Fournier was dismissed last August by Mgr. Shanley, the R. C. Bishop of Fargo, Dakota, for intemperate habits, and failure to pay his debts, while there is no record that can be found of L'Islet having ever been represented in the Quebec Legislative Assembly for fifteen years by any man named Fournier and to be a nephew of the late Bishop Paney, of Quebec, Rev. C. A. Fournier, who is now in his fiftieth year, would have to be at least 100 years old.—Quebec Telegraph.

IN THE GOOD OLD FASHIONED DAYS.

Powdered Wigs Formed an Important Adjunct to a Gentleman's Apparel.

It is safe to say that the majority of bald men of to-day would gladly revive the old, dignified custom if they could. But, they can do the next best thing to it; that is, hold on to what hair they have.

In cases where the hair root or hair bulb has not been completely destroyed by parasites that infest it. Newbro's Herpicide will do wonders in the way of encouraging a new growth of hair. Destroy the cause, you remove the effect. That is the successful mission of Herpicide. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. INDIANS RAISING WOLVES.

STORY FROM THE NORTH COUNTRY RESPECTING WOLF BOUNTIES.

There is a rumor to the effect that some of the Indians in the northern part of the country are actually raising wolves for the sake of the bounty of $15 paid for the slaying of every wolf. Local game wardens have been instructed to keep a sharp lookout for this kind of thing.

The pair of stuffed timber wolves sent to the Parliament building, Toronto, by a North Bay man for the purpose of proving his claim to the bounty, have been returned. He will not get the bounty because he objects to the ears of the wolves being cut off. The law provides that the ears must be produced and an affidavit made before a Judge or other competent person as to the locality and time of the slaying of the wolves. This, with the ears, is forwarded to the department at Toronto before the bounty is paid.

Wedding Bells.

MATHER — SIMPKINS.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Simpkins, of Melrose, was on Wednesday evening, June 20th, the scene of a very pretty wedding, when their only daughter, Maud, was united in marriage to Mr. Peter Mather, of Tyendinaga.

The ceremony was performed by Rev Coon, of Shannonville, under an arch of evergreens and flowers. A wedding march was played by Miss Leah Phillips. The bride looked exceedingly pretty in a gown of light grey, and carried white roses. The couple were unattended.

After congratulations, the guests, who numbered about forty, proceeded to the dining hall which was profusely decorated with evergreens, flowers and national colors. A very enjoayble evening was spent, after which Mr. and Mrs. Mather left for their future home, amid showers of rice and good wishes. The presents were numerous and costly, showing the high esteem in which the bride was held. The groom's present to the bride was a beautiful gold bracelet.

The following evening a reception was held at the home of the groom, the guests numbering about forty. Mr and Mrs. Mather have the best wishes of a host of friends.

Belleville Man Died in Far West.

The Kamloops, B. C., Sentinel of Tuesday, June 12, contains the following paragraph anent a former Bellevillian:

Miles Wellington Canniff, a well-known and respected citizen of Kamloops, died suddenly yesterday morning while on duty at the C.P.R. shops where he was employed. He has not been in vigorous health for some time, the immediate cause of death being heart failure. He was 53 years of age and was a native of Belleville, Ont., and was a nephew of Sir Mackenzie Bowell. Much sympathy is felt for the widow and two daughters in their sad bereavement. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon from the family residence, Lansdowne Street, and was attended by a large number of friends and acquaintances who paid this last token of respect to one whom in life they had so highly esteemed. A large number of floral offerings were sent by sympathizing friends. Services were conudcted by Rev. W. A. Wyllie pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church.

A Thirty Million Road.

New York, June 23.—After a stubborn legal battle which has lasted about six years in New York State courts, work on the New York & Port Chester Railroad was started today, when Mrs. Wm. Gotschall, wife of the President of the road, dug, with a gold spade, the first sod on the old Miller property at Harrison, N.Y. Soon afterwards a gang of laborers were hard at work preparing a roadbed for the rails. The road will run through a private right of way from Port Chester to New York, and will cost more than $30,000,000. It will connect with the subway at 177th street, also at West Chester avenue, and will be four-tracked the entire twenty-five miles.

CHANGE IN TIME ON NEW YORK CENTRAL, SUNDAY, JUNE 17.

THE VATICAN PALACE.

Its Existence Is Mainly Due to the Builder Pope, Nicholas V.

The present existence of the Vatican palace is principally due to Nicholas V., the builder pope, whose gigantic scheme would startle a modern architect. His plan was to build the church of St. Peter's as a starting point and then to construct one vast central habitat for the papal administration, covering the whole of what is called the Borgo, from the castle of Sant' Angelo to the cathedral. In ancient times a portico, or covered way supported on columns, led from the bridge to the church, and it was probably from this real structure that Nicholas began his imaginary one, only a small part of which was ever completed. That small portion alone comprises the basilica and the Vatican palace, which together form by far the greatest continuous mass of buildings in the world. The Coliseum is 195 yards long by 156 broad, including the thickness of the walls. St. Peter's church alone is 205 yards long and 156 broad, so that the whole Coliseum would easily stand upon the ground plan of the church, while the Vatican palace is more than half as large again.

Nicholas V. died in 1455, and the oldest parts of the present Vatican palace are not older than his reign. They are generally known as the Torre Borgia, from having been inhabited by Alexander VI., who died of poison in the third of the rooms now occupied by the library, counting from the library side. The windows of these rooms look upon the large square court of the Belvedere, and that part of the palace is not visible from without.

Portions of the substructure of the earlier building were no doubt utilized by Nicholas, and the secret gallery which connects the Vatican with the mausoleum of Hadrian is generally attributed to Pope John XXIII., who died in 1417, but on the whole it may be said that the Vatican palace is originally a building of the period of the renaissance, to which all successive popes have made additions.

Snails and Odors.

A professor in the University of Geneva says that snails perceive the odor of many substances, but only when not far away. In order to prove this it is necessary merely to dip a glass rod in a strongly smelling substance and bring it near the large tentacles of a snail in motion. If it is put close to these horns the tentacles are violently drawn back. As the animal perceives the odor it changes its course. Snails also smell by means of their skin. Contact is not necessary, for the mere vicinity of a perfume causes an indentation of the skin.

Zutoo
Always Cured Headache.
Never Affected her Heart.
Here is a testimonial from the wife of Doctor W. L. Shurtleff, K.C., of Coaticook, Que., who has taken a thousand Zutoo Tablets (the Japanese Vegetable Headache remedy.)
It should convince any doubting one, that while the tablets cure headache, they do not, like the drug cures, affect the heart, nerves or stomach. No one would or could take such a number if they were not perfectly harmless. Mrs. Shurtleff herself had to discard the drug cures.
Here is what she says:
I have always been a great sufferer from headache, and have taken a great many headache cures. I found that after taking them for a time they caused palpitation of the heart. Three years ago I began using Zutoo. I have likely taken over a thousand tablets. I have never yet felt the least ill-effect from using them and they cure my headaches as quickly as any remedy I ever took.
They are Harmless as Soda.

A LA MODE.

I took my last year's Panama
And knocked it out of shape,
Then dyed it in some Alice blue
And fastened on some crepe;
I pulled the thin way out in front,
And bent it up behind;
I stuck some feathers on the side—
The biggest I could find;
I took it to a maniac
And bade him do his worst,
He added some few touches till
It looked like something cursed;
And then I gave it to my wife—
This little joke so pat—
Who thanked me with unfeigned delight
For "just the sweetest hat!"

MOTHER EDDY IN SECLUSION.

(New York Evening Post.)

Mother Eddy is in one respect more powerful than President Roosevelt She can refuse to see "delegations." Hundreds of the faithful went to Concord, but were resolutely shut out of what Mrs. Eddy calls her propria persona. They might inspect the local Christian Science temple, but could not gaze upon her, Is all this studied in order to deepen the mystery and so the magnificence? Or is it simply a display of autocratic power for personal convenience? An ordinary person might, indeed, be excused for not wanting to hold sweet converse with 500 Christian Scientists at once, but Mrs. Eddy could give them bathos for bathos, and is supposed to rather like that sort of thing. Her persistent secrecy will, however, give rise some day to the suspicion that her real name is Mrs Harris, or that she is nothing but a literary bureau or a syndicate.

A magazine editor was congratulating Richard Harding Davis on the success of his farces.

"You handle the farce," said the editor, "as skillfully as you used to handle the short story. You have the gift of seeing everything in a farcical light."

"Oh, I don't know," said Mr. Davis, modestly.

"Could you," pursued the editor, "treat farcically the situation of a wife's elopement with her husband's best friend? Would you get any fun out of a situation so grimly sad and horrible as that?"

Mr. Davies laughed.

"One of the principals in just such a situation," he said, "got a good deal of fun out of it. I allude to the deserted husband. He got fun and a terrible revenge as well. This deserted husband, the day after his wife's elopement with his best friend, sent the aforesaid best friend a packet and the following letter;

"Dear Sir, — Please hand the enclosed set of false teeth to my late wife and ask her to be so good as to return my father's, which, in the hurry of the moment, she took by mistake."

AS SMOOTH AS A BILLIARD TABLE.

Your comfort on a railway journey very largely depends upon the roadbed of the route you select. No matter how luxurious the coaches, or how much personal attention you receive from the employees, you cannot be comfortable if jolted and jarred by a poor and irregular roadbed. On the Lake Shore Railway no expense has been spared to make a roadbed as nearly perfect as the most skilful engineering could build, and as a result, throughout the entire length and breadth of the system the right of way is as smooth as a billiard table. No jolts or jars, nor dust nor dirt. This perfection of service extends throughout the entire system. Lake Shore trains are the most luxurious, they are equipped with every comfort and convenience and are run at highest speed and in safety. They run on time. For your own sake you should see that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." Write for full information about rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. AN INDIAN THEORY.

The Cause of Earthquakes, Tidal Waves and Volcanoes.

"When I lived among the Dakotas," said an old army officer, "I found men who, like Buddha, gave seven years of their lives to prayer and fasting, that they might become pure in the sight of God, or the Great Spirit, as they call that being. After they have proved themselves before their people by performing so called miracles, such as holding their hands and arms in boiling water and not being burned, shot with poisoned arrows and not harmed, bitten by rattlesnakes and not poisoned and many other tests that I have witnessed, they are accepted as holy or wise men. The Indians believe that they can get the word direct from God, or the Great Spirit, the same as the wise men and seers of old used to do. I have asked these intelligences to tell me about the cause of earthquakes and tidal waves, and they explain it like this:

"They say volcanoes are the safety valves of the earth; that the rim of the earth is gradually cooling. As it cools it contracts, making the pressure on the hot lava in the interior greater. At last something must give way, this rim must crack open, or the volcanoes must burst forth and emit this compressed lava.

"Sometimes it is relieved in one way, sometimes in another. Should the earth crack in midocean, where the crust is usually thinner, then the waters of the ocean fill in, and there is a great explosion as the water strikes this great bed of hot lava, large masses of the rim are thrown up, and islands appear. Sometimes they stay on the surface of the ocean, sometimes they fall back and are again covered with water, but that upheaval so lifts the water that a great wave is started for the shore that carries death and destruction in its way.

"Many of the old safety valves in the earth are now closing up; only a few remain. The crust is becoming so thick that the cooling process is more slow."

Deference to Royalty.

On the occasion of a visit by the king of Italy to Vesuvius an Italian newspaper announced that "the eruption had the honor of being witnessed by his majesty." It was a German paper which once stated that a certain royal prince "was graciously pleased to be born yesterday." Equally courtier-like was an army officer in attendance on the king of Spain. The king asked him what was the time. The courtier fumbled for his watch, but could not find it, then respectfully replied, "Whatever time your majesty pleases."

A Wise Scheme.

"No matter what opinion is offered, you express a contrary view," said the impatient friend.

"Well," answered Mr. Biggins, "that's a way I have of acquiring knowledge. A man is more likely to give up all he knows on a subject if you get him to warm up with a little controversial indignation."

His Influence.

"Do you think a man's influence lasts after he is gone?" asked the philosopher.

"Well, I should say!" cried the young woman. "My husband tied my property up so that I can't ever marry again!"

Laws are like cobwebs—if any trifling of powerless thing falls into them they hold it fast, while if it is something weightier it breaks through them and is off.—Solon.

BITTER WATERS SWEET

WHEN DRUNK WITH KNOWLEDGE AND POWERFUL SELF-CONTROL.

BITTERNESS TRANSFORMED

Alchemist of Life Is Man's Power to Control Himself in the Bitterest Trials and Sorrows of His Life—How the Christ Is Transfigured in the Case of the Sorely Tried Individual Self.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 24.—In this sermon the preacher shows how even the bitterest trials and sorrows of our lives may be transformed into blessings. The text is Exodus xv, 25, "And the Lord shewed him a tree, which when he had cast into the water, the waters were made sweet."

Human nature may be aptly compared to the earth's surface. It was valleys and hills, lowlands and heights, broad pastures and undulating prairies, rich Esdraelon plains and Bad Lands of the Dakotas. It has Himalayas of inspiration, where we see the face of Jesus Christ transfigured before our eyes, and valleys of despond, in which the sunshine of hope never enter, even as the daylight cannot penetrate the catacombs underneath ancient Rome. Yet, strange to say, when we are standing upon the highest pinnacles of spiritual inspiration then we are often in danger of tumbling over the steepest precipices of sin. This despicable characteristic of the human heart is not only true of individuals as it was in the life of Peter when he denied Christ thrice, but it is also true of the spiritual conditions of communities.

Some time ago I read a graphic account of an English tourist ascending the Swiss altitudes. As this gentleman and his party were climbing, they passed through a beautiful village where life in all its rustic simplicity was smiling before their eyes. Hardly had they left this little village and gone a few miles beyond, when one of the guides cried out: "Look! Look! Look! See the avalanche breaking loose!" The Englishman looked, and saw a great mass of snow about three miles in width tearing away from its anchorages. With deep intonations, which sounded the death knell not only of cattle and sheep and horses and goats, but of men, women and children, it came tumbling down. In its wild plunge it literally swept away all vestige of life, and pushed houses and barns and schoolhouses and churches and trees and fences and crops into the canyon below. Nothing was left in the pathway of that onrushing snow but the bare rocks. Like those avalanches, there are spiritual catastrophes which sweep whole communities off their feet, when the members seem to be treading the highest mountain ranges of hope and are living near to God. The loftier the Matterhorn lifts its rugged brow toward the stars, the easier it is for a Lord Francis Douglas and a Mr. Hudow and a Tangwalder and a Hudson to be hurled into its abyssmal depths.

The darkest of clouds as black curtains may be drawn over the bluest of skies; the bitterest wailings of skepticism and doubt may reverberate as dolorous echoes to the most gladsome shouts of gospel praise and thanksgiving. It was only three days ago that we find the Israelites so happy that their spiritual gratitude makes them almost besides themselves with joy. In their holy elation and thankfulness to God for their deliverance from the pursuing Egyptians they were like Paul, who described his past spiritual joys in these words: "I knew a man in Christ about fourteen years ago, whether in the body or whether out of the body I cannot tell (God knoweth). Such a one caught up to the third heaven." Yes, the Hebrew people were in the third heaven only three days ago. They were so happy in their recent liberation from serfdom that they could not keep their feet still, let alone their lips. "Then sung Moses and the children of Israel this song unto the Lord and spake, saying: I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously. The horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea. The Lord is my strength and song, and he is become my salvation, he is my God, and I will prepare him a habitation. My father's God and I will exalt him." But hardly had this song died away when the people began to murmur and denounce God. They said: "What are we going to drink? Here we are in the desert now forty-eight hours, and there is no water but these bitter waters of Marah. Why didst thou not let us stay in Egypt rather than bring us out into this wilderness of sand to die of thirst?" Then God showed Moses a tree, and the great Lawgiver threw this tree into the bitter waters of Marah, and at once they became sweet.

Wonderful story this, and yet this history is the biography of our own lives. We have all had out times of singing and dancing and praising God upon the banks of the Red Sea. Then we have all had our sudden spiritual reactions, when we have been in the desert with no water to drink but the bitter Marah. Indeed, many of us are standing and complaining at the bitter waters even at the present time. Now, this ought not to be when God has provided a means of sweetening these waters. I want to show you this morning where that remedy may be found and to lead you to the tree which will take the bitterness out of the Marah of your lives. I have not, like Moses, to cut down a lean, gaunt, stunted tree which is growing in the Arabian sands. I shall lift the stout trunk of the tree out of which was made the Calvary cross. By throwing this cross into the fountains of your tears which are bubbling up from a breaking heart these fountains will become sweet—aye, as sweet as the pure, life sustaining, limpid waters of the River of Life, which St. John saw in apocalyptic vision, "clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb."

First, let us talk about the bitter waters which are now flowing out of the desert places where once grew the luxuriant oases of the visions of our early childhood. When we were boys and girls sitting behind the schoolroom desk we never pictured for ourselves the prosaic conditions of being clerks and farmhands and book canvassers and mechanics and servants and stenographers and nurses. But when we thought of ourselves as future men and women we always painted for ourselves beautiful mirages in every desert. We could see ourselves in imagination as artists sitting before an easel, or as surgeons standing by some operating table, or as lawyers pleading in some courtroom, or as astronomers exploring the pathway of the stars, or as great inventors or noted statesmen or famous naval commanders or military chieftains, winning immortal fame in saving our country in times of peace and war.

But now instead of being artists and creating masterpieces to hang in the French salon, we find ourselves common sign painters. Instead of being authors writing books, we find ourselves as common printers, setting the type, or a bookbinders putting other men's books together. Instead of being a Catherine Booth or a Frances Havergal or a Miss Willard or a Fanny Crosby or a Susan B. Anthony, we find ourselves washing dishes and scrubbing floors and cooking meals and being household drudges. The vapor and the mists of early childhood, upon which were photographed and reflected the dreams of youthful ambitions, have been condensed into the common puddles of everyday life. "Oh," you say, "how my early hopes have miscarried. From living among the clouds I have dropped to be nothing but a snail crawling in the dirt. Bitter, bitter, are the waters which have been condensed from the mists of our early dreams photographed in the mirages of the nursery and the schoolroom."

Yes, my brother, it is certainly sad to see a Paul Potter exhausting his genius as a sign painter. Perhaps you have been to Europe and have stood before "The Jewel of The Hague." It is the picture of the farm lands. There under a tree are lying a cow, a goat, a mother sheep and a lamb. But above them all stands the magnificent proportions of the male offspring of that cow. Strong, powerfully formed is he. From the looks of the animal he must be about a year and a half old. Instead of the mother protecting him, he now stands as the protector of the mother. All the artistic world has sat before that picture as before a shrine. Yet Paul Potter painted "The Jewel of The Hague" for a tavern sign. For years it swayed backward and forward, beckoning the traveler to come and find rest and refreshment behind the open doors. There are many Paul Potters. There are many men and women who have had beautiful and inspiring earthly dreams, but they have never been able to make those dreams materialize. the vapors which photographed those mirages of early childhood have been changed into the common puddles of prosaic, ordinary life. Henry Ward Beecher once declared that one of the greatest gospel teachers he ever studied under was an old black man, who used to work for his father, and who used to sing to him the gospel songs and tell to the tow-headed boy Henry the Bible stories which ever after were so precious to him. Do you mean to tell me that your opportunities for working for God and man are not as great as those of the old black man who used to work in Lyman Beecher's parsonage and who helped start Henry Ward Beecher out on his world-wide ministry?

Then most people have no right to complain about their insignificant positions, because they are not yet through with life, and they do not know what positions of conspicuousness they may yet be called upon to fill. I was intensely interested the other day in reading about the supreme moment of Farragut's life. That moment was when in command of the Hartford he was leading his ships into Mobile Bay. The monitor Tecumseh was at the head of the line. She struck a torpedo in the most dangerous part of the entrance to the bay and almost instantly disappeared. Soon the next boat in line, the Brooklyn, began to back water away from the dreaded torpedoes and was backing upon the admiral's flagship. All seemed lost. But suddenly Admiral Farragut lifted his trumpet and called, "Four bells, Captain Drayton; go ahead!" Instantly the flagship moved ahead, and all the other ships followed. As the ships passed into the harbor the men could hear the torpedoes bumping upon the hulls. But they were dumb torpedoes and exploded not. All America and the whole civilized world at once hailed Admiral Farragut as one of the boldest naval heroes. But Farragut when he entered Mobile Bay was an old man, as General Havelock was an old man when he led his troops on for the rescue of Lucknow. For nearly threescore years these men had to live in obscurity before their great opportunity came. As unknown men they worked and ploded. No one seemed to take notice of them. But when the greatest opportunities of life came in their old age at once they grasped them and leaped to the front. Young man, you have no right to complain about the humdrum work of an ordinary life if these heroes did not complain. You do not know what God has ahead for you. Do your work well in obscurity, so that when the great opportunities of life come later you may be able to grasp them as did Farragut and Henry Havelock.

"'Tis true," you say, "that I have tasted the bitter waters of the wrecked ambitions of early childhood, but in one sense I have outlived them. It is surprising how time will blunt the keen edge of even the sharpest of griefs. Just as we can forget the pains of the sicknesses of childhood, we can forget about the miscarried hopes and the faded visions of our youth. Now, all I ask of the world is a fair, honest show. That the world seems unwilling to give me. No matter how much I try to do right, the fault finders, the misrepresenters, are always around. Like Socrates, who was compelled to quaff the deadly hemlock, I am constrained almost daily to drink of the poisonous springs of contention and slander. Truly, like the Psalmist, I can cry out, 'My tears have been my meat day and night, while they (meaning my enemies) say unto me, Where is thy God?' Yes, my enemies doubt whether God loves me, and I am myself almost ready to be skeptical about the divine protection and support."

But there are still other bitter Marah waters which many of us are compelled to drink, one's financial inability to provide for the wants of our loved ones. You say: "Personally I could stand poverty. It does not affect me much. My personal wants are very few and easily satisfied. But it is so hard not to be able to give my dear ones the necessities and a few of the luxuries." Then you look up at me with a sad smile as you say: "You must not think that I have always lived as we are living now. Like many people of this city for whom the wheel of fortune has turned, I can say that I have seen better days." My brother, I know it. There was a day in your life when you did not have to consider whether it was best for you to ride in a street car because of the extravagance in spending a five-cent piece. And that fact makes your condition doubly hard.

Then, again, from talking with a member of your family I have found out that your financial catastrophe came like a tornado out of a clear sky. It came as quickly as the late San Francisco tragedy came to thousands of families and left them penniless by the Golden Gate. Only the night before that awful earthquake a young student of the Hopkins' Art Institute was writing home. This letter left the city at 5 o'clock a. m., or just thirteen minutes before that great city was wrecked. This is what she said: "It is a beautiful night. The breeze from the ocean is so pure and fresh, and the air is heavy with perfume from the hosts of flowers that are blooming. The heavens are full of bright stars. God seems to be everywhere, and the whole earth seems glad."

But hardly was the ink dry upon the paper and the letter sealed when the horrible upheaval took place, the conflagration broke loose and the Hopkins' Institute of Art, like thousands of other buildings, was a mass of charred and hissing ruins. That is the way your fortune went. In a flash, with the speed of a bullet—aye, with the velocity of the whirlwind—your money took wings and flew away. Now your sick wife has to do the housework and your two daughters are compelled to go out and earn their daily bread. Bitter, bitter are the Marah waters of financial inability out of which you are compelled to drink daily. And yet, my friends, I do not feel so sorry for you as you think I ought. I want to tell you that there will yet come a day when you shall think God on your knees that you have had to drink from this bitter spring. Then the Marah spring shall become the living fountain of sweet love.

In the first place, I must picture your own spiritual condition. You are like a tourist who is circumnavigating the globe. No sooner did you tell your friends that you were going to be a "globe trotter" than they said, "We will come down and see you off." The docks were crowded on the day you sailed. The band was playing, there were thousands of people moving on and off the ship. After the little tugs pushed the huge vessel out into the deep water with your marine glass you watched the different boats coming into the harbor as you passed out. You were sailing along day after day, and the voyage was becoming more of a pleasure as the weeks went by. Now you have touched at Gibraltar. Now you are in the Mediterranean Sea. You make lots of friends on board. The hours speed quickly past. You have practically no interest in what is happening in the boats off in the distance, which you sight ever and anon. But one day a storm comes up, and the machinery of your boat is broken. Helpless, you are being driven by the cruel winds toward the rocks. What do you now do? Do you run to your friends for help? Why, they are in the same danger as yourself. Ah, no; now you anxiously scan the horizon to look for a ship. And when a steamer heaves in sight the danger gun signals for help. Then with bated breath you watch the approach of that vessel. The great hawsers are run between the two ships, then they become taut as the other boat pulls you into the harbor of safety. Then you cry: "Thank God! Thank God for help! Thank God for rescue!"

Now, my friends, that is the picture of your spiritual life, and you know it. You have been on a voyage of life. You have been singing and dancing and making merry with a few friends on board your own ship. But suddenly you awake to the fact that the moral and spiritual lives of your dear ones as well as your own are in danger of eternal shipwreck. What are you to do? Why, to-day you ought to take the gospel marine glass and sweep the horizon and send forth the danger signals. Who ought you to call to your help? Shall men come who are just like you? Nay. What you need is divine help for the rescue of yourself and of that child. It is not too late. Believe me, it is not too late. And the way you can bring that divine help to the spiritual rescue of your loved one is by first signaling that divine help to come to your own rescue. Oh my friends, if the waywardness of a husband or child or friend be the means of your own spiritual consecration as well as that of others, do you not believe that these Marah waters shall yet become as sweet waters of spiritual life? Now comes the practical question: Is there any one here who is unwilling to signal for this divine help and to consecrate his own life to the Master's service when that person fully realizes that where he goes and what he does may decide the eternal destiny of some one whose salvation ought to be dearer to him than his own life?

Man, woman, child, dost thou not know that another's spiritual life is depending upon the stand you take for Christ? Will you not here and now say "By God's help and mercy I will let the Holy Spirit enter into my own heart, and then I shall lead my husband, my wife, my father, my brother, my sister, my child, my friend, to the mercy seat?" Will you do it? Will you let Christ lift his atoning cross and push it into the great depths of your own sins and make the bitter waters of your evil past sweet as the River of Life?

Awoke the Avalanche.

A Swiss shepherd has begun a suit at Altlorf against a party of Swiss mountain climbers, alleging that their singing started an avalanche which destroyed his flock of sheep.

The Two Vanrevels

Crailey was thirty miles down the river with a fishing rod neatly packed in a leather case.

Mr. Vanrevel, of course, was not invited. No one would have thought of asking him to join a small party of which Robert Carewe's daughter was to be a member, but it was happiness enough for Tom that night to lie hidden in the shrubbery looking up at the stars between the leaves while he listened to her harp and borne through the open window on enchanted airs the voice of Elizabeth Carewe singing "Robin Adair."

It was now that the town indulged its liveliest spirit. Never an evening lacked its junketing, while the happy folk of Rouen set the early summer to music. Serenade, dance and song for them, the light hearts, young and old making gay together. It was all laughter, either in sunshine or by candlelight, undisturbed by the far thunder below the southern horizon, where Zachary Taylor had pitched his tent, upon the Rio Grande.

One fair evening soon after that excursion which had proved fatal to the hopes of the handsome Tappingham and of the youthful Chenoweth it was the privilege of Mr. Thomas Vanrevel to assist Miss Carewe and her chaperon from their carriage as they drove up to a dance at the Bareauds'. This good fortune fell only to great deserving, for he had spent an hour lurking outside the house in the hope of performing such offices for them.

Heaven was in his soul, and the breath departed out of his body when, after a moment of hesitation, Miss Betty's little lace gauntleted glove was placed in his hand, and her white slipper shimmered out from the lilac flounces of her dress to fall like a benediction, he thought, on each of the carriage steps.

It was the age of garlands. They wreathed the muses, the seasons and their speech, so the women wore wreaths in their hair, and Miss Betty's that night was of marguerites. "Read your fortune in them all," whispered Tom's heart, "and of whomsoever you wish to learn every petal will say, 'He loves you; none declare he loves you not!'"

She bowed slightly, but did not speak to him, which was perhaps a better reception than that accorded the young man by her companion. "Oh, it's you, is it?" was Mrs. Tanberry's courteous observation as she canted the vehicle in her descent. She looked sharply at Miss Betty, and even the small glow of the carriage lamps showed that the girl's cheeks had flushed very red. Mr. Vanrevel, on the contrary, was pale.

They stood for a moment in awkward silence, while from the lighted house where the flying figures circled came the waltz, "I Dreamt That I Dwe-helt In Ma-har-ble Halls." Tom's own dreams were much wilder than the gypsy girl's, he knew that, yet he spoke out bravely:

"Will you dance the first two with me?"

Miss Betty bit her lip, frowned, turned away and, vouchsafing no reply, walked toward the house with her eyes fixed on the ground; but just as they reached the door she flashed over him a look that scorched him from head to foot and sent his spirits down through the soles of his boots to excavate a grotto in the depths of the earth, so charged it was with wrathful pity and contempt.

"Yes!" she said abruptly and followed Mrs. Tanberry to the dressing room.

The elder lady shook her head solemnly as she emerged from the enormous folds of a yellow silk cloak. "Ah, princess," she said, touching the girl's shoulder with her jeweled hand, "I told you I was a very foolish woman, and I am, but not so foolish as to offer advice often. Yet, believe me, it won't do. I think that is one of the greatest young men I ever knew, and it's a pity—but it won't do."

Miss Betty kept her face away from her guardian for a moment. No inconsiderable amount of information had drifted to her from here and there regarding the career of Crailey Gray, and she thought how intensely she would have hated any person in the world except Mrs. Tanberry for presuming to think she needed to be warned against the charms of this serenading lady killer who was the property of another girl.

"You must keep him away, I think," ventured Mrs. Tanberry gently.

At that Betty turned to her and said sharply:

"I will. After this please let us never speak of him again."

A slow nod of the other's turbaned head indicated the gravest acquiescence. She saw that her companion's cheeks were still crimson. "I understand," said she.

A buzz of whispering, like a July beetle, followed Miss Carewe and her partner about the room during the next dance. How had Tom managed it? Had her father never told her? Who had dared to introduce them? Fanchon was the only one who knew, and as she whirled by with Will Cummings she raised her absent glance long enough to give Tom an affectionate and warning shake of the head.

Tom did not see this. Miss Carewe did. Alas! She smiled upon him instantly and looked deep into his eyes. It was the third time.

She was not afraid of this man flirt. He was to be settled with once and forever. She intended to avenge both Fanchon and herself. Yet it is a hazardous game, this piercing of eye with eye, because the point which seeks to penetrate may soften and melt, leaving one defenseless. For perhaps ten seconds that straight look lasted; while it seemed to her that she read clear into the soul of him and to behold it through some befooling magic as strong, tender, wise and true as his outward appearance would have made an innocent stranger believe him, for he looked all these things, she admitted that much, and he had an air of distinction and resource beyond any she had ever known; even in the wild scramble for her kitten he had not lost it. So for ten seconds, which may be a long time, she saw a man such as she had dreamed, and she did not believe her sight, because she had no desire to be as credulous as the others, to be as easily cheated as that poor Fanchon!

The luckless Tom found his own feet beautiful on the mountains and, treading the heights with airy steps, appeared to himself wonderful and glorified—he was waltzing with Miss Betty! He breathed the entrancing words to himself over and over. It was true he was waltzing with Miss Betty Carewe! Her glove lay warm and light within his own. His fingers clasped that ineffable lilac and white brocade waist. Sometimes her hair came within an inch of his cheek, and then he rose outright from the hilltops and floated in a golden mist. The glamour of which the incroyable had planned to tell her some day surrounded Tom, and it seemed to him that the whole world was covered with a beautiful light like a carpet, which was but the radiance of this adorable girl whom his gloves and coat sleeve were permitted to touch. When the music stopped they followed in the train of other couples seeking the coolness of out of doors for the interval, and Tom in his soul laughed at all other men with illimitable condescension.

"Stop here," she said as they reached the open gate. He was walking out of it, his head in the air and Miss Betty on his arm. Apparently he would have walked straight across the state. It was the happiest moment he had ever known.

He wanted to say something wonderful to her. His speech should be like the music and glory and fire that were in him. Therefore he was shocked to hear himself remarking, with an inanity of utterance that sickened him:

"Oh, here's the gate, isn't it?"

Her answer was a short laugh. "You mean you wish to persuade me that you had forgotten it was there?"

"I did not see it," he protested lamentably.

"No?"

"I wasn't thinking of it."

"Indeed! You were 'lost in thoughts of'"—

"Of you!" he said before he could check himself.

"Yes?" Her tone was as quietly contemptuous as she could make it. "How very frank of you! May I ask are you convinced that speeches of that sort are always to a lady's liking?"

"No," he answered humbly and hung his head. Then she threw the question at him abruptly:

"Was it you who came to sing in our garden?"

There was a long pause before a profound sigh came tremulously from the darkness, like a sad and tender confession. "Yes."

"I thought so!" she excaimed. "Mrs. Tanberry thought it was some one else, but I knew that it was you."

"Yes, you are right," he said quietly. "It was I. It was my only way to tell you what you know now."

"Of course!" She set it all aside with those two words and the slightest gesture of her hand. "It was a song made for another girl, I believe?" she asked lightly and, with an icy smile, inquired further, "For the one—the one before the last, I understand?"

He lifted his head, surprised. "What has that to do with it? The music was made for you; but, then, I think all music was made for you."

"Leave the music out of it, if you please," she said impatiently. "Your talents make you modest! No doubt you consider it unmaidenly in me to have referred to the serenade before you spoke of it, but I am not one to cast down my eyes and let it pass—no, nor one too sweet to face the truth, either!" she cried, with sudden passion. "To sing that song in the way you did meant—oh, you thought I would flirt with you! What right had you to come with such a song to me?"

Tom intended only to disclaim the presumption, so far from his thoughts, that his song had moved her, for he could see that her attack was prompted by her inexplicable impression that he had assumed the attitude of a conqueror, but his explanation began unfortunately.

Even the milk of human kindness may contain a few germs.

We are all apt to strain at a gnat and swallow a camel, but it is always the other fellow's gnat and our camel.

"Forgive me. I think you have completely misunderstood. You thought it meant something I did not intend at all, and"—

"What!" she said, and her eyes blazed, for now she beheld him as the arrant sneak of the world. He, the lady killer, with his hypocritical air of strength and melancholy sweetness, the leader of drunken revels and, by reputation, the town Lothario and light-o'-love, under promise of marriage to Fanchon Bareaud, had tried to make love to another girl, and now his cowardice in trying to disclaim what he had done lent him the insolence to say to this other: "My child, you are betrayed by your youth and conceit; you exaggerate my meaning. I had no intention to distinguish you by coquetting with you!" This was her interpretation of him, and her indignation was not lessened by the inevitable conclusion that he, who had been through so many scenes with women, secretly found her simplicity diverting. Miss Betty had a little of her father in her, while it was part of her youth, too, that of all things she could least endure the shadow of a smile at her own expense.

"Oh, oh!" she cried, her voice shaking with anger. "I suppose your bad heart is half choked with your laughter at me."

She turned from him swiftly and left him.

Almost running, she entered the house and hurried to a seat by Mrs. Tanberry, nestling to her like a young sapling on a hillside. Instantaneously several gentlemen who had hastily acquitted themselves of various obligations in order to seek her sprang forward with eager greetings, so that when the stricken Tom, dazed and confounded by his evil luck, followed her at about five paces he found himself confronted by an impenetrable abatis formed by the spiked tails of the coats of General Trumble, Madrillon, Tappingham Marsh, Cummings and Jefferson Bareaud. Within this fortification rang out laughter and sally from Miss Carewe. Her color was high, and her eyes sparkled never more brightly.

Flourish and alarms sounded for a quadrille. Each of the semicircle, firmly elbowing his neighbor, begged the dance of Miss Betty, but Tom was himself again and laid a long, strong hand on Madrillon's shoulder, pressed him gently aside and said:

"Forgive me. Miss Carewe has honored me by the promise of this quadrille."

He bowed, offering his arm, and none of them was too vain to envy that bow and gesture.

For a moment he remained waiting. Miss Carewe rose slowly and, directly facing him, said in composed and even voice, "You force me to beg you never to address me again."

She placed her hand on the general's arm, turning her back squarely upon Tom.

In addition to those who heard, many persons in that part of the room saw the affront and paused in arrested attitudes. Others, observing these, turned inquiringly, so that sudden silence fell, broken only by the voice of Miss Betty as she moved away, talking cheerily to the general. Tom was left standing alone in the broken semicircle.

All the eyes swept from her to him and back. Then every one began to talk hastily about nothing. The young man's humiliation was public.

He went to the door under cover of the movement of the various couples to find places in the quadrille, yet every sidelong glance in the room still rested upon him, and he knew it. He remained in the hall alone through that dance and at its conclusion walked slowly through the rooms, speaking to people here and there as though nothing had happened, but when the music sounded again he went to the dressing room, found his hat and cloak and left the house. For awhile he stood on the opposite side of the street, watching the lighted windows, and twice he caught sight of the lilac and white brocade, the dark hair and the wreath of marguerites. Then, with a hot pain in his breast and the step of a grenadier, he marched down the street.

"You force me to beg you never to address me again."

• • • • • • • •

In the carriage Mrs. Tanberry took Betty's hand in hers. "I'll do as you wish, child," she said, "and never speak to you of him again as long as I live except this once. I think it was best for his own sake as well as yours, but"—

"He needed a lesson," interrupted Miss Betty wearily. She had danced long and hard, and she was very tired.

Mrs. Tanberry's staccato laugh came out irrepressibly. "All the vagabonds do, princess!" she cried. "And I think they are getting it."

"No, no; I don't mean"—

"We've turned their heads, my dear, between us, you and I, and we'll have to turn 'em again, or they'll break their necks looking over their shoulders at us, the owls!" She pressed the girl's hand affectionately. "But you'll let me say something just once and forgive me because we're the same foolish age, you know. It's only this: The next young man you suppress, take him off in a corner. Lead him away from the crowd where he won't have to stand and let them look at him afterward. That's all, my dear, and you mustn't mind."

"I'm not sorry!" said Miss Betty hotly. "I'm not sorry!"

"No, no," said Mrs. Tanberry soothingly. "It was better this time to do just what you did. I'd have done it myself, to make quite sure he would keep away—because I like him."

"I'm not sorry!" said Miss Betty again.

"I'm not sorry!" she repeated and reiterated to herself after Mrs. Tanberry had gone to bed. She had sunk into a chair in the library with a book, and "I'm not sorry!" she whispered as the open unread page blurred before her; "I'm not sorry!" He had needed his lesson, but she had to bear the recollection of how white his face went when he received it. Her affront had put about him a strange loneliness—the lone figure with the stilled crowd staring, it had made a picture from which her mind's eye had been unable to escape, danced she never so hard and late. Unconsciously Robert Carewe's daughter had avenged the other lonely figure which had stood in lonely humiliation before the staring eyes.

"I'm not sorry!" Ah, did they think it was in her to hurt any living thing in the world? The book dropped from her lap, and she bowed her head upon her hands. "I'm not sorry!"—and tears upon the small lace gauntlets!

She saw them and with an incoherent exclamation, half self pitying, half impatient, ran out to the stars above her garden.

She was there for perhaps half an hour, and just before she returned to the house she did a singular thing.

Standing where all was clear to the sky, where she had stood after her talk with the incroyable when he had bid her look to the stars, she raised her arms to them again, her face, pale with a great tenderness, uplifted.

"You, you, you!" she whispered. "I love you!"

And yet it was to nothing definite, to no man nor outline of a man, to no phantom nor dream lover, that she spoke; neither to him she had affronted nor to him who had bidden her look to the stars. Nor was it to the stars themselves.

She returned slowly and thoughtfully to the house, wondering what she had meant.

CHAPTER XI.

CRAILEY came home the next day with a new poem, but no fish. He lounged up the stairs late in the afternoon humming cheerfully to himself and, dropping his rod in a corner of Tom's office, laid the poem on the desk before his partner, chuckled softly and requested Mr. Vanrevel to set the rhymes to music immediately.

"Try it on your instrument," he said. "It's a simple verse about nothing but stars, and you can work it out in twenty minutes with the guitar."

"It is broken," said Tom, not looking up from his work.

"Broken! When?"

"Last night."

"Who broke it?"

"It fell from the table in my room."

"How? Easily mended, isn't it?"

"I think I shall not play it soon again."

Crailey swung his long legs off the sofa and abruptly sat up. "What's this?" he asked gravely.

Tom pushed his papers away from him, rose and went to the dusty window that looked to the west, where, at the end of the long street, the sun was setting behind the ruin of charred timbers on the bank of the shining river.

"It seems that I played once too often," he said.

Crailey was thoroughly astonished. He went to his friend and dropped a hand lightly on his shoulder. "What made you break the guitar? Tell me."

"What makes you think I broke it?" asked his partner sharply.

"Tell me why you did it," said Crailey.

And Tom, pacing the room, told him, while Crailey stood in silence looking him eagerly in the eye whenever Tom turned his way. The listener interrupted seldom. Once it was to exclaim:

"But you haven't said why you broke the guitar?"

"'If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out!' I ought to have cut off the hands that played to her."

"And cut your throat for singing to her?"

"She was right!" the other answered, striding up and down the room. "Right—a thousand times—in everything she did. That I should even approach her was an unspeakable insolence. I had forgotten, and so, possibly, had she, but I had not even been properly introduced to her."

"No, you hadn't; that's true," observed Crailey reflectively. "You don't seem to have much to reproach her with, Tom."

"Reproach her!" cried the other. "That I should dream she would speak to me or have anything to do with me was to cast a doubt upon her loyalty as a daughter. She was right, I say! And she did the only thing she could do—rebuked me before them all. No one ever merited what he got more roundly than I deserved that. Who was I, in her eyes, that I should besiege her with my importunities, who but her father's worst enemy?"

Deep anxiety knitted Crailey's brow. "I understood she knew of the quarrel," he said thoughtfully. "I saw that the other evening when I helped her out of the crowd. She spoke of it on the way home, I remember. But how did she know that you were Vanrevel? No one in town would be apt to mention you to her."

"No, but she did know, you see."

"Yes," returned Mr. Gray slowly, "so it seems. Probably her father told her to avoid you and described you so that she recognized you as the man who caught the kitten."

He paused and looked at Tom, who continued to pace up and down the floor. After a time Crailey, fumbling in his coat, found a long cheroot and as he lit it inquired casually:

"It seems that I played once too often."

"Do you remember if she addressed you by name?"

"I think not," Tom answered, halting. "What does it matter?"

Crailey drew a deep breath.

"It doesn't," he returned.

"She knew me well enough," said Tom sadly as he resumed his sentry-go.

"Yes," repeated Crailey deliberately. "So it seems! So it seems!" He blew a long stream of smoke out into the air before him and softly murmured again: "So it seems! So it seems!"

Silence fell, broken only by the sound of Tom's footsteps, until, presently, some one informally shouted his name from the street below. It was only Will Cummings passing the time of day, but when Tom turned from the window after answering him Crailey and his poem were gone.

That evening Vanrevel sat in the dusty office, driving himself to his work with a sharp goad, for there was a face that came between him and all else in the world and a voice that sounded always in his ears, but the work was done before he rose from his chair, though he showed a haggard visage as he bent above his candles to blow them out.

It was 11 o'clock. Crailey had not come back, and Tom knew that his light hearted friend would not return for many hours, and so, having no mind to read and no belief that he could if he tried, he went out to walk the streets. He went down to the river first, and stood for a little while gazing at the ruins of the two warehouses, and that was like a man with a headache beating his skull against a wall. As he stood on the blackened wharf he saw how the charred beams rose above him against the sky like a gallows, and it seemed to him that nothing could have been a better symbol, for here he had hanged his self respect. "Reproach her!" He, who had so displayed his imbecility before her! Had he been her father's best friend he should have had too great a sense of shame to dare to speak to her after that night, when her quiet intelligence had exhibited him to himself and to all the world as naught else than a fool—and a noisy one at that!

Suddenly a shudder convulsed him. He struck his open palm across his forehead and spoke aloud, while, from horizon to horizon, the night air grew thick with the whispered laughter of observing hobgoblins:

"And even if there had been no stairway, we could have slid down the hose line!"

He retraced his steps, a tall, gray figure moving slowly through the blue darkness, and his lips formed the heartsick shadow of a smile when he found that he had unconsciously turned into Carewe street. Presently he came to a gap in a hedge, through which he had sometimes stolen to hear the sound of a harp and a girl's voice singing, but he did not enter there tonight, though he paused a moment, his head bowed on his breast.

There came a sound of voices. They seemed to be moving toward the hedge, toward the gap where he stood, one a man's, eager, quick, but very musical; the other a girl's, a rich and clear contralto that passed into Tom's soul like a psalm of rejoicing and like a scimiter of flame. He shivered and moved away quickly, but not before the man's voice, somewhat louder for the moment, came distinctly from the other side of the hedge.

"After all," said the voice, with a ripple of laughter—"after all, weren't you a little hard on that poor Mr. Gray?"

Tom did not understand, but he knew the voice. It was that of Crailey Gray.

He heard the same voice again that night and again stood unseen. Long after midnight he was still tramping the streets on his lonely rounds when he chanced to pass the Rouen House, which hostelry bore to the uninitiated eye the appearance of having closed its doors upon all hospitalities for the night in strict compliance with the law of the city fathers, yet a slender wand of bright light might be discovered underneath the street door of the barroom.

From within the merry retreat issued an uproar of shouting, raucous laughter and the pounding of glasses on tables, heralding all too plainly the hypocrisy of the landlord and possibly that of the city fathers also. Tom knew what company was gathered there—gamblers, truckmen, drunken farmers, men from the river steamers making riot while their boats lay at the wharf, with a motley gathering of good-for-nothings of the back alleys and tippling clerks from the Main street stores. There came loud cries for a song, and in answer the voice of Crailey rose over the general din, somewhat hoarse and never so musical when he sang as when he spoke, yet so touching in its dramatic tenderness that soon the noise fell away, and the roisterers sat quietly to listen. It was not the first time Ben Jonson's song had stilled a disreputable company:

"I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
Not so much honoring thee
As giving it the hope that there
It might not withered be."

Perhaps just then Vanrevel would have wished to hear him sing anything in the world rather than that, for on Crailey's lips it carried too much meaning tonight, after the voice in the garden. And Tom lingered no more near the betraying sliver of light beneath the door than he had by the gap in the hedge, but went steadily on his way.

Not far from the hotel he passed a small building brightly lighted and echoing with unusual clamors of industry—the office of the Rouen Journal. The press was going, and Mr. Cummings' thin figure crossed and recrossed the windows, while his voice could be heard energetically bidding his assistants to "Look alive!" so that Tom imagined that something might have happened between the Nueces river and the Rio Grande, but he did not stop to ask the journalist, for he desired to behold the face of none of his friends until he had fought out some things within himself. So he trode on toward nowhere.

Day was breaking when Mr. Gray climbed the stairs to his room. There were two flights, the ascent of the first of which occupied about half an hour of Crailey's invaluable time, and the second might have taken more of it or possibly consumed the greater part of the morning had he received no assistance; but, as he reclined to meditate upon the first landing, another man entered the hallway from without, ascended quickly, and Crailey became pleasantly conscious that two strong hands had lifted him to his feet and presently that he was being borne aloft upon the newcomer's back. It seemed quite a journey, yet the motion was soothing, so he made no effort to open his eyes until he found himself gently deposited upon the couch in his own chamber, when he smiled amiably and, looking up, discovered his partner standing over him.

Tom was very pale, and there were deep violet scrawls beneath his eyes. For once in his life he had come home later than Crailey.

"First time, you know," said Crailey, with difficulty. "You'll admit first time completely incapable? Often needed guiding hand, but never—quite—before."

"Yes," said Tom quietly, "it is the first time I ever saw you quite finished."

"Think I must be growing old, and constitution refuses bear it. Disgraceful to be seen in condition, yet celebration justified. H'rah for the news!" He waved his hand wildly. "Old red, white and blue! American eagle now kindly proceed to scream! Star spangled banner intends streaming to all the trade winds! Sea to sea! Glorious victories on political thieving exhibition—no, expedition! Everybody not responsible for the trouble to go and get himself patriotically killed!"

"What do you mean?"

"Water!" said the other feebly. Tom brought the pitcher, and Crailey, setting his hot lips to it, drank long and deeply; then, with his friend's assistance, he tied a heavily moistened towel round his head. "All right very soon and sober again," he muttered and lay back upon the pillow with eyes tightly closed in an intense effort to concentrate his will. When he opened them again, four or five minutes later, they had marvelously cleared and his look was self contained and sane.

"Haven't you heard the news?" He spoke much more easily now. "It came at midnight to the Journal."

"No; I've been walking in the country."

"The Mexicans crossed the Rio Grande on the 26th of last month, captured Captain Thornton and murdered Colonel Crook. That means war is certain."

"It has been certain for a long time," said Tom. "Polk has forced it from the first."

"Then it's a pity he can't be the only man to die!"

"Have they called for volunteers?" asked Tom, going toward the door.

"No, but if the news is true they will."

"Yes," said Tom, and as he reached the hallway he paused. "Can I help you to undress?"

"Certainly not!" Crailey sat up indignantly. "Can't you see that I'm perfectly sober? It was the merest temporary fit, and I've shaken it off. Don't you see?" He got upon his feet, staggered and came to the door with infirm steps.

"You're going to bed, aren't you?" asked Tom. "You'd much better."

"No," answered Crailey. "Are you?"

"No. I'm going to work."

"You've been all up night, too, haven't you?" Crailey put his hand on the other's shoulder. "Were you hunting for me?"

SUNLIGHT SOAP is better than other Soaps but is best when used in the Sunlight way. Follow directions.

SUNLIGHT WAY OF WASHING

FIRST.—Dip the article to be washed in a tub of lukewarm water, draw it out on a washboard and rub the soap lightly over it. Be particular not to miss soaping all over. THEN roll it in a tight roll, lay in the tub under the water, and go on the same way until all the pieces have the soap rubbed on, and are rolled up.

Then go away for thirty minutes to one hour and let the "Sunlight" Soap do its work.

NEXT.—After soaking the full time rub the clothes lightly out on a wash board, and the dirt will drop out; turn the garment inside out to get at the seams, but don't use any more soap; don't scald or boil a single piece, and don't wash through two suds. If the water gets too dirty, pour a little out and add fresh. If a streak is hard to wash, rub some more soap on it, and throw the piece back into the suds for a few minutes.

LASTLY COMES THE RINSING, which is to be done in lukewarm water, taking special care to get all the dirty suds away, then wring out and hang up to dry.

For Woolens and Flannels proceed as follows:—Shake the articles free from dust. Cut a tablet of SUNLIGHT SOAP into shavings, pour into a gallon of boiling water and whisk into a lather. When just lukewarm, work articles in the lather without rubbing. Squeeze out dirty water without twisting and rinse thoroughly in two relays of lukewarm water. Squeeze out water without twisting and hang in the open air.

☞ The most delicate colors may be safely washed in the "Sunlight" way.

REBATERS PUNISHED.

Heavy Fines For Packing Firms and the Burlington Railway.

Kansas City, June 21.—In the U. S. District Court here yesterday morning Judge Smith McPherson of Red Oak, Iowa, passed sentence upon the seven defendants recently convicted in this court of making concessions and accepting and conspiring to accept rebates on shipments. Judgment in the nature of fines were assessed a follows:

Swift & Co., $15,000; Cudahy Packing Co., $15,000; Armour Packing Co., $15,000; Nelson, Morris & Co., $15,000; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, $15,000.

George L. Thomas of New York was fined $6,000 and sentenced to four months in the penitentiary.

L. B. Taggert of New York, freight broker, was fined $4,000 and sentenced to three months in the penitentiary, for securing rebates from railways on shipments from New York to St. Louis and Kansas City drygoods concerns.

POLICE PROVOKED RIOTING.

Governor Prolonged It, Says Report of Douma's Commissioner.

St. Petersburg, June 23.—At a crowded meeting of the Constitutional Democratic Club last night, Deputy Stchepkin reported the findings of the committee of the Lower House of Parliament, which went to Bialistok to investigate the facts in connection with the anti-Jewish outbreak there.

According to this report, the police, with the aid of subordinate officers of the police and military, provoked the outbreak by the circulation of false rumors against the Jews.

The Governor of Bialistok, though not directly responsible, was said to have been criminally guilty of prolonging the excesses by absence from his post.

U. S. SENATES SYMPATHY.

Horrified by the Reports of the Jewish Massacres.

Washington, June 23.—The Senate yesterday adopted the following joint resolution:

"That the people of the United States are horrified by the reports of the massacre of Hebrews in Russia on account of their race and religion, and that those bereaved thereby have the hearty sympathy of the people of this country."

The resolution was adopted without debate. As it is a joint resolution it will be necessary for it to be acted upon by the House and signed by the President to be complete legislative act.

Unknown Shoots Himself

Niagara Falls, June 23.—An unknown man shot himself at the brink of the Horseshoe Falls in Queen Victoria Park last evening about 7.30 o'clock. When found the body was slowly slipping into the river from where it had fallen after the shooting. Papers on the body show he was from New York.

Hymen In An Auto

By Edith M. Doane

Copyright, 1906, by Beatrix Reade

"A presumptuous young coxcomb! Does he think that his money gives him a right to make love to Charlotte Pearson?"

"But, father"—

"I tell you there's nothing more to be said!" stormed the colonel.

Charlotte's slender figure stiffened. The brown eyes flamed with a defiance very like the colonel's own.

"He has a right to demand justice," she insisted. "There are nothing but the best accounts of him on every side. Yet just because of that old grudge against his father you forbid him the house."

"And I shall see to it that he stays out. Presumptuous young jackanapes!" interrupted the colonel explosively.

"But I love him!"

"Love him!" The colonel looked as if he would burst.

Charlotte's cheeks were flushed; her eyes were very bright. "And I intend to marry him," she finished as the heavy portiere fell behind her.

The colonel glared impotently at the unoffending yellow curtain; then, plunging his hands into his pockets, stalked up and down the room, boiling with wrath.

* * * * * * *

As the deep tones of the town clock struck 12 a motor car tore along the road at high speed. It was a red car, and in the brilliant moonlight that made the night as clear as day its occupants were plainly visible—a girl in a long, loose automobile coat and a man who drove the machine with desperate haste, his eyes steadfastly on the road except when he turned to regard his companion with rapturous delight.

THE OLD MAN CLIMBED INTO THE WAITING AUTO.

Charlotte had been in earnest. She loved her bluff, choleric father, but he should have known it was impossible to forbid a daughter of two and twenty to marry a man of irreproachable character who was able and anxious to marry her.

"It is so daring!" she had objected.

"Yes, but there is no other way, and I love you so!" Osborne pleaded, and the look in his eyes had melted Charlotte's last lingering scruple.

The machine whirled along at a reckless pace, spinning along the smooth, hard road, taking the hills with dizzy intrepidity.

"What if something should happen?" suggested Charlotte nervously as they breasted a long slope and, turning abruptly, dipped suddenly down a dangerous descent.

Robert Osborne seized the lever of the hand brake and jammed it on. "Something is going to happen," he returned blissfully. His eyes, watchful and alert, were on the road before him, but his voice left nothing to be desired.

"I didn't mean that," said Charlotte, with a radiant smile. "I meant"—

As they swung around a curve at a desperate pace and struck a bit of level road Osborne let out the machine another notch, and Charlotte's voice trailed into silence as the car gave a quick jump and tore along the firm, level surface.

"Whatever you mean, it won't make any difference, dear." The motor beat a continuous accompaniment to Osborne's voice. "You are mine, and I won't give you up. Mine. Do you hear, dear?"

The fresh air rushing past cooled her face—and fears. She looked, with a sense of security, at the tense, watchful figure beside her. Yes; she was glad she had come, but—

"It is daring," she said softly again.

The car dashed on, speeding past wooded slopes, scudding through the bright patches of moonlight. As they whirled around a short curve the scattered houses on the outskirts of a town came into view. They drove quietly through the deserted streets. A low set, yellow light twinkled from the vicarage window—all the other houses were darkened. Osborne drove cautiously up to the little lighted house.

The door was opened by a ruddy, kindly featured old man who, greeting them cheerily, ushered them into a pleasant, homelike room.

"This is very irregular," he said, half smiling, half disapproving. "It is only because I have known you, Robert, ever since you were born and baptized you and confirmed you that I am willing."

Breaking off abruptly, he took Charlotte's hand in his and regarded her searchingly.

"Are you quite sure you will have nothing to regret in this hasty marriage?"

"I am sure." Charlotte blushed crimson, but met his eyes unflinchingly.

Then the minister opened his prayer book and Robert took her hand in his and drew her gently forward.

"I, Robert, take thee, Charlotte"—

Just then there broke on the stillness of the night a sound that froze the words on his lips.

It was the continuous, rapid beat of a motor car, and they knew it at once for what it was—the roar of the colonel's automobile.

Charlotte's face went white with terror and Osborne's mouth settled in one grim straight line as he dashed to the door.

The distant trees loomed specter-like in the white glare of the headlights as the car dashed toward the vicarage.

With one quick swing of his powerful shoulders Osborne grasped Charlotte and lifted her into his car.

"Come with us! Get into the car!" he commanded the minister desperately.

For an instant Osborne thought he would not do it, and then unexpectedly the old man climbed into the waiting automobile.

Osborne bounded on the step, seized the steering wheel and started the car. The throb of the motor deepened and the car was off with a bound.

"Now go on! Finish it!" demanded Osborne.

"This is most irregular," demurred the minister. He stopped—hesitated—and then glanced back at the approaching headlights, and the ministerial shoulders squared in a decidedly unministerial fashion; the ministerial jaw set itself stubbornly; the ministerial eyes regarded the young couple before him sympathetically.

"I am ready," he said.

"I, Robert, take thee, Charlotte," in Osborne's firm voice to the rhythmical accompaniment of the chug, chug of the motor.

"I, Charlotte, take thee, Robert," while the wind blew fresh in their faces and trees and houses raced swiftly by.

"Whom God hath joined together let not man put asunder." And Robert Osborne leaned toward his wife and kissed her on the lips.

The pursuing car had been following hard on the retreating red disk of the runaway motor, and when it slowed down the other car was beside it.

"Just in time!" cried the colonel triumphantly. He was breathless and disheveled and still bubbling with wrath.

The minister smiled at him cordially. "Yes, sir," he responded genially, "just in time, sir, to give them your blessing."

Training Hawks.

In training hawks instinctive fear of man is the first obstacle to overcome, and, as usual in taming all wild creatures, hunger is the first and foremost means to bring it into subjection. As soon as it will consent to take food from the hand and submit to be handled, stroked and hooded without much struggling or "baiting," as it is termed, the first step is made in its education. Much tact and gentleness, together with perfect quiet, will work wonders in inducing it to feed. The first form of hood used is called a "rufter hood," being looser in shape and softer and having a larger opening for the beak than the hood proper. This hood, which every hawk has to become accustomed to wear at all times, except when flying, is stiff and blocked to fit the head, care being taken that the prominent eyes are not rubbed or injured by imperfect fit, and is gayly ornamented on top with a tuft of scarlet or other colored wool, surmounted with a small bunch of feathers. It is of the first importance in training hawks, and by means of it they can be handled and carried anywhere, among all sorts of sights and scenes that, were they not blindfolded, would cause the hawks to bate so violently that injury to themselves would result.

Getting a Verdict.

A Texas correspondent tells "Law Notes" how an obstinate juryman was circumvented by his fellow judges of the facts. The offence charged was assault with intent to murder. After the jury had been out about two hours they returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of aggravated assault, and assess his punishment at $25 fine, and herewith pay the fine." On inquiry as to the meaning of the last clause of the verdict, it came out that eleven of the jurors had agreed that the defendant was not guilty, but the twelfth doggedly hung out for a conviction for aggravated assault, and would not consent to a punishment less than a fine of $25. Finding it a hopeless task to bring over the obstinate one to their way of thinking, the eleven finally decided to agree with him, and "chipped in" enough to pay the fine.

Janin's Rebuke.

Jules Janin, the celebrated French writer and critic, was not malicious, but occasionally he would say a severe thing, as if it were wrung from him without his being able to hold it back. One day a rich but ill natured man, who made sad havoc of the French language, called upon Janin and began a tirade upon some trivial matter in execrable French.

After listening politely for some time Janin at last replied to his visitor in Latin.

"What do you mean, M. Janin?" demanded the man angrily. "I don't understand you. I can't speak Latin."

"Try, sir, try!" cried the great critic. "You could not speak it worse than you do French."

INSECT ENGINEERING

FEATS OF THE CARPENTER BEE AND THE TUMBLEBUG.

The Sexton Beetle Is an Expert Gravedigger—Wonderful Skill of the Spider and the Great Strain That His Elastic Web Will Bear.

Long before man had thought of the saw, the saw fly had used the same tool, made after the same fashion and used in the same way, for the purpose of making slits in the branches of trees so that she might have a secure place to deposit her eggs. The carpenter bee, with only the tools which nature has given her, cuts a round hole, the full diameter of her body, through thick boards and so makes a tunnel by which she can have a safe retreat in which to rear her young. The tumblebug, without derrick or machinery, rolls over large masses of dirt many times her own weight, and the sexton beetle will in a few hours bury beneath the ground the carcass of a comparatively large animal. All these feats require a degree of instinct which in a reasoning creature would be called engineering skill, but none of them is as wonderful as the feats performed by the spider. This extraordinary little animal has the faculty of propelling her threads directly against the wind, and by means of her slender cords she can haul up and suspend bodies which are many times her own weight.

Some years ago a paragraph went the rounds of the papers in which it was said that a spider had suspended an unfortunate mouse, raising it from the ground and leaving it to perish miserably between heaven and earth. Would be philosophers made great fun of the statement and ridiculed it unmercifully. I know not how true it was, but I know that it might have been true.

Some years ago in the village of Havana in the state of New York a spider entangled a milk snake in her threads and actually raised it some distance from the ground, and this, too, in spite of the struggles of the reptile, which was alive.

By what process of engineering did this comparatively small and feeble insect succeed in overcoming and lifting up by mechanical means the mouse or the snake? The solution is easy enough if we only give the question a little thought.

The spider is furnished with one of the most efficient mechanical implements known to engineers—viz, a strong elastic thread. That the thread is strong is well known. Indeed, there are few substances that will support a greater strain than the silk of the silkworm or the spider, careful experiment having shown that for equal sizes the strength of these fibers exceeds that of common iron. But notwithstanding its strength the spider's thread would be useless as a mechanical power if it were not for its elasticity. The spider has no blocks or pulleys, and therefore it cannot cause the thread to divide up and run in different directions, but the elasticity of the thread more than makes up for this and renders possible the lifting of an animal much heavier than a mouse or a snake. This may require a little explanation.

Let us suppose that a child can lift a six pound weight one foot high and do this twenty times a minute. Furnish him with 350 rubber bands, each capable of pulling six pounds through one foot when stretched. Let these bands be attached to a wooden platform on which stands a pair of horses weighing 2,100 pounds, or rather more than a ton. If now the child will go to work and stretch these rubber bands singly, hooking each one up as it is stretched, in less than twenty minutes he will have raised the pair of horses one foot.

We thus see that the elasticity of the rubber bands enables the child to divide the weight of horses into 350 pieces of six pounds each, and, at the rate of a little less than one every three seconds, he lifts all these separate pieces one foot, so that the child easily lifts this enormous weight.

Each spider's thread acts like one of the elastic rubber bands. Let us suppose that the mouse or snake weighed half an ounce and that each thread is capable of supporting a grain and a half. The spider would have to connect the mouse with the point from which it was to be suspended with 150 threads, and if the little quadruped was once swung off his feet he would be powerless. By pulling successively on each thread, and shortening it a little, the mouse or snake might be raised to any height within the capacity of the building or structure in which the work was done. So that to those who have ridiculed the story we may justly say, "There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in your philosophy."

What object the spider could have had in his work I am unable to see. It may have been a dread of the harm which the mouse or snake might work or it may have been the hope that the decaying carcass would attract flies, which would furnish food for the engineer. I can vouch for the truth of the snake story, however, and the object of this article is to explain and render credible a very extraordinary feat of insect engineering.

Era of Actium.

The "era of Actium," adopted during the early days of the Roman empire, commemorates the great victory gained by Octavius over the troops of Antony and Cleopatra, Jan. 1, B. C. 30. It was often used among the Romans both in writing and colloquially, just as in England people speak of events as occurring before or after the conquest, or as persons in this country frequently refer to events as having happened before or after the war.

BIG CIRCUS DEAL.

RINGLING BROS. BUY OUT THE FOREPAUGH & SELLS CO. CIRCUS.

Rock Island, Ill., June 23. — The completion of a deal was announced yesterday by which the heirs of the late James A. Bailey sell the Forepaugh-Sells Brothers' shows to Ringling Brothers. This will probably end a circus war that has raged fiercely through this section this season, with extravagant advertising and price cutting.

Accidentally Drowned

An inquest was held upon the bodies of John Brill and Thomas Farrell, who were drowned in the Moira river on the 13th inst. STUDENTS, MASONS AND CHILDREN

WERE ADDRESSED ON SPECIAL OCCASION BY ELOQUENT ORATORS IN FOUR CITY CHURCHES YESTERDAY — NOTES OF OTHER CHURCH SERVICES.

Tabernacle.

The Baccalaureate sermon in connection with the commencement exercises of Albert College was preached yesterday morning by the Rev. Dr. Baker, of Toronto, at the Tabernacle. The students of the college marched to the church in a bdoy and they were accompanied by the Principal, Rev. Dr. Dyer, and the faculty. There were a large number and the centre of the church was ussigned to them. When the services commenced the church was well filled up. About the pulpit and chancel were flowers in profusion; also the college colors. After the singing of a hymn Rev. J. Ferguson led in an appropriate prayer. Other ministers who occupied seats about the pulpit were Revs. A. Martin, A. Campbell, Dr. Dyer and G. Brown.

At the conclusion of the usual devotional exercises, Rev. Dr. Baker announced his text, namely, 1st Corinthians, 3rd chapter and 9th verse:

> "For we are laborers together with God; ye are God's husbandry; ye are God's building."

In his opening remarks the Rev. gentleman said that the whole philosophy of life was in the passage of the text. We were all co-workers with God, no matter in what avocation we might be engaged. We have a relation with God in our various spheres in life. The statement of the text that we were laborers together with God was a universal law, the law of husbandry. The tiller of the soil must be a co-worker with God in order that his lands may produce fruit or grain of thirty, sixty or an hundred fold. It was necessary for man to use his skill in preparing the ground for the seed, and God by the rain and sunshine will give the increase. Man's skill with the stones, trees, etc., provided by God, is able to erect the beautiful temple as a place of worship. As in temporal things, so it is in spiritual things. Soul culture is the same. God and man work together. God gives seasons for the soul's refreshings. Malice, hatred and other evils would be ours if it were not for God's spirit working with ours. God has done His part and we must do ours. In the building of character we must be coworkers with God. Know ye not, He said, that ye are the temples for the indwelling of the Holy Ghost? God wants us to be Christ-like and build characters that will adorn. Man working with God rises up to possibilities that are within him. With God's help we can rise and we can be perfect. Christian education is also necessary and this is obtainable. In order to reach the highest point possible in life is it not essential and necessary that we have Christian education? The universal law is that man can accomplish nothing without God's assistance. The church would soon die without the co-operative power of God. The church must march on and do its work. It is only a successful church that is marching on doing God's work, and with His assistance is accomplishing a good and grand work. God wants us to shine in His movements. We must move on in God's life. This is not only the teachings of the scriptures, but the teachings of the law of nature. What we have and are is not absolutely ours. If necessary the state can claim our property if it be needed for railway or other purposes. The state can claim us if we are needed in defence of our country. What we have we hold in trust from God, and we should do all in our power to assist in accomplishing good. Money is only held in trust, and we are responsible for its proper use. We should use all our gifts for God's glory and do all we can towards helping our fellow-man. When we do this we are assisting to bring righteousness upon the land. There may be confusion even at present in church, in state, in society. Thank God that there is confusion in Russia, in England, and confusion caused by President Roosevelt. This confusion, when all is tranquil, will mean a betterment of many things. All work should be divine, no matter what it may be. God calls some men to the ministry and some to merchandise. Both are divine. God calls some women to work in the mission field and some to motherhood. These are divine. Rise up, no matter what your position may be and glorify God. Whilst the text does not mention any reward for labor performed, God has his system of rewards and He will reward according to the work performed. It is just as honorable to labor upon a country circuit as to preach in a city temple. Our prayer should be anywhere, only that I may be assured that I have God's favor. Let us be obedient to God's work. Jesus Christ became obedient even to the death upon the cross. He was obedient to His Father's will. Whilst the text does not mention anything about success, it will follow if we are true co-workers with God. Has the world promised success as humanity views success? From a human standpoint the Lord Jesus Christ was a failure. When He was upon the cross the world said He saved others, Himself He could not save. Yet His life and death was a grand triumphant success.

In his closing remarks the preacher spoke more especially to the students and urged them to take the thought of the text with them through life and to put their lives and hearts in touch with God. He appealed to them to respond to the highest, noblest and best there was in life and to be co-workers with God. At last He would say to them and to all who are faithful, come and sit on my right hand and dwell with me for ever more.

During the service Miss M. Stork sang, very sweetly, a solo entitled, "The King of Love My Shepherd Is," and Mr. G. Clute sang a solo entitled, "Two Cities."

Masons at Holloway St.

Before stating the text the preacher welcomed the Masonic brethren to worship on this anniversary of St. John the Baptist, renewing and strengthening fraternal bonds, the present with the past, the speculative with the operative Masonry. The texts chosen were from St. Mark, 13; 1-2, "Master, see what manner of stones and buildings are here!" "Jesus said there shall not be left one stone upon another"; John, 4, 21, "The hour cometh when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father. . . God is a spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth"; Ephesians, 2; 19, "Now, therefore, we are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief cornerstone. In whom ye are builded together for an habitation of God." The speaker said in part; We notice the Saviour leaving the temple for the last time on His way to the cross, where he became the sacrifice for all worshippers. We hear Him say; "Seest thou these great buildings?" &c., and we are driven to contemplation of the evolution from the rude altar to the temple and from the sacrifice of the lamb, &c., to that of the Son of God. We, therefore, in some measure realize the magnitude of the law. Without the shedding of blood is no remission. Had there been no sacrifice there had been no temple. One greater than the temple or Solomon, who built it, is here, in whom all the sacrifices centred. The Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world, and a sacrifice acceptable unto God. The same yesterday, today and forever. This temple fills eternity, and herein is the fellowship and citizenship that Paul speaks of in our last text, and herein is the importance to the individual, "Your body is the temple of Holy Ghost, made so by the cleansing of the blood of Christ." Yes, Jesus pointed to the temple, and we are reminded of Solomon's receiving the plan from the great architect and sending to the Tyrian King for competent mechanics of Hirim of Bif and his master workmen, and in seven and one-half years, without sound of hammer, "like some tall palm the noiseless fabric grew." In the order that commemorates the work is conducted by quiet, orderly methods. No hammer of contention, no axe of division, no tool of mischief. The time came when synagogues, temples and cathedrals spread throughout the world, and the Masonic art was in full bloom in operative labor and to this day many of these monuments stand. The speaker had visited St. Peter's, at Rome; St. Mark's, Venice; the Cathedral, Milan; St. Paul's and Westminster, England, all of which are built on the crucifixion and on this cross. Our noble Sovereign bows and, like his illustrious father, confesses

"Nothing in my hands I bring,
Simply to thy cross I cling."

Sovereign or subject must come and worship here. The master architect or laborer, whosoever will may come, and the heart becomes the miniature emblem of the great spiritual temple not made with hands. The first temple was built on the threshing floor of Arunah or Ornan on Mt. Moriah. The temple of spiritual character must be built on the threshing floor of your heart and mine, Jesus Christ the chief cornerstone.

St. Andrew's.

At the morning service the children of the Sunday School took an active part, by singing appropriate hymns and engaging in responsive reading. It was not only an interesting, but instructive, service. The pastor, Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, preached and his discourse was especially directed to the children. The subject was "Crosses and Crowns," and the text was from Revelations, 6th chapter, 2nd verse;

> "And I saw and behold a white horse, and he that sat on him had a bow, and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering and to conquer."

The "Bird Song," rendered by the children, was much appreciated, as was also a duet sang by Miss Grace Shanks and Master J. Denmark, entitled "Summer Time."

Bridge Street.

It is often "young people's night" at Bridge St. Church, but it was particularly so yesterday evening, for the service was part of the commencement exercises of Albert College, and the students of that institution were all present. The service was conducted by the Rev. J. Bruce Hunter, who was assisted by the Rev. Dr. Dyer and Rev. Professor E. R. Doxsee. The preacher was the Rev. E. N. Baker, D.D. Dr. Baker's sermon was a most suitable one, his text being, "So run that ye may attain." It was listened to with rapt attention. It seemed to us that Dr. Baker was at his best and that the recollections of his four years' successful pastorate of Bridge St. Church was quite an incentive to him. During the service six members of the boy choir, namely, Harry Hunt, Willie Wallace, Robbie Pringle, Arthur Skinner, Percy Weeks and James Booth, sang "The Palms," the choir joining in the chorus. Miss G. Price sang "O Father, Hear Us."

Christ Church.

"Some Things that Conduce to Parochial Success," was the subject discussed last evening by the Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave. His text was from Galations, 6th chapter, 9th verse:

> "And let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

Baptist Church.

Pastor Emerson preached at both services. The morning subject was "Life's Tragedies." The evening subject was "Is there a Heaven?" and the text John 14-2. This was the fifth of a series of sermons on "Questions Men are Asking." The highest instinct in man demands a future life. What is to be the nature of that life? We find in Revelations a picture of what Heaven is to be. It matters not so much to us what Heaven is like, for if God is there, that is Heaven. Here we live in an illusion, but Heaven is a reality. Here we struggle constantly with sin, but Heaven is a place of moral perfection. Earth is sin-cursed, but Heaven is the place where all that is holy is germinated. Here things are very unequally divided, but Heaven is a place of re-adjustment. In order to qualify for entrance into Heaven we must make preparation here. In conclusion the speaker urged his hearers to receive Christ by faith, and thus Heaven may begin even now in the heart.

St. Michael's.

At the celebration of High Mass yesterday morning Miss Kate Bawden sang at the offertory, "Light in Darkness." In the evening at vespers two solos were given and both were highly appreciated. Miss Jessie Phillips sang "Consider the Lillies," and Miss Benson, of Ottawa, sang "O Divine Redeemer." Both young ladies have excellent voices and they were heard to advantage in the selections rendered.

Bethel Hall.

The subject last evening was "Heaven," which was shown from scriptures to be God's dwelling place, where Christ has gone to prepare a place for His own. It was shown that by nature man is not fit for such a place and cannot fit himself for it, but that on the cross Christ has done the work for man and salvation is solely by faith in Him as our sin bearer. (John 5, 24.) Moreover the believer on the Lord Jesus Christ may with confidence say he will certainly be there, that his name is written in Heaven and that when Christ comes for His own it will be to take him to be with Him.

Welcomed by Sunday School.

The Rev. Dr. Baker was welcomed back to Bridge St. Sunday School in the afternoon in that school's own peculiar and enthusiastic way. After his general reception by the school all the officers and teachers came to the platform and shook hands with him. The Rev. J. Bruce Hunter was also welcomed, as the pastor, during the absence of the Rev. J. P. Wilson. The boy choir led the singing, and also sang "The Glory Song," the school joining.

AN INVOLUNTARY BATH.

TWO YOUNG FISHERMEN SWAMP THEIR BOAT AND HAVE TO SWIM ASHORE.

Two young men, whose names could not be ascertained on Saturday afternoon had a rather thrilling experience, which might have cost them their lives. It appears that they rowed across the bay, intending to fish. When some yards from Dickson's island they threw the anchor overboard and the rope attached to the anchor was not long enough to reach to the bortom. The result was the boat was drawn to one side and a quantity of water ran in. One of the parties, in reaching for the rope, caused the boat to go to one side still further and the result was that it swamped. The young men were compelled to abandon their craft and swim to shore, which they reached in safety. By securing another boat they were able to reach their skiff and tow it to shore.

W. KIRBY, F.R.S.C., DEAD

Author of the Best Canadian Historical Romance Passes.

Late Queen Victoria, Lord Tennyson, Duke of Argyll, and Other Notables Recognized His Literary Merit—Strong Advocate of British Connection—Editor and Proprietor of The Niagara Mail in 1853—90 Years Old.

Niagara-on-the-Lake, June 23.—William Kirby, F.R.S.C., Canada's oldest litterateur, born in 1817, and almost in his 90th year, died on Saturday. A native of Yorkshire, England, he has always been known as a strong advocate for British connection. Leaving England in 1832 he received part of his education in Cincinnati from a highly educated Scot, Alexander Kinmount. Coming to Canada in 1839 he lived some years in St. David's, and afterwards married Miss Whitmore, whose mother was a daughter of the noted United Empire Loyalist, Daniel Servos.

He next became the editor and proprietor of The Niagara Mail, in 1853, and his first poem, "The United Empire," was printed in the office of that paper, the greater part of the work, it is said, having been done by himself. On his retirement from The Mail he became collector of customs, which office he held for many years.

His greatest work, "Le Chien d'Or," perhaps the best Canadian historical romance ever written, has given its author deserved fame. The story of the writing and publishing of the loss of the manuscript for nearly three years, its finding in the Grank Trunk baggage room, Toronto, and its subsequent adventures is a romance itself. His poems, "Canadian Idylls," "Queen's Birthday," "Dead Sea Roses," "Kirby Wiske," "The Hungry Years," etc., give us many stirring incidents of Canadian history, all breathing an intense loyalty, while his translations of French and German poems show his linguistic as well as poetic powers.

His latest work, "Annals of Niagara," gives many almost forgotten stories of early days in the old capital.

He was made a fellow of the Royal Society, and though his reserve and modesty kept him from being as well known as he might have been, still by the highest in this and other lands his merits as a man and a poet have been acknowledged. The Princess Louise, at Ottawa, conveyed to him the pleasure the late Queen Victoria had had in reading "The Golden Dog." Letters from Lord Tennyson, the Duke of Argyle and many noted persons attest the esteem in which he was held.

For many years reeve and magistrate of the town, he lived lately a quiet life of retirement.

He leaves a son, John Kirby of Toronto, and a grandson, Eric Kirby, now in England.

A good constitution enabled him to resist the disease which attacked him more than a year ago.

Gets Verdict For $25,000.

New York, June 25.—A jury before Justice O'Gorman Saturday awarded Mrs. Henrietta Cobb of Meridian, Miss., $25,000 for injuries resulting from a Pennsylvania Railroad tunnel blast three years ago. She had sued for $35,000. A rock four inches thick flying through the three-inch panels of a big door in her cousin's mill, the result of a blast by the employes of the Pennsylvania Railway.

To Wipe Pensions Out.

Ottawa, June 25.—(Globe Special).—This week the Government will introduce legislation regarding pensions to ex-Cabinet Ministers. It has been generally accepted for some time past that the English system under which a pension was granted upon application would be adopted. Now, however, there is a disposition in some quarters to believe the bill will be repealed altogether. Official confirmation is lacking, but should it prove to be correct, hearty approval will be forthcoming from all quarters.

Grain Elevators Burn.

Chicago, June 25.—The Mabbatt elevators "A" and "B," owned by George A. Seaverns and occupied by J. S. Templeton, grain brokers, were destroyed by fire Saturday. Both of the buildings were four storey structures and contained 100,000 bushels of grain. The loss to the elevators and their contents is estimated at $350,000.

Killed by a Street Car.

Montreal, June 25.—John Morrison, a wealthy but eccentric old Scotchman, was run down and killed yesterday by a street car while crossing St. Lawrence Main street. For years past it has been Mr. Morrison's wont to attend bank and other meetings and ridicule the management. He was quite wealthy, and although over 70 years old married a girl three years ago who had not reached 25.

Unveiled Monument.

Montreal, June 25.—St. Jean Baptiste Day was celebrated yesterday with great eclat, the chief feature being the unveiling of a monument erected in St. Louis Square to the memory of Octave Cremaize, the poet, who died in France in 1871.

Found the Body.

Pembroke, Ont., June 25.—The body of Thomas Dadson, school teacher, of Westmeath, who was drowned in the Ottawa River, near here, on May 24, was found near the scene of the tragedy. The remains were sent to his former home, Union, Ont., Saturday.

Little Girl Scalped.

St. Stephen, N. B., June 25.—The nine-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Gregory of Ook Bay, three miles from St. Stephen, met with an accident while working a cream separator with her brother Friday evening. The little one was caught in the separator, which tore her scalp almost completely off.

Three Murders Reported.

Washington, June 25.—Three murders were reported to the Washington County authorities yesterday, and as yet no arrests have been made.

DISCONTENTED TROOPS

Enormous Meeting Dispersed by Russian Artillery.

For an Hour Heavy Firing Was Heard and the Worst Is Feared—Cruiser's Crew, Carrying a Corps of Artillerists From Odessa to Sebastopol, Mutinies and Takes the Ship Back to Odessa—Isolated Killings.

London, June 25.—The correspondent at Moscow of The Standard says that the sound of intermittent firing of field guns and rifle volleys was heard for an hour last night outside the town in the direction of Khodinka plain. He says it was impossible to secure details, but that it is believed an enormous meeting of discontented soldiers of the Moscow garrison was being dispersed by artillery.

CRUISER'S CREW MUTINIES.

More Disturbances In Russian Fleet, But No Fatalities.

Odessa, June 25.—While the volunteer fleet cruiser Nishni-Novgorod was carrying a corps of artillerists from Odessa to Sebastopol, the crew mutinied when the vessel was midway between the two cities and brought the ship back to Odessa.

Three Slain.

St. Petersburg, June 25.—Two high police officials and a policeman were shot dead in the streets of Pietrekow, Russian Poland, yesterday.

ROBBERS' BIG HAUL.

Get Away With $125,000 From Railway Messengers.

Kiev, European Russia, June 25.—Messengers on the Southwestern Railroad, who were carrying $125,000, were attacked Saturday by four robbers, who killed one messenger, wounded a second, seized the money and drove away at a gallop in a cab. Two of the messengers pursued the robbers and wounded the robber who was carrying the money, with the result that he fell from the cab and the money was recovered.

Sergeant of Police Killed.

St. Petersburg, June 25.—A sergeant of police was killed Saturday night, near the Pahl factory, in the turbulent Narva district, which is the centre of an armed revolutionary organization.

Killed on the Street.

Ofa, Province of Ufa, Russia, June 25.—Prince Manveloff, an extensive landed proprietor, and a former officer of the guards, was killed on the street here Friday. The crime, it is supposed, was committed for political reasons.

Summary Justice.

Voronezh, Russia, June 25.—The peasants of the Village of Krutnyagorki, enraged at the killing of a cow by two members of the rural police, called a commune meeting, formally condemned the two men to death and executed the sentence.

THE OPEN DOOR.

Japan Seems Ready to Accord the Privilege In Manchuria.

Pekin, June 25.—The leading commercial men are now taking a more hopeful view of the prospects for securing a share of the trade of Manchuria, and it appears that the Japanese Government seems willing to fulfill its promise of an open door in that country; at least it has shown a better disposition than the military authorities. There has been friction between the civil and military authorities concerning the policy to be pursued as to foreign trade privileges in Manchuria. The civil authorities are more liberal and it is believed that when the military administration is withdrawn, foreigners will be given greater freedom.

Trolley Slips With Fatal Result.

New York, June 25.—One man was killed and eleven injured at the foot of the Orange Mountain, Orange, N.J., yesterday while experimenting with a specially constructed trolley car with which it was proposed to replace the abandoned cable system on the incline railway leading to the mountain summit. The brakes would not hold. Then, as the car rushed down the incline the men began to jump off, all sustaining greater or less injuries. All but one jumped before the bottom of the incline was reached, and Patrick Burns of Newark was killed when he struck the ground.

A Bad Example.

London, June 25.—A manifesto to the Australian electors, pleading against the preference, has been issued by the Cobden Club and is now being signed by 274 Liberal-Labor M.P.'s. The Times says that with this example before them the colonies may in future not have any scruples against intervening in English politics in this matter.

Three Children Missing.

Toronto Junction, June 25.—Three little children have been missing since 10 o'clock yesterday morning, two of them, a girl and boy aged 2 and 4, belonging to Mr. Dobson of 142 Churchill avenue, and the 4-year-old son of Mr. Barnes, 717 Churchill avenue. At a late hour nothing had been heard of the little ones.

Blown to Atoms.

Montreal, June 25.—George Fletcher, an employe of the Dominion Cartridge Works at Brownsburg, Lachute, who was brought to this city Friday night suffering from terrible injuries in an explosion at the works, died Saturday morning. The building was blown to atoms.

Mrs. Shaughnessy Dead.

Montreal, June 25.—Word was received here yesterday of the death of Mrs. Shaughnessy, mother of the vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The lady, who was 77 years old, had always resided in Milwaukee.

Betrayed Secrets.

Essen, June 25.—The workmen employed in the Krupp works have been arrested, charged with betraying military secrets.

MR. BORDEN AT KEMPTVILLE.

Attends Laying of Cornerstone of New Anglican Church.

Kemptville, June 25.—R. L. Borden, K.C., was a visitor here Saturday, and as it was his first appearance here, he was given a great reception.

His object was to be present at the laying of the corner-stone of the St. Paul's Anglican Church at Beckett's Landing, three miles from Kemptville.

On his arrival he was greeted at the station by a large crowd of citizens, headed by the Merrickville band.

The local Conservative Association presented him with an address, in reply to which Mr. Borden spoke of the work of the session.

Mr. Borden was accompanied by Mrs. Borden, Dr. Reid, M.P., and Dr. Ferguson, ex-M.P., and the party while in town were the guests of G. H. Ferguson, M.P.P.

At the church ceremony Mr. Borden spoke for about thirty minutes. The rector, Rev. W. B. Reede, of Kemptville, and several visiting clergymen were among those present.

WOMAN'S QUICK WIT.

Telephones and Saves Lives of Two Boys In Peril.

Sandwich, Ont., June 25.—The telephone saved two lives Saturday. Mrs. Lloyd, at her summer residence a few miles down the river, saw a small overturned rowboat with two boys clinging to it floating down the river, which is a mile and a half wide there. No assistance being at hand, she telephoned by way of Windsor and Detroit to Smith's coal dock on the American side, opposite her home. The big freighter Manilla was just leaving the dock. The captain was notified of the boys' peril, and he rescued them and took them to the American shore. They were almost lifeless from cold and exhaustion.

SEDDON'S SUCCESSOR.

Wm. Hall-Jones Will Form Temporary Ministry In New Zealand.

Christchurch, N. Z., June 25.—William Hall-Jones has consented to form a new Ministry.

It is probable that the Cabinet will be tentative only, pending the return from England of Sir Joseph Ward, Postmaster-General, when reconstruction will take place with Sir Joseph Ward as Premier.

There is little doubt that Mr. Seddon died of overwork. It was known that his heart was affected, and it was under medical advice that he went to Australia, the doctors hoping that he would thus secure a much-needed rest before the session opened.

Suicide May Be Horace Bell.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., June 25.—There is a possibility that the aged man, who committed suicide by shooting himself at the brink of the Horseshoe Falls on the Canadian side late Friday night, was Horace Bell of Memphis, Tenn. It has been learned that the man arrived in this city Thursday night and registered at R. C. Owen's Clifton Hotel. He was much taken up with the little twins of Mr. and Mrs. Owen, and in a farewell letter found in his grip he refers to them. In view of the fact that the man took great pains to eliminate all marks of identification from his articles in the valise, it is thought that the name "Horace Bell" on the register may be fictitious.

Value of a Uniform.

Niagara Camp, June 25.—Here is an idea of what one of the volunteer militia uniforms cost. Pte. A. Mackenzie, the deserter, who came back to camp in an American uniform and was sentenced to 28 days in jail by district court-martial, has been put under stoppages of pay until he makes good the value of the following articles: one serge frock, $3.50; pair of serge trousers, $2.50; forage cap, $50c; waist belt, $1. Total $7.50. Saturday was get-away day in the camp and the tented field is now deserted.

Bishop McDonnell Consecrated.

Cornwall, June 25.—Rev. W. A. McDonnell, late parish priest of St. Andrew's, was yesterday consecrated Lord Bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Alexandra at Alexandra. His Grace, Archbishop Gauthier of Kingston, the consecrator, was assisted by His Grace Archbishop Bruchesi of Montreal. His Grace Archbishop Duhamel of Ottawa, Bishops McEvoy and Scholiard, the last named two supporting the archbishop. Nearly 60 priests were also present.

New Battleship Launched.

Glasgow, Scotland, June 25.—The British battleship Agamemnon of 16,500 tons, was successfully launched here Saturday and was christened by the Countess of Aberdeen. The Agamemnon will have a speed of 18 knots and will carry four 12-inch and ten 9.2-inch guns in her main battery.

Off to Greenland.

Copenhagen, June 25.—The expedition of Mylius Erichsen, which will attempt to explore the northeastern coast of Greenland, sailed yesterday. The expedition expects to return in the autumn of 1908. King Frederick sent a telegram to M. Erichsen, wishing him good speed.

Fifty Houses Wrecked.

Lawton, Oklahoma, June 26.—Fifty houses were wrecked between Lawton and Quanah, Texas, Friday by a heavy wind storm. A passenger train near Lawton was nearly blown from the track. The storm covered a large area in the southwest. No one was killed.

Duke of Almodovar Is Dead.

Madrid, June 25.—The Duke of Almodovar, Minister of Foreign Affairs, who acted as president of the conference on Moroccan reforms, held at Algeciras early in the present year, died at 2.50 o'clock Saturday afternoon. He was born in 1854.

Four Drown.

Newport, June 25.—Through the overturning of a canoe, in which they were enjoying an outing on Lake Memphremagog, late yesterday, four young persons were drowned.

ROOF GARDEN MURDER.

Harry Thaw Kills Prominent Architect of New York For "Deserting the Girl."

New York, June 26.—Stanford White, the eminent architect, a member of the firm of McKim, Mead & White, was shot last night and almost instantly killed by Harry Thaw, a member of a prominent Pittsburg family, during the performance on the roof of the Madison Square Garden. Mr. White died before an ambulance could be summoned, and Thaw was arrested immediately after the shooting.

Thaw's victim was seated with a woman, and he exclaimed: "You've deserved this—you've ruined my home!" and drawing an automatic pistol, fired three shots. The first two too effect.

It was reported that the woman who accompanied Mr. White was Evelyn Nesbitt, whose marriage with Thaw estranged the latter from his family.

Thaw handed the policeman $10, and asked him to notify Andrew Carnegie that he was in trouble. Thaw, it is alleged, said to the fireman: "Deserved what he got. He ruined my life and deserted the girl."

Married Actress.

Pittsburg, Pa., June 26.—Harry Kendall Thaw is about 36 years of age, and is the son of the late Wm. Thaw, who was vice-president of the Pennsylvania lines west. It was while in Paris that he met Evelyn Nesbitt, an actress, whom he afterwards married.

Thaw is a brother of the Countess of Yarmouth, who was Alice Thaw.

SEVEN STUDENTS GUILTY.

Decision Given In the Strathroy Examination Case.

Strathroy, June 26.—Seven of the students who have been undergoing investigation by the Provincial Education Department for alleged corrupt practices at the departmental examination held here in June last year, have received advice that their examinations have been cancelled, with a consequent forfeiture of matriculation and teachers' certificates. One candidate is prohibited from writing again for two more years.

It is expected that some of those against whom judgment has thus been given will appeal the decision, which comes after over seven months' enquiry, through the courts.

INDICT STREET CAR MEN.

If Causes For 21 Deaths In 50 Days Are Not Explained.

Chicago, June 26.—Indictment of the presidents and leading officials of the various Chicago Traction Companies will be sought by Mayor Dunne if immediate and satisfactory explanations are not given him concerning the recent fatalities laid at the door of the street railway corporations.

Dr. Doly, superintendent of street car service, has notified the city executive that within 50 days 21 persons have been killed by cars in Chicago.

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton.

Government Wins Case.

Chancellor Boyd Decides In Cobalt Matter.

Alleged Discovery of Claim Had Defects. But His Lordship Finds That There Was No Conspiracy and That Defendants Were Justified in Contesting the Issue—As There Was No Fraud No Costs Are Given.

Toronto, June 26.—The Ontario Government has won in the Cobalt mining case that has developed such striking interest.

Chancellor Boyd in his decision cancels without costs the leases held by the White Silver Mining Co., Ltd., and E. C. Hargrave, Bay City, but provides that the latter be indemnified for any expense in improving the property. There was no conspiracy on the part of the mine owner.

His lordship comments on the evidence as abounding in contradictions, inconsistencies and singular contrasts of recollection. The case turned upon the point of whether the affidavit as to discovery was true or otherwise. The establishing of the fact that location contained valuable minerals rested alone on the evidence of the man who claimed to have made the discovery. To agree with his other evidence, however, his find must have been made a month at least before the time stated. The discoverer had observed some cobalt bloom, but his sworn claim was that cobalt arsenide was found Dec. 19, 1904, the ores being markedly different in all respects.

Stories Didn't Tally.

Chancellor Boyd refers to a conflict of evidence between Mr. Haines and Mr. Blair, the latter's testimony casting doubt on Mr. Haines having been in the locality at the time alleged by him. Haines could give nothing that would check his own movements in his November visit.

Summing up his lordship finds the affidavit "not a true disclosure of the real facts of the discovery." The issue of the leases thereon by subordinate officers pending proper enquiries was improvident, and the grants should be vacated. He adds:

No Fraud.

"I do not find proved any conspiracy or fraud on the part of the defendants who now own the mine. They did what was right in attempting to uphold a patent issued in their favor, and their conduct is not such that they should be visited with costs.

"They are also entitled to be compensated by the Crown for the expenditures made by them on the lot in so far as it has enhanced its value as a mining property. This is to be ascertained by the master, without costs to either, in case they cannot agree as to the amount."

Lightning Kills In Doorway.

Amherst, N. S., June 26.—A severe electrical storm passed over Cumberland last evening, causing one death and destroying several buildings at Springhill. The Orange Hall was struck by lightning and Ezra Stack, miner, who was standing in the doorway for shelter, was instantly killed, and John Fraser, who was standing beside him, was stunned by the shock, but not seriously hurt. The building was wrecked, but did not catch fire.

Boiler Explodes.

Madoc, June 26.—The boiler in Jones, Jackson & Mason's cheese-box factory at Eldorado exploded at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, scalding the fireman, Bert Richards, who arrived from England about three months ago, badly about the head and face. Jackson and Mason were also scalded about the back and legs. The mill was badly shaken.

Bucket Shop Arraignment.

Toronto, June 26.—The alleged "bucket shop" proprietors were arraigned yesterday. All were remanded until July 3.

Level Crossing Accident.

Brantford, June 26.—Yesterday morning Louis Winegardner, along with a helper, came along on one of the garbage wagons, and drove on to the railway track. The horses had no sooner stepped on the rails than the nigh horse was struck in the shoulder by the back of the engine, knocking it down and breaking its leg. The off horse was knocked over by the force of the blow. Winegardner narrowly escaped serious injury. His companion had his arm and wrist hurt, and received a bad shaking up. The horse was killed with an axe.

Make Clause Mandatory.

London, June 26.—In the House of Commons debate on clause 4 of the educational bill giving extended facilities for denominational teaching on a four-fifths vote, Edward Blake (Nationalist), strongly supported the appeal to make the clause mandatory. Catholics and other religious bodies, he said, demanded the definite right of specific religious teaching in school not at the caprice of any local authority, but on the mandate of Parliament itself.

Aged 82, Tries to Suicide.

Stratford, June 26.—Jacob Bennett, aged 82, an inmate of the House of Refuge, made a savage slash at his throat with a penknife and ripped an ugly gash in it, almost from ear to ear. The old man made a dash for the window, opened it, and attempted to clamber on to the window sill, his intention evidently being to throw himself to the ground. His leap was frustrated.

Icemen Sent to Jail.

Toledo, O., June 26.—In common pleas court yesterday, Judge Kinkade imposed the maximum sentence of $5,000 fine and one year in the workhouse on five icemen guilty of conspiracy in restraint of trade. The judge said the sentences might be mitigated in the event of the men making restitution.

For Penny Postage.

Liverpool, June 26.—The steamer Majestic, which sails hence June 27 for New York, will take among her passengers Sir Joseph George Ward, postmaster-general of New Zealand, who hopes to enlist Canadian support of the proposition to establish a universal two-cent postage rate.

Peel Thieves Sentenced.

Guelph, June 26.—Judge Chadwick yesterday delivered judgment in the case of James and Peter Cowan, convicted of various thefts in Peel Township and vicinity. Six months in jail, and a fine of $300, to be paid between them, was the sentence.

Booth-Tucker Marries.

London, June 26.—Commander Booth-Tucker was married yesterday to Miss Minnie Reid at the Salvation Army's Citadel, South Tottenham. Gen. Booth officiated. Only relatives and high officers of the Salvation Army were present.

Prof. Smith Gives Bursary.

Toronto, June 26.—It was announced at the prize-day exercises of St. Andrew's College yesterday, that Prof. Goldwin Smith had offered a bursary of $300 per year, for four years.

Graft! Graft!! Graft!!!

WHO POCKETED THE RAKE-OFF?

This is a question that may fairly be asked. The Public Accounts Committee at Ottawa, notwithstanding constant attempts on the part of the majority of the Government supporters on the Committee to suppress and prevent the bringing to light transactions which are constantly being practiced and indulged in by boodlers and grafters, are unearthing crimes which should consign the guilty ones to limbo.

Here is a specimen of how the 462,960 had been paid by the Gov. supposed to be required for the Government works at Sorel, where dredges and other Government vessels are repaired—25 or 30 dozen might be wanted—but 264 dozen were ordered, which cost $2,234, and were resold to the Government for $4,700. a bad file speculation.

Who pocketed the rake-off?

The reader can judge, after reading the evidence given by a Government official before the Committee of Public Accounts, on the 22nd inst. Here it is; Mr. George J. Desbarats, of the Public Works department, was examined. He said "that he did not purchase the steel files and bars from Mr. Strubbe, but he received the goods at Sorel. In the first instance he was asked by Mr. Prefontaine, the late Minister of Marine, to go and see the files and find out if they could be utilized at Sorel." From this it would appear that the files had been bought, and the Minister did not know what to do with them. The witness continued; "He would not have purchased so many if he had been ordering them. He might have ordered 25 or 30 dozen. This order amounted to 264 dozen. Strubbe gave fifteen per cent. discount."

"Mr Busteed, of Busteed & Lane, Montreal, said that the files were invoiced in the first instance to Rolland Prefontaine, son of Hon. R. Prefontaine. Rolland Prefontaine said that either he did not order the files or that he did not order so many, and would not accept them. Mr. Busteed said that he asked the Minister about the order, but he said that he knew nothing about it. The goods were finally sold to Mr. Strubbe for $2,234, who apparently resold them to the Government for $4,700."

What think honest Liberals of this mode of doing business?

It is but one of scores that are coming to light every day.

Value Of Estimates.

The Hon. Mr. Emmerson gave the following facts to the members of the House of Commons a few days ago, showing the difference between estimates and actual cost of public works;

"The original estimate on Farran's Point Canal has been $750,000, with the Canadian Construction Company, and the sum of $755,417 had been paid, being a final estimate."

"The original estimate for the St. Lawrence River north channel to M. A Cleveland was $750,000 and $1,462,960 had been paid by the Government up to date, although a final estimate had not yet been made."

The original estimate of the Government engineers for the total construction for the Cardinal section of the Galops Canal under Wm. Davis and Sons' contract had been $1,362,140 The sum of $1,672,784 had been paid."

"The original estimate for the Galops Rapids contract with E. E. Gilbert and Sons was $650,000, and $629,629 had been paid, but a final estimate had not been made."

What is the good of estimates?

NOTHING.

One day they had a falling out
And played the game of sulk and pout;
And what do'ye think 't was all about?—
Nothing.

She went to ma's and meant to stay!
Which made his dinner late that day;
When she returned, what did he say?—
Nothing.

Although he stayed out late that night
And drank a glass or two for spite,
What did she do to serve him right?
Nothing.

Now ere the ending of the week,
Each caught the other going to speak!
What better ending is to seek?—
Nothing.

Yet friends and neighbors were perplexed,
And some old ladies even vexed
To wait and find what happened next?—
Nothing.

Yesterday afternoon a certain out-of-town traveller approached the man in charge of a Belleville concern and said; "Are you Mr. So-and-So?" He was assured that the man behind the desk was the man he wanted to see, and, laying down his card, he said. "I would like to show you a very fine line of shirts. I represent a Toronto house." The Bellevillian quietly looked his caller over and replied; "No, sir. I get my living in Belleville. The haberdashers of this town leave me their good money. If there are people to whom you can sell your goods in this town, go right out and sell them. I, for one, buy my goods at home and in Belleville."

It is hard to credit the statement, attributed to an Ohio dealer in automobiles, that he was holding $80,000 in farm mortgages which had been given him in payment for his machines. It is true, however, that in some sections there is a genuine craze after these costly affairs, which are being bought by people not well able to afford the cost of purchase and maintenance. It would seem that a farmer could hardly afford to accept one of these machines free of cost, as the expense for maintenance, repairs and replacements would prove a very serious item, to say nothing of the time lost in operation. Cheap automobiles are unsatisfactory, and the better ones cost as much as a good farm.

Five Saskatchewan polling officials have been found guilty and fined for frauds perpetrated during the recent elections in the interest of Liberal candidates. TO REPEAL PENSIONS.

HON. W. S. FIELDING WILL INTRODUCE BILL ON WEDNESDAY.

Ottawa, June 25.—Mr. Fielding on Wednesday will introduce a bill to repeal the pension grab. It is entitled "An Act to repeal the Act respecting annuities for certain privy councillors." It will then be up to the Government to explain why it voted down a bill to the same effect introduced by W. F. Maclean (South York).

Mr. Fielding's bill will probably meet with no opposition, as the three pensioners, who have seats in the House, will no doubt be excused from voting upon a measure in which they have such direct financial interest.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

An Oriental Vacation.

CANADIAN PACIFIC SERVICE TO JAPAN AND CHINA.

A holiday spent in Japan, "the land of the rising sun," land of romance and mystery, of quaint customs and costumes, tea-houses and temples, is one that no one could look forward to without a thrill of pleasureable anticipation, and yet one that is only too often regretfully abandoned, because of the "distance" and "cost."

It may accordingly surprise the reader to learn that with only sixty days to spare Japan may be comfortably visited, and that giving twenty-five or more ashore. Yokohama, Tokio, Nikko, Kobe, Osaka, Kyoto, and all the most interesting and charming spots in the Island Kingdom can be covered in twenty-five days by steamship and rickshaw and train. The cost of this delightful sixty-day trip would not exceed that of the ordinary trip of the same length through America. And think of the difference! The voyage over the calm waters of the mighty Pacific is alone worth the time and money.

The famous "White Empress" fleet of the Canadian Pacific Railway, maintaining service between Vancouver, China and Japan, has a reputation for excellence that is known the world over. The three "Empresses" are each 485 feet long, 6000 tons, fitted with 10,000 horse-power engines, making 18 knots without "pushing," and for richness of cabin and saloon fittings and decorations they have yet to meet their compeer upon the Pacific. They are splendid sea boats, and the staff of deft Chinese "boys" and a prince among cooks help to make a Trans-Pacific voyage one to carry pleasant memories for many a long day.

The "Empress of China" sails from Vancouver July 2nd, and the "Empress of India" July 23rd, making Yokohama in fourteen days, thence to Hong Kong, by way of Kobe, the beautiful Inland Sea, Nagasaki and Shanghai.

The C.P.R. has also three intermediate steamships upon this service, the "Athenian," "Monteagle" and "Tartar." These boats make the same ports of call as the "Empresses," but do not carry first cabin passengers. The passage rates by these steamers are considerably lower than by the "Empresses," the table service and cabin accommodation is surprisingly good, and their speed and sea going qualities are of that standard of excellence expected when the red and white house flag of the C.P.R. is at the main.

The "Athenian" leaves Vancouver for the Orient on July 30th, the "Monteagle" on August 20th.

FIGHTING FISH.

Peculiar Animals That Are Found Only in Siamese Waters.

A favorite recreation in Siam is watching the fighting fish, a species of fish found in the waters of no other country. The fish cannot live in unity, and if two are placed in a bowl they will instantly engage in a struggle "to the death."

It is no unusual thing to see in the streets of Siam crowds of natives chattering and gesticulating around a bowl containing a number of these fish, which they bet on in the same way as more civilized people do on race horses. Intense excitement reigns among the natives as they watch the fish fighting within the bowl.

These peculiarly quarrelsome fish are very similar to the common pike in appearance, with the exception that they are not in the possession of gills. Their fins, too, are remarkably sharp, and these they use with terrible effect upon one another. Blood oozes from their sides, and yet they persist in fighting until perhaps only two are left alive, and then the survivors turn on one another until only one is left out of perhaps a dozen placed in the tub.

Although the fighting fish are exceptionally good to eat, the majority of natives esteem them only for their fighting propensities, which affords them amusement and excitement every day.

London's Last Public Hanging.

The grewsome spectacle of a public execution in England is happily a thing of the past. The scaffold used to be erected in the roadway outside the prison, and crowds would assemble to witness the sight, the last time a man was hanged in public being when Michael Barrett suffered the extreme penalty in May, 1868, in Old Bailey, outside Newgate prison, for exploding a cask of gunpowder under the walls of Clerkenwell prison to release the Fenian prisoners Burke and Casey, a mad act that killed several and injured still more.—London Graphic.

WOMEN HOTEL CLERKS.

How Those In Europe Impressed a Woman Traveler.

In most European hotels in the smaller places the visitor is met at the desk by a woman instead of by the perfunctory clerk so familiar to Americans at home. I think this is because a woman can be more successful in the art of common, everyday robbery. One doesn't like to argue about the prices with a sweet, smiling little lady, who seems to be exerting herself to an extreme degree to secure one's comfort and happiness, but if one happens to be making short stops here and there it is wise to put away suavity for the time being to the extent at least of an occasional mild protestation.

When madame smiles benignly and tells you that the room you have chosen, with everything included, will be 20 francs a day it is well to remember that "everything included" doesn't include everything by any means. There are a hundred and one little "extras," like tea, after dinner coffee, coffee and rolls in your room in the morning and such like luxuries, to say nothing of service, which must be paid for first hand if it is to be enjoyed at all. So at 20 francs madame is probably taking chances against a protest and will be enormously pleased with herself if none is forthcoming. It is the same all up and down the scale of prices, but I suppose those who can afford to go up the scale never care particularly.—Eleanor Franklin in Leslie's Weekly.

Just Quit Worrying.

Nobody knows what produces earthquakes, although it is often claimed that they do. The earth quakes somewhere every day. Nobody knows when the earth came or when it will go, where it came from, how it came or how it happened to be here. The fact is when you get down to the truth, no-

"Just set it for 5 o'clock," said the young lawyer, who was purchasing an alarm clock. "I'll never want to change it."

"Do you always get up at that hour in the morning?" asked the clerk.

"Oh, no. That's the hour in the afternoon when I always close my office and go home."

HOW BEAST MEN ARE MADE.

The Hideous and Cruel Practice of Flesh Sculpture in China.

"Victor Hugo in 'The Man Who Laughs,'" said an ethnologist, "tells of the sculptors of living flesh—those horrible people of the middle ages who kidnaped tender little children and turned them into all sorts of monsters, dwarfs, hunchbacks and the like, selling them afterward for jesters or for showmen's freaks.

"The hideous and cruel practice of flesh sculpture still continues. There is a tribe of Chinese gypsies who steal children and turn them into so called wild men. The practice is, of course, illegal.

"A kidnaped child is flayed alive, bit by bit, and the shaggy skin of a dog is grafted on him. This takes a year. At the year's end the poor creature is shaggy, like a bear, from head to foot.

"The child's vocal chords are destroyed with charcoal in an unspeakably cruel way. He can never speak thereafter. He can only growl and moan like a beast.

"He is imprisoned in a perfectly black hole until every vestige of reason leaves him. Nine months is usually a sufficient confinement to accomplish this.

"Finally, speechless, shaggy, lunatic, the victim is sold to a traveling showman and is exhibited throughout China as a genuine wild man or beast man. I am bound to say he looks the part."

HOG MONEY.

Origin of the Curious Old Brass Coins of Bermuda.

"Hog money" is the name by which the brass money which began to be struck in Bermuda in 1650 came to be known. On one face of it was a hog, on the other a ship of that period. These old coins are very rare and highly prized by collectors.

The history of this device is curious and interesting. A Spanish vessel, commanded by Juan Bermudez, on its way to Cuba with a cargo of hogs, was wrecked there. This was in 1515. Later in the same century, when the English discovered this land, they found a country inhabited by hogs.

It is also interesting to note that the English discovered it in the same way as the Spaniards. An English ship was wrecked there. Is it any wonder that the treacherous coast got from Spanish and English alike the name of Devil's Land? Yet it is one of the most beautiful coasts in the world, and it has been claimed that in brilliancy Mediterranean effects are not at all equal to those of Bermuda.

Bermuda is said to be the island of Shakespeare's "Tempest." The strange noises which mariners heard coming from this island, and which they did not then know were produced by hogs, caused them to say that it was haunted and to report weird things of it.—Pearson's.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Money Wisely Expended Is Safely and Profitably Expended.

Beautified utility is never too costly. Over and over again the cost benefits of public improvements have been proved, defined, established. It is true of public betterments of a sanitary character; it is true of public betterments that look to commercial advancement; it is true of public betterments that have primarily an art value. The practical and the ornamental betterment are alike in this—that money wisely expended for good purposes is safely and profitably invested.

The limitations of expenditures for civic betterment are of course very obvious. The work undertaken must be good in itself and serve some good purpose. Money expended for a worthless filtration plant, for example, is money worse than wasted. Money spent for bad art is not always considered as so completely lost as money that might be wasted for worthless sanitary apparatus. The statue causes no ill health and may be avoided by passing down the next street, while an impure water supply brings death and destruction to many helpless persons.—Homes and Garden.

English and Scotch Precedence.

At the coronation of Charles I., the kingdoms of England and Scotland having been united during the reign of his father, considerable friction took place with regard to the order of precedence of the English and Scottish noblemen. An arrangement satisfactory to all parties was finally concluded, in virtue of which English peers while in England took precedence of Scottish peers of the same rank, while in Scotland this order was reversed, and the Scottish peers went first.

The Shepherd's Crook.

Although most people have seen a shepherd's crook, many do not know the use of it. Some people think that all the shepherd carries it for is to use it as a walking stick when he tramps to and from the fold. But the crooked end itself serves a purpose. It enables a shepherd to catch refractory sheep. If a sheep shows signs of running away the crooked end has only to be placed round his leg, and he is a captive.—London Standard.

The Czar is cheerful enough to play tennis. Tennis is a game that has historical associations with revolutions. The "Third Estate," that is the Commons delegates of the French States General, met in a Versailles tennis court when they had nowhere else to go, and there took action which culminated in making them the real government of France. "The oath in the tennis court" is one of the great episodes of the French Revolution. Perhaps in the Russian tennis court the Czar does all the swearing, which, under the circumstances, may be excusable.

On a recent Monday morning the pastor of a church was the recipient of a basket of strawberries brought to him by a little girl of the parish.

"Thank you very much, my dear," said the minister, "These berries are as fine as any I've ever seen. I hope, however, that you did not gather them yesterday—the Sabbath."

"No, sir," replied the child. "I pulled 'em early this mornin', but they was a-growin' all day yesterday."

The new type of Atlantic liner — the huge, broad-beamed boat, with elevators, grill-room, gymnasium, restaurant and roof garden—these luxurious and steady ships, are more popular because they are more comfortable than the slim record-breakers that roll in a calm sea worse than the new type does in a wild gale.

The new type promises to abolish seasickness. Pirates, boarding it wouldn't find such wretched, limp, pale passengers as they used. A pirate, you know, once boarded a record-breaking liner. As, armed to the teeth, he clambered up the side, he saw a passenger leaning over the rail.

"Throw up your hands!" the pirate shouted fiercely.

The passenger with a wan smile, replied;

"I think I did, about ten minutes ago."

Thomas W. Lawson, said of a certain financier, that the man condemned himself out of his own mouth.

"All his life," said Mr. Lawson, "he has played the hypocrite. But unsuccessfully. Continually he himself overturns the wall of dissimulation and guilt built about his affairs.

"It is so, I fancy, with all hypocrites. They are not exposed. They give themselves away.

"This man began life as a manufacturer. He pretended to be a friend to profit-sharing and all such philanthropic schemes, but as a matter of fact he paid starvation wages. He ground his hands nearly to death.

"And this fact he was continually exposing.

"One day he sent for a detective.

"I want you," he said, "to shadow my bookkeeper. I suspect him of dishonesty."

The detective, hardened though he was, looked shocked.

"Suspect young Harry Chalmers of dishonesty?" he cried. "Why, I can hardly believe it. No one lives more frugally, though it is true he has recently married."

"That's the point," said the other. "With the salary I pay him, he could not possibly marry."

A LUCKY ESCAPE.

Quick Wit and Daring Ruse of a Russian Revolutionist.

Nowhere outside of the pages of fiction would we expect such an incident as the following from the personal story of the Russian revolutionist Narodny. Narodny had just jumped from a window to escape the police. "When I scrambled to my feet I discovered myself in the yard and among half a dozen soldiers. I was without overcoat and hat—a very suspicious figure—and, having neither, I could not escape even could I get by the soldiers who surrounded me," he said.

"I jerked a card from my pocket—to this day I do not know what it was—and handed it to one of the soldiers. 'Here is my card,' I said rapidly. 'I am a member of the secret police. One of these revolutionists is trying to escape. I am after him. Quick! Give me your coat and hat!'

"He automatically obeyed. I slipped on his coat and hat and to all appearances was a soldier of the czar. I walked past the guarded gate of the yard, out into the street. Before me were thousands of soldiers. I saw my friends being brought down from the hall and put into the black vans, about which stood guards of Cossacks. I marched through my friends (all of that group are in prison today save only myself and the friend who escaped with me) with the air of a soldier on a very important message and pressed on through the mass of other soldiers that filled the street."

BARBER SURGEONS.

When the Razor and the Scalpel Were Linked In One Trade.

More than 400 years old is the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh. At the time it was founded the surgeons and barbers of the city were united as one of the fourteen incorporated trades of Edinburgh. On July 1, 1505, they received their charter from the town council. The charter of the barber surgeons was confirmed by James IV., an early Stuart king of great enlightenment and accomplishment, who took much interest in the progress of the surgeons on account of the needs of his army in time of war.

In the charter leave was given to the incorporation to control the medical education of the city, such as it was in those days; of bloodletting, to have the sole right of practice and to put down quacks. They were to get every year the body of a criminal who had been executed to practice anatomy on, and they promised in return to do "suffrage for his soul." Of the first 158 members of the incorporation six were surgeons to the kings of Scotland.

As society improved and medical science developed the gulf between the surgeons and barbers widened, and in 1772, as the result of a process in the court of session, the connection was finally terminated. The deacon, or president, of the incorporation of surgeons was for more than 320 years a member of the town council of Edinburgh, ex officio, and several of the deacons were members of the Scottish parliament.

February Legends.

Why February has twenty-eight days is explained in the legends of the past. One is of an old woman, who, tending her flock, ridiculed the month of February because he had dealt so leniently with her and her sheep. Then February felt insulted and made leap year and borrowed a cold day from March and froze her and her flock. There is a Norman legend which makes it out that February had originally as many days as the other months, but February was a confirmed gambler and lost at domino a day both to January and to March. Strange to say, there is an old story of Egypt, wherein the god of February plays forfeits with the moon and loses certain days.

Not Wholly Ignorant.

An applicant for a position in the public works department in a certain city was undergoing a civil service examination. With a view to testing his knowledge of history the examining officer asked him what he knew of the Punic wars.

"The name sounds familiar," said the applicant, "but I can't just remember when it was or where it happened."

"Don't you know anything about Scipio?"

"No, sir."

"Surely you have heard about Hannibal?"

"Oh, yes, I know all about Hannibal. That's where Mark Twain used to live."

The "Bere" of 1542.

It is curious to find in a "Dyetary" of 1542 the information that "bere is made of malte, of hopps and water. It is a naturall drynke for a Dutcheman. And now of late dayes it is moche used in Englande to the detryment of many Englisshe men." The author was speaking of "beer," the then new liquor distinguished from "ale" by being hopped. In this sense a seventeenth century rhymer says that "turkey, carps, hops, piccadel and beer came into England all in one year," "piccadel" being a kind of ruff or collar.

In Doubt.

Ethel (who is not famous for her good looks)—I don't see why you should call Miss Whitmore plain. I'm sure I only wish I were half as good looking as she is. Fred—You are, Ethel; you know you are. (And Ethel is wondering whether he meant to compliment her.)

Firmness of Purpose.

Firmness of purpose is one of the most necessary sinews of character and one of the best instruments of success. Without it genius wastes its efforts in a maze of inconsistencies.—Chesterfield.

A COAT OF ARMS.

How One May Be Acquired For a Consideration In England.

The practice of granting arms is still in vogue in England, Ireland, Scotland, Austria, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Germany, etc., and at times the pope, as sovereign pontiff, exercises the power.

Indeed, it is by patent or grant alone that a new family can legitimately acquire a coat of arms.

The modus operandi in England, for example, is as follows: The applicant for a patent of arms (from the crown) may employ any member he pleases of the heralds' college and through him present a memorial to the earl marshal of England, who acts for the crown in these matters, setting forth that he, the memorialist, is not entitled to arms or cannot prove his right to such and praying that his grace the earl marshal will issue his warrant to the kings of arms, authorizing them to grant and confirm to him due and proper armorial ensigns, to be borne according to the laws of heraldry by him and his descendants. This memorial is presented and a warrant is issued by the earl marshal, under which a patent of arms is made out, exhibiting a painting of the armorial ensigns granted, the royal arms of England, the arms of the earl marshal and those of the college and describing in official terms the proceedings that have taken place and a correct blazon of the arms. This patent is registered in the books of the heralds' college and receives the signatures of the garter and one or both of the provincial kings of arms.

A grant or patent of arms is made to a man and his male descendants. This gives him a fee simple of them—that is to say, to him and to his male descendants equally and altogether and to his female descendants in a qualified manner—i. e., for life, to bear the arms in a lozenge or impaled with their husbands' arms (if the husbands have arms), as arms can only be brought in by arms, or, if they be heiresses or coheiresses, on an escutcheon of pretense upon their husbands' shields, and in the last case their descendants inherit such maternal arms, but only as a quartering.—Nineteenth Century.

Queer Judicial Decisions.

Some queer judicial decisions in Victoria are mentioned in the Australian Review of Reviews. A man who embezzled some money from a bank has received a sentence of nearly three years' imprisonment, while a man who murdered his mother by stabbing her to the heart received only one year, and another man, who shot his sister and killed her, was sentenced to only two years, and immediately after that a man who wrote a letter to another man threatening to kill him received three years' imprisonment.

The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of "The Gentleman From Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

"No; not last night."

Crailey lurched suddenly, and Tom caught him about the waist to steady him.

"Sweethearting, tippling, vingt-et-un or poker, eh, Tom?" he shouted thickly, with a wild laugh. "Ha, ha, old smug face, up to my bad tricks at last!" But, recovering himself immediately, he pushed the other off at arm's length and slapped himself smartly on the brow. "Never mind; all right, all right—only a bad wave now and then. A walk will make me more a man than ever."

"You'd much better go to bed, Crailey."

"I can't. I'm going to change my clothes and go out."

"Why?"

Crailey did not answer, but at that moment the Catholic church bell, summoning the faithful to mass, pealed loudly on the morning air, and the steady glance of Tom Vanrevel rested upon the reckless eyes of the man beside him as they listened together to its insistent call. Tom said gently, almost timidly:

"You have an—engagement?"

This time the answer came briskly. "Yes. I promised to take Fanchon to the cemetery before breakfast, to place some flowers on the grave of the little brother who died. This happens to be his birthday."

It was Tom who averted his eyes, not Crailey.

"Then you'd best hurry," he said hesitatingly; "I mustn't keep you," and went downstairs to his office with flushed cheeks, a hanging head and an expression which would have led a stranger to believe that he had just been caught in a lie.

He went to the Main street window and seated himself upon the ledge, the only one in the room not too dusty for occupation, for here, at this hour, Tom had taken his place every morning since Elizabeth Carewe had come from the convent. The window was a coign of vantage, commanding the corner of Carewe and Main streets. Some distance west of the corner the Catholic church cast its long shadow across Main street, and in order to enter the church a person who lived upon Carewe street must pass the corner or else make a half mile detour and approach from the other direction, which the person never did. Tom had thought it out the first night that the image of Miss Betty had kept him awake, and that was the first night Miss Carewe spent in Rouen. The St. Mary's girl would be sure to go to mass every day, which was why the window ledge was dusted the next morning.

The glass doors of the little corner drug store caught the early sun of the hot May morning and became like sheets of polished brass; a farmer's wagon rattled down the dusty street; a group of Irish waitresses from the hotel made the board walk rattle under their hurried steps as they went toward the church, talking to one another, and a blinking youth in his shirt sleeves, who wore the air of one newly but not gladly risen, began to struggle mournfully with the shutters of Madrillon's bank. A moment later Tom heard Crailey come down the stairs, sure of foot and humming lightly to himself. The door of the office was closed. Crailey did not look in, but presently appeared on the opposite side of the street and offered badinage to the boy who toiled at the shutters.

It seemed quite a journey.

The bell had almost ceased to ring when a lady, dressed plainly in black, but graceful and tall, came rapidly out of Carewe street, turned at the corner by the little drug store and went toward the church. The boy was left staring, for Crailey's banter broke off in the middle of a word.

He overtook her on the church steps, and they went in together.

That afternoon Fanchon Bareaud told Tom how beautiful her betrothed had been to her. He had brought her a great bouquet of violets and lilies of the valley and had taken her to the cemetery to place them on the grave of her baby brother, whose birthday it was. Tears came to Fanchon's eyes as she spoke of her lover's goodness and of how wonderfully he had talked as they stood beside the little grave.

"He was the only one who remembered that this was poor tiny Jean's birthday," she said and sobbed. "He came just after breakfast and asked me to go out there with him."

CHAPTER XII.

MR. CAREWE returned one warm May afternoon by the 6 o'clock boat, which was sometimes a day late and sometimes a few hours early, the latter contingency arising, as in the present instance, when the owner was aboard. Nelson drove him from the wharf to the bank, where he conferred briefly in an undertone with Eugene Madrillon, after which Eugene sent a note containing three words to Tappingham Marsh. Marsh tore up the note and sauntered over to the club, where he found General Trumble and Jefferson Bareaud.

"He has come," said Tappingham, pleased to find the pair the only occupants of the place. "He saw Madrillon, and there's a session tonight."

"Praise the Lord!" exclaimed the stout general, rising to his feet. "I'll see old Chenoweth at once. My fingers have the itch."

"And mine, too," said Bareaud. "I'd begun to think we'd never have a go with him again."

"You must see that Crailey comes. We want a full table. Drag him if you can't get him any other way."

"He won't need urging," said Jefferson.

"But he cut us last time."

"He won't cut tonight. What hour?"

"Nine," answered Tappingham. "It's to be a full sitting, remember."

"Don't fear for us," laughed Trumble.

"Now for Crailey," Jefferson added. "After so long a vacation you couldn't keep him away if you chained him to the courthouse pillars. He'd tear 'em in two!"

But Jefferson did not encounter the alacrity of acceptance he expected from Crailey when he found him half an hour later at the hotel. Indeed, at first Mr. Gray not only refused outright, but seriously urged the same course upon Jefferson. Moreover, his remonstrance was offered in such good faith that Bareaud, in the act of swallowing one of his large doses of quinine, paused with only half the powder down his throat, gazing, nonplused, at his prospective brother-in-law.

"My immortal soul!" he gasped. "Is this Crailey Gray? What's the trouble?"

"Nothing," replied Gray quietly. "Only don't go; you've lost enough."

"Well, you're a beautiful one!" Jefferson exclaimed, with an incredulous laugh. "You're a master hand. You to talk about losing enough!"

"I know, I know," Crailey began, shaking his head, "but"—

"You've promised Fanchon never to go again, and you're afraid Miss Betty will see or hear us and tell her you were there."

"I don't know Miss Carewe."

"Then you needn't fear. Besides, she'll be out when we come and asleep when we go. She will never know we've been in the house."

"That has nothing to do with it," said Crailey impatiently, and he was the more earnest because he remembered the dangerous geography of the Carewe house, which made it impossible for any one to leave the cupola room except by the long hall which passed certain doors. "I will not go, and, what's more, I promised Fanchon I'd try to keep you out of it hereafter."

"Lord, but we're virtuous!" laughed the incredulous Jefferson. "I'll come for you at a quarter to 9."

"I will not go, I tell you."

Jefferson roared. "Yes, you will. You couldn't keep from it if you tried!" And he took himself off, laughing violently, again promising to call for Crailey on his way to the tryst and leaving him still warmly protesting that it would be a great folly for either of them to go.

Crailey looked after the lad's long, thin figure with an expression as near anger as he ever wore. "He'll go," he said to himself.

"And—ah, well—I'll have to risk it! I'll go with him, but only to try to bring him away early—that is, as early as it's safe to be sure that they are asleep downstairs. And I won't play. No, I'll not play; I'll not play."

He went out of the hotel by a side door. Some distance up the street Bareaud was still to be seen, lounging homeward in the pleasant afternoon sunshine. He stopped on a corner and serenely poured another quinine powder into himself and threw the paper to a couple of pigs that looked up from the gutter maliciously.

"Confound him!" said Crailey, laughing ruefully. "He makes me a missionary—for I'll keep my word to Fanchon in that, at least! I'll look after Jefferson tonight. Ah, I might as well be old Tom Vanrevel, indeed!"

Meanwhile Mr. Carewe had taken possession of his own again. His daughter ran to the door to meet him. She was trembling a little and, blushing and smiling, held out both her hands to him, so that Mrs. Tanberry vowed this was the loveliest creature in the world, and the kindest.

Mr. Carewe bowed slightly, as to an acquaintance, and disregarded the extended hands.

At that the blush faded from Miss Betty's cheeks, she trembled no more, and a salutation as icy as her father's was returned to him. He bent his heavy brows upon her and shot a black glance her way, being, of course, immediately enraged by her reflection of his own manner, but he did not speak to her.

Nor did he once address her during the evening meal, preferring to honor Mrs. Tanberry with his conversation, to that diplomatic lady's secret anger, but outward amusement. She cheerfully neglected to answer him at times, having not the slightest awe of him, and turned to the girl instead; indeed, she was only prevented from rating him soundly at his own table by the fear that she might make the situation more difficult for her young charge. As soon as it was possible she made her escape with Miss Betty, and they drove away in the twilight to pay visits of duty, leaving Mr. Carewe frowning at his coffee on the veranda.

When they came home three hours later Miss Betty noticed that a fringe of illumination bordered each of the heavily curtained windows in the cupola, and she uttered an exclamation, for she had never known that room to be lighted.

"Look!" she cried, touching Mrs. Tanberry's arm, as the horses trotted through the gates under a drizzle of rain. "I thought the room in the cupola was empty. It's always locked, and when I came from St. Mary's he told me that old furniture was stored there."

Mrs. Tanberry was grateful for the darkness. "He may have gone there to read," she answered in a queer voice. "Let us go quietly to bed, child, so as not to disturb him."

Betty had as little desire to disturb her father as she had to see him; therefore she obeyed her friend's injunction and went to her room on tiptoe. The house was very silent as she lit the candles on her bureau. Outside the gentle drizzle and the soothing tinkle from the eaves were the only sounds. Within there was but the faint rustle of garments from Mrs. Tanberry's room. Presently the latter ceased to be heard, and a wooden moan of protest from the four poster upon which the good lady reposed announced that she had drawn the curtains and wooed the rulers of Nod.

Although it was one of those nights of which they say, "It is a good night to sleep," Miss Betty was not drowsy. She had half unfastened one small sandal, but she tied the ribbons again and seated herself by the open window. Peering out into the dismal night, she found her own future as black, and it seemed no wonder that the sisters loved the convent life; that the pale nuns forsook the world wherein there was so much useless unkindness, where women were petty and jealous, like that cowardly Fanchon, and men who looked great were tricksters, like Fanchon's betrothed. Miss Betty clinched her delicate fingers. She would not remember that white, startled face again.

Another face helped her to shut out the recollection—that of the man who had come to mass to meet her yesterday morning and with whom she had taken a long walk afterward. He had shown her a quaint old English gardener who lived on the bank of the river, had bought her a bouquet, and she had helped him to select another to send to a sick friend. How beautiful the flowers were and how happy he had made the morning for her with his gayety, his lightness and his odd wisdom! Was it only yesterday? Her father's coming had made yesterday a fortnight old.

But the continuously pattering rain and the soft drip, drop from the roof, though as mournful as she chose to find them, began after awhile to weave their somnolent spells, and she slowly drifted from reveries of unhappy sorts into half dreams, in which she was still aware she was awake, yet slumber, heavy eyed, stirring from the curtains beside her with the small night breeze, breathed strange distortions upon familiar things, and drowsy impossibilities moved upon the surface of her thoughts. Her chin, resting upon her hand, sank gently until her head almost lay upon her relaxed arms.

"That is mine, Crailey Gray!"

She sprang to her feet, immeasurably startled, one hand clutching the back of her chair, the other tremulously pressed to her cheek, convinced that her father had stooped over her and shouted the sentence in her ear. For it was his voice, and the house rang with the words. All the rooms, halls, and even the walls, still seemed murmurous with the sudden sound, like the tinkling of a bell after it has been struck. And yet—everything was quiet.

She pressed her fingers to her forehead, trying to untangle the maze of dreams which had evolved this shock for her, the sudden clamor in her father's voice of a name she hated and hoped never to hear again, a name she was trying to forget, but as she was unable to trace anything which had led to it there remained only the conclusion that her nerves were not what they should be. The vapors having become obsolete for young ladies as an explanation for all unpleasant sensations, they were instructed to have "nerves." This was Miss Betty's first consciousness of her own, and, desiring no greater acquaintance with them, she told herself it was unwholesome to fall asleep in a chair by an open window when the night was as sad as she.

Turning to a chair in front of the small oval mirror of her bureau, she unclasped the brooch which held her lace collar and, seating herself, began to unfasten her hair. Suddenly she paused, her uplifted arms falling mechanically to her sides.

Some one was coming through the long hall with a soft, almost inaudible step, a step which was not her father's. She knew at once, with instinctive certainty, that it was not he. Nor was it Nelson, who would have shuffled; nor could it be the vain Mamie, nor one of the other servants, for they did not sleep in the house. It was a step more like a woman's, though certainly it was not Mrs. Tanberry's.

Betty rose, took a candle and stood silent for a moment, the heavy tresses of her hair, half unloosed, falling upon her neck and left shoulder like the folds of a dark drapery.

At the slight rustle of her rising the steps ceased instantly. Her heart set up a wild beating, and the candle shook in her hand. But she was brave and young, and, following an irresistible impulse, she ran across the room, flung open the door and threw the light of the candle into the hall, holding it at arm's length before her.

She came almost face to face with Crailey Gray.

The blood went from his cheeks as a swallow flies down from a roof. He started back against the opposite wall with a stifled groan, while she stared at him blankly and grew as deathly pale as he.

He was a man of great resource in all emergencies which required a quick tongue, but for the moment this was beyond him. He felt himself lost, toppling backward into an abyss, and the uselessness of his destruction made him physically sick. For he need not have been there; he had not wished to come; he had well counted the danger to himself, and this one time in his life had gone to the cupola room out of good nature. But Bareaud had been obstinate, and Crailey had come away alone, hoping that Jefferson might follow. And here he was, poor trapped rat, convicted and ruined because of a good action! At last he knew consistency to be a jewel and that a greedy boy should never give a crust; that a fool should stick to his folly, a villain to his devilitry and each hold his own; for the man who thrusts a good deed into a life of lies is wound about with perilous passes, and in his devious ways a thousand unexpected damnations spring.

Beaten, stunned, hang-jawed with despair, he returned her long, dumfounded gaze hopelessly and told the truth like an inspired dunce.

"I came—I came—to bring another man away," he whispered brokenly;

Face to face with Crailey Gray.

and, at the very moment, several heavy, half suppressed voices broke into eager talk overhead.

The white hand that held the candle wavered, and the shadows glided in a huge, grotesque dance. Twice she essayed to speak before she could do so, at the same moment motioning him back, for he had made a vague gesture toward her.

"I am not faint. Do you mean, away from up there?" She pointed to the cupola stairs.

"Yes."

"Have—have you seen my father?"

The question came out of such a depth of incredulousness that it was more an articulation of the lips than a sound, but he caught it, and, with it, not hope, but the shadow of a shadow of hope, a hand waving from the far shore to the swimmer who has been down twice. Did she fear for his sake?

"No—I have not seen him." He was groping blindly.

"You did not come from that room?"

"No."

"How did you enter the house?"

The draft through the hall was blowing upon him; the double doors upon the veranda had been left open for coolness. "There," he said, pointing to them.

"But—I heard you come from the other direction."

He was breathing quickly. He saw his chance—if Jefferson Bareaud did not come now.

"You did not hear me come down the stairs." He leaned toward her, risking it all on that.

"No."

"Ah!" A sigh too like a gasp burst from Crailey. His head lifted a little, and his eyes were luminous with an eagerness that was almost anguish.

Especially For Women

FRUIT-A-TIVES are the finest medicine in the world for women.

As a mild and gentle laxative—as a positive and speedy cure for Constipation and Biliousness—as the only cure for weak and irritated kidneys and especially for "that pain in the back"—as a positive cure for headaches—and as a general tonic to build up and invigorate the whole system — FRUIT-A-TIVES stand supreme.

In cases of irritated Ovaries, Ovarian Pains, Vaginal Catarrh, Excessive and Scanty Menstruation, Ulcerations, Bearing Down Pains—and all those troubles peculiar to women—

Fruit-a-tives

OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS"

have the most remarkable effect.

Ninety-nine cases out of a hundred of Female Troubles are due to neglect. Bowels become constipated — kidneys irregular — skin neglected — and the poisons of the body, which should be carried off by these important organs, are taken up by the blood carried to the female organs and poison them, thus starting up a train of female troubles.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are made from fruits and by their remarkable action on bowels, kidneys and skin, rid the system of poisons, purify the blood, and restore the delicate organs of generation to new vigor and health.

No woman, who suffers, should ever be without them. 50c. a box—6 for $2.50, at your druggist's or sent postpaid by

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

FOWLS IN FLORIDA.

The largest poultry farm in the South is said to be that of F. Lewter, who went to Orlando, Fla., in 1884, with $235, and now pays taxes of $12,000 annually, owns 300,000 acres of land, set with orange and grapevine groves. At his home place he has 40 varieties of land and water fowls, and his eggs are in demand all over the country. He has over 3000 birds, and will hatch 10,000 or more chicks this season. He raises the wild turkey, and has a herd of deer.

MUSHROOMS — RATS — KALSOMINE.

Preserving Mushrooms.

Can you tell me how to can mushrooms for keeping and market? (The fresh small button mushrooms are rubbed off with a piece of flannel and salt, washed in cold water, the ends of the stalks cut off, and the mushrooms dropped into cold water, to which some lemon juice has been added. When all are cleaned take them out, place them over the fire in a preserve kettle with enough water to cover, and boil five minutes. Fill in a small glass jar, screw tightly, set the jar in a vessel of cold water over the fire, and boil three-quarters of an hour; then remove and keep them in a cool place.)

Rats.

I took possession of this place about a year ago, and it seemed to me then that there were an unusual number of rats about; I now find that the place has been celebrated for its rats for years—neighbors ask, "How's the rat crop this season?" etc. My rats laugh at traps, and seem to thrive on ordinary poisons; they are everywhere, not only in the barn, corn house and hen house, but in the walls of the dwelling house also. Can you help me at least to decrease these pests? (Have you tried copperas? The common green sort pulverized and thrown plentifully about where the rats go, also about their holes, so they must walk over it, is pretty sure to drive them away, because it makes their feet sore. Freshly-slaked lime has the same effect. Some readers report excellent results with this placed in their holes and scattered in their runways.)

Kalsomining.

There is no difference in the labor of whitewashing and kalsomining. Kalsomining requires a very fine brush, costing $2 or more, and the kalsomine must be evenly and carefully applied. Whitewashing may be done with any ordinary whitewash brush. A good one can be purchased for 50 cents or less, if the work is rough. To prepare kalsomine, mix ten pounds of zinc white for fine work, or the same quantity of whiting if for ordinary work, to a thick cream with warm water; then add half a pound of glue dissolved in a little water, and mix it all together. If the kalsomine is for side walls, add half a pound more glue. The cost of this amount of kalsomine, if whiting is used will be a little over 50 cents. If it is desired to tint the kalsomine, buy a small quantity of mason's blue, yellow, red or green, and mix it until the kalsomine is of the desired tint. House decorators call this treating the walls in distemper.

GRANGE MATTRES.

Good Farming With Ten Acres.

My farm is but 9 1-2 acres by actual measurement, and I find it a pretty big farm at times, too, so much so that during the last few years of the scarcity of labor I have had to work a little harder than I really wanted to. Do not think to escape work on a small farm, simply because the work must be better done in all its details, and thus our profits are increased accordingly.

Begin Small.

There are probably many people situated just as I was and cannot afford to buy and equip a large farm, for indeed, it takes a small fortune to-day to buy, stock a nice, little, comfortable home for themselves and family with what capital they have at hand, and not be obliged to carry a mortgage all their lives. I know of many who went so heavily in debt at the outset that they are only able to keep up the interest year by year. This I call slavery. All such, if really they must have a large farm, would do much better on the dertile, cutover lands of northern Wisconsin, that can be had cheap, and from which they could in a few years own a home free from incumbrances.

Many city people long to operate a small farm, to raise poultry, fruit, etc., Many such make the venture, only find that they knew nothing about the business of intense agriculture and thus they fail utterly. It takes time, years of time, to become prosperous in any business.

Small But Good Farm.

Several years ago my whole possessions were about $1300. I had farmed for others all my life, supported a family and saved the above amount, and came to the conclusion that I would own some land, that henceforth I would be my own boss, so I began to look for a location. I realized that location had a great deal to do with the kind of farming I would be obliged to follow. Land at that time was worth close to $100 per acre in this vicinity, so my hearers can easily see that my capital woul dnot go far towards starting even a ten-acre farm, but I purchased 9 1-2 acres at $100 per acre, leaving me but $350 to build buildings, buy fruit stock, berry plants, etc. I could see but one course to follow, and that was to mortgage my prospective home, which I did at $500. This, with what I had left from the original capital, enabled me to build a dwelling, poultry buildings, etc.; but right here another problem confronted me. What was I to live on while waiting for my farm to produce? I had given up working for others; my investment needed all my time and to neglect it meant loss. I was obliged to give a second mortgage of $500, making my total indebtedness $1300, but I was not discouraged. Located as I was, near one of the best markets, I knew that a few good crops would clear all indebtedness, and they did. In just five years I was out of debt. I could have cleared it up sooner had it not happened that I started in business just as the panic of '93 was sweeping the country and prices were not what they have been since for poultry and fruit products.

Location of the Small Farm Important.

Location must be considered. Because a good deal of shipping must be done to and from such a plant, it is the part of wisdom to locate as near a shipping station as possible. If poultry is to be made the backbone of the enterprise, as it is with me, the land should slope to the south or, still better, southeast, so as to catch the early morning rays of "Old Sol." Poultry and fruit certainly make a splendid combination, running the fruit as an adjunct to the poultry, managing the poultry so that the major portion of our crop is placed on the market in winter and early spring. In fact, I never recommend poultry from any other standpoint. Have a small brood house so that a nice lot of winter broilers can be put upon the market in early spring. The same brood house can be used to get out our spring stock from which to select our next winter's layers and yearlings to be sold in June, while prices are high, and to get them out of the way of growing pullets as well as to lighten up on the labor problem.

Poultry and Fruit.

The growing pullets should be so colonized that they have the run of the land, thereby getting three crops from the same land each year, and a very efficient way of ridding the fruit plants of insects, curculio, etc., distributing the fertility as they go from the detached colony houses. The manure is taken directly to the tree and cane plants, and spread where it at once becomes available and is one of the best fertilizers known for fruit.

Live Stock on Fruit Farm.

A stable should be built to accommodate not less than three cows and a horse or two. I hear some say, why keep so many cows on such a small farm? I do not do it because there is any considerable amount of money derived directly from dairying, but to get a large amount of good manure to grow fruit, and the milk comes in so nicely for the poultry. In fact, my way of managing poultry demands milk, so if I can pretty nearly sell butter enough to pay for the keeping of the cows I get the manure and milk for my labor. But if one can locate near a city where they can get plenty of manure and can also get plenty of milk for the poultry, it would not be advisable to keep too many cows. At present I am buying food for six head of stock, and consider my money well invested.

One of The Secrets.

I consider one of the secrets of my success in growing small fruits attributable to the liberal use of stable manure. By this method of running a small farm a revenue is coming in at all seasons of the year. It is much safer to follow mixed farming, even in a small way, for we have seasons that are unfavorable to certain kinds of crops, and it is well to have something else upon which to rely for an income. I find poultry the surest and safest of all my undertakings. No matter what the season a full crop can be relied upon. It requires experience, however, to succeed with fowls, especially the winter egg business. No one should jump into the business and expect to make good money from the outset.

A Ten-Acre Farm rightly managed, will bring a good living, including the comforts and some of the luxuries of life. This I have fully demonstrated, and what I have done others can do. — C. E. Matteson, in Am. Cultivator.

AGRICULTURAL ITEMS.

Rules of a Hay Farmer.

Never dig ditches to fill with rocks in a grass field.

Never underdrain your grass field until you find it necessary.

Never pasture or make a road-bed of your grass field, or let animals stand, stamp or otherwise kill the grass roots. Timothy and red-top seed sown on an old field will not renew the stand.

Never use coarse manure on grass field after seeding.

Never undertake to steal anything from the soil.

An old field can be reseeded in a month, but it is better to take a year and get one crop of oats for hay.

Mow your grass field close just before frost, and rake clean.

Fertilize every crop a little more than needed for each crop.

Bear in mind, your grass field will never winter kill or die as long as it has anything to live for.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Graham Waffles.

One pint sweet milk, three well-beaten eggs, one tablespoonful of sugar, butter the size of a walnut (melted), salt, one pint of graham and one cupful of wheat flour, mixed with two heaping tablespoonfuls of baking powder.

Celery in Beet Cups.

Cook the celery until tender in slightly salted boiling water, then chop it very fine, and keep hot beside the range. Carve small cups from boiled beets, dust them with seasoning, brush lightly with butter and set in the oven until hot. Fill them with the celery, and pour over a little sauce piquant.

Banana Fritters.

Two eggs, half a cupful of milk, two cupfuls of flour, one and a half teaspoonfuls of sugar, one teaspoonful of baking powder, and three bananas. Separate the eggs. Beat the yolks, butter and sugar together until light. Pour in the milk. Beat the whites of the eggs stiff; add them and the flour alternately, a portion at a time. When all is used stir in the baking powder, and lastly the bananas, cut into half-inch blocks. Drop by tablespoonfuls into deep fat hot enough to smoke slightly. Cook three or four minutes until a delicate brown, turning once. Drain on paper and serve hot.

Creole Dish.

Two cupfuls of well-cooked and seasoned rice, two cupfuls of canned tomatoes, half a pound of raw ham minced and browned in butter; mix all together, add a dash of cayenne pepper, turn into well-buttered pan and bake.

Berry Pudding.

When blackberries appear make this berry pudding, which is a favorite one at the Boston Cooking school: Beat one-third of a cup of butter to a cream. Add gradually half a cup of sugar and the beaten yolks of two eggs. Sift together 2 cups of previously sifted flour, four level teaspoonfuls of baking powder and half a teaspoonful of salt. Add this to the creamed butter, sugar and eggs. Put in half of the flour mixture, mix, and then put in half a cupful of cold water. Mix in the rest of the flour, etc. Beat thoroughly, and last of all fold in the well-beaten whites of the two eggs. Sprinkle a cupful of blackberries with a little flour, and add them to the batter, as it is dropped, a spoonful at a time, into the mould, which should be rubbed with unsalted butter. Steam an hour and a half, or bake 25 minutes, and serve with a blackberry hard sauce. The sauce is made in the usual way, with half a cup of butter and cup of sugar. Add to this half a cupful of crushed berries,

Will not save a diseased tree. Whatever it is that threatens the life of the tree must be discovered and attacked directly. It is the same with rheumatism, which has been considered incurable in advanced stages, because the ordinary remedy, instead of going at the root of the disease, simply prunes the branches. The trouble is in the bone or joint and must be got at there, must be driven out. This is where the pre-eminence of Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil comes in over all other remedies. It goes straight at the root of the trouble in the quickest and most direct way, penetrates to the bone and effects a sure, permanent and speedy cure. Here is what one sufferer says of it:

PRUNING THE BRANCHES.

Dear Sirs,—You ask me if Tuck's Bone Oil did me any good. I can tell you that it did. It cured me of rheumatism and nothing ever helped me for neuralgia until I got that. I suffered everything for years from rheumatism and at times I thought it was going to my heart and would kill me. All my neighbors know how I suffered and they all know that Tuck's Bone Oil cured me, because I tell everybody I see. I took small doses of it, about four drops in milk, and I had it thoroughly rubbed into my legs, which were both affected. It seemed to penetrate right to where the pain was and even the first application gave me relief, but the grumbling pain came back in a few hours. I kept on using it and before I had used all of the fourth bottle I was completely free of rheumatism. During this time I had a terrible attack of neuralgia. I used Tuck's Bone Oil, and got almost instant relief. I am willing for you to use this any way you like because I think your Bone Oil should be known of by everyone.

W. H. DEAN,
Farnham, Quebec.

For rheumatism, lame back, neuralgia, sprains, coughs, colds, quinsy or bronchitis, in short for any and all kinds of inflammation there is nothing to equal Tuck's Bone Oil. A bottle should be on the shelf in every home. For sale by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle or sent prepaid by The Tuck Bone Oil Co., Limited, Smith's Falls, Ont.

BOSTON'S BARBER REGULATIONS

Board of Health Orders Sterilization of All That Barbers Use on Customers.

A special despatch from Boston, May 5, 1900, to the N.Y. Sun gives new regulations of the Boston Board of Health as to barber shops; 'Mugs, shaving brushes and razors shall be sterilized after each separate use thereof. A separate, clean towel shall be used for each person. Material to stop the flow of blood shall be used only in powdered form, and applied on a towel. Powder puffs are prohibited." Wherever Newbro's Herpicide is used for face or scalp after shaving or hair cutting, there is no danger of infection, as it is antiseptic, and kills the dandruff germ.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

To remove fruit stains stretch the fabric containing the stain over the mouth of a basin and pour boiling water on the stain. In cold weather fruit spots can frequently be removed by hanging the stained garments out of doors over night. If the stain has been fixed by time, soak the article in a weak solution of oxalic acid, or hold it over the fumes of sulphur.

In buying canned goods examine the can carefully, and if the sides bulge reject them, as this denotes the presence of gas, which renders the contents unfit for food.

One of the latest ideas is that celery is a cure for rheumatism. It is asserted that the disease is impossible if the vegetable be cooked and freely eaten. The celery should be cut into pieces and boiled in water until soft, and the water drunk by the patient. Put new milk with a little flour and nutmeg into a saucepan with the boiled celery, serve it warm with pieces of toast, eat it with potatoes, and the painful ailment will soon yield.

The Lancet advocates the use of snails as food. The snail, it says, has been called "the poor man's oyster." It makes an excellent fish sauce and may be used for the same purpose as oyster sauce. Care must be exercised in the choice of the snail for food purposes, as it is well known that snails feed on poisonous plants, and it is the custom in France to allow a few days to elapse after they have been taken from their feeding ground in order that any poisonous matter may be eliminated.

If horseradish is to be grated the simplest way is to put it through the meat chopper.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

A Study in Eggs.

Newly-laid eggs require to be cooked longer than others. Eggs over a week old are not as good boiled, but may be fried, poached, scrambled, escalloped or made into omelets. Eggs should not be beaten in tin. A feeble person or an invalid, for the best results, should not eat eggs after they are more than three days old. The longer they are beaten, the lighter the product in which they are used. The whites and the yolks should be beaten separately: they are beaten to force in air. Beating causes the white or albumen to coat and enclose myriads of air bubbles. The yolks, by reason of the oil they contain, are heavier than the whites, and if both are beaten together, the yolks burst the films in the whites and the imprisoned air escapes. Cake is more delicate if the beaten whites of eggs are added after the flour has been stirred in.

It may be a matter of surprise to some to know that in normal digestion hard-boiled eggs that required ten minutes' cooking and soft-boiled eggs that need three minutes require the same length of time for digestion in the stomach—three hours and a half. Fried eggs are digested in three hours. This disproves the prevalent idea that all fried food is hard to digest.

Laboratory tests give a method for boiling eggs which may be depended on to give a uniform result. This is something which the average housewife fails to do. Into a granite saucepan put a sufficient amount of hot water to cover the eggs. When it boils, drop them in. Cover the pan, move to the back of the stove, and leave six minutes for soft, eight minutes for medium, and ten minutes for hard.

Use salted water, to which has been added a little vinegar to hasten coagulation and to flavor poached eggs.

To fry eggs, use a spider with a flat bottom, with fat enough to dip over the eggs. Do not let the fat get very hot before they are slipped in, or they will stick; do not turn them, but cook soft or hard by dipping the hot fat over them with a tablespoon.

An omelet is among the economical ways of cooking eggs. Beat the yolks lightly; to every six use a teacupful of milk, and the frothed whites. Put into a spider a tablespoonful of butter; when not very hot, add the egg mixture; when it bubbles or rises in flakes, slip under a flat-bladed knife or pancake lifter, and lift up several times as it cooks, so that it may not stick and scorch. When it will hold together, dust with salt and pepper, fold over, loosen again and slip on to a hot platter. This will require from three to five minutes. A small spider is advisable for omelets, to be used for no other purpose. For meat omelets, before folding spread over one-half any finely-chopped, well-seasoned meat. Grated cheese may be used; also asparagus or cauliflower.

An egg mayonnaise makes a pleasing variety. Beat four eggs with a tablespoonful of vinegar, a little salt and pepper; slowly add olive oil, or butter a little melted, to make the consistency of cream. Slice the yelks of hard-boiled eggs, place on a platter, pour over the mayonnaise, and garnish with the finely-chopped whites mixed with a little cream, alternating with sliced cucumber pickles.

For a convalescent, beat an egg with a tablespoonful of cold water. Heat to scalding half a teacupful of water and a teacupful of fruit juice; do not let it boil. Pour this over the egg, stirring constantly. Sweeten to taste with cut sugar, put in a clean vessel, and heat until it thickens, but do not allow it to boil. Serve in a glass with croutons or small, thin biscuit.

Sugar Beets for Alimony.— Sugar beets for alimony was what the court ordered in the suit for divorce brought by Matilda Sebaunck against her husband, Louis, at Toledo, O. The plaintiff asked that she be allowed alimony during the pending suit, and this was granted. The alimony allowed was in the shape of sugar beets growing on the land they rent, the proceeds of which were to be used for the support of herself and children.

English Lawns.—The human soul is so made that green is one of its most delectable esthetic experiences. The color is not exciting, like red, nor stimulating like yellow, nor exalting and inspiring like blue; it is simply soothing, satisfying, reviving, delicious. It is the human color; if there be planets on whose surface green is a color as rare as is blue on ours, our race would speedily languish and die out there. But I speak, of course, of the perfect green—the green of English lawns. Other greens there are, cold, or trivial, or muddy, or crude, which do but irritate or depress us; and there are blue-greens and gray-greens, well enough in their places; and in the caves of icebergs, spiritual greens that exercise a weird enchantment. But for the garment of the mighty, sound, earth, no other green is more worthy than this of England; none other touches so inwardly the heart of man. No wonder that Falstaff, on his deathbed, babbled o' green fields; for my dying eyes I could desire no happier vision than the gracious levels of an English lawn steeped in the gentle sunshine of a summer afternoon.

RHUBARB SHORTCAKE.

While no shortcake quite equals—at least in sentiment — that made with fresh strawberries, there are many agreeable substitutes, and none, perhaps, is better or less common than that which is compounded with rhubarb. The fresh ruby stalks should be cut small, without peeling, and cooked in the oven, in a covered earthen dish, with very little water, and sugar to taste. Cool before using. A good receipt for the cake is as follows: Sift a pint of flour twice with half a teaspoonful of salt, two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one tablespoonful af sugar. Rub in a quarter of a cupful of softened butter. Beat one egg very light, put it in a cup, and fill up the cup with milk. Stir this into the flour, divide into two parts, roll out lightly to the size of a teaplate, spread liberally with butter, lay one on the other, and bake in a hot oven about fifteen minutes. Pull apart, and finish as usual with the prepared rhubarb.

Carvell Amendment to Build to St. John, N. B., Carries.

Bell Telephone Co.'s Bill Stands For Third Reading Until House Has Passed General Telephone Legislation—Minister of Militia Will Look Into Charge That Men Served Under Assumed Names at Niagara.

Ottawa, June 26.—In the House yesterday Col. Sam Hughes read a statement that there were 2,550 men out of a total of 5,900 in the Niagara militia camp serving under assumed names, and that many first year men were being set down as second and third year men so as to draw the increased pay. If such a state of things were true, said Col. Hughes, the offenders must have committed forgery, and, moreover, the officers must be cognizant.

Sir Frederick Borden said that there were a number of men at camp at Niagara who appeared on the rolls under assumed names, but that the number was greatly exaggerated. However, he had called the attention of the adjutant-general to the statement and the matter was being investigated.

Bell Telephone Legislation.

The House at its morning session considered at length in committee the bill to increase the capital stock of the Bell Telephone Co. There was a long discussion on the measure, and Mr. Maclean requested the first Minister to permit the bill to stand until the telephone amendments to the Railway Act were disposed of, and warned the Government that he and other Conservatives would hold up the bill in committee indefinitely. This led to a conference at the noon hour, and at 3 o'clock the Bell Co. bill was reported, but the same must stand for third reading until the House has passed the general telephone legislation.

Branch Lines of G. T. P.

There was the usual debate in committee in the afternoon between the New Brunswick members concerning the branch lines to be built by the Grand Trunk Pacific from Moncton to the sea. The matter came up on an amendment offered by Mr. Carvell (Carleton, N. B.) to the pending bill to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Co. He insisted upon a branch being built to St. John, N. B., and ridiculed the position taken by Mr. Emmerson, that the moral obligation resting upon the G. T. P. to build to St. John was sufficient without any legal sanction.

Dr. Daniel (St. John) also favored the amendment. Although opposed by the Ministers present, the amendment carried—yeas 44, nays 20.

Divorce Bill Passes.

The Mackintosh divorce bill was passed.

Telephone Amendments.

The telephone amendments to the Railway Act were taken up as the first Government order last night. The clause with reference to admission to railway stations will be re-drafted in accordance with the discussion, and after discussion the clause providing for exchange of business stands over for further consideration.

Provincial Rights.

Mr. Boyce (West Algoma) opposed the bill to incorporate the Pacific & Atlantic Co. This road is projected from Cornwall and Ottawa to the Soo. He pointed out that it was a provincial road, and should not apply for a Dominion charter.

R. L. Borden and other members of the Opposition protested against invading provincial rights.

The bill carried without division.

Provide For 32.

A return was brought down showing that the Laurier Government had appointed no less than five Senators and twenty-seven members of Parliament to places of emolument under the Crown since 1896.

Metal For Transcontinental.

Ottawa, June 26.—The Government has awarded contracts for steel rails and fastenings for two sections of the National Transcontinental Railway, amounting in all to $2,488,450. Of this sum $2,215,000 will be expended upon steel rails, the contracts for $1,127,000 going to the Dominion Iron & Steel Co., Sydney, N. S., and $1,088,000 to the Algoma Steel Co.'s Sault Ste. Marie works. The total quantity of steel rails required is 65,000 tons. Of this quantity 55,000 tons will be furnished at $34 per ton, and the remaining 10,000 tons by the Dominion Iron & Steel Co. at an advance of 50 cents per ton.

No Tinned Goods For Army.

London, June 26.—In behalf of War Secretary Haldane, Mr. Buchanan, financial secretary to the War Office, announced in the House of Commons yesterday that orders had been issued to withhold all issue to the army of American brands of preserved meat until Lieut.-Col. Hobbs, the officer despatched to the United States to enquire into their character, has reported.

Murdoch's Body Found.

Pembroke, June 26.—The body of Richard Murdoch, telegraph operator of Westmeath, who was drowned May 24, in the rapids below Pembroke, was found yesterday near the scene of the tragedy. The remains will be taken to his home in Bobcaygeon.

Legitimately produced and truly inspirited, fiction interprets humanity, informs the understanding and quickens the affections. It reflects ourselves, warns us against social follies, adds rich specimens to our cabinet of characters, dramatizes life for the unimaginative, daguerreotypes it for the unobservant, multiplies experience for the isolated or inactive and cheers age, retirement and invalidism with an available and harmless solace.—Tuckerman.

Little Willie's Surprise.

Mr. and Mrs. Blank recently moved from the city to the suburbs. The first night in their new home their five-year-old son climbed into bed as soon as he was undressed.

"Willie," said his mother, "haven't you forgotten to say your prayers?"

"Why, mamma," he replied, "is God way out here too?"

OLD ROMAN NAMES.

The Peculiar System That Was In Use by the Nobility.

The noble Romans were peculiar in their system of nomenclature. They had the praenomen, the nomen and the cognomen. The first of these distinguished the individual and was equivalent to our Christian or baptismal name. It was usually indicated by a single letter, as A. for Aulus, or by two letters, as Ap. for Appius, or three, as Ser. for Servius. The nomen was distinctive of the gens or clan and has no corresponding appellative among us. The cognomen was placed last and designated the familiae, precisely answering to our surname. Sometimes a fourth name was added, the agnomen, in consequence of a renowned action, some conspicuous event of life or feature of character. Scipio, in addition to his regular names, was styled Africanus, after his conquest of Carthage. The name Germanicus was assumed by those who distinguished themselves in the wars with the Germans.

In female names the Romans indulged but small variety of appellation, and fancy had little or nothing to do with their invention and bestowal. When there was but one daughter in a family she received the feminine termination of her gentile name, as Tullia, the daughter of Marcus Tullius Cicero, and Octavia, the sister of Octavius Caesar, etc., which names were retained even after marriage. When there were two daughters one was called Major and the other Minor, as Cornelia Major and Cornelia Minor. If there were more than two they were distinguished by their number, thus: Prima, Secunda, Tertia, Quarta, etc.

GREEK COINS.

How the Ancients Tested the Purity of the Metal.

The first coins of gold and silver that have come down to us are now dated as a rule in the time of Croesus, who lived about the middle of the sixth century B. C.

It may readily be imagined that a mere lump of gold, supposed to be of a certain weight, would be subject to skepticism unless it were guaranteed by some recognized authority. So, in order to save reweighing and testing at each transaction, these ingots or coins were stamped with the authoritative mark of a prince or state. So stamped they become the true coins in spite of the fact that, contrary to modern custom, they were not at all regular.

But, in spite of the guarantee that might be afforded by the mark of a state or a prince, we find the Greeks applying certain tests to determine the genuineness of the currency offered to them. Plating was easily detected by jabbing the suspected coin with some sharp instrument. At other times the touchstone was used. One which was known as the "Lydian stone" was supposed to reveal a proportion of foreign metal as small as a barley corn in a stater. Another test, in the case of silver, was to polish the coin and then breathe on it. If the moisture quickly disappeared the metal was pure. Yet another way to detect alloy was to heat the coin or coins on redhot iron. If the metal was unalloyed it remained bright, if mixed with other substances it turned black or red according as it was more or less impure.—Oliver S. Tonks in Chautauquan.

Daffodil and Asphodel.

Daffodil and asphodel—the latter, according to Homer, covered the meadow haunted by the shades of departed heroes—are etymologically the same. Old time Englishmen confused the two plants, which are quite different, and it was reserved for later generations to restore its true spelling to the true asphodel and restrict daffodil, with its mysterious "d," to the flower now known by that name. Formerly it was "affodille," and the "d" is variously explained as being a childish insertion, like the "T" in Ted, from Edward, or as representing the French "fleur d'affrodille" or the English "th' affrodille" (the definite article) or as the final "d" of "and" in such a combination as "fennell and affodil."

Brothers and Sisters.

It has been proved again and again that a boy without a sister is much to be pitied; that a girl without a brother is to be condoled with. And why? Because the mutual society improves both. The boy teaches the girl to be wider minded, less petty and narrow, more manly physically, and, above all, to understand something of the opposite sex. Again, the boy is a hundredfold nicer for having a sister. He confides his little scrapes to her, and she, with her gentle inborn goodness, helps him and advises him to avoid the pitfall again.—London Queen.

Solitude.

Solitude is a matter of taste. It has been the subject of much discussion. Volumes have been written in praise or condemnation of it. But perhaps the real value of solitude has never been so subtly and so accurately expressed as by the girl who was asked if she liked being alone. "That depends," she answered sweetly, "on whom I am alone with."

An Easy Creditor.

The stomach listens to no precepts. It begs and clamors. And yet it is not an obdurate creditor. It is dismissed with a small payment, if only you give it what you owe, and not as much as you can.—Seneca.

Looking Ahead.

Gerald—Will you marry me? Geraldine—Wait awhile. I don't want to get tired of you just yet.

Necessity may render a doubtful act innocent, but it cannot make it praiseworthy.—Joubert.

Notes From Bradstreets.

It is interesting to know that at the present moment between 5,000 and 6,000 miles of railroad are under active or prospective construction in Canada, the work to be done at a total cost of about $1,000,000,000. Of this total the C.P.R. is laying 1,270 miles, the Canadian Northern 1,567, the Grand Trunk Pacific 1,900, and the James J. Hill roads 1,000, which makes a total of 5,737 miles.

• • •

There is no doubt that one of the most important of the rapidly growing centres in the West is Fort William. That it is keeping pace with the rest of the Western country is shown by the fact that building permits for the year so far cover a total cost of construction of about $260,000 a large increase over that for the same time last year.

• • •

Yukon advices say that up to the present date the output of gold from that country has been double that for the same time last year, and if the ratio holds throughout the year the entire output will be one of the best in the history of the country.

LOW SUMMER TOURIST RATES WEST.

During the entire summer the Chicago and North Western Ry. will have in effect very low round trip tourist rates to Colorado, Utah, California, Oregon, Washington and British Columbia points. Choice of routes going and returning, with favorable stopovers and time limits. Especially low excursion rates to the Pacific Coast from June 25th to July 7th. City Fathers' Deliberations.

THE SUMMER'S BAND CONCERT QUESTION SETTLED. — FILTERING SCHEME LAID OVER—MANY QUESTIONS ANSWERED — A ROUTINE SESSION.

It was 8.25 last evening before a sufficient number of the members of the City Council put in an appearance to form a quorum. Those present were Ald. Panter, Acting Mayor, Aldermen Sinclair, Cooper, Vermilyea, Marsh and Gordon.

The following communications were read;

From the Woman's Christian Temperance Union asking that the Spitting By-law passed by the Council be enforced, and that placards be placed up in conspicuous places, forbidding spitting on the sidewalk.

From the Sidney Township Council, asking the City Council to make a grant towards repairing a boundary road between the city and the township.

From Mr. F. B. Hudson, asking that the city purchase some supplies from him.

REPORTS.

The Waterworks Committee made the following recommendations:

That Mr. Colden be paid $48 per month, commencing at the 1st of June.

That the Zwick's Island filtering scheme be proceeded with at once, either by day work or by contract.

A petition was read asking that certain lights be changed on Emily street and an additional light be placed at the railway crossing on said street.

On motion the Council went into committee of the whole on reports, communications, etc., Ald. Sinclair in the chair.

The petition from a number of ratepayers, asking that certain lights be changed on Emily street and that a new light be placed at the railway crossing on said street was taken up.

Mr. Edward Taylor, who was present, spoke in support of the petition. He said there was a necessity of having certain lights changed on the said Emily street. The lights that were on the street were of little use, on account of their being placed among the trees, which hindered the light being shed. He also asked that an additional light be placed at the railway crossing on that street. A light should also be placed at the railway crossing on Bleecker Avenue.

Ald. Panter said that when the railway crossing was placed on Bleecker Avenue the Grand Trunk Railway authorities agreed to place a light there and maintain it if it was found necessary to have such a light.

On motion the following accounts were passed;

FILTERING SCHEME LAID OVER.

Ald. Gordon read a letter from Mr. Chipman, civil engineer, who made an estimate of the work, and it would cost $11,500. The engineer stated that the water secured would be free from any contamination and pure at all times.

In answer to an enquiry, it was ascertained that the by-law submitted to the ratepayers for the carrying out of this scheme provided for the expenditure of only $8,000.

On motion the matter was laid over for the time being.

VARIOUS TOPICS.

Ald. Marsh moved that the Street Surveyor be empowered to engage some men to cut down weeds on streets where it is necessary to have this work done.

Ald Gordon and Sinclair thought that some of the citizens might take a little extra trouble and cut the weeds down in front of their premises.

The motion prevailed.

The communication from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was taken up.

Ald. Panter said it was no use of putting up placards unless the co-operation of the police was obtained to enforce the by-law.

Ald. Gordon said that in some places where he had recently been he had seen placards, which requested people not to spit upon the sidewalk.

The communication was on motion filed.

A communication was read from Dr. Yeomans, informing the Council of the verdict of the coroner's jury re Hugh Grinbon's death.—Received and filed.

The communication of Mr. B. Hudson re supplies was referred to the Executive Committee.

A motion prevailed that the city pay the annual fee of $15 to maintain its membership in the Ontario Municipal Association.

The request which was presented at the special meeting of the Council that $50 be granted for aquatic sports, to be held during the Old Boys' Reunion, was on motion granted. Aldermen Marsh and Sinclair were appointed a committee in connection with the same.

BAND CONCERTS.

Ald. Sinclair stated that the special committee appointed to see the two bands regarding concerts upon the park, would recommend that six concerts be given by the I.O.O.F. Band for $125. He said that the committee had interviewed both bands and the sum named by the I.O.O.F. Band was the only sum named. The Fifteenth Regiemntal Band would give no price, but intimated that it would give the same number of concerts at the same price as the I.O.O.F. Band, whatever that price might be. The same band also said they would play free if the I.O.O.F. Band did so.

Ald. Cooper moved, seconded by Ald. Panter, that the offer of the I.O.O.F. Band for six concerts for $125 be accepted, and that the dates for the same be left with a committee composed of Aldermen McCrodan, Vermilyea and Sinclair.—Carried.

Ald. Sinclair stated that his attention had been called to the fact that the city wood was being taken by the load to some place, off Pinnacle street.

The Street Surveyor promised to look into the same.

A motion prevailed that the Trenton Electric Company be granted permission to change two poles, which were upon the market square.

CHARLES STREET SEWER.

The Clerk stated that some of those interested in the Charles street sewer had requested him to urge the Council to construct the same.

A motion prevailed that this matter be attended to at once.

RE LIGHTS.

Ald. Vermilyea called attention to the fact that some two or three weeks ago the Trenton Electric Company had about 50 lamps burned out about the city and that it had been impossible for them to replace the same yet, as they could not procure the lamps.

On motion the committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

COAL SUPPLY.

Ald. Marsh said he understood that coal could now be procured cheaply in the city and it might be advantageous if the city would procure what coal was necessary for use in the various departments.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Marsh asked if the City Solicitor had received any reply from the Attorney-General in reference to the matter of fines and fees.

The Solicitor answered that the Attorney-General's Department took the ground that the fines in cases of crime should go to the Government. The Solicitor also said he would endeavor to have the Ontario Municipal Association obtain an amendment to the Statutes so that all fines should go to the city.

This concluded the business of the session and the Council adjourned.

Died In the Queen City.

A message was received in the city announcing the death of Mrs. Charles Good, which occurred in Toronto yesterday afternoon. Deceased, who was 29 years of age, was born in the Old Country, but resided the greater portion of her life in Toronto. She had been ill for some time from lung trouble. In addition to the husband a young son nearly two years of age survives. The remains will be brought here for interment.

DRY FOURTH IN SAN FRANCISCO

BUT JULY 5TH WILL BE "WETTEST" DAY EARTHQUAKE CITY HAS EVER HAD. — SALOONS OPEN ON THAT DAY.

Washington, June 26.—The people of San Francisco will witness the quietest Fourth of July this year ever known in that city. For a city that has always been "wide open" on the Fourth, as on every Sunday and other holiday, there will be a striking contrast this year, as such saloons that escaped the conflagration or that have grown up since will be sealed up tight and no liquors will be in evidence.

Although on the Fourth the city will be "dry" July 5 promises to be the "wettest" day San Francisco has ever had, for at the break of dawn every liquor dealer may throw open his doors for the first time since they were closed by order of General Funston on the day of the earthquake. Fresh supplies of liquid refreshments of every sort have been shipped into the city lately and elaborate preparations are under way for a 'grand opening."

Severe Thunder Storm.

CERTAIN PORTION OF THE COUNTY VISITED ON SATURDAY LAST.

On Saturday afternoon certain sections of Thurlow and Huntingdon townships were visited by a severe thunderstorm. Fortunately the damage done was not extensive. For a few minutes the wind assumed cyclonic proportions, whilst hail fell in large quantities. The lightning and thunder were also severe. In some places fences were overturned and even trees suffered.

The most serious damage by the storm was at Bethel, where the Methodist Church was struck by lightning and damaged to the extent of $400 or $500, but not destroyed. This is a substantial brick structure. The storm was not of long duration.

At Sign of the Scales.

ALLEGED MISREPRESENTATION.

The case of Shappee vs. Deshane occupied the attention of the court today and was not concluded when we went to press. The defendant is charged with obtaining $425 from plaintiff by false and fraudulent representation.

ALLEGED INDECENT ASSAULT.

It was expected that the case of alleged indecent assault preferred against Lewis Woodcock would be reached later in the day.

On a Tour.

A party of automobilists composed of Misses Louise Sargeant and E. Nedway, of Boston; Miss M. E. Nolon, of New York; Walter Rittler, of Vienna, and chauffeur A. Norton, arrived in the city last evening from the west and remained here over night They went eastward this morning.

Purchase of Sterling Bank Stock by Continental.

So Admitted G. A. Somers, Vice-President of the Insurance Company—Witness Explained the Purchase of the Atlas Debentures—In Answer to Witness Wood, Dominion Counsel Says the Position Assumed by Mr. Wood Was Wrong.

Toronto, June 26.—Charles Fuller, secretary and actuary of the Continental Life, was the first witness before the Royal Insurance Commission yesterday. Mr. Tilley immediately plunged into the Atlas Loan transaction by Wood and Somers. He produced the documents regarding the original note, and the one releasing the company from liability and accepting the directors' personal guarantee and asked at whose instance witness had drawn documents.

Mr. Fuller said that he received his instructions from Messrs. Wood and Somers, but could not say who of the directors had demurred at agreeing to the proportion. Witness stated that he was going to faint, and Mr. Tilley called G. A. Somers, vice-president of the Continental.

A Wrong Impression.

He was questioned by Mr. Tilley about the juggle of Atlas Loan debentures. He said that the impression that the examination had was erroneous. He wanted to make a statement, but counsel preferred to ask questions.

It was shown that the firm agreement was made on Aug. 12, 1903. Mr. Somers purchased the debentures that the Continental held, arranging the price by a loan from the Traders' Bank at 4 per cent. The stipulation was that the Continental Life was to keep $30,000 on deposit in that branch, for which it would be allowed three per cent. As security thirteen of the Continental directors had given their personal note, and the interest was being paid out of commissions on premium income and also cash received from the Murch policy.

Mr. Somers went on to state that, although the company knew that the loss amounted to some twenty thousand dollars, the matter was kept in the same way for fear the public would take a wrong impression, until last December, when it was decided that the directors would give the witness their signed note for the loss and on condition that he would release the company from any liability in connection with the defunct debentures.

A Tardy Document.

Mr. Tilley seemed very anxious to learn just why the document had not been fully completed until the Continental Life had been called by the commission.

Mr. Somers said that he had signed the document first, and that he was not waiting for the other directors to sign their part of the agreement. Messrs. Wood and Jones' signatures had not been procured until last Thursday night.

Mr. Tilley said he would return to the subject later.

The purchase of certain western bonds by G. B. Wood was gone into. It was divulged that Wood had gone on a western trip for the Continental, and when out there had bought Calgary debentures, which were afterwards sold and the profits ascertained before any money was paid. These profits were turned over to the Ontario Securities Co.

Witness said that as the subsidiary company and the Continental had the same boards purchases and sales were to the Continental Life and were put through by the Ontario Securities.

On Feb. 1 of this year the Continental Life made a call loan to the Ontario Securities of $60,000, taking as security Sterling Bank stock. This new bank was to make its deposit with the Government and was greatly in need of money.

Directors of Sterling Bank.

In order that this deal might go through without exposure and any hitch five of the Continental directors were immediately put on the board of the Sterling Bank that things might be arranged quieter and quicker.

As president of the Ontario Securities Mr. Somers purchased $75,000 worth of bank stock, and that company got the cash from the Continental by handing over Sterling Bank stock.

Just before the court rose Commissioner Langmuir asked the witness if he thought it was a wise move for an insurance company to dabble in other companies that the directors control, and Mr. Somers quietly said that he did not think it was a wise idea.

Mr. Somers took the box at 2.15.

No arrangement of an account of the Continental Life in the Bank of British North America by Mr. Somers. He was aware that an account was kept, but it had nothing to do with either the Ontario Securities or the Sterling Bank. There was no connection with the accounts in any shape whatever.

More Loan Companies.

Another company, the Hastings Loan, had Dr. Aikin and Mr. Vandusen, Continental Life directors, on its board. Still another, the Reliance Loan, had Hon. John Dryden of the Continental Life and Ontario Securities Co. as one of its chief officers. Mr. Somers stated emphatically that no transaction was ever put through with either of these loan companies by the Ontario Securities or the Continental Life. The idea of directors being in all companies was no special reason that the company's transactions were connected.

Mr. Wood was recalled to the box at 2.25.

Mr. Tilley tried to connect the selling of $15,000 worth of Reliance bonds with the opening of the bank account with the British North America. Mr. Wood said that the large balance in the B. N. A. was not kept there purposeless. He explained in detail the sale of the bonds.

The securities held by the Continental Life and Ontario Securities Co. was next.

Wood Buys Bonds.

Certain debentures, Ft. Frances, Calgary and Chatham, were sold by the Continental Life and were returned as the money was paid back by the Ontario Securities in the call loan to that company, which was used in repurchasing these debentures.

The call loan was paid by the Ontario Securities by giving out and selling stock in the Sterling Bank, which had been hypothecated against the call loan.

Mr. Wood went to the Pacific Coast at the expense of the Continental Life to appoint agents for that company. He bought the Calgary debentures at this time in his own name. He made an offer to the city clerk, which he accepted.

"When I returned to Toronto I turned these debentures over to a brokerage firm as shares," said Mr. Wood.

The document effecting this transaction was sent for.

These bonds, Mr. Wood admitted, were sold by the Ontario Securities at a profit, but this profit was given to the Ontario Securities Co. and not to the Continental Life.

Mr. Tilley took exception to this way of doing business. The Continental Life paid all witness' expenses and salary to tour the west and he buys lands and debentures and sells them to the Continental Life when he was the manager.

Ontario Securities Profit.

The Ontario Securities had paid nothing for $27,000 worth of Dauphin debentures, but they sold them to the Continental Life at the very high rate of five per cent.

"How can you justify such conduct?" asked Mr. Tilley. "Why should you be selling debentures that you purchased on the company's business, with the company' money, at a profit?"

"We bought $35,000 worth to earn 4 7-8 per cent. on a small premium and we sold them to the Continental Life at 4 1-2 per cent.

'Did you make profit of 5 per cent.?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"No; about 4 per cent."

The Continental had lots of money to invest and the witness was asked why he did not buy these debentures for the Continental Life.

Mr. Wood answered: "I bought these debentures for the Ontario Securities alone. The Continental Life did not want any investments at that time. Is there anything wrong about that?"

Wrong Says Tilley.

"Do you want my opinion?" asked Mr. Tilley, hotly.

"Yes."

"I think so. I think so," said the assistant Dominion counsel emphatically. "The Continental Co. should get the benefit and not make a profit for the Ontario Securities, which was practically organized to make money for the directors of the Continental Life."

"Do you think it fair, assuming the stock was a good investment, for the Ontario Securities to buy at 60 and sell to the Continnental at 62."

"I think it proper," answered Mr. Wood.

Judge McTavish asked the witness who fixed the price at which the Continental Life would enter into these transactions. Wood replied that he did.

"You give it at both ends," said Mr. Tilley.

Counsel then went into the company's real estate deals. The Continental had $100,000 worth of property, in which Mr. Wood said the company would make eight per cent.

Mr. Wood was superintendent of the Merchants' Insurance Co., which was wound up. He said that some of the insured in the Merchants' were insured in the Continental at some little advantages. Mr. Tilley brought out the fact that rebates were given to the old policyholders, which he thought was unfair to the new policyholders. A special rate of Hm. table, with a five per cent. loading.

Mr. Wood explained to Judge McTavish that no agreement was made with the policyholders to that extent.

Mr. Fuller will prepare a statement showing the expenses in connection with reinsuring of the Merchants' policyholders.

Continental Investments.

Have any loans been made to any officers or directors of your company, asked Mr. Tilley.

Not a five-cent piece, declared Mr. Wood.

Mr. Wood said that the policyholders had no right to vote in the Continental Life. The company had made money last year, and Mr. Wood thought from now on there would be no further impairment of capital.

Secretary Fuller adjusted the premiums. They were fixed on his actuarial skill and not on competition.

Mr. Wood explained that the Continental experienced a very low death rate. The company had good medical men and were careful of their policies.

Mr. Tilley showed by statistics that 60 per cent. of the policies lapsed during the last four years. He asked Mr. Wood if this was not a high rate.

"Not any higher than some of the large Canadian companies."

Cost of New Business.

The cost of new business for the last five years was 130.74 per cent.

Mr. Wood said that this was too high, but could not tell the real causes. It was due in a great measure to high commissions.

The Continental pushed the participating business. Non-participating policies only gained one-tenth of the total business.

The profit and loss statement of the Continental showed that the expenses of the first year exceeded the income four times. The statement was dissected at length by Mr. Tilley.

George R. Ewing, for the Ontario Government, took the witness just before adjournment.

Egypt Punishes Soudanese.

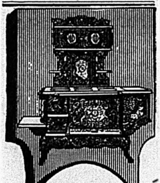
Cairo, June 26.—Three hundred and fifty Soudanese were killed and 100 captured by the punitive expedition sent from El Obeid to relieve the garrison at Talodi, which was attacked by native tribesmen early in June, resulting in the loss of 40 Egyptians killed. No losses were sustained by the expedition.

Names Esterhazy as Guilty.

Paris, June 26.—In the Supreme Court yesterday Procurator-General Baudourn began his argument in the Dreyfus case. He declared he was convinced that Dreyfus was innocent and that Major Count Esterhazy was guilty. He therefore urged the quashing of the entire proceedings with a retrial.

Gets Notice of Removal.

Peterboro', June 26.—Geo. Cochrane, for the past twenty years license inspector for West Peterboro', has received notice from the license department to hand over the books and papers to his office on July 1 to Police Constable Stewart, who will succeed him. In reply Cochrane sent a letter to Toronto in which he says that, if he is to be dismissed, he will not hand over the books, etc., in his possession until they are properly audited by an officer of the department and accepted by him as correct.



No range can bake so well as the Imperial Oxford, because no other range has the Diffusive Oven Flue that draws in pure air constantly, heats it just as hot as you want it heated, and sends it through every part of the whole oven every second. That flue, found only in this perfect range, keeps that heated pure air—DRY air—constantly moving DOWNWARD through the oven, over the baking food, and out up the chimney. When it enters the oven it's hot and dry; when it leaves it, it's wet air,—carries with it all the moisture, all the odors, but NONE of the juices of the food that's being baked.

Please visit any of our stores and see why this is the right range for your kitchen.

CATTLE MARKETS.

British Markets Lower—Chicago is Firm and Higher.

London, June 25.—Cattle are quoted at 10½c to 11½c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8c to 8½c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 13½c to 16c per lb.

TORONTO JUNCTION LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, June 25.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 67 carloads, composed of 1409 cattle, 96 sheep and 2 calves.

Exporters.

Prices for shipping cattle ranged from $5 to $5.35, with one or two lots of cattle at more money. The bulk sold at $5.12½ to $5.25 per cwt.; export bulls sold at $3.93 to $4.40 per cwt.

Butchers.

There was not enough good to choice butchers' cattle, and more would have found a ready market at good prices. Choice, picked lots of prime cattle sold at $5 to $5.25 per cwt.; loads of good at $4.90 to $5; fair to medium, $4.60 to $4.90; stall-fed cows, $4.25 to $4.40; mixed loads of grass cattle were 15c to 25c per cwt. less than the above quotations, and grass cows 50c to 75c per cwt. less than stall-fed cows.

Sheep and Lambs.

Export ewes, $4.30 per cwt.; export bucks, $3.75 per cwt.; spring lambs, $3.75 per cwt.

Hogs.

None were offered, but H. P. Kennedy quotes prices unchanged at $7.25 for selects and $7 for lights and fats.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, June 25.—(Special.)—Cables from Liverpool and London reported Canadian cattle were weak and noted a decline of ½c, with sales at 10½c to 11c. Demand for ocean freight space has been good. Canadian shippers of ranch cattle have protected themselves by engaging the bulk of the space on the Warren and Cunard lines out of Boston to Liverpool for July, August and September at 35s. Liverpool and Glasgow space from this port has been closed out for July at 40s, and London at 32s 6d to 35s. The first vessels to Manchester in July have been let at 37s 6d. Exports for the week were 3544 cattle, 54 sheep. Receipts to-day were 700 cattle, 50 milch cows, 200 calves, 150 sheep and lambs and 600 hogs.

A feature of the market was the renewed strength in hogs, and prices show an advance of 10c to 25c per 100 lbs. Receipts were small, for which the demand from packers was good and sales of selected lots were made at $7.90 to $8 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

Cable advices on Canadian bacon were steady from London and a trifle easier from Liverpool and Bristol.

Everything was scarce and dear this morning. "I offered five dollars and a half each for two lambs, but could not get them," was the statement of one of the leading butchers as he left the market. Prime beeves sold at 5⅜c to 6¼c per lb. Pretty good cattle, 4½c to 5¼c, and the common stock, consisting largely of grass-fed cattle, from 2⅜c to 4¼c. Milch cows sold at $25 to $60 each. Calves sold at $2.50 to $8 each. Sheep sold at 3⅜c to 4½c per lb., and lambs at $3.50 to $6 each.

State of Affairs in Nipissing as to Fining of Gagnon.

Toronto, June 27.—On the application of J. E. Jones, an order of certiorari was yesterday granted to bring down the papers in connection with the case of John Gagnon of the Township of Springer, charged with keeping a house of ill-repute.

On the part of the Government, Deputy Attorney-General Cartwright disclaimed all responsibility on the ground that Reeve Vachou, who fined and sentenced Gagnen, exercised his duties not by reason of his appointment, but by virtue of position as reeve of the township. Mr. Cartwright stated that the Government would order an investigation in addition to that which would proceed through the courts.

Gagnon made the statement that he had been paying fines periodically under an agreement with the reeve that no imprisonment should follow.

St. Petersburg, June 27.—Yesterday's session of the Lower House of Parliament was openly devoted to the revolutionists' propaganda for undermining the loyalty of the troops.

Speeches couched in ardent revolutionary tone were delivered with the direct object of disseminating among the soldiers.

The authorities who are able to confiscate papers containing telegraphic accounts of the ferment among the soldiery, are unable to prevent the publication of Parliamentary speeches, and those delivered yesterday, to-day will be printed in every radical paper in the empire, and so find their way into every barracks, camp and outpost.

Railway Subventions Passed By the House Of Commons.

One Condition Provides For the Roads Being Laid With Rails Made in Canada, While Another Says Bonuses Shall Be Treated as "Loans"—Victory For Organized Labor and Travelling Public.

Ottawa, June 27.—The new Chief Justice assented to a number of bills yesterday afternoon, and his presence attracted a large attendance of members from the House to the Senate Chamber.

A feature of the occasion was the absence of any attempt at display.

His lordship was attired in a black frock coat, light trousers, and occupied the Speaker's chair.

Notified of Vacancy.

George Taylor, of Leeds, formally notified the House of the vacancy in North Renfrew, caused by the death of the Hon. Peter White.

Premier Reticient.

R. L. Borden wanted to get a declaration from the Government as to the course to be pursued in connection with the usury bill which is to come before the banking and commerce committee to-day. The Premier would give Mr. Borden no definite information. When the committee had dealt with the bill it would be possible to make a statement.

The Railway Subsidies.

The House went into committee on the proposed railway subsidies. The morning and afternoon sessions were almost exclusively devoted to their discussion.

During the discussion W. F. Maclean (South York) called attention to the insufficient accommodations between Ottawa and Toronto. Mr. Maclean thought it most important to shorten the route to 220 miles or five hours, between Ottawa and Toronto.

Mr. Wilson (Lennox and Addington) called attention to the statute which treated these bonuses as loans and required the companies to carry persons, stores, mails, etc., for the Government, on account.

Mr. Fielding said the statute had been passed but a few years ago. Possibly nothing had ever been done under the statute.

There was some discussion in regard to the proposed subsidy for a road from Sharbot Lake to Carleton Place via Lanark Village.

Subsidies All Passed.

All the subsidies, amounting to more than $9,000,000, were finally passed. The subsidies are upon various conditions, one of which provides "that the governor-in-council may make it a condition of the grant of the subsidies herein provided that the company shall lay its road with new steel rails, made in Canada, if they are procurable in Canada of suitable quantity, upon terms as favorable as other rails can be obtained, of which the Minister of Railways and Canals shall be the judge."

Victory For Organized Labor.

An important amendment was made to the Railway Act at the night session, which scores a great victory for organized labor and goes far to insure the safety of the traveling public of Canada. For years the various brotherhoods have protested against the employment by the railway companies of trainmen, and especially engineers, without sufficient practical experience.

Mr. Knowles (W. Assiniboia) and W. F. Maclean (South York) referred to the matter in committee, and Mr. Emmerson stated that it deserved careful attention and prepared a section which passed without dissent. It amends section 212 of the Railway Act, 1903, and empowers the board of railway commissioners to make regulations, "designating the number of men to be employed upon trains, their qualifications or time service."

Thus, should the board require two years continuous service as fireman to precede employment as engineer, the railway companies will be obliged to conform to such requirement. Other regulations of a similar kind will be made.

Full Interchange Defeated.

When the telephone amendments to the Railway Act came up, Mr. Emmerson moved an amendment to give any independent telephone compulsory connection for long distance service only.

W. F. Maclean (South York), submitted one to give both local and long distance telephone connection.

This was voted down.

Mr. Emmerson's amendment carried.

Mr. Alcorn (Prince Edward) proposed a section extending the limited right of exchange to individuals as well as corporations.

Mr. Alcorn's amendment was lost.

Mr. Maclean asked that the bill with amendments be reprinted before the third reading. This was agreed to.

House Sits Saturday.

Ottawa, June 27.—The House will sit on Saturday and then adjourn till Tuesday.

Senate Reform.

Ottawa, June 27.—In the Senate, yesterday afternoon, Senator Robertson of Prince Edward Island, continued the debate on Senate reform. He did not believe in doing away with the second chamber, but if any change were to be made, he would prefer having an election of half the Senators every five years. This would give a better body than any of the other reform schemes.

Fifteen Houses Burned.

Sandon, B. C., June 27.—Fire started Monday at Archie Macdonald's house through his son playing with matches and spread to the adjoining houses. All the dwelling houses on the Coady road from H. F. Pound's two houses to that of William Davidson, M. P., are completely wiped out, fifteen in all, with the loss of all the furniture and contents. Very little insurance was carried on the property destroyed. The estimated loss is about $12,000

Registered Letter Stolen.

Montreal, June 27.—A registered letter, containing $300, disappeared a few days since from the mails while en route from St. Scholastique to Staynerville on the north shore of the C. P. R. No arrests have yet been made.

Dies of His Injuries.

Peterboro', June 27.—The 3-year-old son of Joseph Collins of Otonobee Township, who was kicked on the forehead by a horse and had his skull crushed, died yesterday morning.

Killed in Alberta.

Toronto, June 27.—Frank Flynn, a fireman on the C. P. R., and an ex-member of the Toronto police force, was killed yesterday in a railway accident near Battleford, Alberta.

Detective Kidnapped.

Vancouver, B. C., June 27.—Detective William Shearer has disappeared, and it is claimed he has been kidnapped by a gang of smugglers, who have owed him a grudge.

Killed by Fall.

St. John, N. B., June 27.—H. P. Welder of New York fell from the Royal Hotel window, two storeys, to the hard pavement below and was instantly killed.

The National Policy.

Every year evidence of the wisdom and forethought of the leaders of the Conservative party in inaugurating a system of protection to Canadian industries is being brought under the notice of those who take an interest in Canadian progress and development.

Dealing with this subject, and lamenting the loss of trade of the United States, through the establishment of industries in Canada, as the result of the National Policy W. R. Corwin, secretary of the New York committee of the American Recipocal League, on the 21st inst. gave an address before the Board of Commerce in Detroit, in which "he showed by statistics that the markets of the world are gradually being closed against the United States, and strongly advocated closer trade relations with Canada, showing that as a result of our commercial warfare with that country our manufacturers have been forced to establish in Canada mills and factories financed by American capital for the purpose of making articles manufactured in this country, and that there have been over 130 of such industries established in Canada within the last few years employing something like 40,000 skilled laborers."

It is fortunate for Canada that our present rulers belied their whole life's professions, by not adopting their opposition free trade policy. Had they done so, Canada would now, as it was before 1879, be the vassal in matters of trade of our neighbors across the line.

If, replies the supporter of the present Government, the Conservative policy of protection is continued, why oppose them? For the simple reason that they are not honest, and being opportunists, they would reverse their policy and ruin the country the moment it was supposed retention of power would be the result They even now attempted to humbug and deceive their followers by a declaration that they are not protectionists, but merely "revenue tariff" politicians. Those who want to be deceived accept this reason, though with reluctance.

One Honest Engineer.

The Georgian Bay Canal survey has not been exempt from attempts at boodling and little less than attempts stealing.

An account of a Grit alderman in Ottawa was under investigation the other day by the Public Accounts Committee, when the following interesting facts were brought to light:

E J. Rainboth, an engineer in charge of a station on the Georgian Bay Canal survey, was a witness. In his examination he deposed that he had cut down accounts of the alderman for horses, robes, sleighs, etc., and gave as his reason for doing so that the price amounted to outrageous robbery, and declared that unsound horses, flimsy robes and second-hand sleighs were palmed off on the Government at double their value.

Mr. Rainboth was asked; "Did Cunningham ever use any persuasion to get you to pass his accounts?"

"This is not a very pleasant subject to discuss," said the witness.

"But we want the facts," replied the questioner.

"Well, he evidently thought he could buy me with one hundred dollars," the witness replied.

"How was that?"

"He sent me a present of a fur coat Two boys brought it down from his shop."

The witness went on to say that he had spoken to Cunningham to get him a coat at wholesale prices, to which Mr. Cunningham replied, "It won't cost you anything."

Mr. Rainboth answered to this that he did not want it on such terms. He said if Cunningham would get him a coat at wholesale price he would pay for it, otherwise he wouldn't have it. Two boys then brought him the coat and the invoice with it.

The coat was invoiced at $100, with "discounts" of 40 per cent., 25 per cent., two of fifteen, and one of three per cent., this practically discounted the whole amount away.

"When I had examined this," added the witness, "I told the boys to take it back, and say to Cunningham that he was sending his coat to the wrong place."

Does it not appear from what is transpiring every day, that public and business morality, so far as dealing with the Government is concerned, has became completely demoralized?

When is this to end?

Sir Charles Kirkpatrick, of the touring English football team, was talking about cricket.

"In a northern garrison town last year," he said, "a match was arranged between the officers of the garrison and the county lawyers. The officers prepared a superb luncheon for their visitors, and all sat down to the repast before the game. The lawyers did full justice to the good things. Like giants they attacked the champagne and black cigars. And the officers were more than hospitable. Bottle after bottle was brought in, and the costly black cigars from Havana lay in profusion everywhere. Finally the lawyers would have nothing more. Their faces, though, were already flushed, and as they emerged into the sunshine of the cricket field their glazed eyes blinked. The soldiers, who had partaken very sparingly themselves winked at one another. Victory seemed assured.

"But what was this? Out of a marquee a crew of athletic giants running, began to practice batting and bowling in admirable fashion.

"Who are those chaps? We don't know them," said an officer, frowning.

Oh," said one of the lawyer guests, "they are our—hic — our playing team. We are only the lunching team, you know."

Mrs Wilkins Freeman, the novelist, nodded towards an angular woman of forbidding aspect at a tea.

"You will hardly believe," she said, "that she was once a very baeutiful girl. And she was as vain and selfish as she was beautiful. She jilted three desirable young men in two years.

"She had, I suppose, a good time while her beauty lasted. Now her beauty is gone, and she is alone in the world — a hard, cruel old woman with a bitter tongue. And if she once triumphed over men, men now, if they are vindictive and cruel enough, may triumph over her. One of the men she jilted was sufficiently cruel and vindictive for such a triumph. She met him a few years ago, and said;

"Let me see, was it you or your brother who proposed to me when I was a girl?"

"I don't know, madam," the man answered. "Probably it was my father."

Miss Josephine Peabody, the poet, lives in Boston, and she is noted there for her affection for dumb animals.

"Walking on Boylston street one day, the old Englishman saw a carter beating a lean horse unmercifully.

"Be ashamed of yourself," the old man cried. "Be ashamed of yourself, to abuse a poor, dumb brute like that."

"Why," said the carter, "the horse is mine. Mayn't I do as I please with my own?"

"And seized with a fresh access of rage, he laid on again harder than ever.

"The Englishman was carrying a stout oaken stick. He advanced on the carter firmly, and beat him over the head and shoulders till he howled for mercy.

"What right have you," the carter asked bitterly, "to strike me with that stick?"

"It is my own," said the Englishman, "mayn't I do as I please with my own?"

Smith's Falls hockey team will in all probability be minus the services of Harold Armstrong next season. Already, with hockey weather five months off, Ottawa is said to be looking after this clever player.

In the death of Mr. M. J. Polan, the Shamrocks lose one of their most faithful adherents and members, and one of the hardest workers for the glory of the organization. He had been connected with the Shamrocks for years, he was captain in the early '80's, succeeding one O'Connell, and he was captain again in the early '90's, being succeeded by another O'Connell, the present alderman.

Surprise and Presentation.

On Wednesday evening of last week, June 20th, a most enjoyable time was spent at the parsonage, Melrose. A surprise party of about 75 persons assembled to spend the evening with Rev. and Mrs. Crookshanks, who are about to leave this circuit for Norham. After an hour's social intercourse, refreshments were served. Then came the most important part of the programme. Mr. I. Eaton was moved into the chair, who, with several other gentlemen, expressed thankfulness for the services rendered this field by their pastor and his wife. Then followed the presentation, by Mr. Rawley, of a well-filled purse. Mr. Crookshanks made an appropriate reply. Rev. D. O. McArthur, who was present, gave an address full of hope and encouragement for the future. We wish Mr. Crookshanks and family every success in their new field of labor. "God be with you till we meet again" was sung, prayers were offered, and the people returned to their homes, feeling the better that they had made an effort to give their out-going pastor an upward and an onward lift.

On Monday evening, the members of the choir met at the parsonage and presented their leader, Mrs. (Rev.) Coombe, with an address and beautiful parlor lamp. This was a total surprise to Mrs. Coombe, but she replied feelingly and to the point. A luncheon, with ice cream and strawberries, added greatly to the evenings' enjoyment, and altogether a very pleasant evening was spent.

CHANGE IN TIME ON NEW YORK CENTRAL, SUNDAY, JUNE 17.

The summer train schedule of the New York Central will take effect Sunday, June 17th, and on that date popular low rate excursions to the various resorts will be resumed. Most of the present trains will be continued, though in some cases the time may be slightly changed, and many new trains will be added. Complete information may be obtained at New York Central Ticket Offices.

WHAT CAUSES DANDRUFF.

Greatest European Authority on Skin Diseases Says It's a Germ.

The old idea that dandruff is scales of skin thrown off, through a feverish condition of the scalp is exploded. Prof. Unna, Hamburg, Germany, European authority on skin diseases, says dandruff is a germ disease. The germ burrows under the scalp, throwing up little scales of cuticle, and sapping the vitality of the hair at the root. The only hair preparation that kills dandruff germs is Newbro's Herpicide. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Not only cures dandruff, but stops falling hair and permits a luxuriant growth. Delightful hair dressing.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Face On Barroom Floor.

The following is the poem asked for by a reader:

It was a balmy summer evening, and a goodly crowd was there,
That well-nigh filled Joe's barroom on the corner of the square;
And as songs and witty stories came through the open door
A vagabond crept slowly in and posed upon the floor.

"Give me a drink—that's what I want, I'm out of funds, you know;
When I had cash to treat the boys, this hand was never slow.
What! you laugh as though you thought these pockets never held a sou.
I once was fixed as well, my boys, as any one of you.
Thanks that braced me nicely, God bless you, one and all.
Next time I pass this good saloon I'll make another call.
Give you a song? No, I can't do that; my singing days are past;
My voice is cracked, my throat's worn out, and my lungs are going fast;
I'll tell you a funny story, and a fact a fact I promise you,
But if you'll give me another whiskey I'll tell you what I'll do,
That ever I was a decent man not one of you would think.
But I was for some four or five years back—Say, give us another drink,
Well here's luck, boys, and, landlord, my best regards to you.
For I was once a man, with muscle, frame and health;
And but for a blunder ought to have made considerable wealth.
I was a painter—not one that daubs on bricks and wood,
But an artist, and for my age was rated pretty good,
I worked hard at my canvass and was bidding fair to rise,
For gradually I saw the star of fame before my eyes,
I made a picture, perhaps you've seen, 'twas called the Chance of Fame;
It brought me fifteen hundred pounds and added to my name:
And then I met a woman—now comes the funny part—
With eyes that petrified by brain and sank into my heart.
Why don't you laugh? 'Tis funny that the vagabond you see
Could ever love a woman and expect her love for me,
But 'twas so: and for a year or two her smile was freely given,
And when her loving lips touched mine it carried me to heaven,
I was working on a portrait one afternoon in May
Of a fair-haired boy, a friend of mine, that lived across the way,
And Madeline admired it, and, much to my surprise,
Said she'd like to know the man that had such dreamy eyes.
It didn't take long to know him, and before the month had flown
My friend had stolen my darling and I was left alone.
But before a year of sadness had passed above my head
The jewel I had treasured so had tarnished and was dead.
That's why I took to drink, boys.
Why, I never saw you smile,
I thought you'd be amused and laughing all the while,
Why, what's the matter, friend; there's a tear-drop in your eye.
Come, laugh with me; 'tis only babes and women that should cry.
Say, if you give me another whiskey I'll be glad;
And I'll draw right here upon the floor the face that drove me mad,
Give me that piece of chalk with which you mark the baseball
And you shall see the lovely Madeline upon the barroom floor."
Another drink, and with chalk in hand the vagabond began
To sketch the face that well might buy the soul of any man.
And as he placed another lock upon that shapely head,
With a fearful shriek he leaped and fell across the picture, dead.

Matrimonial.

COFFEE — SHANNON.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Charles' Church, Read, on Wednesday, June 20, when Mr. Dan Coffey claimed as his bride Miss Anna Shannon, daughter of Mr. Phillip Shannon, Halston, Rev. Father McCarthy performed the ceremony. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming, wearing a gown of point d'esprit, with picture hat, and carried a bouquet of carnations. She was attended by her sister, Miss Nellie Shannon, who was very becomingly attired in a princess gown of pearl grey crepe de chine, while Mr. Dan McHenry acted as groomsman. After the ceremony the wedding party proceeded to the home of the bride's parents, where about forty guests and intimate friends awaited their arrival. The guests, after extending congratulations and best wishes, repaired to the dining-room where ample justice was done to the sumptuous repast provided. The groom presented the bride and bridesmaid with gold crescent pins set with pearls and to the groomsman a gold stick pin with pearl settings. The bride was the recipient of a purse from her father; also a great many costly and useful presents, testifying to the high esteem in which she is held by her many friends.

The happy couple took the evening train for Toronto to spend their honeymoon, the bride wearing a travelling suit of navy blue ladies' cloth and hat to match. The numerous friends of the contracting parties join in wishing them a pleasant wedding tour and also prosperity and happiness in their future home at Albert.

BUSINESS GIRLS.

NEED RICH, RED BLOOD TO STAND WORRY AND STRAIN OF BUSINESS HOURS.

Business overtaxes a woman's strength. Weak, languishing girls fade under the strain. They risk health rather than lose employment, and the loss of health means the loss of beauty. Thousands of earnest intelligent young women who earn a livelihood away from home in public offices, and business establishments are silent, suffering victims of overtaxed nerves and deficiency of strength because their blood supply is not equal to the strain placed upon them. Fragile, breathless and nervous, they work against time with never a rest when headaches and backaches make every hour like a day. Little wonder their cheeks lose the tint of health and grow pale and thin. Their eyes are dull, shrunken and weary; their beauty slowly but surely fades. Business girls and women look older than their years because they need the frequent help of a true blood-making, strengthening medicine to carry them through the day. Dr. Williams Pink Pills are actual food to the starved nerves and tired brains of business women. They actually make the rich red blood that imparts the bloom of youth and glow of health to women's cheeks. They bring bright eyes, high spirits and make the day's duties lighter. Twelve months ago Miss Mary Cadwell, who lives at 49 Maynard street, Halifax, N. S., was run down. The least exertion would tire her out. Her appetite was poor and fickle, and frequent headaches added to her distress. The doctor treated her for anaemia, but without apparent results. A relative advised her to use Dr Williams' Pink Pills, and after using but six boxes she says she feels like an altogether different person. She can now eat her meals with zest, the color has returned to her cheeks and she feels better and stronger in every way.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure bloodlessness just as food cures hunger. That is how they cured Miss Cadwell and it is just by making rich, red blood that they cure such common ailments as indigestion, rheumatism, headaches and backaches, kidney trouble, neuralgia and the special ailments which make miserable the lives of so many women and young girls. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE RIGHT TO UTILIZE LAKE ON THE MOUNTAIN WATER.

Oswego Palladium: It has long been a query to the Palladium why another source of power supply has not long since been utilized by Canadians, namely the Lake on the Mountain, near Picton, on the Bay of Quinte. There is located a sheet of water, said to be on the same level with Lake Erie, and the belief exists that there is a subterranean passage connecting the two lakes. There is reason to believe that such a passage exists from the fact that the water in the Lake on the Mountain rises or falls the same as it does in Lake Erie. Moreover, some species of fish found only in Lake Erie are also found in the waters of the Lake on the Mountain. It would seem that almost untold power could be generated from the Lake on the Mountain for use in Ontario east and west of its location.

Of course, if there is a connection between the two lakes the same objection would exist regarding the scenic defacement of Niagara Falls as exists at present. But the right of the Lake on the Mountain could not well be questioned by this country, as the lake itself is entirely in Canadian territory and its connection with Lake Erie is a theory only, though apparently well founded.

LITTLE Bell BIOGRAPHIES

Schubert

FRANZ PETER SCHUBERT, born at Vienna 1797, died 1828, was the greatest song composer of the 19th century. From beginning to end, his short life, though one of incessant activity, was filled with disappointment. He began his musical career in his 11th year as choir-boy in the Imperial Chapel. He began to compose at 13, and from his 16th year wrote in almost every department of music. But his name is celebrated chiefly in the song form, where his genius has no rival. Although he received no instruction in composition, he wrote hundreds of songs of indescribable beauty.

It is hard to conceive how the fresh, bright melodies and sweet, natural harmonies of his songs could have come from one who continually suffered from grinding poverty and comparative neglect. Yet they flow from his heart spontaneously—and perfect in the moment of writing. He wrote with such fecundity and ease and seemingly so carelessly, that he often did not recognize his own compositions on hearing them. His sparkling and inimitable "Hark, Hark, the Lark" was written in a beer-garden on the back of a bill-of-fare. And his tenderly beautiful "Serenade" (D min.) has the rare merit of being exceedingly popular and at the same time a delightful number on any high-art programme. But to get the full sensuous effect of his melodies and harmonies they must be rendered from an instrument like which with its rich, resonant Singing Tone and Flexible Action sustains the vocalist's voice and lends itself to the most delicate shading in feeling as no other. It is indeed the Singer's Piano par excellence.

THE CHINESE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

For 43 years Sir Robert Hart has been Inspector-General of Chinese Customs, and the Chinese Government is under definite obligations to Great Britain to retain him in that position or to designate an Englishman as his successor. Recently, however, an imperial edict was published at Peking, appointing two Chinese as superintendent and associate minister of customs affairs, and placing under their control all Chinese and foreigners employed in the various offices in the service. It is suspected that the ultimate purpose is to divert a part of the customs revenue to military uses; but the possible consequences are so serious that the British Government has demanded of China and has received assurances that the dict contemplates no violation of the formal agreements of the Chinese Government.

No man should marry unless he is by nature a "good provider' — unless without a twinge he can hand forth money right and left. Some men can in a sunny, cheerful way spend $10 or $15 on a dinner in a fashionable restaurant, while they become morose, sour and fearful for the future when they are obliged to give their wives a dollar or two for the day's meat. These men should remain single. Otherwise they will make such husbands and fathers as our old friend Crust.

Crust's daughter said one afternoon in a tone of unutterable surprise; "Papa went away quite gay and cheerful this morning." Mrs. Crust made an exclamation of annoyance. "That reminds me," she said. "I forgot to ask him for any money."

There was company to dinner one night and the little girl, pointing to her plate, said, in a loud voice;

"Oh, mamma, what is this?"

The thing was a hair, but the mother, red with confusion, still had enough ready wit left to say;

"Hush, dear, that is a crack in the plate."

The child cried in a still louder voice;

"Oh, mamma, look! I can move this crack about! Isn't that funny?"

THE FLIPPERTY-FLAP STORY.

A quack medicine vendor stood in a carriage selling a cough cure. To explain the construction of the throat he said;

"Ladies and gents, in your throat is two little flaps, one closing when swallowing food and opening to receive drink, and the other closing when swallowing liquids and opening to receive food only. Now, if—'

'But here a humorous old farmer interrupted, blurting out;

"Gosh, mister, what a flipperty-flapperty there must be when yer eatin' bread and milk."

Jerome K. Jerome, the English humorist, was talking about good writing.

"What I like," said, Mr. Jerome, "what I try for, is a picturesque and vivid quality. I want my words to set real pictures before my readers' eyes. This gift W. W. Jacobs has, and Stephen Crane, a man of genius, had it in perfection,"

Mr. Jerome smiled.

"A child had it, too," he said, "a child passenger of the St. Louis, the boat I crossed on. This child attended a little concert in the saloon one night during the voyage, and on going below afterwards described the concert to his mother.

"What went on, Bobby?" his mother asked.

"He, with a frown, replied;

"Oh, there was a lady screaming because she had forgot to put on her sleeves, and a hotel waiter played on the piano all the time."

A man arose in a woman's meeting, and with a sneer asked why it was that men were not addicted to saying spiteful things about one another as women were.

"The president answered him.

"Men," she said, "are so busy bragging about themselves that they don't have time to attack other men."

A churchman lately made the following remark;

"A collection plate for churches might be invented."

"A collection plate?"

"To be sure. Have you never noticed how modest people are in dropping money into the collection plate? They don't want any one to see, you know, how extremely generous are their contributions.

"Now, my idea for a collection plate would be one with slots. The silver coins—half-dollars, quarters, and dimes—would fall through their respective slots into a velvet-lined compartment, but the nickels and pennies, falling through theirs, would ring a bell like a cash register."

LAUGHTER.

Even if It Be Emotional Insanity, Let Us Have Plenty of It.

Some English scientist has reached the conclusion that laughter is insanity. He regards a fit of laughter as an emotional insanity of short duration. All right, then, give us a little more insanity. There is not laughter enough in the world—at least the right kind of laughter. We will let the Englishmen keep their faces straight if they want to, but it befits the American civilization better to break out into laughter once in awhile. Laughter is good for the facial muscles. It develops the muscles of the neck as well as the face. It makes the corners of the mouth turn upward instead of downward. It gives the wrinkles of the face a pleasing outline, quickens the action of the heart and gives new life to the nerve centers. Yes, we can afford to let the Englishman look wise and idiotic if he wants to. He can stare with fish eyed bigotry whenever a joke is perpetrated, never allowing a ripple of merriment to disturb the placidity of his countenance. He can do all these things that he wishes to, but let us go on laughing. This kind of insanity mixes very well with sanity and prosaic life. A little burst of emotional insanity breaks nicely the monotony of facts and figures.

SMUGGLING.

It Was Considered a Legitimate Pursuit In Days Gone By.

A book by J. C. Wright entitled "In the Good Old Times" throws some interesting light on the ways of days gone by: "Of every three pounds of tea it was said that two were contraband. In fact, smuggling was considered a perfectly legitimate pursuit. Everybody was ready to profit by it, from the squire, who filled his cellars with cheap wine, and his wife, who adorned herself in cheap silks, to the shopkeeper, who got cheap groceries, or the laborer, who got high wages for work that was secret, unlawful and perilous. Even Adam Smith confessed to a weakness for smuggling and nobody was above bargaining to have a pipe or a hogshead put in his cellar at a low figure. But smuggling on a large scale was not carried on without bribery, perjury, informing, violence and murder."

Of the old time London watchman: "He was wrapped in a wide skirted heavy coat, a useful garment for protecting him from the cold, but not adapted to enable him to cope with the bullies who assaulted the weak and unprotected. He wore low shoes and a big broad brimmed hat, which could be turned up or down, worn forward or backward. The only means of defense which the watchman seems to have possessed was a staff something like a beadle's. In his left hand he carried his lantern."

In those primitive times pins were manufactured by hand and went through several stages of manufacture: Worker No. 1 formed the wire, No. 2 cut it into lengths, No. 3 smoothed it, the fourth man made the head, the fifth stuck it on, the sixth ground the point, the seventh washed and dried it, and it had to go through three more hands after that; hence it used to be a familiar proverb, "It takes ten men to make a pin."

Old Workmen.

An Englishman who is a large employer of labor has been investigating the arguments of those who say that a workingman under modern conditions becomes at an early age valueless. He has kept a record of all accidents that have incapacitated his men for three days and upward. The people engaged in his employment are from fifteen to sixty-five years of age, and he asserts that more accidents occur to men under thirty than to those over fifty. He says, "I would much rather intrust an exceptionally dangerous job to a man over fifty than to one of thirty years of age."

Drew His Picture.

It is told of Major General Sir William Gatacre of the British army that during the Sudan campaign he was one day going the round of the sentries. Stopping before one he asked him what his orders were. "To keep a sharp lookout for the enemy and also for General Gatacre," was the prompt reply. "Do you know him by sight?" asked the general. "No, sir," answered the man, "but I was told that if I saw an officer fussing and swearing and rushing about that would be General Gatacre."

Against a Snap Judgment.

A boy in a Chicago school refused to sew, evidently considering it beneath the dignity of a ten-year-old man. "George Washington sewed," said the principal, taking it for granted that a soldier must, "and do you consider yourself better than George Washington?" "I don't know. Time will tell," said he seriously.

BLOOD DISEASES

Guaranteed Cured or No Pay.

If you ever had any constitutional, acquired or hereditary blood disease, you are never safe until the virus or poison has been removed from the system. You may have had some disease years ago, but now and then some symptom alarms you. Some poison still lurks in your system. Can you afford to run the risk of more serious symptoms appearing as the poison multiplies? Beware of mercury or mineral drugs used indiscriminately—they may ruin the system. Thirty years' experience in the treatment of these diseases enables us to prescribe specific remedies that will positively cure all blood diseases of the worst character, leaving no bad effects on the system. Our New Method Treatment will purify and enrich the blood, heal up all ulcers, clear the skin, remove bone pains, fallen out hair will grow in, and swollen glands will return to a normal condition, and the patient will feel and look like a different person. All cases we accept for treatment are guaranteed a complete cure or no charge.

Reader if in doubt as to your condition, you can consult us FREE OF CHARGE. Remember the old adage, "a stitch in time saves nine." Beware of incompetent doctors who have no reputation or reliability. Drs. K. & K. have been established over 27 years. You can pay after cure.

WE CURE Nervous Debility, Varicocele, Stricture Blood Diseases, Secret Diseases, Kidney and Bladder Complaints. Consultation Free. If unable to call, write for a Question List for Home Treatment.

The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of "The Gentleman From Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

He set his utmost will at work to collect himself and to think hard and fast.

"I came here resolved to take a man away, come what would!" he said. "I found the door open, went to the foot of that stairway, then I stopped. I remembered something. I turned and was going away when you opened the door."

"You remembered what?"

The flicker of hope in his breast increased prodigiously, and the rush of it took the breath from his throat and choked him. Good God! Was she going to believe him?

"I remembered—you!"

"What?" she said wonderingly.

Art returned with a splendid bound, full pinioned, his beautiful and treacherous familiar who had deserted him at the crucial instant, but she made up for it now, folding him in protective wings and breathing through his spirit. In rapid and vehement whispers he poured out the words upon the girl in the doorway.

"I have a friend, and I would lay down my life to make him what he could be. He has always thrown everything away, his life, his talents, all his money and all of mine, for the sake of—throwing them away! Some other must tell you about that room, but it has ruined my friend. Tonight I discovered that he had been summoned here, and I made up my mind to come and take him away. Your father has sworn to shoot me if I set foot in his house or on ground of his. Well, my duty was clear, and I came to do it. And yet I stopped at the foot of the stair because—because I remembered that you were Robert Carewe's daughter. What of you if I went up and harm came to me from your father? For I swear I would not have touched him! You asked me not to speak of 'personal' things, and I have obeyed you, but you see I must tell you one thing now. I have cared for this friend of mine more than for all else under heaven, but I turned and left him to his ruin and would a thousand times rather than bring trouble upon you! 'A thousand times?' Ah, I swear it should be a thousand times a thousand!"

He had paraded in one speech from the prisoner's dock to Capulet's garden, and her eyes were shining into his like a great light when he finished.

"Go quickly!" she whispered. "Go quickly! Go quickly!"

"But do you understand?"

"Not yet, but I shall. Will you go? They might come—my father might come—at any moment."

"But"—

"Do you want to drive me quite mad? Please go!" She laid a trembling, urgent hand upon his sleeve.

"Never, until you tell me that you understand," replied Crailey firmly, listening keenly for the slightest sound from overhead. "Never—until then!"

"When I do I shall tell you; now I only know that you must go."

"But tell me"—

"You must go!"

There was a shuffling of chairs on the floor overhead, and Crailey went. He went even more hastily than might have been expected from the adamantine attitude he had just previously assumed. Realizing this as he reached the wet path, he risked stealing round to her window.

"For your sake!" he breathed, and, having thus forestalled any trifling imperfection which might arise in her recollection of his exit from the house, he disappeared, kissing his hand to the rain as he ran down the street.

Miss Betty locked her door and pulled close the curtains of her window. A numerous but careful sound of footsteps came from the hall, went by her door and out across the veranda. Silently she waited until she heard her father go alone to his room.

She took the candle and went in to Mrs. Tanberry. She set the light upon a table, pulled a chair close to the bedside and placed her cool hand lightly on the great lady's forehead.

"Isn't it very late, child? Why are you not asleep?"

"Mrs. Tanberry, I want to know why there was a light in the cupola room tonight?"

"What?" Mrs. Tanberry rolled herself as upright as possible and sat with blinking eyes.

"I want to know what I am sure you know and what I am sure everybody knows except me. What were they doing there tonight, and what was the quarrel between Mr. Vanrevel and my father that had to do with Mr. Gray?"

Mrs. Tanberry gazed earnestly into the girl's face. After a long time she said in a gentle voice:

"Child, has it come to matter that much?"

"Yes," said Miss Betty.

CHAPTER XIII.

TOM VANREVEL always went to the postoffice soon after the morning distribution of the mail; that is to say, about 10 o'clock, and returned with the letters for the firm of Gray & Vanrevel, both personal and official. Crailey and he shared everything, even a box at the postoffice, and in front of this box one morning, after a night of rain, Tom stood staring at a white envelope bearing a small black seal. The address was in a writing he had never seen before, but the instant it fell under his eye he was struck with a distinctly pleasurable excitement.

Suddenly and without reason he knew that it came from Elizabeth Carewe.

He walked back quickly to his office with the letter in the left pocket of his coat, threw the bundle of general correspondence upon his desk, went up to the floor above and paused at his own door to listen. Deep breathing from across the hall indicated that Mr. Gray's soul was still incased in slumber.

Vanrevel went to his own room, locked the door and took the letter from his pocket. At last, after examining all the blades of his pocketknife, he selected one brighter than the others and loosened the flap of the envelope as gently and carefully as if it had been the petal of a rosebud that he was opening.

Dear Mr. Vanrevel—I believed you last night, though I did not understand. But I understand now—everything—and, bitter to me as the truth is, I must show you plainly that I know all of it, nor can I rest until I do show you. I want you to answer this letter—though I must not see you again for a long time—and in your answer you must set me right if I am anywhere mistaken in what I have learned.

At first, and until after the second time we met, I did not believe in your heart, though I did in your mind and humor. Even since then there have come strange, small, inexplicable mistrustings of you, but now I throw them all away and trust you wholly, Monsieur Citizen Georges Meilhac!—I shall always think of you in those impossible garnishments of my poor great-uncle, and I persuade myself that he must have been a little like you.

I trust you because I have heard the story of your profound goodness. The first reason for my father's dislike was your belief in freedom as the right of all men. Ah, it is not your pretty exaggerations and flatteries (I laugh at them!) that speak for you, but your career itself and the brave things you have done! My father's dislike flared into hatred because you worsted him when he discovered that he could not successfully defend the wrong against you and fell back upon sheer insult.

He is a man whom I do not know—strange, as that seems as I write it. It is only to you, who have taught me so much, that I could write it. I have tried to know him and to realize that I am his daughter, but we are the coldest acquaintances, that is all, and I cannot see how a change could come. I do not understand him; least of all do I understand why he is a gambler. It has been explained to me that it is his great passion, but all I comprehend in these words is that they are full of shame for his daughter.

This is what was told me: He has always played heavily and skillfully, adding much to his estate in that way, and in Rouen always with a certain coterie, which was joined several years ago by the man you came to save last night.

Your devotion to Mr. Gray has been the most beautiful thing in your life. I know all that the town knows of that, except the thousand hidden sacrifices you have made for him, those things which no one will ever know. (And yet, you see, I know them after all.) For your sake, because you love him, I will not even call him unworthy.

I have heard—from one who told unwillingly—the story of the night two years ago when the play ran so terribly high, and how in the morning when they went away all were poorer except one—their host; how Mr. Gray had nothing left in the world and owed my father a great sum, which was to be paid in twenty-four hours; how you took everything you had saved in the years of hard work at your profession and borrowed the rest on your word and brought it to my father that afternoon; how, when you had paid your friend's debt, you asked my father not to play with Mr. Gray again, and my father made that his excuse to send you a challenge. You laughed at the challenge—and you could afford to laugh at it.

But this is all shame, shame for Robert Carewe's daughter. It seems to me that I should hide and not lift my head; that I, being of my father's blood, could never look you in the face again. It is so unspeakably painful and ugly. I think of my father's stiff pride and his look of the eagle—and he still plays with your friend, almost always "successfully!" And your friend still comes to play! But I will not speak of that side of it.

Mr. Gray has made you poor, but I know it was not that which made you come seeking him last night, when I found you there in the hall. It was for his sake you came—and you went away for mine. Now that I know, at last—now that I have heard what your life has been (and, oh, I heard so much more than I have written!)—now that my eyes have been opened to see you as you are, I am proud and glad and humble that I can believe that you felt a friendship for me strong enough to have made you go "for my sake." You will write to me just once—won't you?—and tell me if there was any error in what I listened to, but you must not come to the garden. Now that I know you I cannot meet you clandestinely again. It would hurt the dignity which I feel in you now and my own poor dignity—such as it is! I have been earnestly warned of the danger to you. Besides, you must let me test myself. I am all fluttering and frightened and excited. You will obey me, won't you? Do not come until I send for you.

ELIZABETH CAREWE.

Mr. Gray, occupied with his toilet about noon, heard his partner descending to the office with a heavy step, and issued from his room to call a hearty greeting. Tom looked back over his shoulder and replied cheerily, though with a certain embarrassment, but Crailey, catching sight of his face, uttered a sharp ejaculation and came down to him.

"Why, what's the matter, Tom? You're not going to be sick?"

"I'm all right, never fear!" Tom laughed, evading the other's eye. "I'm going out in the country on some business, and I dare say I shall not be back for a couple of days. It will be all up and down the county."

"Can't I go for you? You don't look able"—

"No, no. It's something I'll have to attend to myself."

"Ah, I suppose," said Crailey gently, "I suppose it's important and you couldn't trust me to handle it. Well—God knows you're right! I've shown you often enough how incompetent I am to do anything but write jingles!"

"You do some more of them—without the whisky, Crailey. They're worth more than all the lawing that Gray & Vanrevel have ever done or ever will do. Goodby—and be kind to yourself."

He descended to the first landing, and then, "Oh, Crailey," he called with the air of having forgotten something he had meant to say.

"Yes, Tom?"

"This morning at the postoffice I found a letter addressed to me. I opened it and"— He hesitated, and uneasily shifted his weight from one foot to the other with a feeble, deprecatory laugh.

"Yes, what of it?"

"Well, there seemed to be a mistake. I think it must have been meant for you. Somehow, she—she's picked up a good many wrong impressions, and, Lord knows how, but she's mixed our names up and—and I've left the letter for you. It's on my table."

He turned and, calling a final goodby over his shoulder, went clattering noisily down to the street and vanished from Crailey's sight.

Noon found Tom far out on the National road, creaking along over the yellow dust in a light wagon.

He stopped at every farmhouse and cabin, and where the young men worked in the fields hailed them from the road or hitched his horse to the fence and crossed the soft furrows to talk with them. At such times he stood erect again and spoke stirringly, finding eager listeners. There was one question they asked him over and over:

"Why, what's the matter, Tom?"

"But are you sure the call will come?"

"As sure as that we stand here. And it will come before the week is out. We must be ready!"

Often when he left them they would turn from the work in hand, leaving it as it was to lie unfinished in the fields, and make their way slowly and thoughtfully to their homes, while Tom climbed into his creaking little wagon once more, only to fall into the same dull, hunched over attitude. He had many things to think out before he faced Rouen and Crailey Gray again, and more to fight through to the end with himself. Three days he took for it, three days driving through the soft May weather behind the kind old jog trotting horse.

But on the evening of the third day he drove into town, with the stoop out of his shoulders and the luster back in his eyes. He was haggard, gray, dusty, but he had solved his puzzle, and one thing was clear in his mind as the thing that he would do. He patted the old horse a hearty farewell as he left him with the liveryman from whom he had hired him and strode up Main street with the air of a man who is going somewhere. It was late, but there were more lights than usual in the windows and more people on the streets. An old man, a cobbler, who had left a leg at Tippecanoe and replaced it with a wooden one, chastely decorated with designs of his own carvings, came stumping excitedly down the middle of the street, where he walked for fear of the cracks in the wooden pavement, which were dangerous to his art leg when he came from the Rouen House bar, as on the present occasion. He hailed Tom by name.

"You're the lad, Tom Vanrevel!" he shouted. "You're the man to lead the boys out for the glory of the state! You git the whole blame fire department out and enlist 'em before morning. Take 'em down to the Rio Grande, you hear me? And you needn't be afraid of their puttin' it out, if it ketches afire, neither!"

Tom waved his hand and passed on, but at the open doors of the Catholic church he stopped and looked up and down the street, and then, unnoticed, entered to the dim interior, where the few candles showed only a bent old woman in black kneeling at the altar. Tom knew where Elizabeth Carewe knelt each morning. He stepped softly through the shadowy silence to her place, knelt and rested his head upon the rail of the bench before him.

The street was quiet when he emerged from that lorn vigil. The corner groups had dissolved. Shouting youths no longer patrolled the sidewalks. Only one quarter showed signs of life—the little clubhouse, where the windows still shone brightly and whence came the sound of many voices settling the destinies of the United States of America. Thither Tom bent his steps thoughtfully and with a quiet mind. There was a small veranda at the side of the house. Here he stood unobserved to look in upon his noisy and agitated friends.

They were all there, from the old general and Mr. Bareaud to the latter's son, Jefferson, and young Frank Chenoweth. Trumble was proposing a health to the president in a voice of fury.

"In spite of all the Crailey Grays and traitors this side of hades!" he finished politely.

Crailey emerged instantaneously from the general throng and mounted a chair, tossing his light hair back from his forehead, his eyes sparkling and happy. "You find your own friends already occupying the place you mentioned, do you, general?" he asked.

General Trumble stamped and shook his fist. "You're a spawn of Aaron Burr!" he vociferated. "There's not a man here to stand by your infernal doctrines. You sneer at your own state, you sneer at your own country, you defile the sacred ground! What are you, by the Almighty, who attack your native land in this her hour of peril?"

"Peril to my native land!" laughed Crailey. "From Santa Anna?"

"The general's right, sir," exclaimed the elder Chenoweth indignantly, and most of the listeners appeared to agree with him. "It's a poor time to abuse the president when he's called for volunteers and our country is in danger, sir!"

"Who is in danger?" answered Crailey, lifting his hand to still the clamor of approbation that arose. "Is Polk in danger, or congress? But that would be too much to hope! Do you expect to see the greasers in Washington? No, you idiots, you don't! Yet there'll be plenty of men to suffer and die, and the first should be those who thrust this war on us and poor little Mexico. But it won't be they. The men who'll do the fighting and dying will be the country boys and the like of us from the towns, while Mr. Polk sits planning how he can get elected again. And you ask me to drink the health of the politician who sits at home and sends his fellow men to die to fix his rotten jobs for him!" Crailey had persuaded himself into such earnestness that the depth of his own feeling almost choked him, but he finished roundly in his beautiful, strong voice: "I'll drink for the good punch's sake. But that health—I'll see General Trumble in heaven before I'll drink it!"

There rose at once a roar of anger and disapproval, and Crailey became a mere storm center amid the upraised hands gesticulating madly at him as he stood, smiling again, upon his chair.

"This comes of living with Tom Vanrevel!" shouted the general furiously. "This is his cursed abolition teaching! You're only his echo. You spend half your life playing at being Vanrevel!"

"Where is Vanrevel?" said Tappingham Marsh.

"Aye, where is he?" raged Trumble, hammering the table till the glasses rang. "Let him come and answer for his own teaching. It's wasted time to talk to this one. He's only the pupil. Where is the traitor?"

"Here," answered a voice from the doorway; and, though the word was spoken quietly, it was nevertheless at that juncture silencing. Every one turned toward the door as Vanrevel entered. But the apoplectic general, whom Crailey's speech had stirred to a fury beyond control, almost leaped at Tom's throat.

"Here's the tea sipping old granny!" he bellowed hoarsely. (He was ordinarily very fond of Tom.) "Here's the master! Here's the man whose example teaches Crailey Gray to throw mud at the flag. He'll stay here at home with Crailey, of course, and throw more, while the other boys march out to die under it!"

"On the contrary, general," answered Tom, raising his voice, "I think you'll find Crailey Gray the first to enlist, and, as for myself, I've raised sixty men in the country, and I want forty more from Rouen in order to offer the governor a full company. So it's come to 'the king, not the man.' Polk is a pitiful trickster, but the country needs her sons; that's enough for us to know.

"Here."

SUICIDE OF A WITNESS

Tried Beyond Endurance in Toronto's Civic Inquiry.

G. D. McCulloch, Secretary of the Bennett & Wright Contracting and Plumbing Co., Ends Life With Carbolic Acid in His Garden—He Was One of the Best Known Bowlers in the Province and Generally Popular.

Toronto, June 27.—Worried to desperation, as his friends say, through his connection, as a witness, on behalf of his employers, in the civic enquiry, G. D. McCulloch, 623 Ontario street, secretary of the Bennett & Wright Contracting and Plumbing Co., and a prominent bowler and curler, ended his life on the lawn back of his residence yesterday morning. An improvised pillow of clothes taken from the line was under his head and a vial which had contained carbolic acid lay beside him when he was found.

Mr. McCulloch rose yesterday morning earlier than usual, ate a fairly hearty breakfast, and seemed to be preparing to go to the office. He displayed a little more than the usual affection toward his family, and bid them good-by. He then went into the garden and was later discovered dead.

Mr. McCulloch was extremely popular with all who knew him.

He was born Quebec Province 49 years ago, and moved to Toronto 20 years since. A wife, two sons and a daughter survive him, all of whom reside at home.

He was vice-president of the Granite Club, which club he had been associated with about one year, and for 12 years he was secretary of the Ontario Bowling Association. He was a coauthor of a manual on bowling published last year and was one of the few who are capable of preparing the bowling schedules.

When His Honor Judge Winchester was informed of the tragedy he was shocked.

Crown Attorney Drayton was deeply grieved to hear of the sad occurrence. "Mr. McCulloch was not to figure at all in the coming cases so of course he had not been subpoenaed," said Mr. Drayton.

AWAITS GRAND JURY'S ACTION.

Harry K. Thaw Held For the Murder of Stanford White.

New York, June 27.—Frankly admitting that he killed Stanford White, the famous architect, and pleading in justification of the deed that White had ruined the life of his wife, the beautiful former chorus girl and artists' model, Florence Evelyn Nesbit, Harry Kendall Thaw of Pittsburg, brother of the Countess of Yarmouth, occupies a cell in the Tombs awaiting the action of the grand jury on a charge of murder.

His counsel will offer the defence of insanity, and yesterday the prisoner was examined by eminent alienists retained on his behalf, and by the district attorney's office.

The coroner's inquest will be held on Thursday.

Thomas Gladwell Drowns.

Hamilton, June 27.—Thomas Gladwell, North John street, a laborer, was drowned at the foot of James street yesterday. He and John Janes missed the 2 o'clock boat for Toronto, and Gladwell said he was going for a swim, and threw off his hat and coat and jumped in. His body never came to the surface. Gladwell was 38 years of age, and leaves a wife.

Toilet—Toylet.

In the "New World of Words," 1720, "toilet" is defined as "a kind of Tablecloth or carpet made of fine Linnen, Satin, Velvet or Tissue, spread upon a Table in a Bed Chamber where Persons of Quality dress themselves; a Dressing-cloth." A similar definition is given in Bailey's dictionary. The origin of the word is curious, for Cotgrave has: "See 'Toilette,' 'A toylet, the stuff which drapers lay about their cloths; also a bag to put nightgowns in.'" In the "Rape of the Lock," 1, 121, "toilet" seems used for the table and its contents:

And now, unveil'd, the toilet stands display'd,
Each silver vase in mystic order laid.

—Notes and Queries.

Giant Tomato Plants.

The largest tomato plants in the world are found in California. One grower has three plants which have reached a length of thirty feet. In three months from the time the seeds were planted the vines had climbed to the top of a twenty foot trellis. The trunks of these plants, says What to Eat, are one and a half inches in diameter and the foliage is thick and luxuriant. Enormous quantities of tomatoes have been picked from them and the fruit is of unusual size, possessing an extraordinary fine flavor.

Lava.

Lava may be blown into opaque bottles of gossamer lightness, and the harder sort makes a beautiful green glass of half the weight and double the strength of ordinary glass. But it is not always the same. Every volcano pours out its own special brand of molten mixture, disagreeable to walk on, but sometimes yielding precious products, as pumice stone. Lava, like all things, decomposes under the touch of time, as the fertile plains of Sicily testify.

Marriage.

"What I want," said the young man, "is to get married and have a peaceful, quiet home."

"Well," said Farmer Corntossel, "sometimes it works that way, and then again sometimes it's like joinin' a debatin' society."

AT THE GULCH

By Frank H. Sweet

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

Persis, ward of the late Spencer Baird of the Three Bars, rose from the stiffened form and glanced about with white face. She was only two weeks from boarding school, but in those two weeks things had happened. Spencer Baird had had a bitter quarrel with his son and had disowned him and then had sent a peremptory summons for his ward, wishing to see her before he died, the telegram stated.

In this short space she had made the long journey, cared for the dying man as she could and, against her protest, been made heiress of the Three Bars and the other property, and now, death coming suddenly, she was alone on the ranch, with all the cowboys watching the herds at the dry season bottom lands, a day's journey away. The owner had been too ill for removal, so had been left to her care and the cook's, and the cook, seeing his opportunity, had loaded a horse with booty and ridden away. Persis did not discover it until the man was a mile from the ranch house, and then her guardian lay dying.

As she rose from the motionless form she hesitated a moment, then went out, closing the door reverently behind her. It might be two days, perhaps three, before any of the cowboys would return, and she must have help.

The corral was only a few yards away, and in it was a well broken horse which had been given her by Spencer Baird. She had only a vague idea of the cowboys' position, the direction and that it was a day's journey with herds, and from a few words of the cook she knew there was a small frontier town off that way somewhere, but whether this side or beyond the dry season bottom she did not know.

Another thing she did not know, and that was the fickleness of the Dakota weather. Though late in October, it was like a June morning when she started across the prairie. Two hours later a chill whiff of wind touched her lightly, and there was a haziness blurring the horizon behind. But she was bending over the horse's neck, urging him to greater speed and thinking of the rigid form behind, and she did not notice until a whirl of fine snow struck her face, apparently from a cloudless sky. Ten minutes later she was in the midst of a Dakota blizzard.

BEGAN TO READ HURRIEDLY FROM A BOOK.

After that there was nothing but to urge the horse on—no direction, no possibility of turning back against such fury, only just to trust to the animal's instinct and not think.

But strange things sometimes happen even in a blizzard which seems to hold nothing but death. Perhaps it was chance, possibly something else, maybe merely the horse's superior sense of direction, but at length, when the girl's body had grown numb and her mind was beginning to wander, the animal stopped suddenly, with his nose pressed against a door.

And it almost seemed as if she were expected, for the door was flung open, and eager, solicitous hands lifted her from the saddle and hurried her inside.

"The poor dear!" a woman's voice exclaimed between sobs and laughter. "Who'd have thought of her being caught in a storm like this? But it was brave of her to keep on. And he's a good deal worse off, for he hasn't sensed a thing since he was took from the horse just before the girl came. It's no wonder, though, for he was facing a blizzard, with only summer clothing on. But come"—briskly—"bring her into the parlor. She won't have time for any changes, and she can rest afterward. It's a half hour late now, and the preacher's in a mighty hurry to get away to a dying job."

In the parlor several persons were waiting expectantly, and on a couch near them a young man was half reclining, apparently asleep. But from time to time he stirred uneasily, and his half closed eyes gazed about in a dazed sort of way. He was assisted to his feet and Persis led to a position beside him; then an old man slipped in front of them and began to read hurriedly from a book. Presently he turned to the young man.

"Do you take this young woman to be your wife?" he asked.

"Woman—out in this wild country," murmured the young man, "needs help. Of course, give her my life—everything I can do—glad to. Yes, yes, of course."

"And you"—to Persis—"do you accept this young man to be your lawful husband?"

Persis gazed about inquiringly, and into her numbed mind penetrated the thought that they were expecting her to say yes. So she muttered yes and tried to smile.

There were a few more quick sentences, a perfunctory congratulation, and then the old man humped himself anxiously into his overcoat.

"See you again in the morning," he said to the young man. "You can let the fee go until then. No time to wait now. Goodby all, and thank you, Mr. Wells"—to their host—"for helping me so in this."

"That's all right," answered the host good naturedly. "I'm glad to help you in a thing of this sort, but you're mistaken about the name. I'm John Briggs. Sam Wells is on the other side of the street."

The old man stopped short in the humping process.

"Isn't this the Ravine?"

"No; it's the Gulch. The Ravine's across."

"What!" in consternation. "And isn't this man Vance Green of the Two outfit, who made an appointment with me by letter?"

"No, it's young Baird, and I think from what I've heard of her that the girl's the old man's ward. You didn't give any names, so I thought it was all right. It seemed natural the son and ward should get married, and, with the old man sick and the son sent off, this was the only way. Well," in supreme disgust, "you've certainly made a mess of it. What! Going?"

"Yes, I must." The old man looked at the figure which was again reclining on the couch, lasping into unconsciousness, and at the girl, now seated and gazing about wonderingly. "No use trying to explain to them now," he said. "I'll be in tomorrow and—and try to make it right."

But when he arrived at the Gulch the next day he found young Baird in the act of assisting Persis to her saddle. The young man's own horse stood near. The blizzard had passed, and it was again like a June day.

"It's all right, parson," young Baird said beamingly. "Persis and I talked it over this morning and found out who we are. It was because I refused to marry her that father and I quarreled. I couldn't accept an unknown girl offhand that way, of course. But Persis tells me that she is satisfied, and I—well, I don't think there's any need for me to express myself on the subject now I've met her. I hope you'll all come out and see us and be neighborly. Now we'll go and look after father. And—oh, yes, here." He slipped something into the old man's hand and then raised himself to his saddle and rode away, the girl by his side. As they swung off across the prairie the old man looked at his fee. It was the largest he had ever received.

The Mingling of Races.

In the course of many years of investigation into the plant life of the world, creating new forms, modifying old ones, adapting others to new conditions and blending still others, I have constantly been impressed with the similarity between the organization and development of plant and human life. While I have never lost sight of the principle of the survival of the fittest and all that it implies as an explanation of the development and progress of plant life, I have come to find in the crossing of species and in selection, wisely directed, a great and powerful instrument for the transformation of the vegetable kingdom along lines that lead constantly upward. The crossing of species is to me paramount. Upon it, wisely directed and accompanied by a rigid selection of the best and as rigid an exclusion of the poorest, rests the hope of all progress. The mere crossing of species, unaccompanied by selection, wise supervision, intelligent care and the utmost patience, is not likely to result in marked good and may result in vast harm. Unorganized effort is often most vicious in its tendencies.—Century.

Curious Habits of Foxes.

The animals on which the fox usually preys are often left untouched round his own home, and it is even asserted that nothing is killed on the side of the hill in which that home is made. In a small patch of nettles within a few feet of the mouth of the foxes' earth a partridge placed her nest and brought off her brood. Round this nettle bed the cubs were constantly to be seen, and in it they played hide and seek. In another case the entrance to an earth was surrounded by five or six rabbit holes the tenants of which were unmolested by their next door neighbors. In a third a litter of cubs was placed in a large pit surrounded by fencing, from which there was no escape, and in which there were a number of rabbits. None of these was attacked by the cubs, though they would seize a dead rabbit in full sight of the person who had shot and thrown it to them.—Native Notes.

Men Who Are Baked.

The men who work in the famous porcelain factories at Limoges have a hard life. The furnaces in which the porcelain is baked are kept up to a terrible temperature, which, it is said, cannot be gauged by any instrument known to science. In this fearful heat the human salamanders, clad in thick, fireproof garments, their heads and ears well protected, have to work, passing from one to another, chainwise, the porcelain articles as they come out of the furnace. Every five minutes the first man of the chain—that is to say, the one nearest the furnace—has to get out into the open. He throws himself down utterly exhausted on a mattress placed for his convenience near the door. Then a boy gives him ice water to drink from a pitcher, and he falls back on his mattress until his turn comes round to take his stand again close to the scorching blaze.

WITNESSES TO ALIBIS.

Shady Trade Which Once Flourished in New York's Courts.

The elder Weller in "Pickwick" was, as all admirers of the works of Dickens will know, a great believer in the utility of an alibi as a defense in both criminal and civil actions.

"Never mind the character," said Mr. Weller to his son. "Stick to the alleybi. Nothing like an alleybi, Sammy; nothing. Verever he's agoin' to be tried, me boy, a alleybi's the thing to get him off."

This sage advice of Mr. Weller found frequent corroboration in the views of criminal lawyers in town up to a very few years ago. There were half a century ago more criminal lawyers than there are today, and the emoluments and fees of criminal lawyers were materially larger in the ordinary run of cases than now. As a consequence, cases were more often defended than they are now and pleas of guilty much more rarer. Then the alibi witness was a necessary though usually unwelcome part of the machinery of defense in criminal cases. There is in criminal procedure no better defense than an alibi if sustained. Alibi witnesses were therefore very much in demand until juries began to mistrust them and the penalties for the crime of perjury were visited upon some of the delinquents.

For a long time the mendacious and subsidized testimony of professional alibi witnesses obtained credence from jurors, and some of these witnesses, to quote their own language, "made a good thing out of it." Juries in criminal cases are usually sympathetic where no outside pressure is brought upon them, and it is the part of the charge of every judge in a criminal case to inform the jury that the prisoner at the bar is entitled to every reasonable doubt. If, therefore, any uncertainty existed on the point whether or not the prisoner was actually present at the time and place of the alleged crime he was entitled to the benefit of it, but little by little the prosecuting officers became acquainted with the identity and records of the professional alibi witnesses. One or two were prosecuted. Others were scared off. The commercial value of the services of the others was decreased, and finally the whole nefarious business was abandoned, never since to be revived.

CURE OF INSOMNIA.

The soporific powers of warm milk are well known, but care should be taken that the milk does not quite boil.

A Swedish method of producing sleep is to wring out a handkerchief in icy cold water and lay it across the eyes, when it is said to act like magic.

To many constitutions a warm bath taken immediately before going to bed is very soothing and produces drowsiness, while an apple eaten as the last thing is equally effective.

The homely boiled onion is another sovereign remedy, or an onion may be sliced and eaten raw, the disagreeable taste being removed by taking a little sugar or a pinch of tea afterward.

A Hindoo practice to induce sleep is to take deep inhalations, expelling the air alternately through each nostril, keeping the other closed with the finger. This has a wonderfully quieting effect.

Going to Congress.

A poor man had better keep out of congress. Campaign expenses are heavy and they come every two years. No man can go to congress without neglecting his law practice or his business. If he is a poor man he will probably lose his clients or his customers; a small business or practice will not support partners or managers. After a few years in congress nine men out of ten are beaten for renomination, and then, if they have not a fortune or an established business to fall back on, they will try to get some small salaried place under the government and may not be successful.

Chemical Changes.

By taking some limewater and blowing one's breath into it a fine white powder will be formed in the water.

By adding some common salt to a solution of nitrate of silver a thick white powder is produced which, if placed in the sunlight, will turn brown.

Pour the juice of a red cabbage into a test tube or thin glass bottle, drop in very gradually a solution of washing soda, shaking the bottle every time you put the washing soda in, and you will see the red solution gradually turning blue. Go on adding the soda solution, and the blue color will give way to green.

Repressed Sentiments.

People who marry always hear good wishes, congratulations and other pleasant remarks, but they miss much in not hearing the repressed sentiments which burst forth to others. A woman who recently received a wedding announcement from a friend was heard to exclaim in tones of disgust, "What a willful disregard of the manifestation of Providence when she was so plainly intended for an old maid!"

The Evidence Was All In.

A juryman went to sleep during the closing speech of one of the counsel in the case in an English court. The judge had him awakened and sternly rebuked him. "My lord," said the juror, "I was under the impression that I was sworn to give a verdict according to the evidence, not according to the speeches."

Three Kinds.

There are three kinds of good—the kind that feels good, the kind that looks good and the kind that opposes evil. And the first two are good for nothing.

LAKE SHORE SPIRIT.

Throughout the entire length and breadth of the great Lake Shore Railway System there is a spirit of co-operation and personal responsibility on the part of employees from the highest to the lowest that is reflected in every detail of the road's operation. The traveller feels that the great army of trained workers have his welfare and comfort at heart as much as though he were the only patron of the road. This spirit—the Lake Shore spirit—is one of the features that have made this line so popular among experienced travellers. A SENSIBLE LOVER

By C. B. LEWIS

Copyright, 1906, by Homer Sprague

Miss Minnie Stacy, twenty years old, had come out from the city to stay with her Aunt Jane in the country for a month while her parents made a hurried trip to England. It was the last of February, and there was snow on the ground.

The next farm to Aunt Jane's was the Rossiter place, and Mrs. Rossiter was also a widow. A hired man named Jim Williams plowed, planted and reaped for her. When Jim heard that a city girl was stopping with Aunt Jane he went over to see her for himself. He didn't stop to put on a clean shirt or to grease and lampblack his shoes. He entered the house in that familiar way farmers have among themselves, and when introduced to the visitor he held out a hand as big as a washboard and shook her small one vigorously.

"How are ye? Nice winter weather we're having," he said.

The young lady of wealth and social standing tried to squelch him, but Jim drew up his chair and spoke of spring calves and kicking cows in a way meant to be highly entertaining. He refused to be snubbed, and he wouldn't take a hint.

When the subject of music was referred to he volunteered to sing a ballad or two, and when 10 o'clock came he took his hat, held out his hand again and departed after saying:

"Well, Minnie, I don't know when I've spent a more interesting evening, and it's all owing to you. I'm not one of these stuck up chaps. I'm jest plain Jim Williams, and you'll find me a yard wide and all wool every time. I'll run in quite frequently and cheer you up."

Miss Minnie had many criticisms to make after the caller had left and asserted if he came again he would get a setback to last him all his life.

Aunt Jane tried to soothe her. "Oh, you mustn't mind our ways out here in the country. As Jim has fallen in love with you at first sight he will"—

"W-h-a-t!" exclaimed the horrified girl.

"Why, couldn't you tell that he had fallen in love with you?"

"Of course not! How dare he do such a thing!"

"I don't see why you make such a fuss over it. If you don't want to marry him you can say so when he asks you."

When Jim had retired that night he got to thinking things over. "I'm Jim Williams," he soliloquized. "I'm as stout as a bull and have an appetite like a horse. I'm twenty-seven years old and have $600 in the bank. There ain't no flies on me, and I'm a good nuff match for any gal that lives. I'm in love with Minnie Stacy. I don't know what sort of a farmer's wife she'd make, but I'm willing to take my chances. We'll take in Niagara falls on our wedding trip, and if she wants candy at 50 cents a box she shall have it. I'll give her a week to sort o' get acquainted, and then I'll pop the question."

It was all settled in his mind when he turned over and went to sleep, and he saw no clouds on the horizon as he awoke in the morning. Thereafter for nine or ten nights he was a regular caller at Aunt Jane's house. If he saw Minnie he tried to interest her in snakes, mud turtles, frogs and other novelties of farm life and gave her interesting statistics of how much hay a cow would consume in the winter.

When Minnie stuck to her room and refused to come down he had Greening apples and other messages for her and continued to grow more deeply in love. About the 1st of March the maple sugar season opened. The making of the sugar was a part of Jim's spring work, and from the first run of sap he sent the city girl some maple wax on a clean, white maple chip.

The snow disappeared, the spring birds began to appear and the ground was getting dry underfoot when Minnie started out one afternoon for a walk. She wandered over a field and into a piece of woods, hoping to find the first spring flower, and of a sudden she felt chills sweep over her and the atmosphere grew dark. A blizzard had stolen upon the country as softly as a thief in the night. In her sudden alarm the girl became turned around. She was hurrying through the woods when the wind rose, the air filled with snow, and she clutched the branch of a bush and shrieked her alarm.

She kept up her shrieks for half an hour and then sank down in a collapse. She did not realize what was happening when Jim Williams came feeling his way through the storm, took her in his arms and carried her to the sugar bush shanty, forty rods away.

It was a blizzard long to be remembered. The thermometer went down to zero, and a foot or more of snow fell, and for two or three days the farmers were imprisoned in their houses. The girl recovered her senses soon after reaching the sugar camp, but there was no going farther. Jim happened to have plenty to eat and plenty of blankets. He gave up the shanty to her for the night and dug out a place for himself before the fire. She might have slept, but he had to keep the fire going to prevent his freezing to death.

He had plenty of time to think. The wind howled, the snow flew, and the cold made the trees pop like musketry, and Jim's great fear was that the girl would freeze to death before morning. It was a glad relief to him when he heard her voice calling him soon after daylight.

The sky had lightened up, but the blizzard was still booming away. Jim made coffee and fried bacon and warmed up the frozen bread and invited Miss Stacy to breakfast. She had passed the worst night of her life and lost her appetite. What she wanted was to reach her Aunt Jane's in the quickest time possible. Jim listened to her request and then shook his head.

"We've got to wait awhile for this blizzard to let up," he replied. "We couldn't go ten rods without being lost, and being lost would mean being dead. Lemme tell you how a bull throwed me over the fence two years ago and chirk you up a bit."

The girl refused to be chirked. She sat swathed in horse blankets like a mummy, and her tears formed icicles on her cheeks. Noon came, and the blizzard was still with them. Jim tried to make her take a hopeful view of things by asserting that he was born and reared in that locality and had never known a blizzard to last over four days, but she wept instead of smiled. Finally at 4 o'clock in the afternoon she made an announcement.

"I am going. I won't stay here another minute. If you don't want to come along you needn't," she said firmly.

"There's only one way you can go," replied Jim after stepping aside to measure the depth of the snow. "I'll have to take you on my back. You never can make it otherwise. I'm stout enough to carry you and a bag of 'taters besides, and if I don't hurry too much I can keep a straight course."

The girl demurred and protested; but, finding no other way, she at last consented. He stooped down, lifted her up and set off with her. It was a desperate undertaking, and they were a full hour making the mile they had to go, but he finally deposited her on the doorstep, rapped for Aunt Jane and then said good night and plunged into the storm again. Two evenings later, when the blizzard had vanished and the highways had been dug out, he knocked at Aunt Jane's door. This time he had on a boiled shirt, with a pair of celluloid cuffs under his coat sleeves, and as Minnie rose up and before she could utter a word of thanks he said:

"Miss Stacy, I love you. I love you a heap. I never loved a gal as I do you. I intended all along to ask you to marry me, and I have been figuring where we would live after marriage. But it's all off now. I've went and gone and made a hero of myself and won your eternal gratitude. You'd be willing to marry me because I saved your life, but I ain't no sich feller as to take advantage of a thing like that. Take back your troth and marry any feller you like, and at the same time I'll look around and see what red headed gals they are in the neighborhood who'd be willing to have me. Farewell, Miss Stacy—farewell!"

There was a tear in Jim Williams' eye as he turned away and plodded homeward, but he had the consciousness that he had done right, and it may be mentioned here that he made 200 pounds of maple sugar and twenty-two gallons of molasses that spring and found his red headed girl before the first crop of young robins was off the nest.

How to Cure Stooping.

One of the greatest and most common deformities of the day, observes a medical writer, is one that with care and attention can be remedied. It is the round shouldered or stooping habit. Many of the most natural figures show this tendency to stoop, while in the narrow chested it is marked to a painful degree. And yet by raising oneself leisurely upon the toes in a perpendicular position several times a day this deformity could be easily rectified. To do this properly one must be in a perfectly upright position, the arms dropping at the sides, the heels well together and the toes forming an angle of 45 degrees. The rise should be made very slowly and from the balls of both feet, and the descent should be accomplished in the same way without swaying the body out of its perpendicular line. The exercise is not an easy one, but may be accomplished by perseverance and patience. It can be modified, too, by standing first on one leg, then on the other. Inflating and raising the chest at the same time are a part of the exercise, and if persevered in will ultimately show an increased chest measurement, development of lung power and perfectly straight and erect figure.—Pearson's Weekly.

Two Queer Cases.

Among the curious things in life few are more amazing than the constitutional peculiarities occasionally met with. The professor who delivered the introductory address to the students at one of the London hospitals thought it well to put his audience on their guard.

He instanced two very singular cases. One was that of a man to whom rice in any form was poison. Some friends wished to test this person's susceptibility, and at dinner surreptitiously got him to partake of biscuits in each of which was a grain of rice. He ate two or three biscuits and soon after had to leave the table, declaring that he was being poisoned by rice, though he was absolutely certain he had not partaken of any.

The other case was one in which the juice of a gooseberry acted as a powerful excitant and produced at once a virulent skin eruption. This man was so very susceptible that he could detect gooseberry juice even when it was masqueraded as champagne. At a public dinner he whispered to his neighbor that it was gooseberry wine they were drinking, and as proof he turned up his shirt sleeve and showed him the rash developing.—London Globe.

Marine Notes

The Str. Aletha is chartered for every day from now till the end of August, with the exception of Mondays, when she has the Bay of Quinte run. The other days of the week the steamers North King and Caspian patrol the bay ports to and from the Thousand Islands and to Rochester, N.Y.

NEW STEEL STEAMER.

A new steel steamer, to be built this coming winter at a cost of $40,000, for St. Lawrence river navigation is the latest news in marine circles.

Captain Roys, backed by outside moneyed men, whose names have not yet been made public, are promoters of this latest scheme.

The new steamer is to be built on the model of the R. & O. steamer Columbian, and while the plans are yet somewhat hazy, the idea upon which the promoters are working is of a three-decked steel hull steamer, to run sixteen to twenty miles an hour, 150 feet long, twenty-six feet beam, 375 tonnage, nine-foot hole, seven foot six inches between decks, and seven foot between the other decks.

It is planned to have a magnificently appointed saloon with a seating capacity of 200 passengers. She will also carry freight.

She will have fore and after compound engines and Scotch boilers.

The steamer Picton of the R. & O. line, called at the dock this morning, en route eastward. She took on board a large consignment of cheese.

The steamer Varuna took a large excursion party from here to Picton this morning. It was under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of St. Andrew's Church.

A large number were brought to the city to-day from various bay ports by the steamer Ella Ross.

Incidents of a Long-Gone-By Campaign Stirringly Recalled by an Honored Veteran—Muster Roll of the First Belleville Rifle Company of 1837.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—On seeing your very interesting account of the stirring times of 1866, published on June 2nd, I was put in mind that in rummaging among some old papers the other day, I found the original muster roll, containing the names of the men of the First Belleville Rifle Company, who went to Gananoque on the 21st of February, 1838, and, thinking that it might be interesting to the readers of your valuable journal if you should think proper to publish it. I herewith enclose it for your perusal. Of course, to your readers of to-day it may appear like ancient history, particularly as to my knowledge there is not one left in the land of the living. But any of your readers who are old enough may remember, on looking over the list of names, that they were the very pick and prominent men of our town at that time.

Now, it may be in order to say a few words for the reason of the call made by the authorities at such an inclement time of the year, when it is remembered that railways were not yet running through the country as they are now, and that all the waterways were closed up by ice. The only means by which travel could be performed was by sleighs, which was by no means conducive to the comfort of the traveller. However, to come to the point, in as few words as possible. The Rebellion, as it is called, of 1837, was a small affair—a mere flash in the pan, as an old soldier would call it. A few shots from old Brown Bess at Gallows Hill soon sent the poor fools to the right about and such of the leaders who were not captured, made the best of their way to the United States. McKenzie, the chief conspirator in particular, found himself among congenial souls, and knowing that the Yankees had their eyes on the Canadians, issued proclamations to the people of the States, offering to all who would join him in the conquest of Canada (which he told them would be a mere before-breakfast job, as the great majority of the people of Canada were tired of British connection, and would meet them with open arms) that the farms, goods and chattels of all who would attempt to oppose the advance of the conquering invaders should be confiscated to the invaders. The result was that all the scalawags in the States rushed to McKenzie's standard. The United States Government, who were not supposed to take an active part in the business, winked at it and left all the armories on the frontier unguarded, so that the invaders could supply themselves with arms and munitions of war. The consequence was that the frontier all along the line in a short time was swarmed with armed men, ready to strike any vulnerable point. Our authorities, being made aware of all this and seeing that the American Government was not doing anything to stop the mischief, made a call upon the province for volunteers to protect the country from invasion, and the result was that the loyalists rushed in such numbers into the cities and towns to answer the call that many had to be sent home again.

About the middle of January, 1838, it became known to our authorities that a large force of fillibusters had assembled somewhere near Sackett's Harbor, commanded by General Vanrenselaer and the celebrated Bill Johnston, of 1000 Island fame, and that their intention was to attempt the capture of Kingston. This city was at that time in a semi-defenceless state, in consequence of its garrison of regular troops having been sent down to Lower Canada to assist in quelling the rebellion there. The movements of the enemy were closely followed by our military at Kingston, and it soon became known that the attack was to be made on or about the 21st of February. All they were waiting for was for the ice to become sufficiently hard to make the crossing safe, as a recent thaw had rendered it rather unsafe. A call was then made upon the militia of Kingston and vicinity to assemble for its defence, which was promptly answered by some hundreds of willing hearts ready to do or die. Orders were also sent to the Rifle Company here, which order did not arrive here until the morning of the 21st, and such was the alacrity displayed by our riflemen that before night they were on the road.

When they arrived at Kingston they found that their destination was changed to Gananoque. It appears that the invaders had commenced their march upon Kingston, but were met by scouts, who gave them an account of such a large force of loyalists having assembled for the defence of the city that their defeat would be certain. The leaders accordingly gave up the attempt and changed their course down the river to Grindstone Island, one of the 1000 Islands, not far from Gananoque, where they established themselves as a depot, and commenced raiding the farmers on the Canadian side. On the arrival of our Rifles at Gananoque they found such a large force of volunteers from the surrounding country that it was determined to march over the ice and attack the invaders. The next morning they did so, but the cowardly wretches, when they saw them approaching, ran away as fast as their legs could carry them, leaving a large quantity of stores to fall into the hands of the volunteers. So ended the bloodless battle.

After remaining over three weeks guarding the frontier, they were ordered home, and the campaign was ended.

THE OLD SERGEANT-MAJOR.

The Muster Roll.

Many memories of camp fire tales, told by those dauntless soldiers of our country's early days, will doubtless be recalled by a perusal of the appended muster roll of the First Belleville Rifle Company of 1837, about whose winter outing at Gananoque "The Old Sergeant-Major" has written so entertainingly, and which he has permitted us to copy for our readers:

Successful Trip to the O. A. College

Some three hundred excursionists availed themselves of the cheap rates secured by the East and West Hastings Farmers' Institutes for a trip to the Ontario Agricultural College on Thursday last. A bountiful luncheon was served in the college gymnasium on the arrival of the visitors, and all made the most of the opportunity of seeing the sights at the Experimental Farm. Some of the excursionists remained at Guelph over night, while a large number came back to Toronto on Thursday evening, and all were at home again by Friday night, after a very pleasant and instructive outing.

Entrance Exams

There was considerable activity about Queen Victoria School this morning, occasioned by the fact that the entrance examinations commenced and will be continued to-morrow. About 200 pupils from various parts of the county are endeavoring to pass this examination. The examiners are Messrs. Rogers, of Lindsay, representing the Separate School Board; E. F. Milburn, Wm. McKeown and John Johnston.

Violent Earthquake Shocks.

Houses Damaged, Chimneys Fell, People Thrown to the Ground.

Cardiff, Wales, June 27.—(Special).—Violent earthquake shocks were experienced throughout South Wales at 9.45 o'clock this morning.

Many houses were damaged. Hundreds of chimneys fell, pictures were shaken from walls, occupants of dwellings were thrown to the ground and people fled from their house, shrieking in panic with visions of the San Francisco disaster before them.

There were no casualities so far as known.

THE EVENING RECITAL.

The seating capacity of Massey Hall was again taxed to its utmost last evening, the "raison d'etre" being the recital by candidate graduates in expression, Miss Dora Spencer and Miss Alice Storry (gold medalist), assisted by pupils of the musical departments. Dr. Dyer occupied the chair, and in a few well-chosen remarks introduced the programme of the evening. Each number was excellent. The artists were at their best, and great credit is due to the teachers in charge of their respective departments. Everyone felt that old Albert had again provided a recital second to none. "Mrs. Gamp's Tea Party" was received with great applause.

The following was the programme rendered;

DISCOVERS CURE FOR MENINGITIS.

DR. GOLDSMITH'S HOT BATH REMEDY SUCCEEDS IN TEN OUT OF TWELVE CASES.

New York, June 26.—What physicians at the Long Island College Hospital consider to be practically a demonstrated cure for cerebro-spinal meningitis, a disease which is fatal in from seventy to seventy-five per cent. of cases, is being employed by Dr. Joseph W. Goldsmith, of the house staff. Dr. Goldsmith has been using his method of treatment a year, and has effected cures in ten out of twelve cases.

In describing the new treatment Dr. Goldsmith said last night that heretofore opium or some derivative of opium was used to relieve congestion.

His method is to employ baths of 110 degrees temperature for fifteen minutes' time a day. These draw the blood away from the internal organs to the surface, relieve congestion and subject the blood to a process of radiation.

Vigorous rubbing is employed during the bath to relieve its depressing effect. The drug treatment, consisting of sec le cornutum, equalizes circulation.

By this method Motel Asiliski, a boy, who three times in one day appeared to be dying, was restored to health.

At Sign of the Scales.

ALLEGED INSULT.

Andrew Russell was arrested last evening on a warrant which charged him with using insulting language to Geo. Dale. The parties reside outside the city limits and the complainant is a son-in-law of the defendant. Some words occurred between them yesterday with the above result. This morning Russell was discharged.

CHARGE NOT PROVEN.

Lewis Woodcock, the river driver, who was arrested on Monday afternoon on a charge of indecently assaulting a little girl named Josephine Bolyea, was yesterday afternoon on trial before the magistrate. Considerable evidence was taken including that of the girl Bolyea, but it was by no means of an incriminating nature. The defence was not called upon to give evidence. After briefly reviewing the evidence the evidence the magistrate acquitted Woodcock. Mr. Anderson represented the Crown, and Mr. Carnew appeared for the accused.

FURTHER ENLARGED.

The case of Shappee vs. Deshane for obtaining money by alleged false misrepresentation, was not concluded yesterday and was enlarged until to-morrow.

"THE MAPLE LEAF."

Author of Canada's National Anthem, Alexander Muir, Passes Away Suddenly in Toronto.

In days of yore the hero Wolfe
 Britain's glory did maintain
And planted firm Britannia's flag
 On Canada fair domain;
Here may is wave our boast and pride
 And join in love together
The thistle, shamrock, rose entwine
 The maple leaf forever.

 Chorus:
The maple leaf our emblem dear
 The maple leaf forever
God save our King and heaven bless
 The maple leaf forever.

—Alex. Muir.

Death Came Suddenly.

Toronto, June 27.—Alexander Muir, author of Canada's National Anthem, and perhaps Toronto's best known citizen, died suddenly last night.

After a day spent at his school, he returned home in the evening, apparently in the best of health. He was for a while out with the boys on the bowling green, chatting pleasantly, as was his wont. About 11 o'clock, while preparing to retire, he complained of a feeling of uneasiness. A few minutes later he fell over and expired without a word. His wife and daughter were with him when the end came, at 11.20. Two sons survive, one in Newmarket and one in Chicago.

Loved by Everyone.

Alexander Muir was admired and honored throughout the Dominion as Canada's poet laureate. It is not given to every man who teaches school to be known in practically every home in the country. But such distinction was enjoyed by Alexander Muir, the head master of the Gladstone avenue school since its opening in 1887. He was loved by everyone. His qualities were of no negative character. He was a man of action. He immortalized the maple leaf.

At the Empire Day ceremonies in Queen's Park he made probably his last public utterances. On Monday next—Dominion Day — a day which he loved, he was to conduct a special patriotic service in Parkdale Methodist Church.

Born in Scotland.

Alexander Muir was born at Lesmanahagow, Lanarkshire, Scotland, his father teaching in the local school there. "I was a baby in arms when my parents came to Canada," said Mr. Muir, "and I have never since been to the land of my birth." He passed his childhood in the Township of Scarboro, York County, and there he received the first part of his education. In after years he went to Queen's University at Kingston, graduating there in 1851.

Story of His Song.

In October, 1867, two men were strolling in a Toronto garden. A maple leaf fluttered from a tree on to the coat of one of them. He tried to flick it away, but the little leaf remained. "You have been writing verses," said his friend, when saying goodbye, "why not write a song about the maple leaf?" Two hours afterwards the lines which have made the name of Alexander Muir famous were written. He repeated them aloud when playing with his children the next day. His wife suggested that he should set them to music, so that he might sign them. So he resolved to compose a melody himself, and in a few hours he had the tune that is familiar to every Canadian and has often cheered the heart of Jack Canuck when far away.

He was 72 years of age.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, June 26.—Receipts of live stock at the City Market since last Friday, as reported by the railways, were 41 carloads, composed of 539 cattle, 404 hogs, 615 sheep and lambs and 114 calves.

Exporters.

Only a few exporters were offered—not more than three loads all told, and none of prime quality were reported. Prices for those sold reached $5.20 per cwt. Had there been better cattle, better prices would doubtless have been realized. Bulls are worth from $3.75 to $4.35 per cwt.

Butchers.

The best butchers' cattle sold as high as $5.12½ per cwt., one load of 24 cattle, 1100 lbs. each, sold by Corbett & Henderson, bringing that figure. Loads of good cattle sold readily at $4.75 to $4.90 per cwt; medium at $4.40 to $4.60; stall-fed cows, $3.75 to $4.25; grass cows at $2.50 to $3.50 per cwt. Should there be a heavy run on Thursday, look out for a drop in grass cattle.

Feeders and Stockers.

Few stockers and feeders of any class were offered. Harry Murby reports having bought a few at following prices: Good steers, 900 to 1050 lbs., at $ 4to $4.25; good steers, 800 to 900 lbs., at $3.90 to $4.10; light stockers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, $3 to $3.25; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Milch Cows.

Only a limited number were offered, and prices ranged from $30 to $54 each, and one cow at $60.

Veal Calves.

Deliveries were moderate, and prices ranged from $4.50 to $6.50 per cwt., and one choice calf sold at $7 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Dealers were expecting a heavier run than was on the market, and prices were firm. Export sheep sold at $3.50 to $4.50 per cwt.; butcher sheep sold at $4.50 to $4.75 per cwt.; spring lambs from $4 to $6 each, or $8.75 to $9.25 per cwt.

Hogs.

Receipts of hogs were light. Mr. Harris quotes selects at $7.50 per cwt.; lights and fats at $7.25 per cwt.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

East Buffalo, June 26.—Cattle—Receipts, 200 head; slow and unchanged; prices unchanged.

Veals—Receipts, 500 head; dull and 25c lower; $4.25 to $6.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 1400 head; active and a shade higher; heavy, mixed, Yorkers and pigs, $6.80 to $6.85; roughs, $5.80 to $6; stags, $4.25 to $4.75; dairies, $6.00 to $6.75.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 600 head; slow and steady; lambs, $6 to $9; yearlings, $7.25 to $7.50; wethers, $6 to $6.25; ewes, $5 to $5.25; sheep, mixed, $3 to $5.75.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, June 26.—Beeves—Receipts 607; no trading; feeling steady; exports, 1020 cattle and 4000 quarters of beef; tomorrow, 150 cattle and 2300 quarters of beef.

Calves—Receipts, 131, late arrivals and held for Wednesday's trade; nothing doing; feeling weak.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 5132; sheep steady; lambs firm to 15c higher; sheep, $4 to $5.50; lambs, $7.70 to $9.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 1572; none for sale, alive, nominally full steady.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

Chicago, June 26.—Cattle—Receipts, 2500; market steady to strong; common to prime steers, $4 to $6.10; cows, $3 to $4.50; heifers, $2.75 to $5.25; bulls, $2.75 to $4.25; calves, $5.50 to $6.50; stockers and feeders, $2.75 to $4.60.

Fatal Trip on Car Bumpers.

Port Hope, June 27.—Arthur Gurman, formerly of this town, who has been home for the past few weeks from Wisconsin on a visit, was instantly killed at an early hour yesterday morning a short distance this side of Cobourg while bumping his way back to Port Hope from the camp there. He was in his 24th year. The body was mangled beyond recognition.

THE SOVEREIGN LIFE CO

Evidence Shows Mr. Hoover, President, Practically Owns It.

Owns 533 Shares Out of 839 Actually Paid For and With Proxies Voted on 1019—Commissioner Kent Scores Messrs. Somers and Wood of Continental Life on Folly of Their Method of Dealing With Trust Funds.

Toronto, June 27.—Before the Sovereign was called by the Royal Insurance Commission yesterday, Commissioner Kent took the opportunity to drive home to Messrs. Somers and Wood of the Continental Life, the folly of their dealings with trust funds, and drew attention to the odium they had brought upon the company and its subsidiary companies and the directors themselves. He drew the attention of Mr. Somers to the fact that in his explanation of the loss on Atlas bonds, which he claimed would have been repaid if it had not been for the sitting of the commission, he had allowed eighteen months to pass without doing anything.

Mr. Kent then asked Mr. Wood if he looked upon the reserve in the possession of the Continental Life Co. as trust funds or as part of the capital stock under the control of the directors. Mr. Wood said he "didn't exactly see what you mean."

Wood Says Not Wrong.

After the commissioner had made his question clear, Mr. Wood said he considered the reserve as trust funds.

"In that case you do feel that you were justified, being managing director of the Continental Life, in organizing the Ontario Securities Co., devoting time to both companies and making profits for the Securities Co., which might have been turned into the insurance company?"

"At the time the Ontario Securities was formed nothing was taken from the Continental Life."

"Do you feel that you are bound to give the whole of your time to the Continental Life?"

"I do give my time in the daytime. I feel that I am justified in coming down in the evenings and working for the Securities Co. I have always felt since I have been connected with the Continental Life that I have not been half paid."

Mr. Kent: "You are not a judge of that."

"Well, I could always have secured more money with other companies."

"You seemed to have received an increase of salary from the Continental Life simply because you secured some good investments for the Ontario Securities Co."

Wanted to Deceive.

Mr. Kent considered that the whole transaction re Atlas Loan debentures was made with the intention of deceiving some one.

"Well, it was and it wasn't" said witness.

"In the first place you deceived the department. Do you know the opinion of your policyholders on that matter?"

"I do not."

"Well, I think you missed the opportunity of your lives in that Atlas loss," said the commissioner earnestly.

"How so?" asked the perturbed witness.

"If the directors had told the public that you intended to make good wouldn't the company have risen in the estimation of the public "

"But the public didn't know about the loss," said Mr. Wood.

"Nor was it intended that they should know. You have deceived the insurance department, you have deceived your policyholders, and you have deceived the public. The public are only concerned after they become policyholders in the Continental Life; but that is one of the opinions that I asked you about of which you know nothing, but of which you are going to learn."

The Sovereign Life.

Addison H. Hoover, president of the Sovereign Life, was called to the stand. He told of the organization of the company by himself in 1902, and the commencement of business in 1903. The capital stock was placed at a million, with nearly all subscribed. The stock was sold at a premium of 25 per cent., and although Mr. Hoover advanced money to several directors to help them purchase their stock, no stock had been presented to any directors. Hon. Walter Scott and Hon. Wm. Templeman were on the prospectus to help secure western business.

Mr. Hoover and Mr. Tilley had wordy battles all morning over certain points.

Mr. Tilley drew attention to certain omissions from the company's returns to the Royal Commission. The circular required the copies of bylaws and salary lists, which had not been turned in. Mr. Hunter took responsibility for several of the omissions.

Witnesses and Counsel at War.

Mr. Hoover and Mr. Allen, the cashier, were severely examined by Mr. Tilley. He criticized the bookkeeping of the company, and Mr. Hoover criticized Mr. Tilley until each became heated, and it took up a lot of time before they regained their equanimity.

When they got started again, Mr. Hoover explained that the Sovereign did not push the non-participating business, and he did not consider it profitable.

Mr. Hoover gave some views about the business a new company should attempt. It should go slow, writing about half a million a year for the first five years, and increasing to a million in the next five, etc. The volume should not be exceeded in the period of improvement of capital.

Hoover Loans Money.

Mr. Hoover's examination was continued at the afternoon session. The witness was 10 minutes' late.

Mr. Tilley took up an account, "preliminary expense in regard to organization." The amount shown was $3,100, made up of two items, $2,500 credit on stock and cash, $531. Witness said that he had advanced $3,031 to the company for organization purposes, and this was returned as above and treated in the books of the company as a "loan" account, and donated his services for one year.

Mr. Tilley found a resolution referring to a contract made by the Sovereign Life with the witness. The contract, which formerly read, "in accordance with Mr. Hoover's requirements," was changed in the minutes to read, "on basis of discussion with Mr. Hoover." The witness had forgotten the matter, but said that either way would make no difference whatever to the terms of the contracts.

The question of proxies was taken up.

Held Proxies.

Mr. Tilley asked the witness to whom in the Sovereign Life were these proxies made out.

Witness said that the subscription blank for stock carried with it the authority of the subscriber that witness would represent him at all meetings.

Mr. Tilley read the form of subscription by which subscribers signed over their proxy to Mr. Hoover on the purchase of stock in the company. Mr. Hoover was proxy for all but ten or twelve shares.

Mr. Hoover said it would produce chaos to have shareholders appoint anyone as their proxy. All large corporations must have someone familiar with the concern to represent the shareholders at all times.

Hoover Owns Company.

A slight controversy over the number of proxies held by Mr. Hoover brought out the question.

"You have control of the company?"

"Yes. I will say, yes, if that's what you are fishing for," said the witness, "and I am responsible for the success of the company."

Mr. Hoover owned 532 shares out of 839 actually paid for, and voted on 1019 shares.

Again the contract. Mr. Hoover said that the agreement was approved by the provisional board. The value was fixed at $2,500, and a commission of $1 per $1,000 of insurance procured for six years, and a commission as long as such insurance written by witness remained on the company' books.

The company's office at 182 Bay street, known as the Temple Annex, was rented at the very low price of $100 per month.

Mr. Tilley dissected the bylaws.

Fixes Agents Salaries.

It was shown that Mr. Hoover fixed all the agents' contracts. He had specific power to give the agents salaries.

Provincial boards of policyholders were a feature of the Sovereign throughout Canada, and, according to witness, they were very beneficial to the company.

Mr. Tilley noted that a policyholder had to be given 30 days' notice by the man who had given it before he would be called to surrender it. Counsel said that this clause was absurd, but Mr. Hoover said that this was to prevent a "stampede" or mix up at the meeting.

Mr. Tilley tried for a long time to get Mr. Hoover to say that the policyholders could not put him out of the company, but Mr. Hoover said that if it was to the advantage of the company he would resign within 24 hours.

Hoover's Agreement.

Mr. Tilley went carefully into Mr. Hoover's agreement with the Sovereign Life.

Mr. Hoover first explained that he had taken all the risk and responsibility of organization, had borne the heat of the day, had worked hard, 16 hours a day, and had loaned the company money. He had left a position of $6,000 a year. The reason that this special agreement was made to the effect that witness was to have an income from the company for life was to provide for any inability on his part to maintain his executive ability or that he might "break down." His services were worth $100,000 a year, but he gave the company the benefit of having his salary spread over a number of years. He had drawn the contract himself.

Hoover and Home Life.

Mr. Tilley went into the other companies owned by Mr. Hoover. He had an agent's contract with the Home Life, which, although entirely foreign to the Sovereign Life, counsel spent a long time in reading over. Witness had received about $7,000 all told from this agreement. He was heavily interested in the Sovereign Fire Co., and a patent medicine company.

Mr. Hoover will be called again today at 10.30.

Boy May Lose Leg.

Toronto, June 27.—Mark Brown, a Jewish boy, aged 9, who lives at 91 East Queen street, lies in a critical condition at St. Michael's Hospital, from injuries received yesterday, while attempting to ride on some "trailers" which were being moved at Front and Jarvis streets. Brown's right leg is badly crushed and may have to be amputated above the knee, and his right arm is broken.

Babe's Body in Barrel.

Toronto, June 27.—The body of a newly-born baby girl was found last evening by Dr. James Spence in a lane between Lisgar and Dovercourt road. Dr. Spence was about to empty some ashes in the ash-barrel when he noticed a bundle wrapped in brown paper. After taking off the brown paper a pillow-case contained a good-sized newly-born babe.

HOW TO STOP REBATING

Mr. Hoover of Sovereign Life Gives Commission a Recipe.

Royal Insurance Commission Ends a Month's Work in Toronto—Goes to London to Inquire Into the Northern Life and the London Life—Commission Compliments Last Witness on His Straightforward Answers.

Toronto, June 28.—The Royal Insurance Commission closed a month's stand in Toronto yesterday and opens to-day in London, when the Northern Life and the London Life will be looked into.

The examination of Mr. Hoover and the Sovereign Life was concluded. Mr. Hoover admitted that the company's returns to the commission showed that witness had paid $12,325 on his stock, while he really had paid only $2,500. According to the act each subscriber must pay at least ten per cent. of his stock in cash. This company took subscribers' notes for stock. Hoover gave his note for the balance of his ten per cent. No record of this note appeared in the company's books.

What "In Cash" Means.

Mr. Allen, the company's bookkeeper, told the commission that he did not understand what "in cash" meant or he would have made a correct return. In regard to Hoover's note, it was kept in the office cash book and was paid off by Hoover some time last year.

Mr. Hoover swore that he took no commissions for selling either stock or insurance. The organization expenses were about $40,000. He held a stock policy for $5,000, the premium being $390 and the loading only $17.00.

Actuary Gould said that the Sovereign Life did not give rebates, and although no agents had been discharged, they were liable to removal if they gave rebates.

Questioned by Mr. Tilley, Mr. Gould said that the Sovereign Life issued deferred policies almost altogether, and in his opinion it was a better principle to keep policyholders away from profits until the policy matured.

No Juggling on Dec. 31.

Mr. Hoover stated that all the investments of the Sovereign Life were authorized. There was no juggling on Dec. 31.

R. E. Geary, Ontario counsel, asked the witness his opinion of rebating.

Mr. Hoover said the companies were to blame and the agents were used as the scapegoats.

"You could stop rebating in 24 hours and I will give you the formula," he said. "Fine the company $1,000 for the first offence, cancel its license for the second and imprison the agent and void the policy."

Mr. Kent complimented the witness on his straightforward answers before he left the box.

Every day is a new life, every sunrise but a new birth.—Jordon.

Wm. Hendrie, Sr., Dead.

One of Canada's Most Noted Railway and Turfmen.

Sketch of His Career—Railways He Built and the Cartage Business He Established—Success on the Turf—Won a Futurity With Martimas, and Two Queen's Plates and the First King's Plate.

Hamilton, June 28.—William Hendrie, Sr., died yesterday afternoon about 2.30. He had been ill for several months, and yesterday afternoon he slept peacefully away. He was 75 years of age.

Mr. Hendrie was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and was educated there, studying law for two years. In 1848 he began his career as a railway man. He was first connected with the Glasgow Southwestern Railway, and afterwards with the Northeastern Railway at Newcastle-on-the-Tyne. In 1855 he came to Canada, and was identified with the Great Western Railway.

As a Railway Contractor.

During his early career in Canada, Mr. Hendrie was a prominent contractor. Among the contracts he carried out were the building of the Hamilton waterworks system; the extensions, switches and station grounds of the Great Western Railway, west of London; the Wellington, Grey and Bruce Railway; the Harrisburg-Brantford, Canfield-Welland and Allenburg-Clifton branches. With his sons and others he also built the Northern & Pacific Junction Railway, and had large contracts in Michigan, Detroit, Marquette and Mackinaw; built the Ontario and Quebec Road, and reconstructed the line from Detroit to Milwaukee.

WM. HENDRIE, SR.

It was in 1855 that the established the big cartage business carried on by Hendrie & Co. When the Toronto branch was opened in 1856 it had only three teams. Since 1862 the company has had the contract of carting the freight of the G. T. R. at western points. Mr. Hendrie was also interested with his brother George, in the Detroit Cartage Agency.

Had Many Interests.

Among the business with which Mr. Hendrie was connected are the following: President of the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Railway; director of the Hamilton & Northwestern Railway; director of the Ontario and Quebec Railway, president of the Ontario Cotton Co., and the Ontario Qu'Appelle Land Co., director of the Canada Life, the Toronto Ferry Co., the Hamilton Gaslight Co. and the Detroit Street Railway. At the time of his death Mr. Hendrie was a director of the Canada & Northwest Land Co., Consolidated Cariboo, Hydraulic Mining Co., Imperial Bank, Northern Navigation Co., Toronto General Trusts Co., vice-president, president Hamilton Bridge Works Co., Hendrie & Co., and the Ontario Jockey Club.

Noted Turfman.

Mr. Hendrie was one of the most prominent Canadian turfmen, a short time previous to his death being elected an honorary member of the English Jockey Club. He was one of the fathers of the Ontario Jockey Club, and when a young man was considered a crack rider. He organized the Hamilton Jockey Club.

Mr. Hendrie's greatest success on the turf came in 1896, when Martimas won the Futurity. He won the Queen's Plate in 1899 with Butter Scotch, and in 1902 won the first King's Plate with Lyddite. During his long connention with the turf he was never know to wager anything on the result of a race.

His Survivors.

Mr. Hendrie was twice married. His first wife was Margaret Walker, who died on July 14, 1873. In September, 1875, he married Miss Mary Murray, who, with the following family, survives him: Lieut.-Col. the Hon. John S. Hendrie, member of the Ontario Cabinet; Major William Hendrie, Forty-Eighth Highlanders, Toronto; Geo. M. Hendrie, Detroit; Mrs. J. D. Hay, Toronto; Mrs. A. D. Braithwaite, New York; Mrs. A. H. Eckford, High River, Alberta; Mrs. Henry Ledyard, Detroit; Miss Hendrie and Miss Phylis Hendrie.

House Breakers Sentenced.

Toronto, June 28—Raymond McIntosh and Conrad Schroeder were yesterday sentenced to three years each in the penitentiary, after McIntosh had perjured himself in an effort to save Schroeder, who broke down completely. McIntosh seemed to glory in his depravity. He is only 15, but has been "bad" since he was seven and acknowledges 13 arrests. He calls housebreaking "great sport."

Convict Escapes From Central.

Toronto, June 28.—Maxime Desrosiers, a convict, at the Central Prison, escaped yesterday afternoon, and is yet at freedom. Desrosiers was at work with a number of others painting the engineer's house, and while the guard's back was turned, "cut his lucky." He was serving six months for robbing his brother, and had served half his time.

Election Scrutiny.

Port Arthur, June 28.—The election scrutiny in Thunder Bay and Rainy River election takes place here on July 9 before Justice Teetzel.

Seed Men Meet.

Ottawa, June 28.—The third annual convention of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association opened yesterday. Last night, Prof. J. W. Robertson delivered the presidential address, and addresses were delivered by Hon. Syndey Fisher and Hon. W. R. Motherwell of Regina.

Will Give Canada Preference.

Montreal, June 28.—Information reached Montreal yesterday that the customs union of British South Africa is about to grant Canada some substantial preferences in its tariff. The bill is now before the South African Parliament and will shortly become law.

Cochrane Entertained.

Port Arthur, June 28.—Hon. Frank Cochrane was entertained here yesterday by citizens of the town. He visited the municipal power plant, and was banqueted last night.

Private Cars.

The readers will remember what volumes were written by Grit editors and Grit correspondents in condemnation of private cars, when the Conservatives were in power. The poor old car "Cumberland" was a perpetual text for sermons on Tory luxurious jauntings about the country by Tory Ministers.

Compare the good old luxurious times, as they were termed, with the present, and see how they compare. Then there was a private car for the Governor-General, and one for the Minister of Railways, and occasionally for his colleagues. Now we have—

The Governor-General's cars, Victoria and Alexandra.

The car Acadia for the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Car 109 for the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Car Ottawa.

Car No. 28, car No. 75 for the general manager of the Intercolonial, burned in the recent fire.

Car 77 for the general traffic manager.

Official car 34 for the Intercolonial Railway.

And car 35 for the paymaster of the Intercolonial.

The Victoria cost $11,938, the Alexandra $18,000, the Acadia $21,000, the Minister of Railways and Canals' car $18,850, and the Ottawa $11,265.

The cost of operating the Victoria was paid by the Governor-General; the cost of operating the Acadia for the year ending June 30, 1905, was $1,610 for the Minister of Railways and Canals' car, $1,222; for the Ottawa, $1,156, and for car 28, $1,208.

For comfort and luxury, commend us to democratic brawlers about extravagance and snobbery.

This is not all; the members of the Laurier Government are not content with private cars; they have yachts in which to luxuriate during hot weather,

Two of the new steamers of the Marine and Fisheries Department are fitted up so that the members of the Government may travel in comfort by water.

The new Auditor-General thought this strange, for the day after Christmas, last past, he wrote to the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries in reference to the sumptuous fittings of these new steamers, asking "if it is customary to equip these vessels, which are not passenger carrying vessels, with silverware, cutlery, etc., of such an expensive nature as that which appears in the accounts above referred." to? "

Before the Public Accounts Committee it was shown that the prices paid were outrageous. For instance, the fortunate Minister pours his tea out of a $21 tea-pot, or if he prefers coffee, from a $23 coffee pot into a $1.04 coffee cup, but, sad to say, he can only stir it with a 33 cent spoon. But he can pour in the cream from a $12.50 cream jug, or from a $17 milk jug, and sweeten it from a $27 sugar bowl. He can also begin his breakfast by helping himself to fruit from a $49.50 fruit stand. He can have ice water out of a $20 pitcher brought to him on an $11 tray, and he may help himself to bread from a $12.25 plate. The butter will come out of a $6.62 butter-dish.

He will find his bacon and eggs kept warm under a $19 cover. When he is finished the steward will gather up the crumbs with a $5.25 crumb brush, into a $4 crumb tray. And so it goes all through the meal and all through the day. It might, however, be remarked that the glassware is in keeping with all this magnificence. It is all cut and badged, the sherries at 40 cents each, ruby hock at 72 cents, champagne at 60 cents each, etc.

The Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries apparently did not reply to the Auditor-General's request for information as to whether or not such luxury is customary, but Mr. Fraser probably knows more about it by this time.

Let's hear no more of Tory luxuries after this!

Yesterday in Toronto, just when the householder was looking up the iceman's telephone number, the news came that the price of coal had suddenly dropped. The first move was made by the Elias Rogers Company, which dropped the price from $6.75 the low figure for May, to $6 even. The other companies immediately fell into line, and the result is that to-day anybody who is not warm enough can go into any coal company's office that takes his fancy and order all the good anthracite coal that he wants for the low rate of $6 a ton. Mr. Rogers said, "We considered that the conditions warranted a lower price," he said, "and therefore have given the public the benefit of it."

You must cease to be cleanly, wear printer's ink as though it were a robe of spotless purity. You are to harbor in your breast a total, complete and constant distaste for decent personal appearance. Your duties will consist of learning the cases, setting reprint, cleaning rollers, folding papers, lauding your superiors, bragging on the paper, whistling between acts, whipping all who cuss the editor and obeying all rules and regulations hereinafter promulgated. "Hardship sharpens the wits," said Bishop Isaac W. Joyce, of Minneapolis "I have never known a brighter or better informed lad than the son of a confirmed gambler of Cincinnati.

"During my residence in Cincinnati I saw a good deal of this boy. His father's disgraceful conduct seemed to stimulate him to study and improve himself. Instances of his precocious and wise sayings were constantly being passed about.

"The boy, coming home from a historical lecture one night, found his father in the parlor playing for high stakes. Luck was going against the man, and his son, perceiving this, began to cry.

"What are you crying for, Jim?" the players said.

"At a lecture to-night," the boy answered, "I learned that Alexander the Great wept when he heard of the multitude of cities his father had conquered. He feared that his father would leave him nothing to win. Well, I weep for an opposite reason. I fear that my father will leave me nothing to lose."

Lancia, the noted chauffeur, crossed the Atlantic to New York on La Gascogne, and one night in the smoking room of the steamer he said;

"Your American railroads are siperior to ours. The trains go faster, the cars are more luxurious, and the management is wiser.

"I like your system of excess cheques—those cheques, each worth a dime, which you give on your railroads to passengers who, having no tickets, pay cash fares. At first these cheques angered me. I did not like them. But a conductor, with a good-natured smile, illustrated their use with a story.

"He said that on a little railway in the South they do not use excess cheques. A friend of his riding on this railway without a ticket, paid his fare in cash—a matter of $4 or $5.

"The conductor took the money and counted it, and then, very carefully he put part of it in his coat pockets, and the rest in the hip pocket of his pantaloons.

"Why," said the passenger, 'do you divide the money that way?"

The conductor with a frown, replied;

"The company's got to get something, ain't ti?"

TAKING DOWN A DUKE.

A publisher said of Oscar Wilde, whose posthumous volume, "De Profundis," has made a deep impression not only in England and America, but in France, Germany and Italy as well (the work has already been translated into six languages);

"Poor Wilde! His road was an uphill one till he began to write plays. Up to the time of the production of 'Lady Windermere's Fan' he found it difficult to earn a decent living. Afterwards, as 'A Woman of No Importance,' 'The Importance of Being Earnest,' and his other sparkling, graceful comedies appeared, Wilde made $40,000 a year. But before that he was often very poor.

"No matter how poor he was, though, he never lost a certain disdainful, supercilious, patronizing humor. This humor was very distasteful to some people. It was exercised once upon a duke, and cost Wilde a rather lucrative post.

"The duke wanted a tutor for his two sons, and Wilde was recommended. He called, the duke examined him, and seemed favorably impressed.

"But he was a very great duke, with a very high opinion of himself, and his manner grated on Wilde.

"The last question he asked the young man was;

"'And would you—ah—would you expect to eat with the family.?'

"'That,' Wilde answered, 'would depend altogether on how the family behaved at meals.'"

DR. CALMETTE'S DISCOVERY.

CLAIMS HE CAN MAKE CHILDREN IMMUNE TO THE "GREAT WHITE PLAGUE."

Paris, June 26. — Dr. Calmette, Chief of the Tuberculosis Hospital at Lyons, in a communication to the Academy of Medicine, makes the announcement that the time is close at hand when children will be made immune to tuberculosis just as they are vaccinated against smallpox now. A few dead bacilli in a cup of hot milk will be swallowed by the child and the thing will be done.

Dr. Calmette claims that when his discovery is perfected the children treated by his method can live next to hopeless cases of tuberculosis without the slightest danger.

Ready For Another.

(Everybody's Magazine.)

An impecunious Irishman, who was touring the country mostly by the brake-beam route, was one day enjoying the luxury of a ride on a farmer's wagon. As they rode on side by side, the Irishman noticed a handsome old house by the roadside that was apparently unoccupied and spoke of it to the farmer.

"That house," said the farmer, "is haunted; nobody will stay in it."

"Sure, I don't believe in ha'nts," said the Irishman.

"Well, that house is yours if you will sleep in it one night. There is a standing offer to that effect."

"The house is mine," said the Irishman. "Take me to the man that wants to give it away."

At dark the Irishman walked to the house, opened the front door with the key he had received from the owner, and went upstairs, where he found a room prepared for his reception. Removing his clothes he went to bed, and, as he was tired from his day's journey, was soon fast asleep. During the night he was awakened by shrieks, groans, the rattling of chains, and other unearthly noises. At the foot of his bed he saw a fearsome figure all in white pointing an accusing finger at him. With one frightened bound he was beside his clothes, and, gathering an armful, fled down the stairs, out of doors, and down the road as fast as he could go. Urged on by his fright, he ran until weary nature refused to carry him any farther. Dropping on a log by the roadside, he breathed a sigh of relief, and then gasped for breath. He heard a hollow cough near him, and his heart sank as he turned and saw the ghost sitting beside him at the other end of the log.

"That was a great run we had," said the ghost.

"You're right!" gasped Pat. "And as soon as I get my breath, we'll have another one.

FOOTBALL.

G.T.A.C., 1; "Say Corby," 0.

The Grand Trunk Athletic Club of this city last night defeated the "Say Corby" Football Club, at Corbyville, by the score of 1 to 0. The game throughout was a very good exhibition, despite the fact that the weather was very warm, and both teams showed up well, although the play seemed to be in the territory of the Corbyville goal the most of the time, but the defence for that team put up a splendid game. Taking the game all round, it was a first-class exhibition, and both teams were pretty evenly matched. Mr. C. Pratt was referee, and his decisions gave general satisfaction to both teams. The line-up was as follows:

"Say Corby."—Goal, Keys; full backs, Halstead and Neugent; half-backs, Thompson and Lonsberry; centre half-back, Ashcroft; forwards, Crump, Latta, Wilson, Haight and Hancock.

G.T.A.C.—Goal, Barnum; full backs, S. Stapley and W. Smith; half-backs, T. Ford and T. Smith; centre half-back, J. Ford; forwards, Shepherd, Acton, Gerow, Bowen and G. Stapley.

A return match will be played in this city the early part of next week.

BASEBALL.

The baseball nine of the western part of the city would like to play the Park Nine at 6 o'clock to-morrow evening at exhibition park.

YACHTING.

All interested in sailing races off the park this summer are requested to meet at Hotel Quinte this (Thursday) evening at 8 o'clock.—W. Rogers, manager.

ROWING.

Henley, Eng., June 27.—Despite adverse winds, the crew of the Argonaut Boat Club, of Toronto, developed pace to-day, rowing several spurts with 38 strokes to the minute. It is the growing opinion of expert observers that at last the Grand Challenge is likely to leave England. The Canadians continue to make a splendid impression.

At the evening practice there was much less wind than in the morning. The opinion in rowing circles is that, barring accidents, the Argonauts are the probable winners. The Argonauts cleared the island in 49 seconds, and did the full course in 7.28. Third Trinity cleared the island in 51 seconds and did the full course in 7.55.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The Ship's Log.

The record of a ship's voyage is called its log because the observations of its speed, usually taken hourly, by the log line are a very important factor in the record. The log line is so called because the float attached to the line was originally a small log or stick of wood. This "log" is now a square or triangular piece of board weighted so that it sits upright in the water. The log line is divided by knots or marks into lengths of fifty-one feet, which is about one one-hundred-and-twentieth of a marine mile, so that the ship is going as many marine miles or knots in an hour as the number of knots or lengths that run off the reel in half a minute when the "log" is thrown overboard.

Animals In Mohammedan Heaven.

According to the Mohammedans, ten animals have been admitted to paradise—the dog Kratim, the follower of the seven sleepers, Balaam's ass, Solomon's ant, the honeybee, Jonah's whale, the ram which was offered in sacrifice in place of Isaac, the camel of Saleb, the cuckoo of Balkis, the ox of Moses and Al Borak, the monstrosity which conveyed Mohammed from earth to heaven and back again in a very short time. These creatures were all sainted for some special services which they had rendered to man.

THE DEAR OLD DAYS.

(Frank L. Stanton.)

Gimme back the dear old days — all the boys in line—
"Boy stood on the burnin' deck," an' "Bingen on the Rhine!"
"'Twas midnight; in his guarded tent"— we spoke it high and low,
While Mary trotted out that lamb whose fleece was white as snow.

Gimme back the dear old days that mem'ry loves to keep,
With "Pilot, 'tis a fearful night; there's danger on the deep";
The old-time awkward gestures—the jerk meant for a bow—
We said that "Curfew should not ring," but, Lord! it's ringin' now!

Gimme back the dear old days—the pathway through the dells
To the schoolhouse in the blossoms; the sound of far-off bells
Tinklin' 'crost the meadows, the song of bird an' brook;
The old-time dictionary an' the blue-back spellin' book!

Gone, like a dream, forever—a city's hid the place
Where stood the old log schoolhouse; an' no familiar face
Is smilin' there in welcome beneath a mornin' sky!—
There's a bridge acrost the river, an' we've crossed an' said "Good-bye!"

Success is largely a matter of intelligence. We are all industrious enough to succeed. It is lack of push that keeps us back.

"So many men work stupidly, like the boy in the drug store. There was a boy clerking in a drug store to whom the druggist said;

"You sweep and clean well, but you're not as good a salesman as you should be. To be a good salesman you must push things a bit. Call each patron's attention to some article he needs. Thus you may often effect an extra sale."

"All right, sir," said the boy.

"And that afternoon he said to an elderly lady who had come in after a stamp;

"Anything else, ma'am? Hair dye, cosmetic, wrinkle remover, face powder, mole destroyer, skin rejuvenator, flabby——"

"But with an exclamation of annoyance the elderly lady hastened out before the alert boy was nearly through his catalogue of the articles he thought she needed."

FEAR OF DISEASE

Kills as many as disease itself. Do you remember the traveller on the way to Damascus?

This traveller, as he was journeying, met an apparition.

"Who art thou?" he said.

The apparition answered, "I am the Plague."

"Whither," said the traveller, "art thou going, Plague?"

"To Damascus," replied the other. "To Damascus, to slay three thousand."

Accordingly the traveller kept away from Damascus. He visited a distant city, and he remained there a long time.

Three months later, as he was returning, he met the same apparition again at the same point.

"False spirit," he said, "why didst thou lie to me? Thou saidst that thou would slay but three thousand in Damascus, and lo, thou hast slain thirty thousand there.

"Nay, friend," returned the apparition, "be not over hasty in thy judgment. I slew, indeed, but my three thousand. Fear slew the rest."

WOMAN'S CREDULITY.

A young man entered the drawing-room of the girl whom he was soon to marry.

The girl came down to meet him with a severe frown on her pretty face.

"John," she said, "father saw you this morning going into a pawnbroker's with a large bundle."

John flushed. Then he said in a low voice;

"Yes, that is true. I was taking the pawnbroker some of my old clothes. You see, he and his wife are frightfully hard up."

"Oh, Jack, forgive me," exclaimed the young girl. "How truly noble you are."

"Failed through lack of influence, I suppose," said I.

"No, no," said he. I've got the appointment."

And he resumed his pleasant stroll.

Form in athletics, as in everything else, counts for much. Form helps a man to do his stunts easily. It also bluffs his opponents, making them think him better than he actually is. Yes, form in many ways gets us through at half the labor and at half the cost.

"There was a man who dined regularly at a certain restaurant. He said frowning;

"Your portions are very small again this evening. As an old customer I generally have two pieces of beef, but to-night you have only brought me one."

"By gum, sir, you're right," exclaimed the waiter. "The cook must have forgot to cut it in two."

IMMORTALITY.

One Theory of the Condition That Comes After Death.

Our life does not begin with birth, nor does it conclude with death. It is only a section of the development of mankind before and after us. We existed before we were born, and we reap what the factors of our being have sown. So our life leaves its after effects, and they will be what we have made them.

The truth is that while there is no immortality in the sense in which most religions hold it if we accept their doctrines in their literal meaning, conditions in life are such in many respects, as if these doctrines were true. For, while our bodily existence is wiped out with all its physiological functions, the essential part of our own being (the thoughts themselves) remain, and thus our immortality—not as a concrete individual and bodily incarnation, but our soul, our character, the impulses which we have given in life to others, our aspirations and most characteristic features—cannot be wiped out.

A man who keeps this thought in his mind, either intuitively by realizing the power and justice of the religious instinct or by having fathomed the problem philosophically in its very depths, will not live for the present moment, but in consideration of the after effects which his life leaves on the world. And I would say that one of the best tests for right action in a critical situation is for a man to ask himself, If I had passed away from this life what would I wish that I had done in this emergency? I am confident that the answer given to this question would help us in the most difficult circumstances to find the right solution. —Dr. Paul Carus, Author of "The Soul of Man," "Chinese Philosophy," etc., in Monist.

A Chance For Somebody.

"Very strange, isn't it, about the story of Adam and Eve?"

"How?"

Injuries of Life.

The injuries of life if rightly improved will be to us as the strokes of the statuary on his marble, forming us to a more beautiful shape and making us fitter to adorn the heavenly temple.

The wise prove and the foolish confess by their conduct that a life of employment is the only life worth leading.—Paley.

English Railway Signals.

An observant traveler on English railways could tell you at once the railway upon which he is traveling by merely looking at the first signal he passes. It may surprise many to know that there are hardly two styles quite alike in this country in station architecture and fittings, color of rolling stock, design and color of the locomotives, uniforms of the servants, style of the signal cabins and signal appliances and many other details.—London Mail.

Adder Stones.

The singular superstition of the value of adder stones for curing a variety of ills has continued in many countries from the time of the Romans. These celebrated charms are nothing more than antique green or blue glass striped in various designs and perforated. The virtues of these stones are sung in the poems of the ancient Druids and are mentioned by Pliny and other classical writers.

A Warning.

"See here!" said the theatrical manager. "You want to quit your overbearing behavior toward the other members of this company"—

"Indeed?" haughtily replied the Thespian. "I am the star, am I not?"

"Well, yes, but you want to remember that you're not a fixed star."

No Use For Them.

Customer (being measured in a fashionable tailor's shop)—By the way, what's your price for a suit? Tailor—Sixty dollars, sir. How many pockets would you like? Customer—No pockets at all. I shan't need any when I've paid your bill.

Poverty.

Poverty is very terrible and sometimes kills the very soul within us, but it is the north wind that lashes men into vikings; it is the soft, luscious south wind which lulls them to lotus dreams.—Ouida.

There is something on earth grander than arbitrary power. The thunder, the lightning and the earthquake are terrific, but the judgment of the people is more.—Daniel Webster.

The slanting fire-pots in common furnaces provide a rest-place for ashes and clinkers, and these clog the draft, prevent radiation, make the furnace hard to shake, and fill up the fire-pot.

The "Sunshine" pot is straight up and down, which gives an uninterrupted course to the draft, and prevents ashes and clinkers sticking to the sides.

The same skill and thought has been used on every feature of the "Sunshine" furnace—it is Canada's greatest heater.

SUBMARINE REEFS.

How They Are Located by the Naval Engineers.

Prior to the nineteenth century navigation, except on the high seas, was mainly that of the Irish pilot who claimed to know all the rocks in the harbor. "An' there's wan of thim!" said he as he struck.

On approaching land one needs to know how far he is from the lighthouse or headland in sight. Triangulation tells him. Two points on land being taken for the base of the triangle, lines from these points, representing the other two sides of the triangle, are drawn until they intersect. That apex of the triangle will be the point where the observer is. Then the distance from his point to the land can be easily calculated.

The maritime wars under Napoleon disclosed the dangerous ignorance of French mariners about their own seacoast. French vessels were unable to break or run their enemies' blockade. After peace was established Beautemps-Beaupre was appointed as the organizer and chief of corps of engineers to chart the whole coast of France. His work was so well done that the other naval powers hastened to chart their own coasts according to his methods.

The head of a rock may easily escape ordinary soundings, or lie between soundings. When covered by ten or more feet of water and unmarked by ripples or breakers, it is hard to find. Even when known it is hard to get soundings. The lead may glide over it, so that even in well surveyed waters some unlucky ship out of hundreds passing there may "find the rock with its keel."

Groups of buoys with grappling irons are lashed together in long sweeping lines and sunk behind the small sounding boat until they touch bottom, and are then towed until they strike a rock. In calm weather rocks and reefs may be seen at great depths from great heights in balloons. Even after a rock has been discovered, its depth and position must be precisely ascertained. Fishermen, too, help make known these uncharted rocks, rewards being offered for all new ones discovered.

England, the United States, Spain, Italy and other maritime nations have adopted French methods. Japan for years has devoted to the subject its usual minute, trustworthy and masterful study, but has imitated the English crowded and complicated charts rather than the artistic execution of the French.

The Orchid Family.

There seems to be a general misconception as to just what an orchid is. Many call any plant which grows on a tree or has some peculiar feature an orchid. This mistake is frequently made with the pitcher plants and the "tall flowers." The uniting in one organ, called the column, of the stamens and pistils serves to distinguish the orchid family from all related ones. The orchid family embraces 6,000 or 7,000 species, of which comparatively few are found in the warm temperate and almost none in the cold temperate zones. They are mostly distributed in the tropical regions, in hot, humid places. Orchids, however, do not invariably prefer humid conditions. Nearly all tropical orchids grow on trees, but in temperate regions they grow in earth.—Youth's Companion.

A Picture of Tennyson.

A writer who once saw Lord Tennyson on the platform of a railway station says of him: "He would have been tall, but his shoulders seemed somewhat bent. His hair was long; so was his beard. He wore an ugly Inverness cape and a large slouch hat. He looked like a bandit in a melodrama, and I thought him some poor actor who had come out in some of the stage properties. He seemed so sad I felt quite sorry for him as I watched him walk up and down the platform."

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton.

And, while I won't drink to James Polk"—he plunged a cup in the bowl and drew it out brimming—"I'll empty this to the president!"

It was then that from fifty throats the long, wild shout went up that stirred Rouen and woke the people from their midnight beds for half a mile around.

CHAPTER XIV.

FOR the first time it was Crailey who sat waiting for Tom to come home. In a chair drawn to his partner's desk in the dusty office he half reclined, arms on the desk, his chin on his clinched fists.

Tom took his own time in coming. He had stayed at the club to go over his lists—so he had told Crailey—with the general and old Bareaud. His company was almost complete, and Crailey had been the first to volunteer, to the dumfounding of Trumble, who had proceeded to drink his health again and again. But the lists could not detain Tom two hours, Crailey knew, and it was two hours since the new volunteers had sung "The Star Spangled Banner" over the last of the punch and had left the club to Tom and the two old men. Only once or twice in that time had Crailey shifted his position or altered the direction of his set gaze at nothing. But at last he rose, went to the window and, leaning far out, looked down the street toward the little clubhouse. Its lights were extinguished, and all was dark up and down the street. Abruptly Crailey went back to the desk and blew out the candle, after which he sat down again in the same position. Twenty minutes later he heard Tom's step on the stair, coming up very softly. Crailey waited in silence until his partner reached the landing, then relit the candle.

"Tom," he called, "come in, please. I've been waiting for you."

There was a pause before Tom answered from the hall:

"I'm very tired, Crailey. I think I'll go up to bed."

"No," said Crailey; "come in."

The door was already open, but Tom turned toward it reluctantly. He stopped at the threshold, and the two looked at each other.

"I thought you wouldn't come as long as you believed I was up," said Crailey, "so I blew out the light. I'm sorry I kept you outside so long."

"Crailey, I'm going away tomorrow," the other began. "I am to go over and see the governor and offer him this company, and tonight I need sleep, so please"—

"No," interrupted Crailey quietly; "I want to know what you're going to do."

"To do about what?"

"About me."

"Oh!" Tom's eyes fell at once from his friend's face and rested upon the floor. Slowly he walked to the desk and stood in embarrassed contemplation of the littered books and papers, while the other waited.

"I think it's best for you to tell me," said Crailey.

"You think so?" Tom's embarrassment increased visibly, and there was mingled with it an odd appearance of apprehension, probably to relieve which he very deliberately took two long cheroots from his pocket, laid one on the desk for Crailey and lit the other himself with extreme carefulness at the candle. After this ceremonial he dragged a chair to the window, tilted back in it with his feet on the low sill, his back to the thin light and his friend, and said in a slow, gentle tone:

"Well, Crailey?"

"I suppose you mean that I ought to offer my explanation first?" said the other, still standing. "Well, there isn't any!" He did not speak doggedly or sullenly, as one in fault, but more with the air of a man curiously ready to throw all possible light upon a cloudy phenomenon. "It's very simple—all that I know about it. I went there first on the evening of the Madrillon masquerade and played a little comedy for her, so that some of my theatrical allusions—they weren't very illuminating—to my engagement to Fanchon made her believe I was Vanrevel when her father told her about the pair of us. I discovered that the night his warehouses burned—and I saw something more, because I can't help seeing such things—that yours was just the character to appeal to a young girl fresh from the convent and full of honesty and fine dreams and fire. Nobody could arrange a more fatal fascination for a girl of nineteen than to have a deadly quarrel with her father. And that's especially true when the father's like that mad brute of a Bob Carewe! Then, too, you're more or less the town model of virtue and popular hero, in spite of the abolitionism, just as I am the town scamp. So I let it go on and played a little at being you, saying the things that you only think—that was all. It isn't strange that it's lasted until now, not more than three weeks, after all. She's only seen you four or five times and me not much oftener. No one speaks of you to her, and I've kept out of sight when others were about. Mrs. Tanberry is her only close friend and, naturally, wouldn't be apt to mention that you are dark and I am fair or to describe us personally any more than you and I would mention the general appearance of people we both meet about town. But you needn't tell me that it can't last much longer. Some petty, unexpected trifle will turn up, of course. All that I want to know is what you mean to do."

"To do?" repeated Tom softly and blew a long scarf of smoke out of the window.

"Ah!" Crailey's voice grew sharp and loud. "There are many things you needn't tell me. You need not tell me what I've done to you nor what you think of me. You need not tell me that you have others to consider; that you have Miss Carewe to think of. Don't you suppose I know that? And you need not tell me that you have a duty to Fanchon"—

"Yes," Tom broke in, his tone not quite steady—"yes, I've thought of that."

"Well?"

"Have you—did you"— He hesitated, but Crailey understood immediately.

"No; I haven't seen her again."

"But you"—

"Yes, I wrote. I answered the letter."

"As"—

"Yes; I signed your name. I told you that I had just let things go on," Crailey answered, with an impatient movement of his hands. "What are you going to do?"

There was a silence while they looked at each other.

"I'm going over to see the governor in the morning. I'll be away two or three days, I imagine."

"Vanrevel," exclaimed Crailey hotly, "will you give me an answer and not beat about the bush any longer, or do you mean that you refuse to answer?"

Tom dropped his cigar upon the brick window ledge with an abysmal sigh. "Oh, no; it isn't that," he answered mildly. "I've been thinking it all over for three days in the country, and when I got back tonight I found that I had come to a decision without knowing it and that I had come to it even before I started. My leaving the letter for you proved it. It's a little like this Mexican war—a mixed up problem. The thing is bound to happen, and you can't stop it. I believe the men who make this war for their own uses will suffer for it. But it is made, and there's only one thing I can see as the thing for me to do. They've called me every name on earth—and the same with you, too, Crailey—because I'm an abolitionist, but now, whether the country has sinned or not, a good many thousand men have got to do the bleeding for her, and I want to be one of them. That's the one thing that is plain to me."

"Yes," returned Crailey. "You know I'm with you, and I think you're always right. Yes, we'll all be on the way in a fortnight or so. Do you mean you won't quarrel with me because of that? Do you mean it would be a poor time now, when we're all going out to take our chances together?"

"Quarrel with you!" Tom rose and came to the desk, looking across it at his friend. "Did you think I might do that?"

"Yes—I thought so."

"Crailey!" And now Tom's expression showed desperation. It was that of a man whose apprehensions have culminated and who is forced to face a crisis long expected, long averted, but imminent at last. His eyes fell from Crailey's clear gaze, and his hand fidgeted among the papers on the desk.

"No," he began with a painful lameness and hesitation. "I did not mean it—no. I meant that, in the same way, only one thing in this other—this other affair that seems so confused and is such a problem—only one thing has grown clear. It doesn't seem to me that—that"—here he drew a deep breath before he went on with increasing nervousness—"that if you like a man and have lived with him a good many years—that is to say, if you're really much of a friend to him, I don't believe you sit on a high seat and judge him. Judging and all that haven't much part in it, and it seems to me that you've got yourself into a pretty bad mixup, Crailey."

"Yes," said Crailey. "It's pretty bad."

"Well," Tom looked up now with an almost tremulous smile, "I believe that is about all I can make of it. Do you think it's the part of your best friend to expose you? It seems to me that if there ever was a time when I ought to stand by you it's now."

There was a silence while they looked at each other across the desk in the faint light. Tom's eyes fell again as Crailey opened his lips.

"And in spite of everything," Crailey said breathlessly, "you mean that you won't tell?"

"How could I, Crailey?" said Tom Vanrevel as he turned away.

CHAPTER XV.

"Methought I met a damsel fair,
And tears were in her eyes;
Her head and arms were bare;
I heard her bursting sighs.

"I stopped and looked her in the face.
'Twas then she sweetly smiled.
Her features shone with mournful grace
Far more than nature's child.

"With diffident and downcast eye,
In modest tones she spoke.
She wiped a tear and gave a sigh
And then her silence broke"—

SO sang Mrs. Tanberry at the piano, relieving the melancholy which possessed her, but Nelson, pausing in the hall to listen and exceedingly curious concerning the promised utterance of the damsel fair, was to suffer disappointment, as the ballad was broken off abruptly and the songstress closed the piano with a monstrous clatter. Little doubt may be entertained that the noise was designed to disturb Mr. Carewe, who sat upon the veranda consulting a strong cigar, and less that the intended insult was accomplished. For an expression of a vindictive nature was precipitated in that quarter so simultaneously that the bang of the piano lid and the curse were even as the report of a musket and the immediate cry of the wounded.

Mrs. Tanberry at once debouched upon the piazza, showing a vast, clouded countenance. "And I hope to heaven you already had a headache!" she exclaimed.

"The courtesy of your wish, madam," Carewe replied, with an angry flash of his eye, "is only equaled by the kindness of heaven in answering it. I have, in fact, a headache. I always have nowadays."

"That's good news," returned the lady heartily.

"I thank you," retorted her host.

"Perhaps if you treated your daughter with even a decent Indian's kind of politeness you'd enjoy better health."

"Ah! And in what failure to perform my duty toward her have I incurred your displeasure?"

"Where is she now?" exclaimed the other excitably. "Where is she now?"

"I cannot say."

"Yes, you can, Robert Carewe!" Mrs. Tanberry retorted, with a wrathful gesture. "You know well enough she's in her own room, and so do I, for I tried to get in to comfort her when I heard her crying. She's in there with the door bolted, where you drove her!"

"I drove her!" he sneered.

"Yes; you did, and I heard you. Do you think I couldn't hear you raging and storming at her like a crazy man? Why can't you be a good father to her?"

"Perhaps you might begin by asking her to be a good daughter to me."

"What has she done?"

"The night before I went away she ran to a fire and behaved there like a common street hoiden. The ladies of the Carewe family have not formerly acquired a notoriety of that kind."

"B..." said Mrs. Tanberry.

"The next morning, when I taxed her with it, she dutifully defied and insulted me."

"I can imagine the delicacy with which you 'taxed' her. What has that to do with your devilish tantrums of this afternoon, Robert Carewe?"

"I am obliged to you for the expression," he returned. "When I came home this afternoon I found her reading that thing." He pointed to many very small fragments of Mr. Cummings' newspaper, which were scattered about the lawn near the veranda.

"Well?"

"Do you know what that article was, madam, do you know what it was?" Although breathing heavily, Mr. Carewe had compelled himself to a certain outward calmness, but now, in the uncontrollable agitation of his anger, he sprang to his feet and struck one of the wooden pillars of the porch a shocking blow with the bare knuckles of his clinched hand. "Do you know what it was? It was a eulogy of that Vanrevel! It pretended to be an account of the enrollment of his infernal company, but it was nothing more than a glorification of that nigger loving hound! His company—a lot of sneaks, who'll run like sheep from the first greaser—elected him captain yesterday, and today he received an appointment as major! It dries the blood in my veins to think of it—that black dog a major! Heavens, am I never to hear the last of him? Cummings wrote it, the fool, the lying, fawning, slobbering fool. He ought to be shot for it! Neither he nor his paper ever enters my doors again! And I took the dirty sheet from her hands and tore it to pieces"—

"Yes," interposed Mrs. Tanberry, "it looks as if you had done it with your teeth."

—"and stamped it into the ground!"

"SWISS FOOD"

Some people are merely the table decorations at the feast of reason.

It does do good baking

This is the range that bakes better because the diffusive oven flue draws in cold air from the kitchen-floor, carries it around the oven, and pours it HOT down into the oven FROM THE TOP in a current that moves all round the whole oven and up and out the flue. When that clean, hot air leaves the oven it takes with it all the moisture, all the odors, which in OTHER ovens stay in and saturate the baking food. Perfect draft control, perfect oven, draw-out oven rack for easy basting,—all points singular to

Imperial Oxford Range

Owning one costs little because there's such great economy of food and fuel and bother with this range.

It saves its cost in the juices it doesn't bake out of roasts alone.

WOMEN'S ATHLETICS.

A Physician Warns Against the Dangers of Overtraining.

Dr. Sargent of Harvard is not an enthusiast on public school developments in the way of girls' teams of basketball or hockey players. In a recent talk on the subject he expressed the opinion that girls and women are in possible danger of overdoing athletics when they take up certain sports which are popular with boys and men. Let woman rather confine herself to the lighter and more graceful forms of gymnastics and athletics, says Dr. Sargent, and make herself supreme along these lines, as she has already done in aesthetic dancing. Among the athletic sports and games likely to prove injurious to most women if played in the form in which they are played by men Dr. Sargent mentioned football, ice hockey, basketball, pole vaulting and heavy gymnastics. These games prove injurious to women, he said, because of the limitations imposed by their physical configuration, the tendency to become masculine in form and character if they try to excel in masculine pursuits and their inability to bear prolonged mental and physical strain. Nevertheless such sports could be so modified as to meet the peculiar requirements of the sex, with the result that they could be played by women with reasonable hope of physical, mental and moral development. The advice is so sound and timely that it ought to have the widest possible publicity. The extreme to which some matches of basketball among girls of high schools has been carried right in Massachusetts would be enough of itself to convince the average observer that Dr. Sargent had spoken none too sharply. There can be a hysteria in sport as well as in any other healthy diversion. Nor is the hysteria always confined to women's athletics, but at least it is more harmful there.—Boston Advertiser.

DRESSING THE NECK.

An Important Factor In Improving a Woman's Appearance.

Few women realize how much their appearance depends on the way they dress their neck. Women with short necks bundle themselves up until they look as if they had chronic sore throats, while a girl with a neck like a giraffe wears a little turndown collar.

Let her who has the long neck wear all the high, soft adornments she can get together. With an evening gown she need not be afraid to put a band of ribbon under her necklace, and she will look all the better.

In the daytime medium necked women should never wear a collar that confines the neck too much, in the evening the least adornment possible, and if she be fortunate enough to have a pretty neck and throat she is much better without any jewels. If she must wear some, let them be a string of pearls or a necklace of solitaire diamonds.

The thin necked, scrawny women are the ones than can drape themselves with the old fashioned necklace with pendants. A dress cut open at the throat is always much more dressy and even for old ladies is becomingly pretty. But their necks must be thoroughly covered with folds of net or soft tulle. Nothing is ever prettier for old ladies' wear than the kerchiefs which consist of a square or net folded and put under the gown.—Woman's Life.

DRESS HINTS.

A lady always wears gloves with an evening dress whether she is receiving or not.

A velvet garment should always be made up so that the nap inclines upward. If done in this way it will not shade white and look shiny.

If a material has a pattern running one way only, care must be taken when cutting out a blouse that the two fronts do not have the pattern going in different directions.

Never patch a woolen dress unless it is absolutely unavoidable. Tack a piece of the material underneath the weak place and darn on the right side, and if carefully done the repair will hardly show.

When shirt waist cuffs begin to fray an excellent plan is to dampen the cuffs and carefully cut along the top of the stitching line; then, while still damp, turn in the edges and restitch. This will freshen up your waist and make it last for some time.

A Nerve Pillow.

A "nerve" pillow is something which physicians are said to recommend and which can easily be made at home. One needs only to gather or buy a quantity of dried soporific herbs, such as hops and catnip leaves, bayberry and sweet fern, adding to them sweet grass, balsam pine and as many sweet smelling, sleepy things as one can think of. Dry and powder and mix all together. Then fill your "nerve" pillow with the sachet powder thus formed. Stuff the pillow with down or cotton batting or feathers, and either scatter the powder thick through the filling, or, what is better, make flat sachet bags and fasten them securely to the inner seams of the pillow.

Choosing Meat.

In selecting beef for roasts or steaks see that the lean is firm and red and that the meat is finely grained. The fat should be firm and white. Never accept any meat which looks flabby or discolored or on which the fat is yellow. In choosing mutton the meat should be dark, with plenty of fat in it. Meat without fat shows poorly fed stock. If the fat is yellow and the meat seems wet or moist do not accept it. As a general rule all meat should be firm, never flabby. Lamb and veal should both be light colored, pale—veal, in fact, cannot be too white.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS FLORENCE WIESER.

A Talented Artist Connected With the Geographical Survey.

Miss Florence Wieser of Washington, who is in the employ of the geographical survey, is an artist whose love for brush and pencil began with babyhood. The passion for drawing led her first to portrait painting, then to fine pen and ink work and on to the scientific and artistic reproduction of nature in fossil form.

Miss Wieser possesses an enviable name among scientific students throughout geological and ethnological fields. She does a grade of work in the ferreting out of fine detail in fossil brachiapods and trilobites that has rarely, perhaps never, been equaled, and as a result she is much in demand by those engaged in research or authors of monographs upon scientific subjects. She has been connected with the survey for the past twelve years, where her collection of drawings forms part of the great stride in geological progress that has been made of late.

"The brachiapod, which is a tiny shell, formerly the home of a now obsolete form of marine life, is found imbedded in rocks," explains Miss Wieser, "and for purposes of classification and publication has to be drawn to enlarged scale. Every infinitesimal line and curve of the valve, every muscle scar, every convolution, must be shown accurately, although these are barely visible with the most powerful glass. The work upon the trilobite, now extinct, but from which our king crab and horseshoe crab are probably descended, is even more close, as often only parts of the fossil remain."

MISS FLORENCE WIESER.

Miss Wieser's free hand drawing of the minute markings of these specimens is most interesting. To detect the outline and characteristic differences of form of water creatures which have become fossilized and part of the rock that holds them and to transmit these in perfect accuracy to paper in the form of a sketch of singular beauty is to accomplish not only an unusual feat of fine draftsmanship, but to render a real service to scientific knowledge.

Miss Wieser inherited her artistic talent from her father, who was one of the portrait painters of Washington.—Washington Post.

See That the Collar Fits.

"Whenever I buy a new suit," said the woman who had a new suit for every season, "my husband always looks at the collar, and if that suits him he says it's an excellent fit. When I announce that I'm going on a shopping trip he always admonishes me to get a good fitting collar. It's true of most men who observe women's clothes at all that the set of the collar determines whether they think a woman is well dressed or not. I suppose it's because the plainness of masculine attire makes a snug, well shaped collar an absolute necessity to a well groomed appearance. And I believe men are right about insisting on this feature in a woman's suit and that women would do well to pay less attention to the fit over the hip and bust and pay more attention to the fit of the collar. A bulging collar can make the entire suit look ugly, while a somewhat careless fit in other lines may be forgiven if the collar only looks trim."—New York Press.

Working Dresses.

One of the cleverest housewives is one whose cleverness lies not so much in the way she does the work—though that merits a big word of praise—as in the way she dresses. All her working dresses are made with skirts that just escape, with sleeves that end in buttoned cuffs (so that she can roll them up well out of the way), with collars already adjusted or stocks that go on "in a jiffy" and with hooks and eyes in just the right places to keep waist and skirt together. When every woman learns that it's about as easy to look neat as to be untidy there'll be a revolution that is worth while. White is the daintiest thing to wear, but white must be "always at its whitest" to be permissible, and housework leaves its marks too plainly upon it. Medium colors are best—old blue ginghams or little shepherd's checks or dark blue and white calico and chintzes. Even white with stripes or dots seems to keep its freshness better than all white.

Cracks In the Floor.

Where it is desirable to take up an old carpet and replace it with a rug the floor underneath may not be hardwood and may need renovating before the rug can be laid. In that event cracks must be filled before the stain is applied, else the stain will not improve the floor very much. The homemade papier mache which will effectually remedy this defect is so easily made and applied that unsightly floors really have no excuse for remaining so.

This is the way to make it: Stir one pound of flour and one tablespoonful of alum into three quarts of water and as soon as this boils stir in strips of newspaper till the mixture becomes like soft putty and press this into the cracks with a knife while warm.

Some burned sienna added to the mixture right after the papier has been put in makes a deep reddish brown and prevents its wearing lighter than the boards if they are stained mahogany or deep cherry.

Minds and Bodies.

"May the time come when all mothers will devote as much care to their children's bodies as some do now to their minds and social accomplishments. I know mothers who are sacrificing the health of their children that the latter may stand at the head of a class or skip a grade." Dr. William H. MacEastline, assistant director of physical culture at Teachers' college, New York, stirred a responsive chord in the hearts of the members of the Mothers' club recently when he said this. Continuing, he told them that not big muscles, but the perfect functioning of all the organs and the development of the individual to his very best ought to be the mother's ideal for her child.

Keep Children Busy.

There are several rules that should be observed for the health and beauty of any child. The first is to give it something to do. No child can play all day. There should be some kind of regular task. This will make the child beautiful as well as healthy. It will cultivate its mind and its body. A healthy child should also have something to occupy its mind. It can, in Japanese fashion, paste pictures on the wall or play with handsome embroideries or train the eye by doing a little light carving and painting. These are matters for the individual to decide. But a child should keep itself occupied if it is going to be healthy and handsome.

The Baby's Dress.

Instead of attaching the baby dress to the dainty yoke of embroidery or lace, make the dress with a yoke of plain material, then over it, and attach only at the neckband, set the fancy yoke, finished at the edges with lace or embroidery. The plain yoke takes the place of a cover for the underwaist, which has a distressing way of showing through a transparent yoke. The fancy yoke is relieved of all strain, wears longer and is easier to launder, as it can be laid back and ironed flat on the wrong side.

An Idea In Shades.

Really handsome lamp and candle shades may be made of Japanese rice paper. Usually the straw colored is used for the foundation, and over this is laid a cut-out pattern of, say, red, and on top of that in some portions a blue or a red, the idea being to obtain a mosaic effect. The entire pattern is then outlined with black India ink. The frames are either made to order or they may be bought for a small sum at any of the shops where oriental goods are sold.

Almond Milk.

Almond milk is made by blanching thirty good sized Jordan almonds and bruising them to a powder in half a pint of distilled water. A lump of sugar must be worked in at the same time to prevent the oil from separating. The process takes some time and should be done in a mortar. Strain through cheesecloth. To make the milk richer increase the number of nuts used. The preparation is one of the most soothing and bleaching.

The Hostess.

Perhaps no surer index of breeding exists than is displayed in the knowledge of just what degree of effort is proper in entertaining. If a hostess' chief concern is to show off her possessions, to give herself a good time or to save all possible effort she does ill to call her intent hospitality. The true essence of hospitality is distilled of the kindly, unselfish wish to give pleasure and a tactful understanding of the fitness of things.

Lining Net Curtains.

If you have made the mistake of getting curtains of too thin a net to hang over natural wood shutters, get sheer muslin or silk or one of its substitutes and hang it from the same pole by way of lining. A delicate tint of color may be used in certain rooms instead of white or ecru, but it must be so delicate as to suggest white.

Hairdressing.

A mode of hairdressing which is tremendously becoming to one woman will be absolutely impossible to another. It all depends upon whether her chin is square or pointed, her eyes set high or low, whether her face is oval, thin, pudgy or beautifully curved.

Tie absorbent cotton around needle bar and foot bar of the sewing machine just above the screws. This absorbs oil, and the machine may be used immediately after oiling.

Hot bread will cut as easily as cold if the knife used is heated. Dip a knife in cold water before using to cut warm cake.

When airing bed clothing, carpets and rugs hang them wrong side out to prevent fading.

When the skin is sallow the system requires acids.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

A TASK FOR GIRLS.

To Make a Pretty and Convenient Little Pincushion.

A very pretty and convenient little pin and needle cushion for a little girl's room or bureau may be made by taking six pieces, each five inches in length, of ordinary skirt braid, three pieces of a light color and three of a darker, harmonizing shade. Overseam them together with neat small stitches along the selvage and then fringe an inch at each end, as shown in Fig. 1.

Now overseam the dark edge to the light of the side pieces, featherstitch each seam with bright colored silk on the right side, and you will have a little round case open at each end. Stuff this with bits of yarn, of flannel or of any kind of small woolen pieces; never use cotton or cotton goods for this purpose, as needles and pins will not go through it.

FIG. 2

THE PINCUSHION.

Run a drawing string around just inside each fringe, draw the strings up and fasten them, and tie pieces of very narrow ribbon in little bows on each end, as shown in Fig. 2.

Pink and white, blue and white, violet and white, crimson and gold, or two shades of any one color make pretty combinations.

A CARD TRICK.

You Can Only Play It, Though, With the Picture Cards.

It will be found upon examining a pack of cards that the white margin round the court cards almost invariably differs in width at the opposite ends. The difference is frequently very trifling, but is still sufficiently noticeable when pointed out and may be made available for a trick which, though absurdly simple, has puzzled many. The performer places four court cards of the same rank—say four queens—in a row, face upward, taking care that the wider margin of the cards is all one way. After inviting one of the company to turn round lengthways one or more of the cards during his absence he leaves the room. On returning he can readily distinguish which card has been so turned, as the wider margin of the card will now be where the narrower margin was originally, and vice versa. There is so little chance of the trick being discovered that it may, contrary to the general rule, be repeated if desired. Should the performer repeat it it is better not to replace the cards already turned, as this might give a clew to the secret, but to choose from other court cards.

A Little Experiment.

Lay a piece of oilcloth on the carpet in your room and let the room get good and warm. Wait several hours, if you wish, until everything in the room has had a chance to reach the same temperature. Then touch your bare foot to the carpet and the oilcloth in turn, and the oilcloth will be found much the colder of the two.

You know that the oilcloth cannot really be colder than the carpet, for they are both subject to the same degree of heat and must necessarily be of the same temperature. Why, then, should the oilcloth seem to be so much colder? It is simply because it is a good conductor of heat, while the carpet is not. To put it more plainly, the oilcloth carries the heat away from your foot so fast that it gives you a cold sensation, but the carpet carries hardly any of the heat away.

Water and Ice.

Did you ever think how good for us it is that ice is lighter than water, so that it floats on the surface? Everything that we know of expands with heat and contracts with cold except water. Boiling water, if allowed to cool, will become smaller in bulk only until it reaches a certain point—39 degrees F.—and then it begins to expand again until it turns into ice. And as ice is lighter than water it floats on the surface. Can you imagine what would be the result if water got smaller by freezing instead of larger? Simply this, that all the lakes and ponds would be so filled with ice that they would not thaw out in even the hottest summer, for they would begin to freeze at the bottom and the ice would continue to form all the way to the top.

Friday.

It's heaps of fun to be a boy
When Friday comes along.
That day a boy don't mind a bit
No matter what goes wrong.

Sometimes on Fridays we are good,
A reg'lar model class.
The teacher smiles at 3 and says,
"The first line rise and pass."

We get our hats; our books we strap,
And, whistling a tune,
We hurry out. There's nothing like
A Friday afternoon.

You say it's odd that Friday should
A part so noted play?
Just ask a boy. He'll tell you why—
The next is Saturday.

BALFOUR.

This part of our county is at present exceedingly beautiful, and the present prospect is full crops of both hay and grain. The strawberry crop is a complete failure.

Mr. Peter Collier treated himself to a fine new buggy, as also did Mr. E. K. Wellbanks.

Mrs. Gallagher, of Syracuse, is visiting at Mr. John Minaker's, and also with her sister, Mrs. Loney.

Mrs. Sid Rightman is home for a visit after an absence of some two years.

Miss Elva Minaker was married on Wednesday of last week to Mr. Rankin, of Salmon Point. There were some eighty guests invited. After the ceremony, which was conducted by Rev. Mr. G. Grant, pastor, the guests sat down to a sumptuous repast. Later Mr. and Mrs. Rankin left for a honeymoon trip across the border.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Geo. Robbins was conducted in the Carman church on Friday, June 22, at ten o'clock, after which the remains were taken to South Bay cemetery.

As there are not enough Methodist ministers to supply the various circuits, the lot falls on us to do without.

Mrs. Will Hineman is so far improved as to be able to drive out.

Mr. Hineman went back to his work after spending some ten days at home.

McLaughlin Bros. are giving their factory a coat of paint; also building a cistern for the use of the factory.

Miss Mandy is home, after visiting for a week in Picton.

Miss Cole, of Big Island, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Arthur Bongard, and others.

WALLBRIDGE.

Hearty congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Clem Ketcheson on the advent of a son to their beautiful home.

We are pleased to see among us again the genial face of Miss Laura Ketcheson, who has been attending the Conservatory of Music, Toronto.

Mrs. (Dr.) Palmer, of Florence, Kansas, is spending a few weeks with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. Massey.

Mr. G. A. Ketcheson has greatly improved his premises by adding a stylish fence and cement walk.

Mr. S. E. Lane, with his daughter, Clara, took in the excursion to Guelph last Thursday.

On Wednesday afternoon, at the home of Mrs. Waddell, the members of the W.M.S. for Pleasant View Auxiliary presented Mrs. (Rev.) Williams with a fine cabinet, accompanied with a highly appreciative address, as a token of love and gratitude for her efficient services as president of the Auxiliary for three consecutive years.

A veritable farewell surprise was tendered Rev. D. Williams and family last Friday evening by a host of neighbors and friends invading the parsonage with well filled baskets and taking possession. Although many regretted parting with their present pastor, the evening was spent pleasantly, and Mr. and Mrs. Williams were made the recipients of a well-filled purse.

BLESSINGTON.

The following is the report of S. S. No. 17, Tyendinaga, for the month of June:—

SHANNONVILLE.

On Sabbath evening, despite the threatening skies, a large congregation assembled in the Methodist Church, to hear the farewell sermon of the retiring pastor, Rev. William Coombe. The service was solemn and impressive, Mr. Coombe taking for his text Acts, xi., 23. At the close of the service, the congregation joined the choir in singing "God be with you till we meet again."

Mr. and Mrs. Coombe will leave on Thursday for Hilton, and their many friends unite in wishing them success in their new field of labor.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. James Little was the scene of a very pleasing event, on the evening of June 20th, when their daughter, Miss Mary Elizabeth, was united in marriage to Mr. Clarence D. Sherman, of New York state. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Wm. Coombe, in the presence of about seventy-five guests. Miss Jennie Little, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, and Mr. Thos. Porte, jr., was groomsman. The groom's present to the bride was a very handsome crescent brooch, to the bridesmaid a ring, and to the groomsman a very pretty scarf pin. The bride received many beautiful and valuable presents.

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

"I suffered for five years with kidney and liver trouble, which caused severe pains across the back and a blinding headache. I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says M. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga Tenn. To be had at R. Temple & Co.'s Drug Store.

Literary Notes.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF DISEASE LAID TO THE HOUSE FLY.

The musca domestica or common house fly, says Mary Hinman Abel in her paper on "Flies and Food," in The Delineator for July, is known to convey cholera in the East, and is under suspicion as to other diseases.

Its origin and habits are such as to put us on our guard. It lays its eggs in excrement, preferring horse manure, but if that does not offer, readily using any other. It feeds on the same and on the sputum of diseased throats and lungs, on refuse of all kinds, and it bears on its hairy feet and legs particles of these substances.

Unlike the mosquito, the house fly is not a biter—but it has its own way of carrying contagion. It deposits, wherever it goes, disease; and disease germs may abound in its breeding and feeding places. On the joint of meat exposed for sale by the butcher, on the bread and sweetmeats of the confectioner's counter, on the edge of the milk pail, on the kitchen and dining-room tables, they have been found.

The epidemic of typhoid fever in Chicago in 1902 fixed guilt on the fly. It was especially severe in the nineteenth ward, which furnished one-seventh of the deaths, while containing but one-thirty-sixth of the city's population. This locality did not differ from the rest of the city in its water or its food supply, but it did differ in having more than fifty per cent. of its houses without sanitary plumbing, the water being insufficient. Flies caught in undrained closets, on the fences, and in the room of a patient were proved to carry the germ.

JULY CANADIAN MAGAZINE.

The range of articles in the July Canadian Magazine carries the reader round the world. C. Reginald Ford, a member of the Antarctic expedition led by Captain Scott, writes interestingly of the unknown lands under the title, "The Fascination of the Uttermost South." Beatrice Grimshaw describes the famous geysers of New Zealand, her article being illustrated with many interesting photographs. George D. Abraham, a noted English climber, describes some thrilling experiences in the Alps, the pictures being especially cear and striking. A humorous poetical composition entitled, "A Canadian Olympionikos," celebrates Sherring's victory at Athens.

How to Remain Youug.

To drink the waters of the fountain of youth is still, in the opinion of some, within the range of possibility. Aging is a process of classification. After middle age is passed a more marked development of the ossific character takes place. The arteries become thickened with calcareous matter, and there is interference with the circulation upon which nutrition depends. The whole change from youth to old age is one of steady accumulation of calcerous deposits in the system. Entire blockade of the functions of the body is a mere matter of time, and the refuse matter deposited by the blood through the system stops the delicate machinery we call life. The blood contains compounds of lime, megnesia and iron. In the blood itself are these earthly salts. In early life they are thrown off; but in age they are not. Almost everything we eat contains these elements for destroying life. Earthly salts abound in all the cereals, and bread itself, mistakenly called "the staff of life," is one of the most calcareous of edibles. Nitrogenous food also contains these elements, hence a diet made up of fruit is best for people advanced in years. The daily use of water is, after middle life, one of the most important means of preventing secretions and derangements of health. Diluted phosphoric acid is one of the most powerful influences known to science for shielding the human system from the inconvenience of old age. Use it daily with distilled water, and so retard the approach of senility. To retain perpetual youth avoid all foods rich in the earth's salts, use much fruit, especially juicy, uncooked apples, and take daily two or three tumberfuls of distilled water with about fifteen drops of diluted phosphoric acid in each glassful. Thus will your days be longer in the land.—Health.

PROMPT CONNECTIONS.

There is one feature of the wonderful service over The Lake Shore Railway that particularly appeals to those who travel much. The schedule is so arranged that connections, where any are necessary, are made promptly and long waits and delays are avoided. This, taken in connection with the luxurious trains, perfect personal service, highest speed, safety and punctuality has made the Lake Shore the most popular line in America. Careful travellers see that their tickets read "Via Buffalo and the Lake Shore Railway." For full information concerning rates, routes and service address J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

WALL PROTECTORS.

Make the Splashers to Harmonize With the Rooms.

It is well to keep a splasher behind the washstand to protect the wall, and there are so many kinds to choose from that each room can be fitted with harmonizing material and designs.

For the very dainty room use a fine linen and decorate it with a hemstitched hem and, if desired, an openwork border of needlework. If a design is wanted it should be in white and depend upon the ribbon bows at the upper corners for the necessary bit of color. The particular advantage in having the splasher entirely white is that it can be boiled without injury, besides being particularly dainty and pleasing.

For the young miss who likes a good deal of color about all of her room furnishings the designs on the splashers may be done with colored silks. These can be kept very nice by washing them in cool pearline suds, rinsing well and drying in the shade. They should be ironed on the wrong side with a moderately hot iron.

For the children's room white oilcloth is very pretty for splasher and stand cover if it is scalloped around the edges. It only needs to be wiped off with a cloth wrung from weak pearline suds to make it look as nice as new. A spray of flowers painted across the top of the splasher with oil paints makes it very pretty.

BOILING MEAT.

The Chief Points to Observe In Order to Insure Success.

Utter ignorance in this particular branch of cooking meat, boiling, is often the cause of much waste. The chief points to observe in order to insure success are (1) to skim well, (2) to keep the pot really boiling all the time the meat is cooking, but—and that "but" should be in capitals—the slower it boils the better; (3) to ascertain the exact time required for the size of the joint and to remove the pot directly the time is up.

If the liquor is required for stock it is best to put the meat into cold water, skimming carefully and taking the time from the moment the water boils, allowing twenty minutes to each pound of meat. Others prefer to plunge the joint into boiling water, observing the foregoing rules. This insures the whole goodness of the meat remaining in the joint.

Fresh killed meat takes longer to cook, and frozen meat should be thawed before cooking. The less liquor used for boiling the better, but it must always cover the whole of the meat.

Time for boiling a twenty pound ham, six and a half hours; a tongue, three hours; neck of mutton, one and a half hours; a fowl, three-quarters of an hour.

NURSERY NOTES.

A baby's mouth and gums should be washed every morning with water in which a pinch of borax has been dissolved.

If a child gets a bump an application of witch hazel as warm as he can stand it will take out all soreness and prevent discoloration.

Always take care that children's toys are light, have no sharp corners or projections that may cause injuries to the eyes, and, above all, see that they are washable.

Every child, at least as early as eight years of age, should have a room of its own, or, if two must occupy it, then each should have a half devoted entirely to itself and its small belongings.

A physician says that with delicate babies inunctions of sweet oil, lard or vaseline are invaluable. The oil should be gently and thoroughly rubbed in. A little massage over the baby's abdomen is a better cathartic than medicine.

To Fill Holes in Plaster.

We have all heard of filling holes in wood with newspaper pulp, but do you know that holes in the plaster wall may be as easily filled in? Boil the paper hard in clean water, then mash it fine, add a little thick liquid glue and fill in the crack or hole. If it is a very large hole put in a thin layer next the laths, pushing it in well between them, and wait until this is dry before putting it level with the rest of the wall. It depends so much on weather and warmth in the room that no time can be set for this drying, but when it feels hard to the finger the second coat may be safely put on. Put the first coat on with rough "frosts," so it will take the last smoothed coat well. If in a rough plastered room, a little experimenting and perhaps the addition of some plain white paper will enable you to catch almost the exact tint of the original plastering.

Combing the Hair.

When combing the hair if one directs the teeth downward they catch in the first obstruction, and a struggle ensues, with the result that one loses hair. Study the action of a groom who knows his work when combing a horse's mane. At the first the teeth are directed slightly upward. The comb is drawn down rapidly again and again, with each stroke gently loosening tangles and letting obstinate tangles go. In a few minutes he sets the comb at right angles, and only toward the end does he turn the teeth downward.

Curdled Mayonnaise.

To bring back mayonnaise which curdles is as follows: Take a lump of ice as big as your fist and rub it quickly through the mayonnaise for a couple of minutes. Then take out and stir very briskly. The evil will have been remedied without the bother of using a fresh plate and egg yolk. Be sure to have a large lump of ice. Small pieces will do no good, as they do not chill the mixture quickly enough.

The Art Exhibit At Albert College.

ONE OF THE BEST SHOWINGS EVER MADE AT THE INSTITUTION — PRAISE FROM THE EXAMINER — LIST OF EXHIBITORS

The Art exhibit at Albert College is always a most interesting feature of the closing exercises at that seat of learning. It was open to the public yesterday afternoon and many spectators availed themselves of the opportunity of inspecting the work done by the clever pupils under the able tuition of Miss Emma Clarke. There were many nicely executed works of art, and Miss Clarke is certainly to be congratulated on the successful manner in which she has brought out the talents of those who are under her capable tuition. Some sketches of local scenery were of especial interest.

Mr. W. A. Sherwood, A.R.C.A., of Toronto, was the examiner, and he was evidently much pleased with the work done by the pupils, as in his report he places himself on record as follows:

"I have carefully examined the work of the pupils of Albert College and I am delighted to say that the high standing of the work of 1905 has been uniformly maintained, and, in some respects, even, surpassed in the exhibition of 1906.

"I am pleased to note that the out-door work is a leading feature of the exhibition and that drawing from the Model has also received due consideration."

The following are the names of the members of Miss Clarke's class and the work performed by them;

Painting in Water Colors — Alice Storrey, Maud Anderson, Ella Bracken, Amy Robinson, Norma Crawford, Helen Yarwood, Maude Mallory, Ivy Dickens, Nellie Brown, Fannie Strong, Hilda Edmison.

Painting on China — Norma Crawford, Leuila Thexton, Nellie Brown.

Painting in Oils — Lillie McGill, Carrie Doxsee, Madge Williams, Mabel Storey, Norma Calnan, Alice Storrey, Pearl Amey, Allie Bracken, Luella Thexton, Laura Bracken, Amy Robinson, Carrie Brown.

Original Designs and Shading from the Cast were shown by Lundy Carre, Maud Anderson, and Ella Bracken.

Process Black Drawings — Luella Thexton.

Original and Industrial Designs — Laura Bracken, Luella Thexton, and Maude Anderson.

Drawing from life — Miss Helen Yarwood.

Fruits and Flowers — Miss Maud Anderson.

Paintings from life—Laura Bracken, Amy Robinson, Luella Thexton, Alice Storrey, Maud Anderson, Norma Crawford and Ella Bracken.

Sketches from Nature — Carrie Doxsee.

Extra subjects in Oils — Laura Bracken, Ella Bracken, Amy Robinson, Luella Thexton, Pearl Amey.

Extra subjects in Water Colors.—Maude Anderson, Ella Bracken, Alice Storrey, Helen Yarwood, Amy Robinson, Norma Crawford, Nellie Brown, Ivy Dickens.

ORONHYATEKHA WEDDING.

DAUGHTER OF THE CELEBRATED INDIAN, A BRIDE.

A Deseronto despatch says;—

"The Castle," Foresters' Island, was the scene of a family wedding at 11 a.m., Wednesday, when Miss Karakwinea, daughter of Hon. Dr. Oronhyatekha, was united in marriage to Percy Johnson, of Melbourne, Australia. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. H. Creggan, the genial rector of the Mohawk Reserve, in the drawing-room. The bride was attended by Miss Gertrude Minnhinnick, of London, Ont., and Frank Williams, of Napanee, was best man. The bride was attired in white Japanese silk, beautifully embroidered, over white taffeta silk. A bertha of real Irish lace adorned the waist. She carried a white prayer book, the gift of her father. The wedding breakfast was served in the magnificent dining-room.

NAPANEE WEDDING.

MISS GRIEVE WEDDED TO CHARLES G. WENSLEY.

Napanee, June 27.—On Monday afternoon a quiet but pretty wedding was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Grieve, Centre St., when their eldest daughter, Miss Markie, was united in marriage to Chas. G. Wensley, of Campbellford. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. R. Coon, in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the bride. The bride was unattended, and was attired in a dainty gown of grey voile de soie, trimmed with chiffon eyelet embroidery. Her travelling gown was of navy blue panean cloth with pale blue hat, trimmed with pink roses. The bride received many handsome and useful presents. The newly-wedded couple took the afternoon train, amid a deluge of rice, for a honeymoon in Toronto and other points west. On their return they will reside in Campbellford.

STUDENTS' REUNION.

A Happy Annual Event At Albert College, Despite the Gloom of Near-By Parting.

The students' reunion and promenade concert which took place on the lawn of Albert College last evening was, judging from the evident enjoyment taken in it by everyone, an unqualified success. Many old students returned to greet former class mates and friends. The students of this year, realizing that they must soon separate, seemed to be trying to get the most enjoyment possible from the evening. It was indeed a gay scene: dozens of lanterns shone from the branches like huge glow-worms, shedding a soft and radiant light over the happy faces of the merry throng beneath. The touch of romance needed to complete the picture was added by the beautiful band music. The commercial hall was decorated with flags, bunting and abundance of flowers. Ice cream and like refreshments were served here.

While all seemed to enjoy themselves to the utmost, there was undoubtedly an undercurrent of sadness. Few can contemplate the coming separation without pain. The students will go to all parts of Canada to their homes, some never to meet each other again, all feeling that a very enjoyable chapter in their life's history closes with the evening. This feeling, while it does not mar the enjoyment of the evening, but tempers and governs the hilarity, and adds a deeper and truer note to the inevitable farewells.

MEETING OF COMMISSIONERS.

APPLICATIONS FOR MEMBERS OF THE POLICE DELAYED UNTIL MAYOR ARRIVES HOME.

His Honor Judge Deroche and Police Magistrate Flint, two of the Police Commissioners, met last evening at the Shire Hall to consider the applications for the position of Chief, Sergeant and three constables, which, it is intended, will constitute the police force when it is organized.

Owing to the fact that His Worship Mayor Sulman was not in the city, nothing was done, and an adjournment was made until to-morrow afternoon at 1.30, when the Mayor will in all probability be present.

There are we are informed some 14 applications for the positions, and nearly all of the parties applying reside outside of the city.

One of the applicants for the position of Chief is a well-known man about the city and his letter applying for the position caused considerable mirth.

If a change is made in the personnelll of the force it will have to be done by Saturday, if not, the present members will continue in office for another month.

HAPPENINGS AT COBOURG CAMP.

NO. 5 CO., 49th REGIMENT, GIVES A WAR DANCE—NEW NAME FOR FIFTEENTH — GENERAL GOOD TIME.

Camp Cobourg, June 27th, 1906.

On Monday evening the Mohawk braves of No. 5 Co., 49th Regiment, under the command of Capt. W. H. Ketcheson and Lieut G. A. Keith, gave a war dance and concert. A fire was built in the square between the officers' and band lines, and around that the Mohawks gave a most realistic depiction of the war dance of thier forefathers. The Regimental Chaplain, Rev. Capt. T. J. Thompson, was very much interested and took an active part in the affair and was a whole host in keeping order. The quartette of the 47th also assisted.

The meeting place of the boys seems to centre about Bandmaster Denmark's tent. There is always something in the way of fun going on there. According to Bear Trainer Paul Lalonde's roster, calamity, No. 23 happened this morning. The band were just having their beauty sleep, when the call came to "fall in" for muster parade. Col.-Sergt. E. Henthorn, No. 5 Co., fell fast asleep with his head on Sergt J. D. Hill's shoulder.

The 15th marched into camp yesterday headed by a white goat, and were promptly dubbed the "Goat Brigade." They looked and marched well. Their quarters are at the extreme south end of the lines, while the 49th are at the north end.

The military tattoo last night was a great success. The fireworks were excellent and the bands in single and en masse played to perfection, under the directorship of Bandmaster W. Roegnick, of Lindsay, an old Belleville boy.

Nobody sick, everybody happy, is the return from the Belleville boys. The only kick we hear now is that the camp is to end so soon. The boys would one and all enjoy another two months of it.

COL. MATHESON CONFIDENT.

New Local Loan Should Be Easily Floated—Already Large Subscribers Are in Sight.

Toronto, June 28.—Provincial Treasurer Matheson is of the opinion that indications are of the best for the floating of the new provincial loan of $3,000,000 to cover the expense of constructing the Temiskaming Railway lines to a point 94 miles beyond New Liskeard, and also to make up for the expenses of the road since last July, when the money borrowed on treasury bills was exhausted.

"It is necessary to put the loan on the market now in order not to interfere with the provincial financier," he remarked.

Col. Matheson explained that the loan, which is being extensively advertised throughout the province, and also in Montreal, is being made payable for 20 or 30 years, so as not to fall due at the same time as the English loan, negotiated for a 40 years' term.

"We have already received offers for large amounts of the bond issue," he said, in drawing attention to the interest created.

Col. Matheson thought that the fact that money invested in the bonds would be free of succession duties would make them attractive. He remarked further that one investor had already promised to take $200,000, and another $100,000 of the bonds. The fact that they were selling at par, should help the English loan, he considered. The security was the best in the country.

Col. Matheson pointed out the bearing the new arrangement that high court of justice funds were hereafter to be invested in Government securities would have upon the new loan. Hitherto, they had been invested in municipal and other than provincial bonds, $1,000,000 being now out at an average of 3 1-4 per cent. interest. The funds of the court were mostly those held in trust for minors, and over $3,000,000 was now invested. At present university certificates amounting to something over $50,000 being money voted the university and hospitals, were being taken up, and as soon as they were disposed of the funds would be invested in the new loan bonds.

THAW GOADED TO KILL.

Architect White Made Derogatory Remarks About His Wife.

New York, June 28.—That Harry K. Thaw, the slayer of Stanford White, is perfectly sane was the report made yesterday by the alienists retained by the district attorney's office to examine into the prisoner's mental condition. This report was made after the physicians had spent on hour with Thaw.

The American yesterday says:

"That Harry Kendall Thaw was goaded into slaying Stanford White, the architect clubman and chorus connoisseur, by repeated insults visited by the latter upon Evelyn Nesbitt Thaw, the bride of 18 months, developed as compelling evidence amid a maze of conflicting stories.

"Never has it been more firmly established that the wages of sin is death. Not once, but twice, thrice, twenty times, according to reliable statements, Stanford White boasted of his former relations with Miss Nesbit, and handled her name about as the sport of gossip.

"According to a close personal friend of the Thaw family—one of the few persons whom Harry Thaw consented to see and converse with yesterday—absolutely no expense will be spared in saving him from the penitentiary or worse. This spokesman for the family went so far as to say that millions of dollars, if necessary, would be forthcoming in his defence."

Mrs. Jaffray's Estate.

Toronto, June 28.—Application has been made by Hon. Robert Jaffray, William G. Jaffray and Christopher Eaton for probate of the will of the late Sarah Jaffray, deceased. The estate consists of $16,851.75 in real estate, $66,302.22 in stocks, $3,636.10 in mortgages, besides cash and personal effects. After making several gifts to her husband and children, the testatrix devises the residue of her estate to her executors in trust to pay the income derived therefrom to her husband during his life, and after his death equally to her four children.

Revolution Is Progressing.

Mexico City, June 28.—News from Salvador relating to the revolution in Guatemala is that Gen. Toledo has advanced into the country without encountering resistance during a three days' march. It is believed that he is now near or at the City of Guatemala. Many Government troops have deserted to him. The capture of Ayutla in Northern Guatemala by the revolutionists is confirmed.

Curiosity Aroused.

"Papa, what makes the cheese smell so?"

"The process by which it was cured, I presume."

After some moments of profound cogitation. "Papa, what would it smell like if it hadn't been cured?"

The left side of the face is usually considered by artists to be more beautiful than the right.

TONS OF DYNAMITE EXPLODE.

Two Men In a Sailboat Were Burned and Injured.

Amherstburg, June 28.—About twenty tons of dynamite exploded yesterday afternoon on Dynamite Island. The force on the mainland in this section was most terrific, breaking many plate-glass windows in the stores and windows in many residences.

Harry Rogers and Theodore Perry, Detroit, were in a sailboat a few hundred yards from Dynamite Island, at the time. Their boat was completely demolished and the men nearly drowned, but were strong enough to hang on to some floating wreckage until a steam launch reached them. They are burned about the face and arms. Perry's teeth were forced through his lower lip.

Stevedores Lose.

Hamburg, June 28.—The Hamburg-American Line recently brought suit against 142 stevedores, who were employed on written contracts, for leaving their work May Day, and the court decided that a breach of contract had actually occurred. The amount of damages will be fixed Saturday next at a special session of the court.

Railways To Be Sued.

Washington, June 28.—Attorney-General Moody has directed that suits be brought against a large number of railroad companies to recover penalties for violation to keep their equipment in proper conditions.

THE LORD'S DAY BILL

Debate From Opening of the House Till Midnight.

Committee Has Not Finished Work on Bill Yet—No Exemption to the Hebrews and the Seventh Day Adventists—Shooting on Sunday and Sale of Foreign Newspapers on Sunday Stopped—Telephone Amendment.

Ottawa, June 28.—It is a long time since the House of Commons evinced such intense and steadfast interest in a subject as was shown yesterday in the third day's debate on the Lord's Day bill.

From the opening in the morning until midnight there was almost a full House, with eager faces, close attention and anxiety to take part, which shows how closely the measure touches every part of Canada. Party lines were practically wiped out, and Provincial lines were not regarded, so that it would be difficult to classify the opposing forces. The desire to speak was so great that sometimes half a dozen members would rise at once.

Speeches Brief But Earnest.

The speeches were, however, all brief and earnest, and there must have been nearly a hundred of them during the day. The principal focus of discussion was on the clause granting exemption from punishment to Hebrews and others who observed Saturday and desired to work on Sunday. This was fought over all afternoon and evening, and eventually struck out, after a sheaf of amendments had been proposed and rejected. On this clause the Cabinet shared the general condition of the House, in being divided against itself.

The House passed the clauses preventing shooting and the circulation of foreign newspapers on Sunday. One or two clauses still remained to be dealt with when the committee reported progress.

Telephone Amendment Defeated.

During the hour devoted to private bills last evening the Bell Telephone Co.'s bill to increase the capital stock of the company was under discussion. Mr. W. F. Maclean moved an amendment providing that the bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by adding the words, "Said stock as issued shall be offered for sale by auction, and any shares not sold for want of bidders may be sold by the company at private sale, but not for less than the market value." The amendment was lost by 24 to 96, and the bill was given a third reading. Those voting for the amendment were:—Messrs. Maclean, Lavergne, Sproule, Cochrane, Lancaster, Wright (Muskoka), Ganong, Blain, Morin, Broder, Gunn, Jackson (Elgin), Reid (Grenville), Roche (Marquette), Lalor, Daniel, Armstrong, McIntyre, Chisholm, (Huron), Barr, Walsh, Staples, Brabazon and Wilson.

The House adjourned at 12.10 a.m.

USURY BILL REPORTED.

Interest Limited to 12 Per Cent.—Heavy Penalties.

Ottawa, June 28.—Mr. Fielding's bill respecting money-lenders was reported by the Committee on Banking and Commerce yesterday morning.

The bill provides that no money-lender shall stipulate for or exact on loans of less than $500 a rate of interest or discount greater than 12 per cent. per annum, which rate is to be reduced to 6 per cent. per annum from the date of judgment in any proceedings to recover the amount due, and provision is also made in the case of suits for recovery for reopening closed accounts and the readjustment of the same, relieving the borrower from payment of any sum in excess of the rate allowed, and providing for the repayment of the excess of interest charged.

Provision is made that this bill will not apply to transactions in which the interest charged was less than 50 cents. The bill applies to all persons who lend money at a rate of interest greater than 10 per cent.

Canada Soaked.

Ottawa, June 28.—Some startling figures were brought out yesterday afternoon before the public accounts committee, respecting the profits of the mysterious George T. Merwin, in selling supplies to the Marine and Fisheries' Department.

His profits, in many cases, amounted to more than 100 per cent. One engine, for example, cost Merwin $335; he sold it to the Government for $960. Another engine, which cost him $262, cost the Government $550.

Railway Bills Reported.

Ottawa, June 28.—The Senate railway committee yesterday passed bills respecting the Windsor, Essex & Lake Shore Rapid Railway Co.; to incorporate the Burk's Falls & French River Railway Co.; respecting the Montreal, Ottawa & Georgian Bay Canal Co.; to incorporate the Temagami, Cobalt & Temiskaming Railway; to incorporate the Cobalt Range Railway Co.

Pure Food Bill Reported.

Washington, June 28.—The pure food bill was reported to the Senate yesterday. The bill makes it a misdemeanor to manufacture, sell or offer for sale any article of food, drugs, medicine or liquors which is adulterated or misbranded, or which contains any poisonous or deleterious substance.

Farmer Suicides.

Ottawa, June 28.—Samuel Renaud, a farmer of Wright County, Que., while mentally deranged, took a shot gun to the fields and was later found with an ugly wound over the heart.

Ohio Ship Canal.

Washington, D. C., June 28.—The Senate and House conferees yesterday reached an agreement on the Lake Erie and Ohio ship canal bill. With few changes the bill remains as it passed the Senate.

FUNERAL OF ALEX. MUIR.

Will Be Held on Saturday and Will Be Public.

Toronto, June 28.—The news of the death of Alexander Muir was received yesterday with general regret. The funeral will take place on Saturday, and will be of a public nature. At 10 o'clock there will be a service at the residence, after which the remains will be taken to Chalmers' Presbyterian Church, where they will lie in state until 1.30. Service will be held at 2 o'clock and interment will take place at Mount Pleasant.

At a special meeting of the board of education, held yesterday afternoon, it was decided that the members of that body will attend the funeral in a body. It was further decided that the flags should float at half-mast in all the schools of the city from 2 o'clock Friday afternoon until sundown on Saturday. The teachers will be instructed to call the attention of the pupils to the fact that the memory of the late Mr. Muir may be fittingly honored.

At the board of control meeting yesterday, Mayor Coatsworth referred to the death of Mr. Muir.

"It has been suggested," said His Worship, "that the city should take action in the matter of a monument."

"Well, that is an after consideration," said Controller Hubbard.

"Of course," said the mayor. "In the meantime, we should send a civic wreath and arrange to attend the funeral in a body." This will be done.

Members of the Army and Navy Veterans' Association, of whom Mr. Muir was the second president, which office he held for three years, will assemble at Dundas street and Dovercourt road on Saturday, at 1.20.

TORONTO CIVIC INQUIRY.

$2,275 Divided Among Unsuccessful Tenderers For St. Lawrence Market.

Toronto, June 28.—This state of affairs was disclosed yesterday when Crown Attorney Drayton brought on his searchlight before Judge Winchester at the reopening of the civic investigation:

That roofing contractors would get together after preparing their estimates and would arrange who would get the work at a figure which would provide about a ten per cent. profit for the "successful tenderer," and an additional ten to twenty per cent. profit to be shared up amongst the "unsuccessful tenderers."

That the tenderers were then sent in and the lowest tenderer got the work.

That the lowest tender for the St. Lawrence market roof was that of the Metallic Roofing Co. at $12,970. There were seven others, the highest being $14,300.

That of the $12,970 contract, $2,275 was divided amongst unsuccessful tenderers as follows: $275 each for A. B. Ormsby & Co., A. Mathews, W. T. Hutson & Sons, Douglas Bros. and G. Duthie & Sons; $230 for the Pedlar people and $600 for Wheeler and Bain.

That, as well as the above, Ormsby & Co. got $500, and the privilege of supplying half the material for the north half of the market.

KING COMPLIMENTS CANADA.

Attends the Harriss' British-Canadian Concert In London.

London, June 28.—(C. A. P.)—The King and a fashionable audience of nearly 3,000 attended the British-Canadian concert, organized by Harriss and held in the Queen's Hall last night.

His Majesty, who was received with great enthusiasm, both inside and outside, was escorted to the box by Lord Strathcona. Many prominent Canadians were among the audience.

The concert was a triumph for Mr. Harriss, the chief feature being his composition, "Pan," presented here for the first time, and conducted by himself. It was enthusiastically received.

He was assisted by the London Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 250. The solo parts were taken by Mlle. Donalda, Miss Ida Kahn, John Harrison and Frank Davies. The program included selections from the works of Mackenzie, Parry Stanford, Elgar and Cowen, which were conducted by the composers.

The critics almost unanimously praise Harriss' work at the concert and accept it as promising for the future of Canadian music.

NATIVES TO PAY PENALTY.

Capital Punishment For Egyptians Who Attacked British Officers.

Cairo, Egypt, June 28.—The trial of the natives concerned in the attack of June 13 on the party of five British officers while the latter were shooting at the village of Demshawai, near Tantah, resulting in the killing of one of the officers, Capt. S. C. Bull, of the Sixth (Inniskilling) Dragoons, and the serious maltreatment of the others, has resulted in four natives being sentenced to death, four to penal servitude for life, three to 15 years' penal servitude, six to seven years and three to one year and five to receive 50 lashes. Thirty-one of the accused were acquitted.

The executions and the floggings will occur at Demshawai. All the men sentenced to death will be hanged by turns on one gallows, in the presence of the villagers.

For Tommy Atkin's Sake.

New York, June 28.—Lt.-Col. Percy Eyre Hobbs, chief instructor of the English Service Corps School at Aldershot, who arrived here yesterday on the steamer Carmania, comes here as the representative of his Government to inspect the meat intended for use in the British army.

Tug Sinks.

Port Arthur, June 28.—The tug Alfred W. of Duluth struck a rock at Pie Island while running through a heavy fog, and, slipping off into deep water, sank instantly. Fortunately one of the boats remained afloat, and the crew swam to her and made their escape.

Col. Steele Will Come Home.

Orillia, June 28.—Col. S. B. Steele writes that he will leave South Africa next October. He will not reach home till early next spring, however, as he intends spending a few months with friends in the old country.

STROUDS

IN TORONTO THE GOOD.

Two Prominent Business Men Under Oath Give Each Other the Lie—Profits For Non-Workers.

Toronto, June 29.—Perjury was committed yesterday afternoon in connection with the civic investigation.

Two prominent Toronto business men gave each other the lie under oath.

Thomas Douglas, roofing contractor on St. Lawrence Market swore he paid several sums of money to Architect Beaumont Jarvis, who was in charge of the work.

Architect Beaumont Jarvis denied it absolutely and positively. He swore that money had been offered to him by Mr. Douglas and he had refused it.

Thomas Douglas also swore he paid sums of money to J. W. Siddall, another architect on the work.

Architect J. W. Siddall swore that he had received the money which Mr. Douglas claimed to have paid to him. Some of the money was for legitimate work. Mr. Douglas corroborated this.

John S. Champ, bookkeeper for Douglas Bros. swore that he had erased the name of Jarvis and changed it to Jones in the records of payments on the firms books and that he had also erased the name of Siddall. He said he did it to save the architects from trouble.

Champ also swore he had taken envelopes which he supposed contained money to Architect Jarvis' office and that on one occasion he gave the envelopes to Mr. Jarvis, who put it in his pocket.

Architect Jarvis swore he refused money from the bookkeeper as well as from Mr. Douglas.

And there you are.

Another fact brought out was that two tenderers for the roof work at the north end of St. Lawrence Market got $500 each for not doing the work.

On the vent pipe contract, two tenderers got $250 each, two more $200 each and the contractor who did the work did not make any money at all on it.

The above are the features which made the civic enquiry decidedly interesting yesterday. There is one more contractor, who is from Preston, to give evidence.

INDICTED FOR MURDER.

Harry Kendall Thaw Will Plead For Killing Stanford White.

New York, June 29.—Harry Kendall Thaw was indicted yesterday for murder in the first degree for the killing of Stanford White last Monday night on Madison square Roof Garden. His wife, Evelyn Nesbitt Thaw, appeared as a witness before the grand jury, but begged to be excused from giving any testimony whatever. Assistant District Attorney Garvan and the jurors did not insist that she should answer any questions. Thaw will plead to the indictment in court to-day.

Eva Booth Ill.

New York, June 29—Miss Evangeline Booth, commander of the Salvation Army in the United States, is seriously ill at her home here, and all her public engagements have been cancelled.

Stillettos Were Used

In Italian Strike Riot In the Limestone City.

Two Officers of the Law Seriously Wounded—Dissatisfied Italian Navvies Retaliate on Police Who Clubbed Them Into Submission—Man Thought to Have Done Stabbing Arrested With Nine Others.

Kingston, June 29.—Two officers of the law were seriously wounded with stillettos in the hands of Italians during a riot following a strike of 100 foreigners yesterday. The Italians chased the police, who had been sent by the authorities to quell the disturbance, and the mayor and police magistrate called out the regular troops.

The riot occurred at the outer depot. About 100 navvies, chiefly Italians, are employed by the Grand Trunk repairing the road. Yesterday morning they became dissatisfied with their wages. They have been getting $1.40 per day, and want $1.65. They board and sleep on old cars at the depot.

Yesterday morning the railway foreman ordered them to make up a train and proceed to Collins' Bay to work, and then trouble began. The strikers assembled on the station platform and raised a disturbance.

Special G. T. R. Agent McRae and Detective James Harrott arrived on train No. 1 from the east and endeavored to quell the row. The police were telephoned for and Sergt. Nesbitt, P.C. S. Naylon and McAdoo hastened to the scene.

Fought With Clubs.

The rioters were gathered on the platform making all kinds of threats. The policemen ordered them off, and when they refused to obey drew their clubs and endeavored to put them off by force.

Thereupon the strikers drew knives and revolvers and started to attack the officers. Mr. McRae and Detective Harrott came to the assistance of the local police, and a fierce fight ensued. The officers of the law were not armed with revolvers, but fought manfully with their clubs and did great execution, knocking about a score of the strikers senseless. The latter succeeded in retaliating, however, and the policemen were finally forced to beat retreat, pursued to their cab by the maddened foreigners.

Slashed By Striker.

In the fight Police Sergt. Nesbitt was badly wounded in the left arm, it being slashed open with a stilletto from the shoulder to the elbow. Special Agent McRae was also even more seriously wounded, and the gravest fears for his condition are felt. He sustained a deep stab with a stilletto in the abdomen.

The police brought the two wounded men back to the city and drove them to Dr. Bogart's surgery. Mr. McRae was later removed to the General Hospital. P. C. S. Naylon and McAdoo escaped unhurt. They claim that it was a miracle that they were not all killed. Revolvers were drawn by the dozen and many shots fired. The rioters were all armed with knives and fought like mad creatures, and the batons of the policemen were spattered with blood, showing that they had not remained inactive. Detective Harrott carried a leather baton, which he exhibited, showing where the heavy seam in the leather had been ripped by the force of the blows dealt.

Troops Called Out.

When the police returned to the city the police magistrate and Mayor Mowat were notified. After a brief consultation it was decided to call out the regular troops, and a call was made on the officers and men of the R.C.H.A. A prompt response was met with and shortly after 3 o'clock a mounted detachment from the battery, armed for a fight, hurried off to the scene of the disturbance.

On arrival the battery men surrounded the cars in which most of the navvies had meanwhile entered. But some of the disturbers took to the woods at sight of the mounted men, and the city police went in pursuit. Police Constable Driscoll arrested a man who is supposed to have done the stabbing, and he was brought into the police station. Nine others were also arrested, and all the ringleaders will be brought to the city for trial.

About 70 of the rioters are still in the woods.

Strike At St. Anne.

Montreal, June 29.—Because of a strike of laborers at Macdonald Agricultural College, St. Anne, who were replaced by a gang of Italians from Montreal, provincial police were sent out yesterday to keep order. Bricklayers and masons then refused to work under police protection, so a general strike was ordered. The laborers demanded an increase from $1.50 to $2.20 a day and were offered $1.75.

IMPERIAL OFFICERS COMING.

Ten Are Given Appointments With Canada's Permanent Corps.

Ottawa, June 29.—Militia general orders contain the appointment of ten officers from the imperial army temporarily to the Canadian permanent forces. Those appointed to the Royal Canadian Artillery are Capt. St. Leger Montgomery Moore, R.G.A.; and Lieut. Travern Kirkland, R.F.A. To the Royal Canadian Engineers go Major B. R. Ward, R. E.; Capt. Maximilian St. Leger Simon, R.E.; and Lieut. H. L. Wright, R.E. The Ordnance Store Corps gets Capt. F. J. Odevaine, A. O. D.; Honorary Capt. E. H. Robinson, A.O.D., Inspector of Ordnance Machinery, second-class; and Honorary Lieut. John Wight, A.O.D., assistant commissary of ordnance. To the Permanent Army Service Corps go Lieut. M. L. B. H. Lambert, A. S. C.; and Lieut. A. H. Roberts, A.S.C. Most of these appointments are for two years; the exceptions are Capt. Robinson, whose term is four years, and Lieut. Wight, who comes for six months only.

His Honor's Holiday.

Toronto, June 29.—His Honor, the Lieutenant-Governor will leave Toronto on July 9 for Cushing's Island, Portland, Maine, for a 5-weeks' vacation.

Quick Punishment.

Fort William, June 29.—Charlie Woo, a Chinaman who Wednesday night assaulted Wm. Lloyd, an Englishman, appeared before Magistrate Palling yesterday afternoon and was sentenced to one year in the Central Prison. Wednesday night Wm McGregor attempted to enter the Ray street corner bank by way of a fanlight. He was stopped by Horace Meland, bank clerk, with a revolver. McGregor was given eighteen months in the Central Prison.

Killed by Blasted Rock.

Quebec, June 29.—Struck by a piece of flying rock from a blast, Damaas Mercier, 6 years old, standing on the gallery of the residence of his father at Montmorency Falls, was so badly injured Wednesday evening that he died three hours later. His skull was opened six inches and a piece of bone driven into the brain two inches.

The Intercolonial.

WHY IT DOES NOT PAY!

The Ministerial press are just now gloating over the promise made by the Minister of Railways and Canals, that the Intercolonial Railway is to pay its way this year. Time will tell.

The light, which of late has been let in upon the management of the road, accounts for its running so enormously behind.

The Auditor-General's report gives us figures which show conclusively how the public chest is robbed to carry elections in the counties through which the Intercolonial Railway runs.

The expense of management before, during, and after elections, is portrayed as follows:

Election of 1900;
Year before election, surplus	$120,667
Election year, deficit	488,186
Year after election, surplus	36,820
Election of 1904;
Year before election, deficit	900,949
Election year, deficit	1,725,303

What the figures will show hereafter, we must wait for the publication of the Auditor-General's report, to see.

How these extra expenses are incurred is clearly explained in a speech delivered in the House of Commons by Mr. Morin, M. P. for Dorchester, in the Province of Quebec. He did not object, he said, to the employees being paid good wages; but the great evil was that there were too many men to do the work—five men employed when there was only need for three. He showed that by a return brought down in the House, there were 3,537 employees on the I. C. R. in 1892, and 3,982 in 1895. In 1896, Mr. Blair increased the number to 4,193, in 1898 the number was 4,740, and it kept on increasing until in 1901 it was 7,252. Still the number grew until in 1905 it reached 8,540. He pointed out, too, that another cause of deficit was the interference of politicians with the Minister; and instanced a case when a man who wanted a job and was refused by the Minister, got his member to push his claims with the result that he got on the staff. "And now," said Mr. Morin, "the poor fellow tells us all he has to do is to listen to the trains go by at night." So long as you have one hundred members to interfere with the Minister in this way, so long will you have a deficit," declared Mr. Morin.

These deficits would be much larger if the accounts were properly kept, and ordinary repairs to the road and buildings charged to revenue instead of capital account, a convenient way of covering up the actual cost of running the road.

False book-keeping and boodling characterizes almost every act of Ministerial management of public affairs in Ottawa.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE WHOLE-SOULED CHAP.

(Louisville Courier-Journal.)

What though a butcher bill he owes
Some two years overdue,
And is in debt for cash and clothes
And other items, too?
What though his little girls must sew
Their daily food to earn?
He's a good fellow, don't you know,
And always "buys" in turn.

What though his wife is worn and bent,
Ill-clad, abjectly dumb?
What though he takes her every cent
And puts it all in rum?
Should we refuse his hand, mayhap,
And his acquaintance spurn?
Oh, no, for he's a whole-souled chap
And always "buys" in turn.

It is said that a number of applications are in for positions on the local police force. Among these, no doubt, there are some from good men. When the selections for the force are made let the men be engaged at once. If changes are to be made there is no necessity for delaying for a month. It would in no wise be extravagant to allow any retired man or men a month's pay; it would be a graceful act to allow the month's pay on retirement.

The wit of France won't bear transplanting. We shouldn't like it here. It is too subtle, too unexpected, too delicate, and, above all, too wicked. We heard yesterday a French witticism that exemplifies well the Gallic qualities of subtlety, delicacy and wickedness. Two club men meet, and the first says.

"What is the matter, Charles? You look blue. Has your wife caught you kissing that pretty governess of yours?"

Charles groaned.

"Worse than that," he replied. "The pretty governess caught me kissing my wife.

THE VALUE.

J. Stanley Todd, the portrait painter, was talking about feminine beauty.

"All men," he said, "are keen students of feminine beauty. Let them be as blind as possible in other things in this matter of women's looks every woman is mentally judged and her value reckoned by them, the same as wines are judged and valued by the wine expert.

"But men set a value on each woman in their own minds only. They don't blurt out these values as a certain Persian once did at a reception in New York.

"The Persian was of royal blood, and his hostess was rather amused than horrified when, as various women were presented to him, he would say:

"This lady is easily worth $10,000. That dark woman should fetch about $1,100 in the open market. I would give $3,000 for the blonde young girl in white cheerfully. That lady is worth $500. The one beside her should sell for $5,000 anywhere."

"The hostess was so amused that she said to the Persian with a coquettish laugh:

"And what value, sir, would you set on me?"

"The Persian sneered a little.

"I am not acquainted with the small coin of your country," he said.

CONSISTENCY.

Herbert McFadden, at the funeral directors' annual convention, declared consistency to be an overrated virtue.

"Because," he said, "we held the French method of embalming to be the best ten years ago, must we, for consistency's sake, stick to the French method now, when we know that the American method in every way surpasses it?

"These upholders of consistency would go as far as the widow who wanted to have her husband cremated.

"She took the corpse to the crematory, and the manager of the place said to her:

"We cremate here, madam, in both ways."

"Both ways?" she repeated, confused.

"Yes," he explained. "The French way and the Italian way. Which do you prefer?"

"Oh," the widow answered, brightening, "the French. The French, by all means. Poor John never could bear Italian cooking."

EPISCOPAL VISITATION.

BISHOP FALLOWS CONDUCTED A CONFIRMATION SERVICE IN EMMANUEL CHURCH.

Quite a large congregation attended the confirmation service in Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church last evening. The evening service was rendered by the Rector, Rev. Mr. Hubly. During the taking of a special offering for the work of the Synod, an anthem, "Hark, Hark, My Soul," was particularly well rendered by the choir. The solo sung by Miss Hubly and trios by Misses Hampton and Standish and Mr. Large were really excellent.

Eight persons confessed their faith in Christ and confirmed their baptismal vows in Episcopal form, at the hands of Rev. Bishop Samuel Fallows, D.D., LL.D., presiding Bishop of the Reformed Episcoapl Church.

Bishop Fallows took for his text the words from Isiah, 28, 16, and I. Peter, 2, 6. The basal thought of the discourse was that the believer in Christ would not make haste to depart from the fundamental truths of the Gospel of the Son of God whenever it was assailed. Historical criticism could not shake the cornerstone on which his faith was based. The Rock of Ages was immutable. No efforts of rationalistic thinkers could make him lose his confidence in a personal Saviour, his deliverer from sin and death.

The Bishop used as illustrations the giving way of buildings he had known to be shaken and destroyed, because of their insecure foundations, and also the destructive San Francisco earthquake.

From the building of God His children would never need to flee. Hidden in the secret of His pavillion they would ever dwell, undisturbed, happy and serene.

Bishop Fallows left by noon train to-day for Ottawa, to visit Emmanuel and St. David's Churches of that city.

Former Belleville Lady Married In British Columbia.

MacLEAN—KEITH.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Keith, of Steveston, last evening was the scene of one of the prettiest weddings that has taken place in the cannery town this year. Mr. Donald MacLean, of the staff of Johnston & Kerfoot, of Vancouver, and Miss Violet Keith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Keith, were the contracting parties. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Burton, of Steveston, in the presence of a number of the relatives and friends of the bride and groom. The bride, who was prettily attired in a travelling costume of navy blue broadcloth, was attended by her sister, Miss Margaret Keith, as bridesmaid. Miss Keith wore a pretty costume of lavender organdie. Miss Kathleen MacLean, cousin of the groom, acted as flower-girl and ringbearer, and was attired in a pretty frock of cream silk trimmed with pale blue. Mr. Charles A. Ross, of Vancouver fulfilled the duties of groomsman.

The Lohrengrin and Mendelssohn wedding marches were played by Mr. James Haughton, and after the ceremony the wedding party sat down to a repast, the tables being prettily decorated with marguerites and roses, and surmounted by a floral bell of the same flowers. The groom's present to the bride was a purse of gold, to the bridesmaid and ringbearer pearl brooches, and to the groomsman a pearl stickpin.

Mr. and Mrs. MacLean arrived in the city this morning, by way of New Westminster, and left this afternoon on the steamer Princess Victoria for a honeymoon tour of the Sound cities, after which they will take up their residence at 1014 Cordero street, where they will be at home to their friends. The happy couple were the recipients of many handsome presents, among which was a beautiful silver teaset, presented by the members of the Hoy-Hoy Club, of which the groom is a prominent member. Many of the friends of the happy couple were down at the wharf to see them off.—Vancouver World.

SPORTING NOTES.

Cobourg is to have a horse show.

There are races at Napanee on July 2.

A big regatta is proposed by Peterboro sportsmen for next week.

A 25 1-2 lb. 'lunge was caught at Peterboro while fishing with rod and line last Monday.

A 7 1-4 lb. small-mouthed bass has been caught at Norwood. The fish measured 23 inches long, 17-inch girth.

Suffered for Five Years with Kidney and Liver Trouble.

"I suffered for five years with kidney and liver trouble, which caused severe pains across the back and a blinding headache. I had dyspepsia and was so constipated that I could not move my bowels without a cathartic. I was cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and have been well now for six months," says Mr. Arthur S. Strickland, of Chattanooga Tenn. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s Drug Store.

Successful Lawn Social.

The strawberry lawn social held last evening at Mr. W. Lott's grove was in every respect a successful affair. It was under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid in connection with Christ Church. A large number were present and participated heartily in the evening's enjoyment. The Fifteenth Regiment Band was in attendance and rendered a number of selections, which were much appreciated.

UNEQUALLED SERVICE.

In all the world over, among all the railways of all nations, there is one line whose service stands pre-eminent—The Lake Shore Railway. Luxurious comfort, speed, safety, punctuality, personal attention and service, have here reached their highest development. Lake Shore trains run on time and when connections are to be made the schedule is so arranged that long waits and delays are avoided. In a word, here is a railway whose service in every respect leaves nothing to be desired. Travellers of experience know this to be so and all are careful to see that their tickets read "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." You can obtain full information by addressing J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O., or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

HO, FOR ROCHESTER!

A new leaf is really the same old one with another turn.

THE REAL CAUSE.

The Ancient Scalp-Fever Theory Exploded.

At one time dandruff was attributed to the result of a feverish condition of the scalp, which threw off the dried cuticle in scales.

Prof. Unna, Hamburg, Germany, noted authority on skin diseases, explodes this theory and says that dandruff is a germ disease.

This germ is really responsible for the dandruff and for so many bald heads. It can be cured if it is gone about in the right way. The right way, of course, and the only way, is to kill the germ.

Newbro's Herpicide does this, and permits the hair to grow luxuriantly, just as nature intended it should.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Provincial Loan of $3,000,000.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO, under the authority of Chapter 4, of the Statutes of Ontario, 1906, invites subscriptions from the public for a loan of $3,000,000 on bonds of the Province of Ontario, dated 1st July, 1906, and payable

$1,500,000 on the 1st July, 1926,
$1,500,000 on the 1st July, 1936,

with coupons attached for interest at the rate of 3 1-2 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly on the 1st January and the 1st July in each year at the office of the Provincial Treasurer, Toronto. Bonds will be of the denominations of $200, $500 and $1,000, and will be payable to bearer, but on request will be registered in the office of the Provincial Treasurer and endorsed as payable only to the order of certain persons or corporations, and on request of holders may be exchanged for Ontario Government Stock bearing the same rate of interest.

The issue price during the month of July, 1906, will be par, and after the 31st July, 1906, the issue price will be par and accrued interest.

ALL BONDS AND INSCRIBED STOCK ISSUED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE SAID ACT ARE FREE FROM ALL ONTARIO PROVINCIAL TAXES, CHARGES, SUCCESSION DUTY AND IMPOSITIONS WHATSOEVER.

Purchasers of amounts up to $1,000 will be required to send certified cheque with the application. For amounts over $1,000 payment for subscription may be made in instalments 10 per cent. on application, 10 per cent. 1st August, 10 per cent. 1st September, 10 per cent. 1st October, 10 per cent 1st November, and 50 per cent. 1st December, 1906, with privilege of paying at an earlier date, the interest on instalment subscriptions being adjusted on 1st January, 1907.

In the event of any subscriber for bonds payable by instalments failing to make payment of subsequent instalments, the bonds may be sold and any loss incurred will be charged to the purchaser in default.

Forms of subscription (when payable by instalments) may be obtained on application to the Treasury Department.

This loan is raised upon the credit of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Ontario, and is chargeable thereupon.

All cheques should be made payable to the order of "The Provincial Treasurer of Ontario," and subscribers should state the denominations and terms (20 or 30 years) of bonds desired.

RESPECTED CITIZEN DEAD.

MR. HENRY VANDERWATER, A WELL-KNOWN RESIDENT, JOINS THE MAJORITY.

Mr. Henry Vanderwater, a well-known resident of the city, who resided on Moira street, passed away shortly after four o'clock yesterday afternoon. Deceased had been in failing health for some time and his demise was anticipated. Heart trouble was the cause of death. Mr. Vanderwater, who was in his 85th year, was born in the Township of Sidney, where he resided for over 60 years. Some 20 years ago the deceased took up his residence in this city. Mr. Vanderwater was universally esteemed. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, being in the true sense of the word a Christian man. Deceased was twice married and is survived by the second wife and a family of four sons and one daughter. The sons are Milton, Charles and Marshall, of Sidney, and John, of Poughkeepsie, N.Y., and the daughter Mrs. (Judge) Hoyaradt, of Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

CARELESS DRESSING.

Something of Which No Woman Should Ever Be Guilty.

Nothing so accentuates fading loveliness as carelessness of dress.

It is wonderful what a little careful grooming will do for a woman.

Let her touch her eyebrows with vaseline to bring out the luster, let her bathe her lips with aromatic toilet water, dust her wan cheeks with a bit of pink powder, have her hair dressed in a dainty, pretty way—and, lo, there is the light of inspiration and sweetness that is most delightful and bewitching.

There are good and bad cosmetics, sane and insane ways of beautifying.

Choose the right road, then go ahead and you will be amazed to find how you can chop off a year of your life every twelve months instead of hitching on one.

Try it.

As a usual thing women are unattractive of face and figure for the reason that they are ignorant of the plain laws of health and the more fascinating rules of outward beautifying.

Beauty is a very far reaching word. It means that one must first of all be nice and neat and clean; second, that one should be amiable; third, that one should make the best of one's good points and learn to hide or overcome the bad ones.

There is many a woman who, having spent a few cents for a little jar of complexion cream, becomes deeply interested in the matter, and, like the butterfly evolving from the caterpillar, gradually transforms herself from an ugly duckling into a very beautiful bird of paradise.

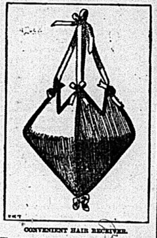
She acquires a certain amount of pride in always looking her best, speaking her best, acting her best and doing her best.

You can't expect more than that from a real angel.—Philadelphia Press.

HAIR RECEIVER.

Convenient and Necessary Article For the Toilet Table.

Neatness with comb and brush is one of the commandments of the dainty woman, and every woman should have on her dressing table some sort of a hair receiver which should be used every time her comb and brush is used.



CONVENIENT HAIR RECEIVER.

The pretty receptacle for combings shown in the accompanying illustration is made of a soft shade of blue linen, four diamond shaped pieces lined with white silk, seventeen inches long and nine wide. Sew to within four inches of top, having seams to outside bag. Bind all with white ribbon, turn four corners so lining will show and fasten hanger and bottom with bows of blue and white ribbon.—St. Louis Republic.

Some Toilet Necessaries.

If the odor is not unpleasant to any one in your family keep a small glass bottle on your dressing table containing camphor. A few drops applied every three or four hours will effectively check a cold sore, and if you have fears that your breath is not quite sweet a few drops in a glass of water used to rinse the mouth will impart a pleasant freshness and remove any trace of odor. Another desirable accessory to a dressing table is tincture of benzoin, a few drops in warm water making a pleasant gargle for sore throat, while every woman knows of its softening and bleaching qualities when used, greatly diluted, on the hands. Witch hazel or arnica should be in every medicine cabinet to apply to cuts and bruises. A piece of pumice stone will be found a great convenience in removing stains and callouses from the hands.

A Bad Habit.

There is a very bad habit which is all too easily acquired by young and old women who receive friends in the evening. It is that of pulling down the shades and turning out the lights the moment the front door is closed. It almost says, "There, that is over with, thank goodness." This recalls a plan that has become the habit of a married couple who have many friends in the different walks of life. It is to allow twelve hours to pass before criticising anything said or done by a departed guest. After that time had elapsed other interests have crowded out the memory of eccentricities or peculiarities of speech and action.

The Fair Brunette.

What is called a "fair brunette," where the skin is so delicate and the eyes violet or dark blue and the hair dark brown, must be careful in selecting strong colors that will kill her delicate complexion; no such choice as bright yellow or vivid red, but rather the less pronounced shades of both, and all maize, golden browns, gold tans, pale coral, salmon pink and silvery blue.

TIMELY TOPICS.

YES, YOU WOULD.

(Chicago Record-Herald.)

If I had a million dollars
I'd exhibit a smiling face,
And daily thank the Creator
For starting the human race;
And daily I'd go out preaching
To those who were sick or sad,
And bravely endeavor to teach them
The duty of being glad,

If I had a million dollars
I'd start ere another day
To aid in scattering sunshine
By giving the cook more pay;
The sorrows that now assail me
I'd view at a long, long range,
And, handing the newsboy a nickel,
I'd tell him to keep the change.

If I had a million dollars
I'd put all my doubts at rest,
And faith and hope would forever
Reside in my joyful breast:
When my collar button rolled under
The bureau I wouldn't swear,
For I'd have a valet to get it
And save me the wear and tear.

An Englishman once travelling in the south of Ireland came to a village called Skibbereen.

The name struck him as very peculiar and odd, and he asked a villager why the town was so called.

"Sure, the villager replied, "I thought even an Englishman could have seen the reason for that. It's called Skibbereen to distinguish it from other places of the same name."

VENICE FOR HIS.

Marion Crawford recently gave a dinner in Rome, and during the dinner the talk turned to Venice.

"There is a young lady from Duluth," Mr. Crawford said, "whom I met one bright October morning in Sorrento. She told me that she was touring Italy with her father. She said her father had liked all the Italian cities, but especially he had liked Venice.

"Ah, Venice, to be sure," said I. "I can readily understand that your father would prefer Venice, with its gondolas, and St. Mark's and Michael Angelo's——"

"Oh, no," said the young lady; "it wasn't that. But he could sit in the hotel, you know, and fish out of the window."

Corporal James Tanner, the famous head of the Grand Army of the Republic, was talking in Washington about a grafter.

"He thinks all men are grafters," said Corporal Tanner, "because he is one himself. So does the coward think all men share his cowardice.

"There is a story about a young recruit, who in his first engagement, lost heart. The ping-g-g of the bullets terrified him. Spying a hole in the ground, he broke from the ranks rushed to it, and threw himself within cowering against the earth.

"An officer, disgusted, ran to the terrified recruit, clapped him on the shoulder, and said;

'Rejoice your company at once, sir."

"The lad looked up at the officer and answered:

"No you don't. You want this hole for yourself."

Jacob H. Schiff, who was instrumental in bringing a part of the Japanese war loan to America, was talking to a reporter in New York about his European tour.

"London courts of law have always interested me," he said, "and I revisited them for about the tenth time. A Q. C. whom I happened to meet there told me how Peter the Great had once gone through the law courts. He said that Peter, at the end of his inspection, said;

"These men are all lawyers. What can be the use of so many? I have only two in my empire, and I mean to hang one of them as soon as I return."

A reporter recently travelled to Dayton to interview Orville and Wilbur Wright about their flying machine. The young inventors had nothing to say, though the reporter insisted that an article about their work would do them good.

"Do us good, or you good?" said the older Wright.

"You good," said the reporter.

Mr. Wright smiled.

"I'll tell you about a little boy I used to know," he said, "and then you may tell me if there isn't a resemblance between the little boy's attitude towards the groceryman and your attitude towards myself. This boy, a fine chap, bustled into the grocery one day with a memorandum in his hand.

"Hello, Mr. Smith," he said, "I want thirteen pounds of coffee at 32 cents."

"Very good," said the grocer, and he noted down the sale, and put his clerk to packing the coffee. "Anything else, Charlie?"

"Yes. Twenty-seven pounds of sugar at 9 cents."

"The loaf, eh? And what else?"

"Seven and a half pounds of bacon at 20 cents."

"That is the Arrow brand. Go on."

"Five pounds of tea, at 90 cents. Eleven and a half quarts of molasses at 8 cents a pint. Two eight-pound hams at 21 1-4 cents, and five dozen jars of pickled walnuts at 24 cents a jar."

"The clerk bustled about, and the grocer made out the bill.

"It is a big order," he said. "Did your mother tell you to pay for it, or is it to be charged?"

"My mother," said the boy, as he pocketed the neat and accurate bill, has nothing to do with this business. It is my arithmetic lesson, and I had to get it done somehow."

Once a Nest of Pirates.

Lundy, in the Bristol channel, is an island where one may see an earthquake at any time. There is nothing alarming about these "earthquakes," however. They are simply certain curious crevasses in the west of the island, which the local people call by that name. Lundy in former centuries was a notorious nest of pirates. In King Henry III.'s time William de Marisco, a traitor to the king, built a castle there and set up as an early Captain Kidd. And so it went on through the centuries until in the middle of the eighteenth Thomas Benson, a Barnstable merchant, who was then lessee of the island, was convicted of piracy and smuggling and expelled He had a contract for carrying convicts to the American colonies and used quietly to land them on Lundy and use their labor there.

The Nine, In the Calendar.

The figure 9, which came into the calendar on Jan. 1, 1889, will stay with us 111 years from that date, or until Dec. 31, 1999. No other figure has ever had such a long consecutive run, and the 9 itself has only once before been in a race which lasted over a century—that in which it continuously figured from Jan. 1, 889, until Dec. 31, 999, a period of 111 years. The figures 3 and 7 occasionally fall into odd combinations, but neither of them has ever yet served for a longer period than 100 consecutive years in our calendar since the present mode of calculating time was established. It is also clear that from their relative positions among the numerals it is an impossibility for either of them to appear in date reckonings continuously for a longer period than a century.

Business Methods.

Great numbers of vast fortunes in this country have been and are being built up on the very ignorance of the masses in regard to business methods. The schemers bank on it that it is easy to swindle people who do not know how to protect their property. They thrive on the ignorance of their fellows. They know that a shrewd advertisement, a cunningly worded circular, a hypnotic appeal, will bring the hard earnings of these unsuspecting people out of hiding places into their own coffers.

Learn to be pleased with everything—with wealth, so far as it makes us beneficial to others; with poverty, for not having much to care for, and with obscurity, for being unenvied. — Plutarch.

A Charity Dance.

Awkward Spouse—I see our set is to have a grand charity ball. Did you ever dance for charity? Pretty Wife—Of course. Don't you remember how I used to take pity on you and dance with you when we first met?—London Telegraph.

Origin of Crescent Bread.

The origin of the Viennese bread shaped like a crescent, which is found in most places on the continent, dates back to the time when the Austrian capital was being besieged by the Turks under the terrible Grand Vizier Kara Mustapha, and as they failed to take the city by assault they decided to dig a passage under the walls and so penetrate into the town. In the daytime the noise of the siege made the sound of the tunneling inaudible, and at nighttime the defenders of the place were asleep, all but the sentries and the bakers. It was the bakers who, as they baked the bread for the garrison, heard the pickaxes of the miners coming nearer and nearer and gave the alarm. In the fighting the Bakers' association took their share with the utmost bravery, and as a reward for their services the emperor gave them permission to make a special cake shaped like the Turkish crescent.—London Sketch.

Constant Advice.

"A woman should always depend on her husband for advice," said the devoted wife.

"Yes," answered the visitor, "but it does grow monotonous not to get any advice except to economize."

Lost Youth.

A man looks back with regret, but without bitterness, to his lost youth; a woman, however vehemently she may protest to the contrary, seldom if ever attains to this same calm serenity.

Fictitious.

Angel Child—Aunt Daisy, what is meant by "a fictitious character?" Aunt Daisy—That means one that is made up, dear. Angel Child—Oh, yes! Then you're a fictitious character, aren't you, auntie?

The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of "The Gentleman from Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

"Oh, I heard you!" she said.

Carewe came close to her and gave her a long look from such bitter eyes that her own fell before them. "If you've been treacherous to me, Jane Tanberry," he said, "then God punish you! If they've met—my daughter and that man—while I was away, it is on your head."

He turned and walked to the door, while the indomitable Mrs. Tanberry, silenced for once, sank into the chair he had vacated. Before he disappeared within the house he paused.

"If Mr. Vanrevel has met my daughter," he said in a thick voice, stretching out both hands in a strange, menacing gesture toward the town that lay darkling in the growing dusk, "if he has addressed one word to her or so much as allowed his eyes to rest on her overlong, let him take care of himself!"

"Oh, Robert, Robert!" Mrs. Tanberry cried in a frightened whisper to herself. "All the fun and brightness went out of the world when you came home!"

But there were other reasons than the return of Robert Carewe why Rouen had lost the joy and mirth that belonged to it. Nay, the merry town had changed beyond all credence. It was hushed like a sickroom and dolefully murmurous with forebodings of farewell and sorrow.

For all the very flower of Rouen's youth had promised to follow Tom Vanrevel on the long and arduous journey to Mexico, to march burning miles under the tropical sun, to face strange fevers and the guns of Santa Anna.

Few were the houses of the more pretentious sort that did not mourn in prospect the going of son or brother or close friend. Mothers already wept not in secret, fathers talked with husky bravado, and every one was very kind to those who were to go, speaking to them gently and bringing them little foolish presents. Nor could the hearts of girls now longer mask as blocks of ice to the prospective conquistadores. Eugene Madrillon's young brother, Jean, after a two years' Beatrice and Benedict wooing of Trixie Chenoweth, that notable spitfire, announced his engagement upon the day after his enlistment and recounted to all who would listen how his termagant fell upon his neck in tears when she heard the news. "And now she cries about me all the time," finished the frank Jean blithely.

But there was little spirit for the old merriments. Fanchon, Virginia and five or six others spent their afternoons mournfully, and yet proudly, sewing and cutting large pieces of colored silk, fashioning a great flag for their sweethearts and brothers to bear southward and plant where stood the palace of the Montezumas.

That was sad work for Fanchon, though it was not for her brother's sake that she wept, since, as every one knew, Jefferson was already so full of malaria and quinine that the fevers of the south and Mexico must find him invulnerable, and even his mother believed he would only thrive and grow hearty on his soldiering. But about Crailey Fanchon had a presentiment more vivid than any born of the natural fears for his safety. It came to her again and again, reappearing in her dreams. She shivered and started often as she worked on the flag, then bent her fair head low over the gay silks, while the others glanced at her sympathetically. And when the flag was completed save for sewing the stars upon the blue ground she took it away from the others and insisted upon finishing the work herself.

It was at this juncture, when the weeping of women was plentiful, when old men pulled long faces and the very urchins of the street observed periods of gravity and even silence, that a notion entered the head of Mrs. Tanberry—young Janey Tanberry—to the effect that such things were all wrong. She declared energetically that this was no decent fashion of farewell; that after the soldiers went away there would be time enough to enact the girls they had left behind them, and that until then the town should be made enlivening. So she went about preaching a revival of cheerfulness.

Mrs. Tanberry came in and worshiped it.

Nor was her vigor spent in vain. It was decided that a ball should be given to the volunteers of Rouen two nights before their departure for the state rendesvous, and it should be made the noblest festival in Rouen's history. The subscribers took their oath to it.

Miss Betty laid out her prettiest dress that evening, and Mrs. Tanberry came in and worshiped it as it rested, like foam of lavender and white and gray, upon the bed, beside the snowy gloves with their tiny, stiff lace gauntlets, while two small white sandal slippers, with jeweled buckles where the straps crossed each other, were being fastened upon Miss Betty's silken feet by the vain and gloating Mamie.

"It's a wicked cruelty, princess!" exclaimed Mrs. Tanberry. "We want to cheer the poor fellows and help them to be gay, and here do you deliberately plan to make them sick at the thought of leaving the place that holds you! Or have you discovered that there's one poor vagabond of the band getting off without having his heart broken, and made up your mind to do it for him tonight?"

"Is father to go with us?" asked Betty. It was through Mrs. Tanberry that she now derived all information concerning Mr. Carewe, as he had not directly addressed her since the afternoon when he discovered her reading the Journal's extra.

"No; we are to meet him there. He seems rather pleasanter than usual this evening," remarked Mrs. Tanberry hopefully as she retired.

"Den we mus' git ready to share big trouble tomorrer!" commented the kneeling Mamie, with a giggle.

Alas, poor adoring servitress, she received a share unto herself that very evening, for her young mistress, usually as amiable as a fair summer sky, fidgeted, grumbled, found nothing well done and was never two minutes in the same mind. After donning the selected dress, she declared it a fright, tried two others, abused each roundly, dismissed her almost weeping handmaiden abruptly and again put on the first. Sitting down to the mirror, she spent a full hour over the arrangement of her hair.

When Mrs. Tanberry came in to tell her that Nelson was at the block with the carriage Miss Betty did not turn, and the elder lady stopped on the threshold and gave a quick, asthmatic gasp of delight.

"Oh," said Mrs. Tanberry, "you make me want to be a man! I'd pick you up and run to the north pole, where no one could ever follow. And I can tell you that it hurts not to throw my arms round you and kiss you, but you're so exquisite I don't want to touch you!"

"Dance wid de han'somdest," screamed Mamie, pursuing uproariously to see the last of her as she jumped into the carriage, "bow to de wittriest an' kiss de one you love de bes'!"

"That will be you!" said Miss Betty to Mrs. Tanberry and kissed the good lady again.

CHAPTER XVI.

It is a matter not of notoriety, but of the happiest celebrity, that Mrs. Tanberry danced that night; and not only that she danced, but that she waltzed. To the lot of Tappingham Marsh (whom she pronounced the most wheedling vagabond, next to Crailey Gray, of her acquaintance) it fell to persuade her; and, after walking a quadrille with the elder Chenoweth, she waltzed with Tappingham. More extraordinary to relate, she danced down both her partner and the music. Thereupon did Mr. Bareaud, stung with envy, dare emulation and essay a schottische with Miss Trixie Chenoweth, performing marvelously well for many delectable turns before he unfortunately fell down. It was a night when a sculptured god would have danced on his pedestal: June, but not overwarm, balm in the air and rose leaves on the breeze; and even Minerva's great heels might have marked the time that orchestra kept. Be sure they waltzed again to "Those Endearing Young Charms:"

Oh, the heart that has truly loved never forgets,
But as truly loves on to the close,
As the sunflower turns on her god when he sets
The same look that she gave when he rose.

Three of the volunteers were resplendent in their regimentals—Mr. Marsh (who had been elected captain of the new company to succeed Vanrevel) and Will Cummings and Jean Madrillon, the lieutenants. This glory was confined to the officers, who had ordered their uniforms at home, for the privates and noncommissioned officers were to receive theirs at the state rendezvous. However, although this gala adornment was limited to the three gentlemen mentioned, their appearance added "an indescribable air of splendor and pathos to the occasion," to quote Mr. Cummings once more. A fourth citizen of the town who might have seized upon this opportunity to display himself as a soldier neglected to take advantage of it and stole in quietly toward the last in his ordinary attire, leaving his major's uniform folded on a chair in his own room. The flag was to be presented to the volunteers at the close of the evening, and Tom came for that—so he claimed to his accusing soul.

He entered unobserved and made his way, keeping close to the wall, to where Mrs. Bareaud sat, taking a chair at her side, but Robert Carewe, glancing thither by chance, saw him and changed countenance for an instant. Mr. Carewe composed his features swiftly, excused himself with elaborate courtesy from Miss Chenoweth, with whom he was talking, and crossed the room to a corner near his enemy. Presently, as the music ceased, the volunteers were bidden to come forward, whereupon Tom left Mrs. Bareaud and began to work his way down the room. Groups were forming and breaking up in the general movement of the crowd, and the dissolving of one brought him face to face with Elizabeth Carewe, who was moving slowly in the opposite direction, a small flock of suitors in her train.

The confrontation came so suddenly and so unexpectedly that before either was aware they looked squarely into each other's eyes full and straight, and both stopped instantly, as though transfixed, Miss Betty leaving a sentence forever half complete. There was a fierce, short vocal sound from the crowd behind Vanrevel, but no one noticed Mr. Carewe, and then Tom bowed gravely, as in apology for blocking the way, and passed on.

Miss Betty began to talk again, much at random, with a vivacity too greatly exaggerated to be genuine, while the high color went from her cheeks and left her pale. Nothing could have enraged her more with herself than the consciousness, now suddenly strong within her, that the encounter had a perceptible effect upon her. What power had this man to make her manner strained and mechanical? What right had his eyes always to stir her as they did?

Ah, that other should have come, if only to stand between her and this tall hypocrite whose dark glance had such strength to disturb her. What lies that gaze contained, all in the one flash—the strange pretense of comprehending her gently, but completely—a sad compassion, too, and with it a look of farewell, seeming to say, "Once more I have come for this—and just 'Goodby!'" For she knew that he was going with the others, going perhaps forever, only the day after tomorrow—then she would see him no more and be free of him. Let the day after tomorrow come soon! Miss Betty hated herself for understanding the adieu, and hated herself more because she could not be sure that, in the startled moment of meeting before she collected herself, she had let it go unanswered.

She had done more than that. Without knowing it, she had bent her head to his bow, and Mr. Carewe had seen both the salutation and the look.

The young men were gathered near the orchestra, and, to the hilarious strains of "Yankee Doodle," the flag they were to receive for their regiment was borne down the room by the sisters and sweethearts who had made it, all of whom were there except Fanchon Bareaud. Crailey had persuaded her to surrender the flag for the sake of spending this evening, next to his last in Rouen, at home alone with him.

The elder Chenoweth made the speech of presentation—that is, he made part of it before he broke down, for his son stood in the ranks of the devoted band. Until this incident occurred all had gone trippingly, for every one had tried to put the day after tomorrow from his mind. Perhaps there might not have been so many tears even now if the young men had not stood together so smilingly to receive their gift. It was seeing them so gay and confident, so strong in their youth and so unselfish of purpose. It was this and the feeling that all of them must suffer and some of them die before they came back, so that when Mr. Chenoweth, choking in his loftiest flight, came to a full stop, and without disguise buried his face in his handkerchief, Mrs. Tanberry, the apostle of gayety, openly sobbed. Chenoweth, without more ado, carried the flag over to Tappingham Marsh, whom Vanrevel directed to receive it, and Tappingham thanked the donors without many words, because there were not then many at his command.

Miss Carewe had been chosen to sing "The Star Spangled Banner," and she stepped out a little from the crowd to face the young man as the orchestra sounded the first chord. She sang in a full, clear voice, but when the volunteers saw that as she sang the tears were streaming down her cheeks in spite of the brave voice they began to choke with the others. If Miss Betty Carewe found them worth weeping for, they could afford to cry a little for themselves. Yet they joined the chorus nobly and raised the roof with the ringing song, sending the flamboyant, proud old words thunderously to heaven.

That was not the last song of the night. General Trumble and Mr. Chenoweth had invited their young friends to attend, after the ball, a collation which they chose to call a supper, but which, to accord with the hour, might more aptly have been designated a breakfast. To afford a private retreat for the scene of this celebration they had borrowed the offices of Gray & Vanrevel, and Crailey hospitably announced that any guest was welcome to stay for a year or two, since probably neither of the firm would have need of an office for at least that length of time. Nine men gathered about the table which replaced Tom's workaday old desk—the two Chenoweths, Eugene Madrillon, Marsh, Jefferson Bareaud, the stout general, Tom Vanrevel, Crailey and Will Cummings—the editor coming in a little late, but rubbing his hands cheerfully over what he declared was to be the last column from his pen to rear its length on the Journal's front page for many a long day—a description of the presentation of the flag.

This convivial party made merry and tried to forget that most of them had "been mighty teary," as Marsh said, an hour earlier, while Mr. Chenoweth sat with his hand on his son's shoulder, unconsciously most of the time, apologetically removing it when he observed it. Many were the witticisms concerning the difference in rank henceforth to be observed between the young men, as Tom was now a major, Marsh a captain, Will Cummings a second lieutenant and the rest mere privates, except Crailey, who was a corporal. Nevertheless, though the board was festive, it was somewhat subdued and absent until they came to the toasts.

It was Tappingham who proposed Miss Betty Carewe. "I know Tom Vanrevel will understand—nay, I know he's man enough to join us," said Marsh as he rose. "Why shouldn't I say that we may hail ourselves as patriots, indeed, since at the call of our country we depart from the town which is this lady's home and at the trumpet's sound resign the gracious blessing of seeing her day by day, and why shouldn't we admit loyally and openly that it is her image alone which shines in the hearts of most of us here?"

And no man arose to contradict that speech, which appears to have rung true, seeing that four of those present had proposed to her again that same evening.

"So I give you," cried Tappingham gallantly, "the health of Miss Betty Carewe, the loveliest rose of our bouquet! May she remember us when we come home!"

They rose and drank it with a shout. But Tom Vanrevel, not setting down his cup, went to the window and threw wide the shutters, letting in a ruddy shaft of the morning sun, so that as he stood in the strong glow he looked like a man carved out of red gold. He lifted his glass not toward the table and his companions while they stared at him, surprised, but toward the locusts of Carewe street.

"To Miss Betty Carewe."

"To Miss Betty Carewe," he said, "the finest flower of them all! May she remember those who never come home!"

And without pausing he lifted his rich baritone in an old song that had been vastly popular with the young men of Rouen ever since the night of Miss Betty's debut. They had hummed it as they went about their daily work, they had whistled it on the streets, they had drifted into dreams at night with the sound of it still chiming in their ears, and now with one accord as they stood gathered together for the last time in Rouen they joined Tom Vanrevel and sang it again. And the eyes of Crailey Gray rested very gently upon his best friend as they sang:

"Believe me, if all those endearing young charms,
Which I gaze on so fondly today,
Were to change by tomorrow and fleet from my arms
Like fairy gifts fading away,
Thou wouldst still be adored as this moment thou art.
Let thy loveliness fade as it will,
And around the dear ruin each wish of my heart
Would intwine itself verdantly still."

CHAPTER XVII.

It was the misfortune of Mr. Cummings' final literary offering to annoy one of the editor's friends. The Journal was brought to the new corporal at noon, while he was considering whether he should rise from his couch or sleep another hour. Reclining among his pillows, he glanced through Cummings' description with the subdued giggle he always had for the good William's style, but as his eye fell upon one paragraph he started, sat upright and proceeded to read the passage several times with anxious attention:

"Only two or three sources of regret occurred to mar the delight (in which young and old participated) of that festal and dazzling scene. One was the absence of Miss Fanchon Bareaud, one of the donors; another, that of Corporal Gray; a third was the excessive modesty of Major Vanrevel, who, although present at the time, refused to receive the ladies' sumptuous offering and insisted that Captain Marsh was the proper person to do the honors, to which the latter reluctantly, though gracefully, consented. Also, we were sorry that the major appeared in citizen's dress, as all were anxious to witness him in his uniform. However, in our humble judgment he will be compelled by etiquette to don it this afternoon to receive the officers of the regular army, who will arrive by the stage about 5 o'clock, it is expected, to inspect the company and swear them into the service of the federal government at the courthouse. We, for one, have little doubt that, owing to the major's well known talent in matters of apparel, his appearance will far eclipse in brilliancy that of his fellow officers."

Crailey dressed slowly, returning to the paper now and then with a perturbed countenance. How would Miss Betty explain this paragraph to herself, and how account for the fact that she had not seen Crailey, how for the fact that she had seen Tom? It seemed unlikely that she could have overlooked the latter—Tom was one of those whom everybody saw wherever he went. And what inquiries would she make? For Crailey had no means of knowing that she would not see the Journal. Tomorrow he would be gone—it would all be over—but he wanted this last day to run smoothly. What wild hopes he had of things that should happen when they all came marching home no one can say: even if it were not to be doubted that Crailey ever entertained hopes of any kind whatever, since to hope is to bestow thought upon the future.

But, however affairs ran with him so far as hope was concerned, he seldom lacked an idea, and one came to him presently, a notion that put the frown to rout and brought the old smile to his lips, his smile of the world-worn and tolerant prelate. He flicked the paper lightly from him, and it sped across the room like a big bird in awkward flight. For he knew how to preserve his last day as he wished and to make all smooth.

He finished his toilet with particular care, took a flower from a vase on his table, placed it in his coat and went down to the dusty street, where everything was warm and bright with summer. It was joy to be alive; there was wine enough in the air, and Crailey made up his mind not to take a drink that day—the last day! The last day! The three words kept ringing through his head like a minor phrase from a song. Tomorrow at noon they would be churning down the river, and this was the last day—the last day!

"Still not too late to make another friend at home," he said, stopping to pat the head of a mangy street cur that came crouching and wabbling toward him like a staveless little keg worried by scurries of wind. Dogs and children always fell in love with Crailey at first sight, and he never failed to receive them in the spirit of their approach. Now the mongrel, at his touch, immediately turned himself over and lay upon the pavement with all paws in air, to say: "Great lord, magnificent in the graciousness which deigns to cast a glimpse upon this abject cluster of ribs, I perceive that your heart is too gentle to kick me in my present helplessness. Yet do with me as you will."

"I doubt if you've breakfasted, brother," Crailey responded aloud, rubbing the dog's head softly with the tip of his boot. "Will you share the meager fare of one who is a poet, should be a lawyer, but is about to become a soldier? Eh, but a corporal! Rise, my friend. Up and be in your own small self a whole corporal's guard! And if your corporal doesn't come home from the wars, perhaps you'll remember him kindly. Think?"

He made a vivacious gesture, the small animal sprang into the air, convoluted with gratitude and new love, while Crailey, laughing softly, led the way to the hotel. There, while he ate sparsely himself, he provided munificently for his new acquaintance and recommended him, with an accompaniment of silver, to the good offices of the Rouen House kitchen. After that out into the sunshine again he went with elastic step and a merry word and a laugh for every one he met. At the old English gardener's he bought four or five bouquets and carried them on a round of visits of farewell to as many old ladies who had been kind to him. This done, leaving his laughter and his flowers behind him, he went to Fanchon and spent part of the afternoon bringing forth cunning arguments cheerily to prove to her that General Taylor would be in the Mexican capital before the volunteers reached New Orleans and urging upon her his belief that they would all be back in Rouen before the summer was gone.

But Fanchon could only sob and whisper, "Hush, hush!" in the dim room where they sat, the windows darkened so that after he had gone he should not remember how red her eyes were and the purple depths under them and thus forget how pretty she had been at her best. After a time, finding that the more he tried to cheer her the more brokenly she wept, he grew silent, only stroking her head, while the summer sounds came in through the window, the mill whir of locusts, the small monotone of distant farm bells, the laughter of children in the street and the gay arias of a mocking bird swinging in the open window of the next house. So they sat together through the long, still afternoon of the last day.

No one in Rouen found that afternoon particularly enlivening. Even Mrs. Tanberry gave way to the common depression, and, once more her doctrine of cheerfulness relegated to the ghostly ranks of the purely theoretical, she bowed under the burden of her woe so far as to sing "Methought I Met a Damsel Fair" (her of the bursting sighs) at the piano. Whenever sadness lay upon her soul she had acquired the habit of resorting to this unhappy ballad; today she sang it four times. Mr. Carewe was not at home and had announced that, though he intended to honor the evening meal by his attendance, he should be away for the evening itself, as comment upon which statement Mrs. Tanberry had offered ambiguously the one word, "Amen." He was stung to no reply, and she had noted the circumstance as unusual and also that he had appeared to labor with the suppression of a keen excitement which made him anxious to escape from her sharp little eyes; an agitation for which she easily accounted when she recalled that he had seen Vanrevel on the previous evening. Mr. Carewe had kept his promise to preserve the peace, as he always kept it when the two met on neutral ground, but she had observed that his face showed a kind of hard leashed violence whenever he had been forced to breathe the air of the same room with his enemy, and that the thing grew on him.

Miss Betty exhibited not precisely a burning interest in the adventure of the damsel fair, wandering out of the room during the second rendition, wandering back again and once more away. She had moved about the house in this fashion since early morning, wearing what Mamie described as a "peaked look." White faced and restless, with distressed eyes, to which no sleep had come in the night, she could not read. She could no more than touch her harp. She could not sleep. She could not remain quiet for three minutes together. Often she sank into a chair with an air of languor and weariness, only to start immediately out of it and seek some other part of the house or to go and pace the garden. Here in the air heavy with roses and tremulous with June as she walked rapidly up and down late in the afternoon, at the time when the faraway farm bells were calling men from the fields to supper, the climax of her restlessness came. That anguish and desperation, so old in her sex, the rebellion against the law that inaction must be her part, had fallen upon her for the first time. She came to an abrupt stop and struck her hands together despairingly and spoke aloud.

"What shall I do? What shall I do?"

"Ma'am?" asked a surprised voice just behind her.

She wheeled quickly about to behold a shock headed urchin of ten in the path near the little clearing. He was ragged, tanned, dusty, neither shoes nor coat trammeling his independence, and he had evidently entered the garden through the gap in the hedge.

"I thought you spoke to me," he said inquiringly.

"I didn't see you," she returned. "What is it?"

"You Miss Carewe?" he asked, but before she could answer he said reassuringly: "Why, of course you are! I remember you perfect, now I git the light on you, so to speak. Don't you remember me?"

"No, I don't think I do."

"Lord!" he responded wonderingly. "I was one of the boys with you on them boxes the night of you pa's fire!" Mingled with the surprise in his tone was a respectful unction which intimated how greatly he honored her father for having been the owner of so satisfactory a conflagration.

"Were you? Perhaps I'll remember you if you give me time."

But at this point the youth recalled the fact that he had an errand to discharge, and, assuming an expression of businesslike haste too pressing to permit further parley, sought in his pocket and produced a sealed envelope with which he advanced upon her.

"Here. There's an answer. He told me not to tell anybody who sent it, and not to give it to nobody on earth but you, and how to slip in through the hedge and try and find you in the garden when nobody was lookin', and he give a pencil for you to answer on the back of it, and a dollar."

Miss Betty took the note, glancing once over her shoulder at the house, but Mrs. Tanberry was still occupied with the maiden, and no one was in sight. She read the message hastily:

> I have obeyed you and shall always. You have not sent for me. Perhaps that was because there was no time when you thought it safe. Perhaps you have still felt there would be a loss of dignity. Does that weigh with you against goodby? Tell me, if you can, that you have it in your heart to let me go without seeing you once more—without goodby—for the last time. Or was it untrue that you wrote me what you did? Was that dear letter but a little fairy dream of mine? Ah, will you see me again, this once—this once—let me look at you, let me talk with you, hear your voice? The last time!

There was no signature.

Miss Betty quickly wrote a few lines upon the same sheet:

> Yes—yes! I must see you—must talk with you before you go. Come at dusk. The garden—near the gap in the hedge. It will be safe for a little while. He will not be here.

She replaced the paper in its envelope, drew a line through her own name on the letter and wrote "Mr. Vanrevel" underneath.

Carewe seized the missive.

"SWISS FOOD"

You have No Reason for Not Using

Zutoo

Some people think that all headache cures are alike—that they all undermine the health, even if not perceived at the time of taking them.

Well, we'll admit that the drug cures do this, but that is no reason why you should not take Zutoo.

Zutoo is a harmless vegetable remedy. One ingredient is soda—just old-fashioned soda that our grandmothers used to take to settle the stomach, when they had sick headache. And there is nothing better.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient imported for us from Japan. It won't hurt you any more than will the soda.

There is absolutely no reason why you should not use Zutoo.

If you suffer from headache there is every reason why you should.

Taken in time, two tablets will ward off a headache. Taken later, they will stop it in twenty minutes, and leave you feeling good every time.

If you are using a drug remedy, why not discard it?

Zutoo will cure just as quickly and will save you the penalty, that all must sometime pay, who take the drugs which these cures contain.

If you will give Zutoo one trial, you will never take any other headache remedy again.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Steady—Hogs and Cattle Are Firmer at Chicago.

London, June 28.—Cattle are quoted at 10¼c to 11¼c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8c to 8¼c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 13½c to 16c per lb.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, June 28.—Receipts of live stock at the City Market since Tuesday, as reported by the railways, were 104 carloads, composed of 1516 cattle, 937 hogs, 1849 sheep and lambs, with 231 calves and 1 horse.

Exporters.

Prices for shipping cattle ranged from $4.90 to $5.37½, the bulk selling at $5.15 to $5.30 per cwt. Export bulls sold at $3.75 to $4.25 per cwt.

Butchers.

Trade was brisk for prime stall-fed butchers, which were scarce at $5 to $5.20 per cwt. for choice picked lots; loads of good sold at $4.75 to $5; medium at $4.40 to $4.65; stall-fed cows at $3.75 to $4.40; grass cows at $2.50 to $3.50 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Harry Murby reports a fair trade in stockers and feeders, altho the run was only medium, but enough to supply all demands. The principal demand is for well-bred steers, 800 to 900 lbs. each, of which there was not enough for the demand, as this class is scarce. Light stockers, 500 lbs. each, were slow of sale. There is no call for short-keep feeders. Mr. Murby bought about 200 cattle at following prices: Steers, 900 to 1050 lbs., $3.85 to $4.10; steers, 800 to 900 lbs., at $3.75 to $3.90; best stockers, 500 to 700 lbs., at $3.35 to $3.50; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Milch Cows.

About 40 milch cows and springers were offered, the bulk being of medium quality. Prices ranged from $30 to $55 each.

Veal Calves.

Over 300 veal calves were offered, and sold at prices ranging from $4 to $6 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Deliveries were the largest of the season, 1849 being on sale, the result being that there was an easier feeling on the market for lambs, the bulk selling at 25c to 50c each lower, altho some extra heavy fat lambs brought as high as $6 and $6.50 each, and Corbett & Henderson sold 100 lambs at $8 to $9 per cwt., or 8c to 9c per lb. Export sheep—Ewes sold at $4 to $4.50 per cwt.; bucks, $3.50 to $4 per cwt.; yearlings at $5 to $5.50 per cwt.; spring lambs, $3.75 to $6 each.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris quotes the market as unchanged at $7.50 for selects and $7.25 for lights and fats. About 1000 sold at these prices.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

East Buffalo, N. Y., June 28.—Cattle—Receipts, 75 head; prices unchanged.

Veals—Receipts, 250 head; slow and 25c lower; $4.25 to $8.25.

Hogs—Receipts, 1100 head; active and a shade higher; heavy, mixed and Yorkers, $7; pigs, $6.90; dairies, $6.70 to $6.90.

Sheep and lambs—Receipts, 800 head; active; lambs, $6 to $9; yearlings, $7.25 to $7.50; a few $7.65; wethers, $6.35.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, June 28.—Beeves — Receipts, 285; feeling steady; dressed beef, in moderate demand at 7½c to 8⅜c per lb.

Exports—Twelve sheep.

Calves—None; nearly 1000 stale calves on sale; very little doing; veals dull at yesterday's decline; common to choice, $4 to $6; 730 calves unsold.

Sheep and lambs—Receipts, 3644; 13½ cars on sale; sheep slow and unchanged; lambs, weak to a shade lower, except top grades; everything sold except one and one-half cars of sheep; sheep, $3.50 to $5; lambs, $7.50 to $9.40.

Hogs—Receipts, 697; half a car on sale; nominally firm to higher.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

Chicago, uJne 28.—Cattle—Receipts 6000; best, strong; others, slow; common to prime steers, $4 to $6.10; cows, $3 to $4.50; heifers, $2.75 to $5.25; bulls, $2.75 to $4.25; calves, $5.50 to $6.50; stockers and feeders, $2.75 to $4.65.

Hogs—Receipts, 26,000; strong; choice to prime, heavy, $6.70 to $7.50; medium to good, heavy, $6.65 to $6.70; butchers' weights, $6.65 to $6.75; good to heavy, mixed, $6.60 to $6.70.

Sheep—Receipts, 15,000; sheep, weak; lambs, steady; sheep, $4.50 to $6.35; yearlings, $6.50 to $7; shorn lambs, $5.40 to $7.85.

CHEESE MARKETS.

Madoc, Ont., June 28.—One thousand and eighty-five boxes cheese boarded; all sold, 11¼c.

Kingston, June 28.—At the Frontenac cheese board to-day 1288 boxes were registered, of which 400 boxes were colored. Sales were 282 boxes, at 11 5-16c; 650 at 11⅜c; 210 at 11¼c; 200 at 11 7-16c.

His Character.

A cook has been going round a station in the south of India with the following "character" and is somewhat surprised he is not engaged: "Abdul has been my cook for three months. It seems much longer. He leaves on account of ill health—my ill health."

A Coincidence.

"I suppose you enjoy hearing your boy talk since he went to college."

"Yes," answered Farmer Corntossel, "but ain't it kind of a coincidence that so many of them classical quotations begin with "'Rah, 'rah, 'rah?"

FEUDAL TENURE RELIC

BOBS UP AT THE INSTANCE OF THE EARL OF AMHERST.

Lord of the Manor of Ortford Seizes Astonished English "Vassal's" Best Horse as Heriot—Action Perfectly Legal — Recent Insistance Upon Rights Shows Need of Clean Sweep of Survivals of Ancient Land System.

The need of some act which will make a clean sweep of the preposterous relics of the feudal system of land tenure which still survive in many parts of England, has been strikingly shown by a case which has just come to light near Sevenoaks in Kent. There resides Earl Amherst, who, among his other hereditary claims to distinction, boasts that of being lord of the manor of Ortford. Within the borders of the domain thus designated Herbert Couldrey took up his abode some months ago, totally unaware that thereby he incurred any obligations as a vassal of the lord of the manor.

The other day one of the earl's deputy stewards called upon Mr. Couldroy, and, seeing a horse and trap standing outside the house, asked Mr. Couldrey if the horse was his. On being answered in the affirmative, the deputy steward cut some hairs from the horse's mane, and after depositing them in his pocket, placed a hand on the horse's shoulder, accompanying the action with the words, "This horse is now the property of Lord Amherst."

Like Comic Opera, But Legal.

In the twentieth century this appears more like a bit of fooling from a comic opera than a valid process, but, thanks to the medieval laws that still remain unrepealed, the deputy steward's fantastic performance actually made Earl Amherst the owner of Mr. Couldrey's steed. However, the deputy steward only took away the hairs that he had cut from the mane, the major portion of his lordship's newly appropriated property, which required stabling and feeding, being left with Mr. Couldrey.

It was explained to the latter that the earl, being a generous man, did not wish to push his rights to their legal limits and would therefore permit Mr. Couldrey to redeem the horse. The price of the redemption was subsequently fixed at $57.50—about one-third of its real value—which shows that Earl Amherst is a much more liberal man than his feudal ancestors, who were wont to exact everything they could claim from their vassals.

Finding there was no other method by which he could recover the horse, Mr. Couldrey bought it back at the price stipulated. Then, in order to call public attention to the case, he brought suit against the earl for the keep of the horse during the two weeks that the settlement of the matter was pending for, in accordance with the absurd law under which it had been seized, for these two weeks the horse was unquestionably the property of Earl Amherst.

Public Opinion With "Vassal."

But this modern sort of procedure was not at all in accordance with feudal notions, and the Sevenoaks judge, before whom the suit was tried, promptly gave his decision against the audacious vassal. Public opinion, however, is with the latter, and it is probable that a bill soon will be introduced in Parliament to put a stop to all such revivals of medieval rights.

Mr. Couldrey, it seems, last year bought near Sevenoaks a property consisting of two and one-half acres with a house and stable, for $8,500. The property is what is known as a "customary freehold" of the manor of Ortford. And, according to the customs of the manor the lord of the manor is entitled to a "heriot" on every change in the ownership by alienation or succession. As his heriot the lord may legally seize the tenant's best live beast, but, in the absence of a beast to seize he has to be content in lieu thereof, with a modest fine of three shillings and sixpence (87 cents).

Didn't Know What Heriot Was.

The customary freeholder who sold the property to Mr. Couldrey possessed no best beast, and so on that occasion Earl Amherst got only the 87 cents. Without any idea that he was thereby jeopardizing his own best beast, Mr. Couldrey recently sold a half acre of his land for $900. Then Earl Amherst's emissary swooped down on him as already told and claimed his heriot. Mr. Couldrey did not even know what the word meant until he had consulted a dictionary. If he had kept a motor car instead of a horse he would have been able to settle the earl's claim by paying him 87 cents.

Of course there are many manorial lords who never think of enforcing the ancient feudal rights which have never been abrogated. But it is always possible for such claims to be enforced, vexatiously and oppressively. It is actually on record, though it happened many years ago, that a lord of the manor seized as his heriot a tenant's racehorse worth between $10,000 and $15,000.

Wouldn't Imagine Amherst a Stickler.

Earl Amherst is not at all the sort of man one would imagine would prove a stickler in such matters. He has plenty of money, and, though he has just passed his seventieth birthday, is still an active man and a keen sportsman. It is only two years ago that he was credited with bringing down the first stag of the season in Scotland. He is one of the fast diminishing body of veterans of the Crimean war, which he went through as the captain of the Coldstream Guards, and was severely wounded at Inkerman.

He is, among other things, a Freemason of high distinction, and has been pro-grand master of England for the last eight years. The first Lord Amherst was commander-in-chief of the British army in North America from 1758 to 1764, and was subsequently made commander of the whole army. Earl Amherst has been twice married, but has had no children by either wife. His heir presumptive is his brother, the Hon. and Rev. Percy Amherst, who took orders more than forty years ago, but has done no clerical work since he has held a "cinch" on the peerage.

CO-PARTNERS IN HOUSING.

Homes For Workers—British Co-Partnership Building Societies a Success.

Among the schemes offered to meet the demand for workmen's houses in Britain is that outlined in the prospectus of the Co-Partnership Tenants' Housing Council, which has passed beyond the experimental stage, and is proving a successful venture, according to the figures presented. The objects, which the council promotes, are the erection, co-operative ownership, and administration of houses, which harmonizes the interests of tenant and investor by an equitable use of the profit arising from the increase of value and careful use of the property. Assuring that houses are built and grounds laid out, the system of administration determines whether the value of the property is realized by the community. If some houses get into hands of owners who rack-rent, and misuse the property, the value of the whole block rapidly diminishes.

Individual ownership has many difficulties to overcome.

Workmen usually find it too expensive to build for themselves. Municipal building ignores individual interest. The co-partnership scheme aims at combining these.

How Societies Operate.

The societies already in operation are registered under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act of Britain with limited liability. In one the capital is raised in shares of £10 each, payable in full or by instalments. No person can hold more than £200 in shares, but any amount may be invested as loan stock, which takes the position of preference shares in a limited liability company. The committee, or Board of Management, is elected by shareholders, and provision is made for representation of tenants on the same."

Method of Operation.

The following from the prospectus of one of the societies shows its method of working: Suitable houses are acquired or built. These are let at rents to pay a moderate rate of interest on capital. Surplus profits, after providing for repairs, depreciation, etc., are divided among the tenant members in proportion to the rents they pay. Each tenant member's share of profits is credited to him in shares instead of paid in cash.

The greater the surplus the greater the security for interest to the investing shareholders and the care of the property exercised by the tenant is to his own interest. If tenant becomes in arrears his share capital offers a fund to draw upon.

A tenant member of this society may remain a tenant member only, however large his holding in the society. If he leaves the neighborhood he can sell his shares, or, perhaps continue to hold them and receive the interest regularly.

"It is further claimed that in principle, it solves the question of the 'unearned increment'; for all the gain under this head does not go to the shareholders as such, or to the individual tenants in the improving locality, but by swelling the surplus profits, it necessarily benefits all the tenant members of the society, as tenant members, in the shape of increased dividends on their rentals."

Advantage to Tenants.

The advantages of these societies to the workman are set forth as follows: He gets the use of capital at a much lower rate than he could borrow himself. The surplus profits are placed to the credit of the tenant shareholders as shares in the society, in proportion to the rents they pay, until the value of the house is acquired in shares, after which the profit may be withdrawn in cash. With preliminary expenses and interest less and the tenant paying as rent, what would, under another system, go as repayment in instalments, the surplus to go to capital fund must be greater. By taking scrip for shares instead of a deed of purchase, the tenant averages the risk of removal with his co-partners in the tenancy of the estate.

Is Paying Profits.

One society, the Ealing Tenants, Limited, after meeting all fixed charges and paying 5 per cent. on shares and 4 per cent. on loan stock, realized a fair profit on the working of the last half year.

This society's constitution also allows five per cent. on savings deposits made by tenant. The tenants as a whole, can relieve themselves of dependence on outside capital altogether, by acquiring through investment or by accumulated capital the value of the property. By gradual process, therefore, it lies with the tenants to transfer the ownership from non-tenant shareholders, who take the main risk to begin with, to the tenant shareholders who, it is hoped, may become the ultimate owners. In laying out their properties and building their dwellings all these societies aim at the ideal of the garden city plan, with blocks of houses enclosing on three sides a large open green for forming a park or playground for the group. The streets are wide and trees and shrubs are used to beautify them. There are at present in Great Britain five of these societies in operation with a total capital of over £40,000 and holding property valued at £31,600. Some of these societies began with a capital of £300 or £500.

A Nice Place to Live.

"On the Broken Hill road," says The Bulawayo Chronicle of an incident in that part of South Africa, "on a recent night a lion entered a hut wherein were sleeping two white men. Pushing open the reed door, the animal made for the nearer of the two sleepers and, gripping him by the shoulder with its teeth, lifted him from his bed. The cries of the man brought several natives to the scene, and these pluckily attacked the beast, bringing it to bay. A shotgun happened fortunately to be near by, and this the captive succeeded in reaching, instantly shooting the lion. The man, whose name is Thornton, was very badly mauled, but he is making favorable progress."

Class Definitions.

Taking your neighbor's goods is variously designated as stealing among the poor; business methods among the middle classes; and kleptomania or bridge among the aristocracy.

The Man Who Arrived

By CLAUDE PAMARES

Copyright, 1906, by Homer Sprague

As Briggsville was a town of 2,000 inhabitants and boasted a fair hotel, there had been arrivals there by train for years, but they were what might be termed everyday arrivals. Drummers paid the town a visit; men when looking for an opportunity to go into business would come that way; strangers who didn't always unburden themselves to the inquisitive landlord would come and go. Each and every guest received more or less public notice, but dropped out of mind when he dropped out of sight.

The man who finally arrived slipped in so quietly that he had been a guest for three or four days before it was generally known that he was present. He walked up from the depot instead of riding in the bus and paying a quarter extra. He didn't make a rush for the bar as soon as he arrived. He didn't cuss the train for being late or cuss the town on account of the mudholes in the streets. He took the landlord into his confidence at once and explained that he was in poor health and might spend a month in recuperating. He ate supper and then sat down in the barroom and smoked and dozed and answered but few questions and asked none at all, and it was the general verdict before he went to bed that he didn't amount to shavings compared with other arrivals.

George K. Jones, as the man who arrived had given his name, moved about town for the next week without attracting any particular notice and without any one caring particularly about his health. The landlord of the hotel had just told a friend of his that Jones was apparently a softy, who had tired himself out in wondering why a coffee mill turned to the right instead of the left, when he was asked for a private interview. He instantly made up his mind that Jones wanted to stand him off, but he granted the request.

In two minutes there was a great transformation. Jones of the sleepy eyes and lagging feet became as alert as a fox. He acknowledged that he had registered under a false name; he confessed that he was not what he seemed; he owned up that he was at the head of a detective agency and ready to do business with his host on the most liberal terms. There hadn't been any crime of any account around Briggsville for several years, but this state of affairs could not last much longer. There would be a crime wave sweeping along pretty soon, and his agency wanted to be in it and make most of the arrests and receive most of the rewards.

He was there in advance of the wave to lay his wires. He wanted to make of the landlord a detective—a real old sleuth of the first order—and he had a printed commission duly dated and signed that would be exchanged for a twenty dollar bill. The landlord was to spot robbers and murderers as fast as they turned up and send in his reports and receive half the rewards.

It did not take the proprietor of the Clarion over five minutes to decide on handing over. His income from the detective business would not be less than $2,000 a year and might run to three times that, and his opportunities for "spotting" were A1.

Of course he was told that looking wise and sawing wood was the foundation of detective work and given many verbal instructions, and half an hour later he was down in his bar and sizing up three or four old topers he had known for fifteen years and wondering which of them was plotting murder. That evening he picked out no less than seven men to keep an eye on in future, and it was generally remarked that he seemed more alert than usual.

Next day the man who arrived sauntered into the livery stable. He had sauntered in there before, talked horse for a few minutes and then sauntered out again, much to the disgust of the owner. This time he didn't talk horse. The liveryman was all alone, but he was taken to the rear end of the barn to be communicated with. Mr. Jones had noticed that he had a head on him. Jones had also noticed that he had an eye like an eagle and a perspicacity that enabled him to tell a horse from a cow on sight. The liveryman was flattered. He couldn't help but be. He had been called a fool often enough for trying to conduct a livery business in a county where there were 264 separate, distinct and steep hills and to find that all the people had been wrong about it all the time was like pouring sweet oil on a burn.

After an hour's conversation the man of horses and buggies gave up $25 and received a commission to act as detective. He was not to be confined to any one sort of crime, but could go ahead and do business with criminals of all sorts regardless of age or sex. Before Mr. Jones had left the stables the newly made detective had made up his mind to keep an eye on the landlord of the hotel. He had long suspected that counterfeit money was being made in the garret of the Clarion.

The man who arrived took another saunter that day. He sauntered in to see Mrs. Bascomb, who kept a small millinery and notion store. He had not come for a fall hat or a paper of hairpins. What he had come for he related in whispers, accompanied by a confidential demeanor. His agency needed women detectives. A word caught up now and then as a woman customer was trying on a hat or buying a yard of tape might lead to the unearthing of a great mystery.

Mrs. Bascomb was located next to the postoffice. She could keep her eye on the postmaster. There was a blacksmith shop opposite. She could have the smith and all his customers under constant espionage. As it was dull times in the millinery business, it took a full hour's talking to make Mrs. Bascomb part with $30 in cash in exchange for a detective's commission, but she finally parted and was advised to "spot" all crosseyed men mailing letters at night after the postoffice had closed.

During the next week the man who arrived was on the saunter most of the time. The two dry goods merchants and one of the grocers refused to buy commissions on account of religious or some other scruples, but everybody else approached had only to be talked to for a few minutes to pay a price. If they wouldn't pay $30, the price was gradually reduced to $5. The arrest of a single murderer, they were told, would make them good a thousand times over.

Not less than twenty women were included in Mr. Jones' list, and when he could secure no more clients in the town he worked the surrounding country. Not a farmer or a farmer's hired man turned him down. It happened in several cases that both the farmer and his man took commissions and were instructed to watch each other.

When Mr. Jones departed he left more than a hundred detectives behind him to watch for the coming of the crime wave. They were to make reports to the home office whenever they struck a clew. Not on their life or lives were they to give away the fact that they were working for the agency or keeping their eyes peeled. Craft, cunning and silence must be the order of the day.

During the next two months Briggsville had an uncomfortable time of it. Every one had a feeling that he was under espionage, and his feeling was right. There was prowling about by day and by night. Men and women sitting in their church pews of a Sunday glared around in a suspicious manner and forgot all about the sermon. Boys and girls of tender years found themselves shadowed and went home to tell fathers and mothers who were shadowing some one else.

It was at a church social that the grand expose occurred. Mrs. Bascomb brought it about by charging the cross eyed cooper with mailing a letter at midnight. This was in revenge for his hogging down more than his share of the ice cream. In five minutes it came out that there were about forty detectives present and that each one had been spying on the others, and then a free-for-all scrap occurred, and the police made several arrests. This brought out the whole plot and laid bare the character of the man who arrived, and there was weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

That was ten years ago, but the detectives of Briggsville have never forgiven each other. The crime wave has not arrived, but they glare and shake their fists at each other. And in some locality the man who arrived is arriving again and repeating his performance.

Opera Under Difficulties.

A contemporary account says: "At the first performance of 'La Traviata' the tenor, Graziani, took cold and sang his part throughout in a hoarse and almost inaudible voice. M. Varesi, the baritone, having what we would call a secondary role, took no trouble to bring out the dramatic importance of this short but capital part, so that the effect of the celebrated duet between Violetta and Germond in the second act was entirely missed. Mme. Donatelli, who impersonated the delicate, sickly heroine, was one of the stoutest ladies on the stage or off it, and when at the beginning of the third act the doctor declares that consumption has wasted away the young lady and that she cannot live more than a few hours the audience was thrown into a state of perfectly uproarious glee, a state very different from that necessary to appreciate the tragic action of the last act." No wonder that "La Traviata" made a fiasco under these trying circumstances! Yet when more adequately performed the opera soon became an immense favorite with audiences of all nations, and Verdi had no reason to remember the disasters attending its first appearance in public.

Attacks on Royalty.

The king most often and most seriously shot at was Louis Philippe, who somehow was never hurt by his would be assassins. The most desperate attempt was made by Fieschi, the Corsican, who operated with an infernal machine. He was once fired upon at such close quarters that the flash of the pistol set fire to the bonnet of Queen Marie Amelie, who sat beside him in a carriage. But one serious attempt was made to assassinate Napoleon I. It was with an infernal machine. Napoleon III. had two narrow escapes. One was when the Orsini bombs exploded around his carriage, and the other was at the Bois de Boulogne, when a ball meant for his guest, Alexander I., whizzed by his ear and shot his aid-de-camp's horse.—London News.

Relative Brightness of the Stars.

The dream of Joseph is the oldest document known in which the brightness of the stars is referred to. In it are mentioned the sun, moon and twelve stars, which exceed all the other heavenly bodies in splendor. A French astronomer has pointed out that if we count the stars of the first magnitude seen in Egypt today we shall find just twelve, for a thirteenth is of somewhat doubtful brilliancy. These twelve stars are also mentioned in an evangel of St. John; hence the astronomer concludes that the relative brightness of the stars has not appreciably altered since the times of the pharaohs.

Franklin on Catching Cold.

It is well known, says the New York Evening Post, that Franklin made a particular study of colds and had his own theory about them, which we believe is pretty much the theory of today. One of his assertions was that catching cold does not come from mere cold, but from unequal temperature over the body and from undistributed moisture. To prove this he made a number of observations on occasions when he did and did not suffer. A few of these follow:

By putting on a damp shirt on a dry body—yes.

By putting on a dry shirt on a wet body, though this wets the body ten times more—no.

By sitting in a room where the floor has been newly washed—yes.

By going into a river and staying there an hour (no sheets so wet)—no.

By wetting the feet only—yes.

By wetting all the clothes through the body and wearing them a whole day—no.

By sitting in a room against a crevice—yes.

By sitting as long in the open air—no.

How Cyanide Was Discovered.

Scheele in 1783 laid the foundations for the manufacture of cyanide of potassium. With prussiate of potash for its base, dried animal matter of any and all kinds was dumped into the superheated vessels containing the potash, together with iron filings and borings. A stonelike black mass resulted from the cooling, and other processes brought the final lemon colored crystals which resulted from evaporations of the solutions. From these crystals prussic acid was evolved, of which a 2 per cent solution is the pharmaceutical preparation, yet so powerful that four drops will kill a large dog. A chemist, putting a cyanide solution in a gold lined dish in 1844, discovered that the gold was dissolved in the liquid. This was the beginning of the gold plating process by the use of cyanide and the further involvement of the poison came about in electroplating, in photography and in treating refractory gold ores.—Technical World.

A Canadian Paradise.

Temagami is shaped like an octopus, with long stretched out arms, and its shores are indented with deep circling bays, island strewn and culminating in sharp points and curves that add to the beauty of this magical scene. "The lake of deep waters" is the meaning of the Indian word, and they lie very deep and cool in their bed of granite, in stillness a perfect mirror, in storm darkly menacing, with foam edged waves showing fanglike teeth. Being a hundred square miles in area, Temagami forms one of Canada's great natural reservoirs. Mighty rivers from the height of land to the north flow into it, and it in turn feeds the streams that flow southward, carrying their life giving waters through the forests to the peopled lands below. There are 1,400 islands in the lake, and the government has included the whole area in a magnificent forest reserve of a million and a half acres.—Kate Westlake Yeigh in Four Track News.

Jammed Fingers.

Few people have escaped jammed fingers, and as the pain caused when the finger is jammed in a door is excruciating in the extreme for the first few minutes it is well to know of some means of relief. The finger should be plunged into water as hot as can possibly be borne. This application of hot water causes the nail to expand and soften, and the blood pouring out beneath it has more room to flow. Thus the pain is lessened. The finger should then be wrapped in a bread and water poultice. A jammed finger should never be neglected, as it may lead to mortification of the bone if it has been badly crushed, and amputation of the finger must follow. Jammed toes are usually caused through the falling of heavy weights and should be treated in the same way as a jammed finger.

New York's First Sidewalk.

The first sidewalk in New York was laid by a woman, Mrs. Samuel Provoost, about 1710. She was an importer and merchant and laid the sidewalk for the convenience of her customers. She had importuned the authorities to do it, but they refused, saying it was impossible. After her object lesson paving and curbing gradually came in, but for some time her sidewalk was so famous that people journeyed even from Philadelphia to see it.

Knew It.

"Well, after the dinner Boresome told a story about his exploits in Africa and then one about an Irishman he met in Switzerland."

"But I thought you were not at the banquet."

"Nor was I at this particular one, but have attended sixteen others where Boresome told these stories."

Bad Habits.

"It would be a very bad thing if farmers ever got control of the national finances."

"Why so?"

"Because from sheer force of habit they would want to be always watering the stock."

He Knew.

Meekly—Yes, we're going to move to Swamphurst. Doctor—But the climate there may disagree with your wife. Meekly—It wouldn't dare!

The Retort Professional.

Lawyer Quibble—You a doctor? Why, you couldn't cure a ham! Dr. Sawbones—And you, sir—you couldn't try a case of lard!

Our own heart, and not other men's opinions, forms our true honor.—Coleridge.

Intellectual Drinks.

"Tea and coffee are drugs—drugs solely," said a chemist. "They stimulate the brain, and the reaction from the stimulation is not perceptible; hence tea and coffee are excellent brain spurs. For a little while they do actually make us more intelligent than we naturally are. That is why they are so popular. It is why we chemists call them intellectual drinks. Alcohol, whether it be taken in the form of champagne or beer or whisky, is not an intellectual drink, but the opposite. From the beginning alcohol stupefies instead of enlivening the brain. But it makes us talk! If it were not enlivening how should it make us talk? Alas, alcohol makes us talk, but we say under its influence the things we should not. Alcohol deadens the inhibitory, the prohibitive centers of the brain. It stupefies the brain muscle, which knows what things should not be told, and hence, while drinking we talk; but, oh, the things we say, and, oh, how we blush in the cold gray light of the morning after to remember what we said!"

"Tarry" Gould's Long Cruise.

"Tarry" Gould was a well known character in and around Danvers years ago, but very few knew what gave him the nickname of "Tarry." He was very fond of telling about the long sea trip he enjoyed when a young man. It seems he thought he was tired living ashore, so he went to Danversport and shipped on a coasting schooner bound for Philadelphia. He used to say, in telling his story: "I did expect to enjoy that trip so much. Well, we cast off from the wharf and started down river. When we got to Beverly bridge (a mile or so from the wharf) I made up my mind that I had got enough of it, and as we passed through the draw I climbed to the bridge and started for home, and, if you will believe me, I could not get a wink of sleep that night until they threw water on the outside of my bedroom windows to make it seem I was aboard ship."

Scraps From the Sea.

"There is often found at sea a life belt or some sort of a life preserver floating on the water that bears the name of the vessel to which it belonged," said a veteran sea captain. "As soon as it is reported there is at once a great amount of speculation on the part of those interested in the ship as to whether the vessel is safe or not. This increases to alarm if the ship is any way overdue. In most instances the preserver has been washed from the deck by a wave or has fallen overboard, and the alarm is entirely without foundation. I remember an instance in which my boat broke a crank shaft. We were eleven days overdue, and we were given up for lost because a raft that should have been fastened on the deck was washed overboard and picked up by a faster liner. I have sometimes thought it would be a good thing if these minor articles were not marked."

South Sea Island Customs.

When a south sea island mother wishes to chastise her child she seldom resorts to slapping, and slippers, of course, she has none. Instead of using the forms of punishment customary among civilized mothers she pulls the child's hair or bites some part of the body, generally the fleshy part of the arm. In wandering about the village one sees many children having on their bodies scars produced by wounds inflicted by their mothers' teeth. When a mother wishes to caress her child she deftly draws her thumb across its eyebrow or cheek or gently seizes its cheek between her teeth. The rubbing of noses is also a mark of affection among the Kingsmill islanders, as it is among the Maoris of New Zealand.

Hot Soda Baths.

Hot soda baths are recommended by some persons for rheumatism, and the way they are taken is this: Fill the tub half full of water as hot as can be borne, add half a pound of common baking soda and immerse the body for at least twenty minutes, keeping up the temperature by the addition of hot water from time to time. Vaseline or cold cream should be rubbed into the skin after the latter has been dried in order to replace the natural oil.

A Bit of English Humor.

Recently the London Morning Post contained the following advertisement:

"Wanted.—A nurse for night duty only; one thoroughly accustomed to bottle babies."

This called forth the remark from the British Journal of Nursing:

"To bottle babies? How is it done and for what purpose are these innocents used when 'bottled?'"

A Bright Boy.

"Your son, I believe, made some experiments while at college?"

"Yes; he discovered what he calls his 'scientific paradox.'"

"What is the nature of it?"

"He succeeded in demonstrating that debts are expanded by contracting them."

Given and Taken Away.

A tiny bridesmaid at a wedding the other day surveyed the departing bride and groom with a gloomy brow. "Oh, dear!" she pouted. "Sister was going to get married today and have lots of fun! And now that man's taken her away!"

Too Many.

"And David had five kings before him," read the pastor.

"Gosh!" exclaimed the man in the rear pew. "I'm glad David wasn't in the game last night!"

The first regular serial newspaper was printed at Antwerp in the year 1605 and bore the name of Niewelijdinghe.

Mining Notes.

The Central Ontario Railway has a contract to carry 30,000 tons of iron ore from the North Hastings mines, for transmission to the Soo smelter.

The copper mine at Eldorado is booming, and in a short time all the machinery will be in full blast. The company have spent about $25,000 in improving the old machinery and in the purchase of new, which speaks well for the prospect of the mine.

While blasting rock in the roadway approaching the new bridge at L'Amable, some samples of a peculiar looking mineral were thrown out and Mr. McConnell sent them away to have an assay made. It turned out to be zinc, but whether or not it exists in paying quantities remains to be seen. — Bancroft Times.

Convocation At Albert College.

Another Successful College Year Closed--Degrees and Certificates Awarded--Names of Graduates and Prize Winners--Medals and Prizes Distributed--Address by Rev. Dr. Carman.

Albert College has passed another year of greater success and larger attendance than were previously on record, and the faculty and students are now at liberty to enjoy a well-earned vacation. The annual convocation was held last evening in the college chapel, Massey Hall, and that spacious building was filled by the students and visitors. Upon one side of the chapel the "sweet girl" students were seated and upon the other side were the boys. During the evening some college songs were sung by the students which, despite the fact that the rooms were uncomfortably warm, kept the audience in high good humor.

Shortly after 8 o'clock the faculty and invited guests took seats upon the platform. The guests included Rev. Dr. Carman, President of the Methodist Church of Canada, Revs. R. H. Leitch, and A. Campbell; Messrs Wm. Johnson and H. P. Moore, of Acton. The proceedings were opened by an appropriate prayer by Rev. R. H. Leitch.

The prize essay entitled, "The Electrical Power of Canada," an appropriate and timely subject, was read by Mr. W. C. Arnold. The paper showed that much thought and study had been devoted to its preparation.

The conferring of degrees and granting of diplomas followed. The Principal, Dr. Dyer, before doing this referred to the fact that this year the work done by the students was excellent and he naturally felt proud of their success.

During the proceedings Miss Alice Storrey gave two recitations which were much appreciated by all present Mr. D. A. Cameron rendered a solo in his usual fine voice.

Dr. Carman, President of the Methodist Church, was called upon and gave an address which was reminescent in its character. He referred to his connection with the college as a Professor, and later as Principal. Albert College stood high in the esteem of the church and the country. He was pleased to note the interest taken in the college by the citizens of Belleville. It was an institution worthy of the patronage accorded it. The Rev. Doctor spoke briefly in reference to his recent visit to Japan and the strides which were being made in that country in the various seats of learning. Japan was not indifferent to education. He was looking about for consecrated young women and men who were willing to do missionary work in that country.

Mr H. P. Moore, of Acton, was called upon and said a few words, eulogizing the work done at Albert by the faculty.

The singing of the National Anthem and the benediction by Dr. Carman brought the proceedings to a close.

FAITHFUL WORK IS APPRECIATED

REV. DR. CROTHERS GIVEN INCREASE IN SALARY AND A MONTH'S HOLIDAYS.

The first meeting of the quarterly official board for the new year of George Street Methodist Church was held last night and was largely attended. It was a most interesting and harmonious gathering, showing the pleasant and cordial relations which exist between the pastor, Rev. Dr. Crothers, and the official representatives of the congregation. These feelings of regard and friendship were evidenced in the fact that the Rev. Doctor was granted an increase in salary and given four weeks holidays. This mark of esteem and appreciation elicited a few appropriate remarks from the pastor, whose two years' service here has been marked by success and development in all branches of church work.—Peterboro Review.

GIVER AND RECEIVER

Both Equally Guilty in Matter of Insurance Rebating.

All Parties to the System Should Be Punished, the Opinion of Mr. Richter of the London Life—How Policyholders May Benefit — He Admits Some Loans Made to Company's Own Directors.

London, June 29.—The Royal Commission on Insurance, opened here yesterday. J. G. Richter of the London Life was on the stand all day.

The London Life was established in 1874, with capital of $1,000,000, of which $250,000 is subscribed and $50,000 paid up.

The late President Jeffrey controlled the majority of the stock, and both his sons are officers of the company.

Loans to Directors.

Mr. Richter admitted that the company had made loans to the vice-president, Dr. A. O. Jeffrey, and to a director, William Bowman. He explained to the commisison that, although in this case there had been no loss, still the lending of funds to directors was capable of abuse. Mr. Tilley produced the loan book, which showed that the Jeffrey loan was on stock of the Ontario Loan and Debenture Co.

Mr. Richter explained that the London did a large industrial business—about half the total—from which the company had reaped large profits after the third year. The minimum amount of insurance fixed by the province was $20 on infants lives up to $160 on a child of ten.

That Agreement

The settled form of insurance agreement, provided by the Officers' Association, was read by Mr. Tilley, and Mr. Richter elucidated the practice under it.

The agreement between the Metropolitan Life of New York and the London Life was read by Mr. Tilley. The first clause dealt with the limitation of agents. If an agent leaves either company he could not become a member of the agency staff of the other in the same locality for one year. Mr. Tilley thought this was not fair to the agent, but witness explained that in "industrial" insurance this was necessary. He said that the agent built up an asset which he might enter to either company.

"You destroy the asset?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"No! We think that it is our asset."

"No! It is the agent's good will."

Witness Surrender Values.

In reference to surrender values, Mr. Tilley asked, "Why should not full reserve be given to the policyholders. Witness said there were many reasons. It was the only way of getting back to the company the excess money spent to get the policy. That is the full surrender must be released to the company. Then, again, it was apt to be a selection against the company.

Division of Profits.

Mr. Richter said that the division of profits were 95 per cent. to the policyholders and 5 per cent. to the shareholders.

The statement of dividends declared from 1874 to 1905 was read. In 1889 Mr. Tilley found that the dividend was not paid, but was applied to wipe out a debt of $2,000 in the expense account.

Agents' Commission.

Agents of the company received from 50 to 75 per cent. commission on first year business, and 5 per cent. on renewals as long as the agent remained with the company. An average good agent would be able to save $1,500 to $1,800 out of an average total remuneration of $2,700. He could not say what of this was rebates.

Speaking of rebates Mr. Tilley asked Mr. Richter if he had any remedy for this evil.

"I thought I had solved the question years ago, but I have given it up long ago. It would be impossible to stop it without legislation, the kind of legislation that punishes "chicken stealing."

"If it was entirely prohibited would it cut out some of the business? asked ed Mr. Langmuir.

Witness did not think so.

Policyholder May Benefit.

Commissioner Kent thought it would have the tendency to lessen lapses and incrtase profits to the policyholders.

Witness said that it might have that effect.

"If the Parliament of Canada are called upon to legislate to enable an agent to keep these rebates in his pocket and the policyholder's is not going to reap the benefit, I should like you to say so?" continued Commissioner Kent.

"I did not mean to leave that impression. It would certainly redound in a great measure to the benefit of the policyholders."

The cost of first years business was about 2 1-4 times the expenses of procuring same. This was a remarkable showing, and the lowest disclosed in history of the commission.

Rebaters Should Be Punished.

Commissioner Kent asked for Mr. Richter's opinion on how to stop rebating. He wanted in full presented in writing.

"I can tell you now. All parties should be punished. The receiver is equally guilty with the giver."

Capt. Sharpe Nominated.

Uxbridge, June 29.—The Liberal-Conservative Association of North Ontario met in convention here yesterday, to nominate a candidate to contest the next Dominion election. Capt. Sam Sharpe of Uxbridge was the unanimous choice.

He is a successful lawyer, popular in social and athletic circles, and a political organizer of exceptional ability.

Night Guards at Penitentiary.

Kingston, June 29.—On July 1, a new guard system will come into force at the penitentiary. Hereafter there will be a separate staff of night guards, who will do nothing but night duty. At present the system is a mixed one. The night guards will each receive $650 a year or $50 more than the day men. This is the outcome of the late escapes.

BRINGING CZAR TO TIME.

Sedition in the Army—Further Details of Revolt of Imperial Guards—Change May Be Near.

St. Petersburg, June 29.—The campaign which the opposition elements in Parliament are waging to compel Emperor Nicholas to dismiss the Goremykin Cabinet and accept the principle of a responsible Ministry promises soon to be crowned with success. When the Probrejensky Regiment, "His Majesty's Own," pronounced its solidarity with Parliament and its agrarian program, in the big camp of the Guard Regiments at Tsarskoe-Selo, less than a dozen miles from Peterhof, the Emperor's eyes were opened.

It transpired yesterday that all three battalions of the Probrejensky Regiment joined in the resolutions, but when they were surrounded by grenadiers, lancers, sharpshooters and a brigade of artillery, two of the battalions weakened. The other, however, faced the music, was disarmed and Wednesday night, with six officers, was sent under escort to Medvid, Province of Novgorod, where the Japanese prisoners were confined, to undergo trial by court-martial.

The court is about to return to Tsarskoe-Selo, owing to the discovery that there are revolutionaries among the palace servants at Peterhof.

Late last night it was reported that serious disorders had broken out in the garrison of Osowiec, one of the great fortresses defending the Polish frontier against German invasion.

Emperor Nicholas is quoted as saying yesterday that he had been so affected by the disloyalty of the Probrejensky Regiment, which he had so often honored by wearing its uniform, that he had been unable to sleep for two nights.

SUNDAY CARS IN WINNIPEG.

Ratepayers Favor Proposition as Well as Municipal Power Plant.

Winnepeg, June 29.—Ratepayers voted two to one yesterday in favor of allowing the Street Railway Co. to inaugurate a Sunday car service. Although the city's population is over 100,000, no Sunday cars have ever run.

The bylaw to spend three and a quarter millions on a municipal power plant carried by three to one. The city will bring power from the Winnipeg River, fifty miles east of the city.

The establishment of a board of control was also favored.

McINTOSH BROS.

MR. BORDEN'S BIG DOUBT

Is Mr. Brodeur Fit to Be a Minister of the Crown?

"Raymond Prefontaine" says Leader of Opposition, "Was no Coward," but "His Successor Was Cowardly in Hiding Behind His Memory"—Held In More Respect Prefontaine's Memory Than He Could Ever Hold That of Mr. Brodeur.

Ottawa, June 29.—The vote upon Mr. Northrup's amendment to adopt the minority report on the Arctic expedition resulted: yeas 33, nays 93. The majority report was carried by the same vote reversed.

There was a tense moment in the House about midnight when Mr. Brodeur taunted R. L. Borden with cowardice in attacking the dead.

"The hon. gentleman," said Mr. Brodeur, "sat here for years while Raymond Prefontaine was alive and he dared not attack him. He waited for his death so he could not defend himself and then reviled him."

"That is a deliberate falsehood," interrupted Mr. Borden.

Mr. Brodeur at once sat down and Mr. Fielding, who was leading the House, appealed to Mr. Borden not to set a bad example.

After a brief colloquy between Mr. Speaker and Messrs. Fielding and R. L. Borden, the leader of the Opposition, quivering with suppressed excitement, said:

"I withdraw the statement as being unparliamentary, but I say it is a statement without foundation."

Mr. Brodeur showed no magnanimity, but continued to taunt Mr. Borden, who restrained himself admirably.

Mr. Borden touched upon Mr. Brodeaur's attack. There was one thing to be said about Raymond Prefontaine: He was not a coward. His successor was cowardly in hiding behind his memory. It was contemptible. The speaker was free to say that he held in more respect the memory of Raymond Prefontaine than he ever could hold the memory of Mr. Brodeur. He doubted whether any man who spoke as Mr. Brodeur had spoken was fit to be a Minister of the Crown.

The debate was begun in the morning and lasted all day. Dr. Stockton of St. John, N.B., opened the discussion.

Threw Stone At Train.

Port Arthur, June 29.—Louis C. Rioux, arrested for throwing a stone at a Canadian Pacific train near White River a few days ago, was yesterday morning sentenced to three and a half years' imprisonment in Kingston Penitentiary. The stone which Rioux threw struck a passenger on the head, necessitating his removal to Port Arthur Hospital.

Talleyrand's Thirteen Oaths.

Talleyrand took thirteen oaths of fidelity—to Clement XIII. when he entered holy orders, to Clement XIV. when he became bishop of Autun, to Louis XVI. in 1780, to the kin and the constitution, to the directory in 1795, to the directory in 1790 as minister of foreign affairs, to the three consuls, to Bonaparte sole consul, to Napoleon emperor, to Louis XVIII. in 1814, to Louis XVIII. at the second restoration in 1815, to Charles X. in 1824, to Louis Philippe in 1830.

A Generous Cardinal.

Cardinal Bonaparte was a grandson of Lucien Bonaparte. He was a very charitable man. During one of his illnesses a servant came to him and said that a poor person at the door begged for alms. "Give him what money you will find in my purse," said the cardinal. "There is no money, eminence. The silver spoons are all given away. We have nothing left but pewter spoons." "Well, bring him in and give him a good meal."

Disappointed in the Boy.

"I don't know what kind of figure that boy'll cut in life," said the old man, with a sigh. He's gone an' shattered all my hopes!"

"Why, what's he been a-doin' of?"

"He's been a-doin' of nothin'," was the reply, "'cept writin' poetry on barn doors when I had set my stakes to make a carpenter or a congressman out o' him!"

Bleeding Piles Cured

—after Years of Suffering.

Miracle-days may be past—but the day of saving people from suffering is ever-present.

What is more distressing than itching, Bleeding Piles? Some say the only cure is the knife. We say, operations are unnecessary. Read this letter:

"For years I had Piles, which protruded and bled freely. The itching pain was sometimes almost unbearable. Often I suffered so severely it was next to impossible to remain on duty. It was a hardship to walk. I tried many remedies, but with poor success.

"This winter, in New York—at the Bench Show—I suffered greatly—was almost compelled to remain in my room. I tried several remedies—without relief.

"On my return home, Mira Ointment was advised. I used it. In only a short time, all the irritation and pain ceased. I can now walk with ease and attend my duties as a member of the Fire Department.

"I strongly recommend Mira Ointment to anyone suffering from this annoying complaint.

ORANGEVILLE'S SENSATION.

Woman Dead—Two Men Flee—Warrants Issued Charging Laundryman and Druggist With Serious Crime.

Orangeville, June 29.—On the serious charge of attempting to procure child abortion, leading to the death of a woman, warrants have been issued for the arrest of Walter Jackson of the firm of Jackson & Wells, Orangeville, and Arthur Douglas, druggist. Both men have disappeared.

Miss Elizabeth Wells, aged 30, who was junior partner in the firm of the Jackson & Wells Laundry Co., is the dead woman. She was taken violently ill at the office Friday last. She was removed to her home and Dr. Carson called. He found her suffering from a severe attack of dysentery, superinduced by powerful tablets she had taken, so it is stated, at the instance of Jackson to relieve a condition of which he later acknowledged responsibility for.

Miss Wells is said to have told the facts to the physician, and then lapsed into unconsciousness, expiring two hours later at 3 p. m.

She was buried at 3 o'clock on Saturday without a burial permit having been taken out.

Coroner Henry, learning of the circumstances, ordered the body exhumed, and a post mortem examination was held.

From what can be learned, it appears that on Friday night, two weeks ago, an operation was performed on deceased to procure an abortion. The place where the operation took place was upstairs in the West End laundry building next to the postoffice, and the name of A. C. Douglass, a local druggist, is connected with this phase of the case.

The inquest will continue to-day.

SHOT BY CHARIVARI PARTY.

Joseph Hussey Was Struck by Several Shot and May Die.

Goderich, June 29.—Joseph Hussey, guest at a wedding party at Kingsbridge, was wounded by a shot from a gun in the hands of one of a charivari party Wednesday night, and may die.

Wednesday was the wedding day of John Dalton and Miss Frances Moss of that place, and in the evening there were festivities at the couple's new home.

About midnight a charivari party put in an appearance, and Joseph Hussey, 25 years of age, went outside to quiet the disturbance.

A gun carried by one of the demonstrators was discharged, and several of the shot struck Hussey in the head and side, blood flowing freely from the wounds. Doctors were summoned from Goderich and Kintail, and in response to a message Provicial Constable Phelan left yesterday morning for Kingsbridge to investigate. It is likely several arrests will be made.

WILL HOLD NIAGARA PLAIN.

Sir Wilfrid Writes Premier Whitney In Contradiction to Rumor.

Toronto, June 29.—"I have received a communication from Sir Wilfrid Laurier saying it is not the intention of the Dominion Government to sell or dispose of Niagara Common."

This statement, made by Premier Whitney, yesterday afternoon, upsets the rumor, one that had apparently some grounds for existence that the drilling ground at Niagara was to be abandoned.

Mr. Whitney said he had written the Dominion Premier with reference to the accredited intentions of the Government, suggesting that if the plain were about to pass from its possession that they be turned over to the Ontario Government, provided the consideration asked was suitable. It was pointed out by Mr. Whitney that the historic nature of the locality made its possession by the people desirable.

Falls Power For Syracuse.

Buffalo, June 29.—The Niagara, Lockport & Ontario Power Co., the transmission line that will deliver power from Niagara Falls, Ont., to Syracuse, began yesterday sending power beyond Lockport. A jump of part of the distance between Lockport and Syracuse was made yesterday, another section will be hitched on to-day, and on Saturday power will be delivered in Syracuse. Ten thousand horsepower will be delivered in Syracuse, where it will be supplied to the street railway system. The power supplied by the Niagara, Lockport & Ontario Power Co. is produced by the Ontario Power Co. on the Canadian side of the Falls. Syracuse is 150 miles from the source of the power.

Dr. Robt. Craik Is Dead.

Montreal, June 29.—Dr. Robt. Craik, LL.D., for many years dean of the medical faculty of McGill, died yesterday morning at the age of 78. Dr. Craik graduated in 1834; joined the McGill staff in 1856 as demonstrator, and through various grades rose to the deanship. He leaves no family. He was well known as a breeder of stock, having won the Quebec Queen's Plate several times, and won prizes for his cattle at the Chicago World's Fair and at several Toronto Fairs.

Ask Power Privileges.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 29.—The International Railway Co. has petitioned the Dominion Government for permission to develop 10,000 horsepower at its local station, and also be allowed to transmit the power to the American side. The Legislature has not yet acted on the matter. The waterworks board of this city has also applied to the Government for a similar grant.

WHOLE BODY A BLISTER

Hamilton Youth, Despite Warnings, Grabs a Live Wire.

Alarming Flash Followed and Frank Findlay Was Thrown to Ground Insensible—His Hand Was Horribly Burned and His Whole Body In a Blister Through Contact With Cataract Power Co.'s Wire.

Hamilton, June 30.—Frank Findlay, a youth who boards at 72 West Main street, is lying unconscious in the City Hospital, and the chances of his recovery are not considered bright. During an electrical storm last evening one of the Cataract Power Co.'s wires at Main and Parks streets broke. Findlay was sitting in front of the house, and in spite of warnings he ran out and grabbed the wire with his left hand. There was an alarming flash and the youth was thrown to the ground insensible. It was thought at first that he was dead, but signs of life were discovered and he was hustled off to the hospital. An examination showed that his hand was horribly burned, and that nearly the whole of his body was in a blister.

Both Arms Were Mangled.

Kingston, June 30.—Eva Wollesley, working in the Imperial Laundry, will likely lose both of her arms. She was looking out of a window and turning around unthinkingly put her hand on one of the mangles. Trying to save it, her other hand was caught, and both were badly crushed almost to the elbows.

Whirled Around Shaft.

Welland, June 30.—Douglas McCallum was caught in a belt at Tewsley's sawmill in Wainfleet Township, whirled around a shaft and horribly injured. His right leg has been amputated, and he may die.

T. J. FARMER'S DEATH.

Killed In Berry Field by a Stroke of Lightning.

Port Dalhousie, June 30.—During a severe thunderstorm here yesterday afternoon, Thomas J. Farmer, a well-known fruit grower of this section, was killed.

He, with his wife, were picking berries in the field when the storm came up, and to get out of the rain took refuge under a tree.

Mrs. Farmer also was badly shocked, and at present is not able to move.

Her skin, as well as Mr. Farmer's, was burned almost black from the effects of the flash.

Mr. Farmer has lived here nearly all his life, and was a highly-respected citizen.

A. Roberts, a neighbor, was ploughing in the next field, and he and his horse were knocked down, but beyond a bad shaking up are all right.

Killed by Lightning.

Pembroke, June 30.—Mrs. John Sullivan of Chichester, Que., was killed by lightning during a heavy storm that passed over this section Thursday night.

THE HUSSEY SHOOTING.

Feeling Over Guest List Led to the Charivari Affair.

Goderich, June 30.—The Kingsbridge shooting affair of Wednesday night is assuming a more serious aspect. Jos. Hussey, the man who was shot, is not expected to recover. Twenty-seven shots, size "B," lodged in his body neck and head.

Early yesterday morning three young men, Matthew McCreight, Thomas Farrish and Charles Taylor, were lodged in the county jail. Further arrests are expected.

It appears that there was some ill-feeling on the part of a considerable number of people around Kingsbridge because they had not been invited to the Dalton-Moss wedding on Wednesday. When the crowd gathered around the Dalton house at midnight two or three of them had guns. Hussey came out of the house and fired a gun for the purpose of scaring the intruders away, and as he turned to re-enter the house some one in the crowd fired on him.

Hussey belongs to a well-known family of Ashfield Township. Rev. Father Hussey of Ridgetown is his brother, and he has arrived and is attending him. It is reported that one of the men under arrest has confessed to the shooting.

To Repeal Pensions.

Finance Minister Introduces Bill In the Commons.

Unpopular Measure to be Repealed Although Minister Introducing It Thinks Principle of Act Repealed Is Right and Will Yet Be Accepted By the People - Lord's Day Amendment to Cause Confusion.

Ottawa, June 30.—In the House yesterday Mr. Fielding introduced his bill to repeal the act respecting annuities to certain Privy Councillors. The measure sets forth that the act of last session is repealed from July 1, 1906. In reply to a question for an explanation, Mr. Fielding recalled the fact that near the end of last session a series of financial measures were presented to the House. For all these measures, he thought, reasons more or less forcible could be given. Nevertheless, it must be confessed that the whole of these financial matters, coming forward at that stage of the session, had not been received with any wild enthusiasm by the general public. This particular measure had been the subject of very special criticism, and the Government had come to the conclusion to present to the House a bill repealing what was regarded as an obnoxious measure. The measure was right in principle, and, while it was the present very unpopular, he believed the time would come when it would be received in a different way.

Question of Vested Rights.

Mr. Foster inquired whether the Government had taken into consideration the matter of vested rights, which might have been created under the bill. Certain action might have been taken by the beneficiaries of the act which involved others. Had any provison been made to meet such cases.

Mr. Fielding replied that having regard to the circumstances under which the matter was brought forward, he thought it could not be argued successfully that any vested rights had been created. Although some persons might have regarded the legislation of last year as settling the policy of the country, there was no bargain or contract constituting an arrangement between the beneficiaries and the Government.

The Lord's Day Bill.

When the Lord's Day bill was again taken up in committee, at Mr. Aylesworth's suggestion, Mr. Piche's amendment to clause 17, validating provincial laws relating in any way to the observance of the Lord's Day, was revised so as to retain the latter part of the clause relating to the method of proceeding against offenders which had been inadvertently struck out.

On motion of the Minister of Justice also clause 2 was amended in such a way as to prohibit the following of one's ordinary business or calling for gain, instead of following any business or calling on Sunday for gain.

Mr. Piche next moved that clause 2 be amended by validating all laws now in force or hereafter to be passed relating to the observance of the Lord's Day which came within the exclusive jurisdiction of Provincial Legislatures.

Mr. Aylesworth said he was glad to see the amendment proposed. It was a recognition of the principles that ought to be on the face of the statute, a recognition of the co-ordinate powers of the provinces to legislate on the subject. That amendment, he believed, would make the bill less disagreeable to the people of Quebec.

What Amendment Attempts.

Mr. Borden said the amendment attempted to place in each Provincial Legislature the power to legalize buying, selling, laboring and causing others to labor for gain on Sunday.

Armand Lavergne: Can this Parliament delegate to a province any jurisdiction over criminal matters?

Mr. Monk: I am not prepared to say that it can.

Mr. Gervais (Montreal) and Mr. Chisholm (East Huron) urged the necessity of a more elastic statute. It should not be rigid. There should be some discretion in the various provinces.

Mr. Lavergne (Montmagny) said the proposed amendment was futile. It would accomplish nothing. A crime once defined by this Parliament was a crime throughout Canada, and no province could make it innocent.

Mr. Stockton (St. John, N. B.) asked whether this Parliament could delegate its power over criminal matters to a Provincial Legislature.

Mr. Aylesworth: Certainly not.

Mr. MacDonald (Pictou, N. S.) endeavored to argue that where acts of Parliament and provincial laws clashed the latter should govern.

Mr. Monk enquired whether the amendment, if carried, would permit the Province of Quebec to legalize Sohmer Park at Montreal on Sunday.

Nobody agreed to answer this question.

Means Nothing at All.

Mr. Borden said the amendment meant absolutely nothing at all. It was an attempt to wrest the constitution and change its entire scheme and scope. Federal matters were given over to provincial control and provincial functions were being usurped by Parliament. It was proper for this Parliament to fix a day of rest, but details as to observance should be relegated to the provinces. He expressed no opinion as to the constitutionality or the efficiency of the proposed amendment.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier urged that the amendment be adopted. No law on this subject could be enforced beyond public opinion. As far as possible this subject should be relegated to provincial control.

The amendment passed without division.

Quite a number of minor amendments were made at the night session, and a section was added by which the law does not come into effect until March 1, 1907.

At 1.15 a.m. the committee reported the bill as amended.

Montreal's Protest.

Montreal, June 30.—Although the weather was threatening last evening, some 10,000 people gathered in the Champ de Mars to listen to one of the most scathing denunciations ever uttered against a Ministry. In the course of his remarks Mr. Bourassa, M. P., said: "The man or Government, endeavoring to force such a bill (Sunday) down the throats of the people is unworthy of the name of Liberal. A resolution was adopted which stated that "The citizens of Montreal and its suburbs in public meeting assembled strongly protest against the adoption of the Lord's Day bill now under discussion in the Federal Parliament," and then followed the reasons at great length.

LOVED AND REVERED.

Memorial Service to Alex. Muir In School He Long Taught.

Toronto, June 30.—The funeral of the late Alexander Muir will be held to-day at 2 o'clock.

At 11 a.m. the remains will be taken to Chalmers Presbyterian Church, where they will lie in state, and the public will be permitted to view until 2 o'clock. The sermon will be preached by the pastor, Rev. H. A. MacPherson, after which the funeral will proceed to Mount Pleasant Cemetery.

The closing exercises for the June term in Gladstone avenue School yesterday were conducted as a memorial service. To be present and have heard "The Maple Leaf Forever" swelling up from the voices of 400 children who knew and loved the departed teacher, and to have observed with what strained decorum and deferential awe the children dispersed at the close of the service have left an impression not soon to be forgotten. Mr. Muir was not only loved but revered. Trustees extolled the virtues of the departed in speeches to the children.

RIOTERS REMANDED.

Officers Wounded In Kingston Fight Still In Hospital.

Kingston, June 30.—Police Magistrate Farrell had the 21 riotous Italians before him yesterday morning. They were remanded for a week. This is due to the fact that the wounded men, Sergt. Nesbitt, and Detective McRae, are unable to be moved to allow identification of their assailants.

The injured men are resting nicely, and if complications do not arise, will be around soon. Sergt. Nesbitt has a bad cut in his breast, but his lung was not pierced.

The wounded Italian, in the hospital, cut in a melee among themselves, is doing well.

Cattle Killed By Lightning.

Charlottetown, P.E.I., June 30.—During an electrical storm Thursday Fred White, a young farmer at York Point, near Charlottetown, had ten of his cattle killed by lightning, only two of the herd remaining alive.

$42,972,755 vs. $96,805,952.

RAPID GROWTH.

Are we not growing at a rapid rate? Are not the howlers of former days for more economical management of the affairs of the Dominion, carrying out their pledges with a vengeance?

When the former advocates of economy assumed control the expenditure for the year was $42,972,755. This sum they declared was too large, and that if the people would entrust them with power, they would reduce the annual expenditure some $3,000,000, or $4,000,000.

How has this been done? The sum asked to be voted for the current year is no less than $96,805,950. Instead of a decrease of some $4,000,000, have an increase of $53,833,195 more than doubled. There is no doubt about it, we are growing and that to, too rapidly.

Mr. Fielding has just laid before Parliament a second list of estimates of expenditure for the fiscal year beginning next month. As the dates are to be changed the period covered in these estimates is only 9 months. The Finance Minister asks for $4,667,916.71. In the main estimates he had taken $67,936,547.70, making a total of $72,604,464, which would be at the rate of $96,805,752 for twelve months.

For the year closing with this month Mr. Fielding has estimated the expenditure at $82,000,000, which shows an intention to increase the pace for the next nine months.

Take note of this growing time. For the ten years before the change of Government the outlay had varied from a little less than $41,000,000 up to $45,000,000. The following record shows what has happened since:

1897	$42,972,755
1898	45,334,281
1899	51,542,635
1900	52,717,466
1901	57,982,866
1902	63,970,799
1903	61,746,571
1904	72,255,047
1905	78,804,138
1906	82,000,000
1907, estimated and voted	96,805,952

Ratepayers of this growing Dominion, how do you like it? What do you think of these economists?

Intercolonial Supplies.

HOW MINISTERS HELP THEMSELVES.

The Hon. Mr. Emmerson, Minister of Railways and Canals, when questioned in the Commons, admitted that he had been President of the New Brunswick Petroleum Company, and that he was still a shareholder.

A return was subsequently laid upon the table, showing how the Minister had prostituted his power and patronage to turn business over to the company in which he was pecuniarily interested.

Read in the light of this admission by the Minister, and the return becomes interesting.

For instance, it is shown that on Jan. 23, of last year, Mr. Emmerson telegraphed Mr. D. Pottinger, general manager of the Intercolonial, as follows;

"Please arrange to purchase crude oil from New Brunswick Petroleum Company for Pintsch gas purposes at market rates. Have written you on the subject.

(Signed) "H. R. EMMERSON."

The letter referred to in the last clause of the telegram bore the same date, and read as follows;

"Dear Mr. Pottinger,—If the report of the electrician is favorable as to the use of the New Brunswick petrleum for the manufacture of Pintsch gas, it would perhaps be as well to purchase from the New Brunswick Petroleum Company, at the regular market rates.

"Yours faithfully,
"H. R. EMMERSON."

Following the receipt of these messages, Mr. Pottinger instructed Mr. C. R. Palmer, the storekeeper, as follows, dated Jan. 25, 1905;

"Please arrange to carry out wishes of the Minister in regard to the matter.

(Signed) "POTTINGER."

The effect of this correspondence was immediately seen. The Intercolonial Railway had been buying from 65 to 1,320 gallons of crude petroleum a year from the New Brunswick Company. The month following the correspondence it bought 7,926 gallons, and the purchases have been considerable ever since, amounting in the year to about 50,000 gallons, at 10 cents a gallon,

As these facts come to light people will no longer wonder why the Intercolonial Railway does not pay running expenses.

DOST KNOW THE MAN?

(Exchange.)

Dost love a man who always kicks,
no matter what you do,
Who kicks with most prodigious ease
the whole long season through,
Who kicks if anything goes wrong.
and kicks if it goes right,
Who kicks because he likes to kick,
and kicks with all his might?
We know some awful kickers on this wicked mundane sphere,
Who came on earth by accident, and kick because they're here.
To make themselves uncomfortable
and other people sick;
They drive their friends to suicide,
and still they always kick,
We know a man who kicks and kicks
the blessed livelong day,
And if there's naught to kick about,
he's kicking anyway,
And times when things are going right and other men would smile,
He kicks on general principles, and kicketh all the while.

That is pleasant reading, the letter from "A Bellevillian" in another column. You may say that we knew it all before. Well, perhaps we did. But it stirs our love for the dear home town to know that our guests see and appreciate the improvements constantly being made. And if some of our less progressive citizens would allow just such comments to stir some of their dollars into making their own particular property more attractive and modern, wouldn't it be cheering? Don't be afraid to get out of a rut, gentle reader (if you have been jogging along in one), and beautify your home surroundings, and your place of business as well. Thus will you aid the cause of municipal improvement and call down on your own head the praises of neighbor and of visitor continually.

BATS HAVE SIXTH SENSE.

(Chicago Inter Ocean.)

"If you blind a bat," said a biologist, "the creature somehow will still see, If you doubt this, consult Levy.

"Levy, the great authority, once removed the eyes of several bats and covered the vacant sockets with leather patches. In this condition the bats flew about the room, avoiding the walls and corners, and, when a door was opened, they flew out of it without touching the jamb or the frame.

"Afterwwards, in flying through a sewer that made a right angle, the bats turned at the proper point without brushing the walls, and they flew through threads suspended from the ceiling without touching them, though between the threads there was only an interval sufficient for their passage with spread pinions.

"Bats, living in the dark, have found their eyes almost useless, and have developed a sixth sense that takes the place of eyesight."

KIPLING ON LITERATURE.

Great Story Writer Makes a Notable Speech—How Lives and Deeds of Men Are Preserved.

The dinner of the Royal Academy in London on May 7th was marked by a speech from Rudyard Kipling on literature and its making.

Mr. Rudyard Kipling, who was received with loud cheers, said: A great, and I frankly admit a somewhat terrifying honor has come to me; but I think, compliments apart, the most case-hardened worker in letters speaking to such an assembly as this must recognise the gulf that separates even the least of those who do things worthy to be written about from even the best of those who have written things worthy of being talked about.

There is an ancient legend which tells us that when a man first achieved a most notable deed he wished to explain to his tribe what he had done. As soon as he began to speak, however, he was smitten with dumbness, he lacked words, and sat down. Then there arose—according to the story—a masterless man, one who had taken no part in the action of his fellow, who had no special virtues, but afflicted—that is the phrase—with the magic of the necessary words. (Laughter.) He saw, he told, he described the merits of the notable deed in such a fashion, we are assured, that the words "became alive and walked up and down in the hearts of all his hearers."

Thereupon, the tribe seeing that the words were certainly alive, and fearing lest the man with the words would hand down untrue tales about them to their children, they took and killed him. But later they saw that the magic was in the words, not in the man.

Harsh Criticisms.

We have progressed in many directions since the time of this early and destructive criticism—(laughter)—but so far we do not seem to have found a sufficient substitute for the necessary word as the final record to which all achievement must look. Even to-day, when all is done, those who have done it must wait until all has been said by the masterless man with the words. It is certain that the overwhelming bulk of those words will perish in the future as they have perished in the past; it is true that a minute fraction will continue to exist, and by the light of these words, and by that light only, will our children be able to judge of the phases of our generation.

Now we desire beyond all things to stand well with our children, but when our story comes to be told we do not know who will have the telling of it; we are too close to the tellers; there are many tellers and they are all talking together; and even if we knew them we must not kill them. (Laughter.) But the old and terrible instinct which taught our ancestors to kill the original story-teller, warns us that we shall not be far wrong if we challenge any man who shows signs of being afflicted with the magic of the necessary words.

Under No Law.

May not this be the reason why, without any special legislation on its behalf, literature has always stood a little outside the law as the one calling that is absolutely free — free in the sense that it needs no protection. For instance, if as occasionally happens, a judge makes bad law, or a surgeon a bad operation, or a manufacturer makes bad food, criticism upon their action is by law and custom confined to comparatively narrow limits. But if a man, as occasionally happens, makes a book, there is no limit to the criticism that may be directed against it—(laughter)—and it is perfectly as it should be. The world recognizes that little things, like bad law, bad surgery and bad food, only affect the cheapest commodity that we know about:—human life—(Laughter.) Therefore, in these circumstances, men can afford to be swayed by pity for the offender, by interest in his family, by fear, or loyalty or respect for the organization he represents, or even a desire to do him justice.

Only the Truth.

But when the question is of words—words that may become alive and walk up and down the hearts of the hearers—it is then that this world of ours, which is disposed to take an interest in the future, feels instinctively that it is better that a thousand innocent people should be punished rather than that one guilty word should be preserved, carrying that which is an untrue tale of the tribe. The chances, of course, are almost astronomically remote that any given tale will survive for so long as it takes an oak to grow to timber size. But that guiding instinct warns us not to trust to chance a matter of the supremest concern. In this durable record, if anything short of indisputable and undistilled truth be seen there, we all feel, how shall our achievements profit us?

Miracle of Words.

The record of the tribe is its enduring literature. The magic of literature lies in the words, and not in any man. Witness, a thousand excellent, strenuous words can leave us quite cold or put us to sleep, whereas a bare half-hundred words breathed upon by some man in his agony, or in his exaltation, or in his idleness, ten generations ago can still lead whole nations into and out of captivity, can open to us the doors of three worlds, or stir us so intolerably that we can scarcely abide to look at our own souls. It is a miracle—one that happens very seldom. But secretly each one of the masterless men with the words has hope, or has had hope, that the miracle may be wrought again through him. And why not? If a tinker in Bedford jail, if a pamphleteering shopkeeper, pilloried in London, if a muzzy Scotsman, if a despised German Jew, or a condemned French thief, or an English Admiralty official with a taste for letters can be miraculously afflicted with the magic of the necessary words, why not any man at any time?

The Written Record.

Our world, which is only concerned in the perpetuation of the record, sanctions that hope as kindly and just as cruelly as nature sanctions love. All it suggests is that the man with the words shall wait upon the man of achievement, and step by step with him try to tell the story to the tribe. All it demands is that the magic of every word shall be tried out to the uttermost by every means, fair and foul, that the mind of man can suggest. There is no

A Lesson In Japanese Courtesy.

I remember many years ago a dinner at the palace—a great official dinner—where among the guests were many of the old leaders of rebellions, old upholders of the shogunate. The last shogun himself, Prince Tokugawa, proud, silent, grim, sat opposite to me, and I wondered if any human emotion could show itself on that impassive face. At that moment the emperor raised his glass and bowed in kindly smiling fashion to his ancient opponent. The face changed, was suffused for one illuminating moment with a glow of responsive fire. It seemed as if the emperor was once more thanking the shogun for his splendid patriotic act when after years of struggle he voluntarily laid his power and his prerogatives at the emperor's feet "for the good of the country," and as if Prince Tokugawa, looking back—and looking forward—for Japan, said to himself once more, "It was well done."—Mary C. Fraser in World's Work.

Figures That Stagger.

It used to be that astronomy, with its stupendous magnitudes, incredible velocities and inconceivable distances, seemed to make the greatest demand on man's belief, says the London Telegraph. Today it is physics. We read, for instance, that Hertz's oscillations give rise to 500,000,000 oscillations per second. Where is the man who can conceive of anything happening in the five-hundred-millionth part of a second? But this is quite a long period compared to some of those now accepted as inevitable optics. According to Maxwell's great theory, a light wave is a series of alternating electric currents flowing in air or interplanetary space and changing their direction 1,000,000,000,000,000 times per second. And this is supposed to be true of every form of light coming from the sun, the electric lamp or a lucifer match. Who can think of anything happening in the thousand-million-millionth part of a second?

Landseer's Valet.

Sir Edwin Landseer, the famous animal painter, had an old servant—his butler, valet and faithful slave—named William, who was particularly assiduous in guarding the outer portal. No one could by any possibility gain direct access to Sir Edwin. The answer would invariably be, "Sir Hedwin is not at 'ome." The prince consort himself once received this answer when he called, amplified on that occasion by the assurance that "he had gone to a wedding," an entire fiction on William's part, as the prince found out, for on walking boldly in and round the garden he noticed Sir Edwin looking out of his studio window. This was the faithful attendant who one day, when a lion had died at the "zoo" and his corpse came up in a four wheeled cab to be painted from, startled his master with the question, "Please, Sir Hedwin, did you border a lion?"

SPOTLESS SERVICE.

Service over the Lake Shore Railway may well be called spotless service. Throughout this entire system there is a noteworthy lack of dust and dirt. Sparkling linen and white-clad waiters greet the traveller in the dining cars, and this "spick and span" appearance extends throughout the train. One steps down at a journey's end over the Lake Shore as clean as when he boarded the train. Cleanliness is but one feature that has made The Lake Shore the most popular road in America. Others are its luxurious coaches, absolute safety, highest speed and punctuality. Tell the agent to have your ticket read "Via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for information concerning rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Pass'gr Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

No Peace For Discoverers.

It is remarkable how few of the discoverers and conquerors of the new world died in peace. Columbus died of a broken heart, Balboa was disgracefully beheaded, Cortes was dishonored, Sir Walter Raleigh was beheaded, Pizarro was murdered, Ojeda died in poverty and Henry Hudson was left to the mercy of the Indians along the bay which he discovered.

Don't Kill the Hawk.

Man has sinned more than any other animal in trifling with nature's balance. Clover crops and the killing of hawks are apparently unrelated, yet the hawks eat the field mice, the field mice prey on the immature bees, and the bees fertilize the clover blossoms. The death of a hawk means an over-increase of field mice and a consequent destruction of the bees.

Talks on Orange Meat

(THE PURE FOOD)

Mixing and Flaking.

After the wheat is thoroughly cooked—all starch cells broken—and starch converted into carbohydrates—it goes to the mixing machines. Here, malt is added, which converts the starch into maltose (Malt Sugar), which makes ORANGE MEAT so nutritious and wholesome. Then the malted wheat is passed through special machines, which turn the wheat kernals into individual flakes. Orange Meat is then ready for the ovens, to be baked a deliciously crisp golden brown.

Orange Meat

Mercerized paper lining of every package insures Orange Meat being always fresh, and clean. At all grocers in 15c and 25c packages. Every 15c package contains a coupon, good for valuable premiums. 25c or "Jumbo" package contains 2½ times the quantity of smaller size. Write "Orange Meat, Kingston" for new premium catalogue.

Doubled in size in three years.

AND NOW OPERATE PRIVATE FREIGHT CARS.

The Mooney Biscuit and Candy Company, Limited, Stratford, Canada, is the fastest growing business in the Dominion

Started in 1903, more ovens were necessary in nine months. In eighteen months, another wing was added to the original building, increasing the floor space by 18,000 square feet.

Building operations now under way will double the size of the Mooney Bakeries and Candy Manufactories, and give a total floor space of from 150,000 to 200,000 square feet. The illustration in the upper left corner shows the enlarged works when the addition is completed.

True to their policy, of adopting latest methods, the Mooney Biscuit and Candy Company, Limited, have had built and now operate, their own private freight cars. This company is the first in Canada to adopt this economical and rapid system of shipments.

Mooney's "Perfection Cream Sodas"

Women

Here is Good Proof that Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets Make Healthy Women.

Here is a testimonial, wholly unsolicited, which proves that Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women will make healthy women even after physicians and other remedies have failed.

Mrs. McDonald consents to its publication.

B. N. Robinson & Co., Coaticook.

Gentlemen,—I can testify to the truth of the statement concerning Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women, "They make healthy women."

I was in a run-down condition, felt tired, irritable and all out of sorts. Was just able to drag myself about from day to day. I had not much faith in the efficacy of ordinary remedies to help women, for I had tried them. I went therefore to a leading physician of Montreal. He evidently did not know what I specially needed, for his medicine did me little good. I then went to another physician. He gave me a liquid prescription, which made me feel better while I was taking it, but worse when I stopped. Then a friend, who had proved their worth, recommended Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets. I tried them and found they contained just what a run-down woman needs. Again your statement proved true. Improvement was noticed the first week. They increased my appetite and helped digestion. I forgot that I had any nerves. I began to sleep well nights and got up in the morning with the tired feeling gone and ready for the day's duties. In fact, they did for me just what you claim they will do for women in your advertisements, and best of all I continued feeling well after I stopped taking the tablets.

MRS. D. McDONALD,
12 Outremont Terrace,

These tablets will do for any run-down women just what they did for Mrs. McDonald.

JESUS AND THE CHILDREN—GOLDEN TEXT IS "IT IS NOT THE WILL OF YOUR FATHER WHICH IS IN HEAVEN THAT ONE OF THESE LITTLE ONES SHOULD PERISH."

HISTORICAL SETTING.

Place in the Life of Christ.—The last half of the third year of His ministry.

Time—Autumn, A.D. 29. Not long after the transfiguration. The disciples had returned from their northern journey with Jesus.

Place — A house in Capernaum, probably Peter's.

We have here the only lesson which treats of the relations of Jesus to the children, and hence should take a wide view of the whole subject.

On the one hand, we have the relations between the child and the Church in the double aspect, (1) what the Church is to learn from the Child, and (2) what the Church should do for the Child.

On the other hand, we have for the little ones themselves expressions of the Love and Care of Jesus for the Children.

We learn from Mark (9: 33, 34) that on the way home from the Mount of Transfiguration the disciples had a sharp discussion among themselves as to who was the greatest.

After reaching Capernaum the Jewish form of the kingdom of heaven was brought to their minds by the summons to pay the temple tax (Matt. 17: 24-27), and after that was settled, 1, at the same time time came the disciples unto Jesus with the question that perplexed them.

Putting the three accounts together, the conversation would be something like this:

Jesus: As I was walking before you (as in Mark 10: 32) on our way from the mountain I overheard your earnestly arguing among yourselves (for in their earnestness they raised their voices). What question interested you so much?

The disciples are silent (for they had been disputing as to who was the greatest; and they were ashamed of it, in the presence of Jesus.)

Jesus knew, but it was wise to lead them to express their thoughts. (Luke.)

The disciples, or some of them, then ask Jesus, "Who, then, is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" Not, What elements of character make true greatness? But who shall have the highest places? (See Matt. 20: 21.) "What seductive dreams of greatness and glory rose before these Galilean fishermen as the nearest followers of the great king!"

Jesus: You have utterly mistaken the nature of the kingdom of heaven and what is greatness there. I will illustrate.

2. Jesus, then, called a little child, and set him in the midst of them, and took him in his arms (Mark) in loving embrace, to make the lesson more impressive, and to show his sympathy with childhood, and his love for children.

3. And said, Except ye be converted, better, as in R. V. "turn." And become as little children. Not sinless, for no children are sinless. They all need to be saved from being lost, as we see a little further on (vs. 11, 14.) And if none but the sinless could enter the kingdom of heaven, that kingdom, on earth, would be empty. The meaning is, you must have those qualities which are characteristic of childhood, which make the ideal childhood, with emphasis on their humanity, consciousness of dependence on higher guidance, obedience and indifference to the distinction of rank and wealth. Shall not (in no wise) enter into the kingdom of heaven, the transformed society controlled by the principles which make heaven and come from heaven.

V. 4 Whosoever therefore shall humble himself (so as to be) as this little child is in this company, his natural, unassuming self. To humble one's self is not to think meanly of one's self, not to disparage one's self, not to be unconscious of our powers or knowledge, but not to think highly of ourselves on this account, not to seek honor or greatness for ourselves, but simply to use whatever we have or are in the humblest service, with no thought of ourselves. Contrast the false humility of Uriah Heep, one of Dickens's characters. The same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven, for he has most of the heavenly spirit. Whoever would be greatest in any kingdom must be greatest in the things which form the essential nature of that kingdom.

V.5. Whoso shall receive one such little child, the representative of childhood, shall recognize and welcome him, shall see in him the beauty of his character, and take it to heart, model his conduct after this ideal, "representing all that the spirit of ambition in its struggle for place and power is apt to trample under foot." In my name. For my sake, because he sees in the child the characteristics "which Christ Himself approved and exhibited." Receiveth me. Recognizes, loves, admires, appreciates me. The Christ spirit is in him.

Vs. 6-9. 6. Whoso shall offend. Better, R. V., "cause to stumble," block their way to the kingdom of heaven. The Greek verb is derived from skandalon, allied to "scandal," which meant originally "the stick in a trap, on which the bait is placed, and which springs up and shuts the trap at the touch of any animal." Hence our Lord does not mean "vexing them," "making them angry," or "ill-using them"; but "tempting or leading them into evil," by neglect, by bad example, by all that tends to repress the enthusiasm of childhood for Christ, or by whatever tempts them into the snares of Satan, bad habits, vice and drink. It were better for him that a millstone. A great millstone. Two kinds of millstones were in use; the one turned by hand; the other, and, larger, by an ass. It was this latter of which Jesus speaks. Let the stone be so large that the offender will "sink to the bottom to rise no more. And that he were drowned in the depth of the sea. Which was within sight. We are taken, in imagination, into the presence of a certain dreadful scene. We see a millstone attached to a man's neck. The fastening, passing through the central perforation of the stone, is made secure. It is a sad sight. Yet, turning from another scene, we say, "This is better." It is better to die a thousand deaths than to lead another into sin, and thus to murder his soul."

But there is one sadder sight, and that is the shipwrecking of others' souls, holding out the false light that ruins others as well as ourselves.

7. Woe unto the world. Not a wish, but a lamentation, a warning, a statement of fact. Because of offences. "Occasions of stumbling," in the way of becoming good, and especially in the way of children. No parent, without a feeling of dread, looks forward to the dangers, the pitfalls, the temptations, the fierce storms, the dragons and Apollyons, the deadly moral malaria, the enemies of every kind, which his child must meet.

For it must needs be that offences come. It is unavoidable in this sinful world that those who would serve Christ should be tempted. But woe to that man by whom the offence cometh! Who is guilty of this most awful of sins, the leading of others into sin.

8, 9. If thy hand or thy foot offend thee (lead thee into sin) cut them off. The meaning is, if objects dear as the right eye and useful as the right hand—honors, possessions, enjoyments—stand between us and the righteous heavenly spirit, not merely tempt us, but cause us to fall into sin, if we are unable to battle with and overcome the temptation, we must give them up rather than the heavenly life.

10. Despise not. Do not imagine that it is of no account how you treat even one of these little ones, the children, the weak, the poor, the ignorant. For I say unto you, making the revelation emphatic, that in heaven their angels, the angels who represent them and have them under their care, not after death, but now, all the time. Do always behold the face of my Father. Either those to whose care the little ones are committed are the highest and holiest angels nearest the throne, or they always have ready and immediate access to the Father (represented as a king receiving messengers and ambassadors), to present their needs and wrongs.

Illustration. In the old fable which the Hebrews used to teach their children about the fallen angels, they said that the angels of knowledge, proud and wilful, were cast down hopelessly into hell; but the angels of love, humble and tearful, crept back once more into the blessed light, and were welcomed home.

11. For the Son of Man, etc. This verse is omitted in the R. V. and A.M.R., because it is not found in the best manuscripts. But it is found in many manuscripts, and in Luke 19: 10, and expresses an eternal truth.

12. If a man have an hundred sheep. This parable is given more fully in Luke 15; 3-7. The lost sheep is a type of the helpless and the sinful, those who are in sad need of care and salvation.

13. He rejoiceth more, etc. This sheep is of no more value than the others, but its rescue opens the fountains of joy.

14. Even so. As the good shepherd did so much for a lost and helpless sheep It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven. He desires that all shall repent and be saved. He has done everything possible to wisdom and love, at the greatest cost, to save them. So we, like Him, are to care for the little ones, the children, the lowly, the wanderers, those farthest away. This is the joy and the duty of the church.

THE HEART OF THE LESSON.

The lessons which Christ teaches us by means of the children. He is ever setting the child in the midst, and all Christians must learn the lessons taught by the child if they would succeed in their mission.

The child symbolizes all men in their relation to the Heavenly Father. The child symbolizes all that are poor, weak, neglected, lowly, in relation to the Church. The Church will succeed in its work for the kingdom of heaven only so far as it regards the child and all whom the child symbolizes, as Christ Himself regards them.

Illustration. One chapter in Mr. George William Curtis' volume "Prue and I," is called "Mr. Titbottom's Spectacles." The magical quality of these spectacles was, that when their owner looked through them at people he ceased to see them as they ordinarily appeared on the street; he saw the real essential character personified. Wonderful were the revelations that were made. He looked at one man and saw nothing but a ledger. Another was simply a billiard cue, another a bank bill, another a great hog, or a wolf, or a vulgar fraction. On the other hand, he saw the good that others failed to see. One of his school teachers was a deep well of living water, in which he saw the stars. Another was a tropical garden full of fruits and flowers. In one woman's heart lay concealed in the depth of character great excellences like pearls at the bottom of the sea, little suspected by men, but perhaps love is nothing else than the sight of them by one person. Another, called an old maid, was a white lily, fresh, luminous and fragrant still. Another's nature was a tropic in which the sun shone, and birds sang, and flowers bloomed forever. His wrinkled grandmother appeared as a Madonna, "and I have yet heard of no queen, no belle, no imperial beauty whom in grace, and brilliancy, and persuasive courtesy she might not have surpassed."

LITTLE BELL BIOGRAPHIES

C. Schumann

ROBERT SCHUMANN, born at Zwickau, 1810, died near Bonn, 1856, was celebrated as a composer and as a critic of music. He might have become a pianist of the highest order had he not crippled the third finger of his right hand in an attempt to make it stronger and more facile by some mechanical device. This accident proves that there is no short cut to this end; it is reached only by persistent finger exercises in the hard old modern way at the keyboard.

If Schumann could not become a great pianist, he did become a great composer. Although he wrote an opera, choral and orchestral works, he will, like Schubert, retain a high place in the musical world by his songs, pianoforte pieces and other short compositions. His style is very striking and original. And all his songs and pianoforte pieces are of the highest excellence and beauty. There is not even among Schubert's vast collection any more perfect song than Schumann's "Ich Grolle Nicht" (I Do Not Complain). And for a pianoforte piece, strictly such, there is not in the realm of music anything so ravishing and haunting as his sensuous "Traeumerei" (Dreaming).

Schumann's pianoforte works have this virtue also—they are indispensable to the teacher and the student. To the young player Schumann had said—"Make Bach your Daily Bread," to which we add, and

Newbro's Herpicide

WHAT HERPICIDE DOES

Newbro's Herpicide destroys the tiny vegetable growth in the scalp that causes dandruff, itching scalp, falling hair and baldness. Once this microbe enemy of the hair is destroyed and kept out of the scalp the hair is bound to grow as nature intended, except in cases of chronic baldness.

WHAT SUNLIGHT DOES

Sunlight is nature's great germ destroyer and prophylactic. The effect of sunlight upon the scalp proves highly beneficial, if a complete plan of scalp cleanliness is carried out. This cannot be done without the use of Herpicide, which prevents reinfection and keeps the scalp pure and wholesome.

More men and women have gotten positive results from the use of Newbro's Herpicide than from all other hair remedies combined.

HOT WEATHER TROUBLES

The perspiration that exudes in increased quantities during the summer months carries out poisonous and refuse matter that would otherwise clog up the pores of the scalp.

Incomplete elimination of this waste produces a hot and feverish condition of the sweat glands known as Prickly Heat for which Herpicide gives immediate relief. Herpicide stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

Col. Thomp Burton, Member of the Board of Managers of the Ohio Penitentiary, writes as follows of Newbro's Herpicide:

"As to Herpicide I find it an excellent hair dressing as well as being the first and only absolute dandruff cure I have found. Upon my advice a number of my friends are using Herpicide, and the unanimous verdict is, that Herpicide is, in all respects, everything that its manufacturers claim for it."

All of the old clubs of London are the outgrowth of the ancient coffee-house system and the taverns and gambling rooms. Originally, apartments in the coffee-houses and taverns were reserved for certain people who were in the habit of associating together. Then, to secure greater exclusiveness, the entire house was leased, and finally the management passed into the control of committees of the habitues.

Is appendicitis mostly a fashionable medical delusion? That eminently French scientist, Dr. Doyen, thinks it is, and, together with his famous colleague, Prof. Dieulafoy, gives eloquent testimonies as to wrong diagnosis leading to useless operations for non-existent disease. In Dr. Doyen's own experience operations of this kind have been carried out on patients in the early stages of typhoid fever. One child was brought to him for operation, on the faith of a family doctor's diagnosis, and he satisfied himself, by examination, that the symptoms pointed to nothing worse than worms. So infatuated were the parents, however, that they removed the child and had the operation performed elsewhere.

Sub-Station Burned.

Hamilton, June 30.—Early yesterday afternoon the Cataract Power Co.'s sub-station at Grimsby was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. This put the whole waterworks system of the village out of business, as the water is pumped by electric power. It also interfered with the power supply at many places of business in Hamilton.

Tired of Life.

Brockville, June 30.—Tired of life and no home, Miss Margaret Linnen of Cardinal killed herself by drinking a quantity of laudanum. When found life had been extinct for several hours. She left a note explaining the cause of the suicide, and saying she wanted to die.

Valuable Zones of Silence.

There has come into modern life a greater variety of sound and a greater volume than assailed the ears of our ancestors. To keep one's freshness there ought to be a zone of silence around every human being during some part of the day. The finest creative work is done, as a rule, in seclusion; not necessarily apart from men nor in solitary places, but away from the tumult and away from distracting sounds. There was organized in Paris years ago a society for the culture of silence. On the occasion of the initiation of a distinguished man of letters a bowl of water was brought out to him in a room where he was waiting in solitude. He studied it a moment, placed a rose upon it and sent it back. The water bore the rose without overflowing. To the members assembled in another room the act was the most convincing evidence that the initiate comprehended the purpose of the fellowship and was prepared in spirit to become one of the company. The act was a symbol which Americans may wisely study.

English Railways and Fogs.

It is seldom that there is a sufficiently heavy fog on an American railway to cause serious inconvenience that no special precautions are taken, but in England a heavy fog is so common that there is a regular service made up of the repair gangs, who take the place of the mechanical signals. Every distance signal is guarded by a signal man, who is supplied with flags and torpedoes, the latter being called detonators, while the signal men are pointsmen. Two torpedoes are placed on the track to warn the engineer when the signal is set at danger and are supplemented by a red lantern in the hands of the signal man. As the torpedoes cost a cent and a half each and are used in great numbers there is a machine supplied by which the second torpedo is forced from the rail by the force of the explosion of the first, as only one is necessary, the second being merely a precaution.

The Chow Dog.

The chow, the solemn, black tongued dog which comes from China, is, the London Chronicle thinks, the ideal city dog. It says: "He never barks unless there is something serious to bark at. You open the door, and the dog marches out with fine solemnity. This writer's chow has a range of about ten square miles, and he has never hurt a baby, though he has gathered innumerable friends during his solemn march through London. He never loses his head, and his morning walks embrace Chelsea, Putney and the sacred precincts of the Brompton oratory. Indeed, he once followed a bicycle to Hendon and found his way back within forty-eight hours with an honorably empty stomach. The unaccompanied chow is the very least of the nuisances of the London streets."

Artificial Honey.

The honey had some foreign substance in it—the leg of a bee and a shred of broken wing.

"Well," said the wife of the food expert, "this is pure at any rate." She held up the bits of bee on a fork before her husband. "No benzoic acid, formaldehyde, boric acid or salicylic acid here, eh, John?"

But John, the food expert, laughed scornfully. "Those bits of bee in the honey," he said, "prove its artificiality. Genuine honey never has dead bees in it. They who make genuine honey are too clean and careful for anything of that kind to happen. It is as rare to find in real honey a bee's wing or a bee's leg as it is to find in a loaf of bread a baker's hand or foot."

Bagging the Grapes.

Immediately after the grapes have blossomed cover the bunches with two or three pound manila grocers' bags, according to the size of the variety. This is pre-eminently a fruit garden method, although commercial growers often use it. It is the surest and often the most practical way of securing perfect bunches. Close pin the mouth of the bag firmly; leave no opening to catch water. Cut a small piece off the lower corner of the bag, so that no water will stay in it. Leave the bag on until the fruit is ready to pick.

Literary Coincidence.

Resemblance does not always mean plagiarism. There was no plagiarism, certainly, in Newman's line, "The night is dark, and I am far from home," though it has been pointed out that it almost exactly reproduces a line in a play printed in 1599. This play is "Two Angry Women of Abington," by Henry Porter, and the original line runs, "'Tis late and dark, and I am far from home."

THE AMERICAN PERIL:

How Older Countries View the Rise of the United States.

The American peril?

Is the great American nation one of those mighty empires which have risen in the world now and then, dwarfing all other organizations of society?

This question is of immense import to Europe. Within the last few years an enormous literature has grown up around the subject. Among modern sociologists none speaks with greater authority than Guglielmo Ferrero. Long and scientifically he has studied our country; his opinion of the present, his forecast of the future, represent the best European thought upon the destinies of the United States. To many it will seem an exaggeration of our greatness; to others it will show an undue distrust of democracy; but, in any case, it is the word of a scientific historian—of a man who is looking for the truth. Neither wealth nor science can change the laws that govern the growth of nations. For Signor Ferrero the United States stands today in the position of the Roman Empire in the days of Augustus. He pictures an America which is bound to go the Roman way, increasing in power, draining incalculable wealth from that orient which enriched Rome, forced in spite of hereditary democratic ideals to make itself strong by land and sea in order to hold its own and guard its world wide trading flag, overshadowing the huge modern world as Rome did the little civilization of the Mediterranean.

After calm reflection and in a cold, scientific way, the thinkers and statesmen of old Europe predict for the new world this visionary future, and brooding over it they seem to be in the very shadow of the peril. The practical American, as he drops from the tail end of a street car and goes about his business, may not realize that Europe sees in him the terrible fellow who is to go swaggering down the way of the world, taking the wall of every one, in the good old Roman fashion; but so it is. He is—even when he wheels the baby abroad—an eighty-millionth part of the great American peril, in which fact he may find a certain measure of satisfaction.—Vance Thompson in Munsey's.

THE MAN FISH.

A Peculiar Animal With a Sort of Human Appearance.

There used to be traditions among the sailors of mermaids at sea, half women and half fish, and there are fishes which may have given rise to the belief, from their resemblance to human beings. One of these is called the man fish.

This animal inhabits the mouths of the Amazon, Orinoco and other South American rivers. Its name (manatee) has reference to the peculiar form of its swimming paws. These are composed of soft parts and a membrane which infolds the bones of the hands and fingers. But in the manatee four flat nails are seen attached to the edge of the paw.

The tail also is peculiar, being about one-fourth the length of the body and oval shaped, not unlike that of the otter. The head is round, attached to the body without a neck. The muzzle, in which the nostrils are placed, is large and fleshy, the upper lip cleft and bristled at the side, the lower lip much shorter and the mouth small.

When seen at a distance, with the anterior part of the body out of the water, they are sometimes taken for some creature approaching to human shape. The effect has been deepened by the thickset hairs of the muscle, giving somewhat the appearance of human hair or a beard. Thus the Spanish and the Portuguese give the manatee a name which signifies woman fish, and the Dutch call it the dudong baardmannetze or little bearded man.

Lunatics Used as Horses.

A regular slave mart still exists in many country districts of Finland. Once a year such paupers, lunatics and aged people of each parish as cannot support themselves are put up at public auction and consigned to those farmers or families who will board them at the lowest price offered by the parish authorities. The helpless creatures are made to work as much as possible by their owners, who have the right to chastise them and are generally most inhuman in their treatment. Lunatics have been used even as cart horses.

Warming Up.

A fond mother, hearing an unusual noise in the nursery overhead, hurried upstairs to find out what was the matter.

She found Johnny sitting in the middle of the floor quietly smiling.

"Oh," said he, "I've locked grandpa and Uncle Henry in the cupboard, and when they get a little angrier I am going to play Daniel in the lion's den."

Modifying the Risk.

Parson Bagster (solemnly)—Does yo', Claud Kinsabby, take dis yuh lady, Miss Gladys Poots, to be yo' lawful wedded wife, for bettah and for wuss? The Groom (uneasily and hazily)—Uh cou'se I does if I has to, sah, but ain't dar some way of takin' her kindah on an ave'age?

Unreasonable.

"My husband," said a young wife, "is a very unreasonable man!"

"In what way?" asked a friend.

"He expects me to live on nothing and save half."

Sarcastic.

Barber (pausing in the mutilation)—Will you have a close shave, sir? Victim (with a gasp)—If I get out of this chair alive, I shall certain consider it such.

Tombstone Inscriptions.

Three of the commonest tombstone inscriptions are "In the midst of life we are in death," "His end was peace," "He tempers the wind to the shorn lamb." The sentiment of each is comforting and consolatory, but none comes from the Bible.

Wit in the Workbasket.

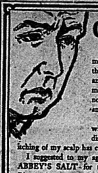
"What's the old lady doing now?" asked the stocking.

"Getting a needle and wool," replied the thimble.

"Well, I'll be darned!" ejaculated the stocking fiercely.

Her Quick Wit.

He—Your new hat is charming, but I fancy it doesn't go well with that dress. She (enchanted)—Oh, you dear old hubby, so you really mean to buy me a dress as well?



Cures Rheumatism

"I had an attack of Rheumatism—pains near my heart—which increased to such a degree that I became very anxious. I lost my appetite, and an intense itching or heating of the head made life miserable. I asked a druggist, was there nothing he could suggest that would help me, and he replied 'Why not try ABBEY'S SALT?'

I did so, and can now state positively, and without solicitation that the Rheumatism has disappeared—my appetite is grand—and the itching of my scalp has ceased.

I suggested to my aged Father and Mother that they should try ABBEY'S SALT for their Rheumatism—and they tell me they have received immense benefit."

Lava in the Ocean.

This earth received what was probably its greatest shaking in modern times when the tremendous volcanic eruption of Krakatoa, in Sunda strait, occurred in 1883. A curious incident of that time is recalled by a correspondent who was a passenger on a steamship on the voyage between Colombo and Albany, King George's sound, some 1,500 or 2,000 miles south of the center of the disturbance. It was a beautiful night, and shortly after dinner, when the deck was crowded with passengers, the lookout shouted, "Breakers ahead!" This was in midocean, with no shoal water nearer than the Australian coast, five or six days' sail distant. The steamer was slowed down, and presently drifted into a mass of floating lava and green slime. Bucketfuls were hauled on deck and strained through cloths. Nearly all night the steamer forged ahead at half speed, with the floating scum grating against her sides, and in the morning, when clear water was reached, the sides of the ship below the water line were bare of paint and burnished like steel.

The Red Howling Monkey.

The red howler (Mycetes seniculus) is a rare monkey of the forests of tropical America. It is an extremely delicate animal and is chiefly remarkable for the extraordinary noises it makes. The cries it utters comprise almost any sound from a subdued moan to an angry roar, and it is hardly conceivable that they should proceed from a single animal. This is the animal called red monkey by Waterton in his "Wanderings In South America," where an admirable description of its weird cries may be read. These sounds are produced in a bony cavity formed by an enlargement of the hyoid, or tongue bone. In appearance the red howler is an elegant little creature, well clothed with hair of a reddish brown color. Like the spider monkeys, it is provided with a long, prehensile tail, the under surface of which is naked toward the tip, but it differs from those monkeys in having well developed thumbs.—Westminster Gazette.

One Way to Get a Dog.

"There are ways and ways of getting things," said the old secret service man, "but I wouldn't recommend some of them to a Sunday school class. Now, I knew professionally a reformed confidence man. I won't say how deep the reform went, but officially he was reformed and occupied a pretty respectable position in the community. One day I met this chap on the street, and I had something to say to him. 'See here,' I demanded, 'is this your advertisement in the paper offering a reward of $5 for the return of a lost dog?' 'Sure!' said he. 'But you don't own a dog,' said I. He grinned. 'You mean I didn't own a dog,' he corrected. 'But I do own one now—the handsomest English bulldog you ever laid your eyes on, and he cost just $5.'"

Imagination and Judgment.

Dr. Eaton, president of Madison university years ago, was beloved by the students and his good opinion courted above all things. One commencement day the student who had delivered the valedictory approached the doctor and timidly asked him what he thought of the effort. The doctor looked at him a moment and then said slowly, "Edward, if you would pluck a few of the feathers from the wings of your imagination and stick them in the tail of your judgment, you would make better speeches."

Free to You, My Sister

Free to You and Every Sister Woman Suffering from Woman's Ailments

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from woman's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand woman's sufferings. What we women know from experience we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhœa or Whitish Discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial, and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment, for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book "WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER," with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young.

To mothers or daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhœa, Green Sickness and painful or irregular menstruation in young ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality, who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures al[illegible]

Miss Mazel Stork will sing at the short recital at St. Thomas' Church after service to-morrow evening.

Mr. Jos. O'Brien, of Beechmount, had one foot badly injured at a barn-raising on the farm of Mr. Harrison Brathour. Fortunately no bones were broken.

One prisoner was in the police cells last night.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

BELLEVILLE MAN FOUND SUSPENDED FROM A BEAM — FATAL RESULT NARROWLY AVERTED.

Mr David Bowler, who resides on Pinnacle street between Victoria avenue and Mill street, made a deliberate attempt at self destruction yesterday afternoon between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock, and he came very near accomplishing his desire.

The mode selected was hanging, and the place was his residence. At the time he made preparation to commit the act no person else was in the house. At about 5.30 his daughter, Miss Violet, had occasion to go home to prepare for an entertainment. She went into the house and passed on through to the woodshed in the rear. There she beheld a frightful sight. Her father was suspended from a beam She raised an alarm and neighbors were soon upon the scene. Mr. Geo. Ruttan, a blacksmith near by, rushed in and cut Bowler down. His condition was critical, but owing to the timely arrival of Drs. Dolan and Yeomans, the man's life was saved, and to-day he is apparently little if any worse from his experience. Bowler some two years ago lost his legs and it is supposed that in a fit of melancholy he committed the rash act, which nearly cost him his life.

Clever Belleville Lady Will Teach In Brandon

Elizabeth Cunnington, A.T.C.M., a talented piano pupil of Dr. Edward Fisher and honor graduate of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, in both the Artist's and Normal course, and also a member of the staff, leaves here shortly to teach music in Brandon, Man. Miss Cunnington has had excellent experience in accompanying, as well as in other branches of the art. She will be much missed here, but will prove a valuable acquisition in her new surroundings. Brandon, being a progressive Western city, will certainly appreciate teaching ability. — Toronto Saturday Night.

Miss Cunnington's musical talent, so well know and highly appreciated in Belleville her home town, will doubtless win much approval in the busy western city where she is to reside.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

The American Rhodes scholars are trying to introduce baseball into Oxford.

The championship of the Trans-Mississippi Golf Association was on Saturday won at Omaha by Clive T. Jaffray of Minneapolis, Minn., formerly of Berlin, and brother of J. P. Jaffray, editor of the Galt Reporter.

Saved From Drowning By Visiting Sailor.

The steam yacht Vesta, owned by a Mr. Lawrence, of Cleveland, O., was in the harbor last night. Mr. Rose Piper, one of the crew, during the evening saved a man from drowning. It appears that some man whose name could not be ascertained, whilst under the influence of liquor, fell off the dock, and Mr. Piper, hearing the splash, swam to the place and succeeded in rescuing the man from a watery grave.

Sunlight Soap is better than other soaps, but is best when used in the Sunlight way. Buy Sunlight Soap and follow directions.

A Tale Of Two Bicycles.

THE FIRST WAS STOLEN, THE SECOND PROCURED IN EXCHANGE.

One evening during the month of May a bicycle was stolen from Mr. John Harte, of this city. The wheel was left outside of Mr. Harte's office on Front street and was taken during his temporary absence. About two weeks after the wheel was found in an establishment in this city, where it had been traded for a lady's wheel. The affair was reported to the police with the result that yesterday afternoon a young man named Jas. Brown was arrested, charged with the theft of the wheel. He had in his possession the lady's wheel he had secured in exchange for the stolen one. Brown acknowledged that he took the wheel. The accused was arrested in the Township of Thurlow, where he was engaged at work with a farmer.

Owing to the magistrate being engaged in other business this morning Brown was not brought up until 2.30 this afternoon.

DOMINION DAY.

Str Annie Lake will on Monday the 2nd, run to Massassaga Park, at 10 a.m., and commencing at 1 p. m., and running continuous trips for the afternoon.

Belleville Old Boys.

President W. H. Wallbridge presided at an enthusiastic meeting of the Belleville Old Boys in Oddfellows' Hall, Toronto, last evening. Plans were perfected for the reunion and excursion to Belleville July 21 to 23, and the committee, with the details in hand, gave assuring reports. A short musical programme was thoroughly appreciated.

What's the good of keeping from him
Any good things you may see,
That will lift his load of labor
Like Rocky Mountain Tea.
—D. M. Waters.

Social at Canifton.

The Canifton Methodist circuit gave a reception, in the Canifton Town Hall, to their new pastor, Rev. Mr. Rorke, and Mrs. Rorke. There was a large attendance and the affair was thoroughly enjoyed by all. The I.O.O.F. Band and a large number of others from this city were present.

Don't be fooled and made to believe that rheumatism can be cured with local appliances. Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea is the only positive cure for rheumatism. 35 cents, Tea or Tablets.—D. M. Waters

CHIEF NEWTON REAPPOINTED

OFFICER HAYES WILL BE SERGEANT — THREE CONSTABLES TO BE APPOINTED.

A meeting of the Police Commissioners was held yesterday afternoon and another session was held this morning, but the composition of the force has not yet been decided upon.

The resignations of the Chief and of the three constables who at present constitute the force were accepted.

At the meeting of the Commissioners this morning it was decided to reappoint Chief Newton; and also that Officer Hayes will be the Sergeant of the force.

Three constables will be appointed and these will be selected at a another meeting of the Commissioners to be held on Monday next.

MONDAY IN NAPANEE.

The Napanee races on Monday, July 2 promises to be very exciting. There are four entries in 2.12 class, for $200 purse, eight in 2.40 class for $175 purse, and six in named race for $100 purse Yarker and Napanee will play baseball in the afternoon. Music by Picton Citizens' Band. 1t

To-day's Market.

Mining Notes.

(Bancroft Times.)

Things are booming at the Canada Corundum Co.'s works at Craigmont. Over 220 men are on the pay roll, and the output is greater than it has ever been before.

Mr. Ritchie of the C. O. R. was in town last week and made final arrangements for the building of a spurr line into the marble quarry, on the Gaebel farm. Mr. Gibson was awarded the contract, and work has already commenced.

At Sign of the Scales.

DOG CASE.

The Magistrate this morning gave judgment in the case of Mrs. Wm. Shaw, Thurlow, who was accused of keeping a vicious dog. His Worship found that the dog in question was dangerous to be at large, and ordered that it be disposed of.

Judgment as to any fine or costs was reserved for a week.

Severe Thunder Storm.

This section of the community was last night visited by a severe thunderstorm. Whilst no damage was done in the city, a house at Trenton was struck and partially demolished and in Prince Edward County considerable damage was sustained.

Ontario Liquor License ACT.

LICENSE DISTRICT OF WEST HASTINGS.

Notice is hereby given that O. Holbrook, of the Town of Trenton, has made application for permission to transfer her tavern license for the premises known as the Hotel Aberdeen in the Town of Trenton, to Emry Cooley also of the Town of Trenton, and that the application will be considered at a meeting of the Board of License Commissioners to be held in the Town of Trenton, on the 17th day of July, at the hour of Two o'clock.

All persons interested will govern themselves accordingly.

Difficult Haymaking.

One of the most curious sights that one notices in the agricultural parts of Norway is the peculiar way of drying out the hay. On account of the extreme dampness the grass rots if left on the ground after it is mowed. Wooden drying fences that stretch for hundreds of yards across the fields are built, and every night the hay is hung out to dry, like the family wash. The sun helps along in the daytime, but it is only a half hearted help, and in the neighborhood of Bergen, where it is said to rain 364 days out of the year, the hay is almost always "on the fence." In the lake districts, where the hilly country makes means of transportation very difficult, a heavy copper wire is stretched from the top of a mountain to the village in the valley below. Down this huge masses of hay are sent sailing through the air, sometimes whizzing dangerously near the unwary tourist's head.

The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of "The Gentleman from Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

"Do you know the gentleman who sent you?" she asked.

"No'm; but he'll be waitin' at his office, Gray & Vanrevel, on Main street, for the answer."

"Then hurry!" said Betty.

He needed no second bidding, but, with wings on his bare heels, made off through the gap in the hedge. At the corner of the street he encountered an adventure—a gentleman's legs and a heavy hand at the same time. The hand fell on his shoulder, arresting his scamper with a vicious jerk, and the boy was too awed to attempt an escape, for he knew his captor well by sight, although never before had he found himself so directly in the company of Rouen's richest citizen. The note dropped from the small trembling fingers, yet those fingers did not shake as did the man's when, like a flash, Carewe seized upon the missive with his disengaged hand and saw what two names were on the envelope.

"You were stealing, were you?" he cried savagely. "I saw you sneak through my hedge!"

"I didn't either!"

Mr. Carewe ground his teeth. "What were you doing there?"

"Nothing!"

"Nothing!" mocked Carewe. "Nothing! You didn't carry this to the young lady in there and get her answer?"

"No, sir!" answered the captive earnestly. "Cross my heart I didn't. I found it!"

Slowly the corrugations of anger were leveled from the magnate's face, the white heat cooled, and the prisoner marveled to find himself in the presence of an urbane gentleman whose placidity made the scene of a moment ago appear some trick of distorted vision. And yet, curious to behold, Mr. Carewe's fingers shook even more violently than before as he released the boy's shoulder and gave him a friendly tap on the head, at the same time smiling benevolently.

"There, there," he said, bestowing a wink upon the youngster. "It's all right. It doesn't matter; only I think I see the chance of a jest in this. You wait while I read this little note, this message that you found!" He ended by winking again with the friendliest drollery.

He turned his back to the boy and opened the note, continuing to stand in that position while he read the two messages. It struck the messenger that after this there need be no great shame in his own lack of this much vaunted art of reading, since it took so famous a man as Mr. Carewe such length of time to peruse a little note. But perhaps the great gentleman was ill, for it appeared to the boy that he lurched several times, once so far that he would have gone over if he had not saved himself by a lucky stagger. And once, except for the fact that the face that had turned away had worn an expression of such genial humor, the boy would have believed that from it issued a sound like the gnashing of teeth.

But when it was turned to him again it bore the same amiable jocosity of mouth and eye, and nothing seemed to be the matter, except that those fingers still shook so wildly—too wildly, indeed—to restore the note to its envelope.

"There," said Mr. Carewe, "put it back, laddie; put it back yourself. Take it to the gentleman who sent you. I see he's even disguised his hand a trifle—ha, ha!—and I suppose he may not have expected the young lady to write his name quite so boldly on the envelope! What do you suppose?"

"I d'know," returned the boy. "I reckon I don't hardly understand."

"No, of course not," said Mr. Carewe, laughing rather madly. "Ha, ha, ha! Of course you wouldn't. And how much did he give you?"

"Yay!" cried the other joyously. "Didn't he go and hand me a dollar!"

"How much will you take not to tell him that I stopped you and read it? How much not to speak of me at all?"

"What?"

"It's a foolish kind of joke, nothing more. I'll give you $5 never to tell any one that you saw me today."

"Don't shoot, colonel!" exclaimed the youth, with a riotous fling of bare feet in the air. "I'll come down!"

"You'll do it?"

"Five!" he shouted, dancing upon the boards. "Five! I'll cross my heart to die I never hear tell of you or ever knew they was sich a man in the world!"

Carewe bent over him. "No! Say, 'God strike me dead and condemn me eternally to the everlasting flames of hell if I ever tell!'"

This entailed quick sobriety, though only benevolence was in the face above him. The jig step stopped, and the boy pondered, frightened.

"Have I got to say that?"

Mr. Carewe produced a bank bill about which the boy beheld a halo. Clearly this was his day. Heaven showed its approval of his conduct by an outpouring of imperishable riches. And yet the oath misliked him. There was a savor of the demoniacal contract. Still that was to be borne and the plunge taken, for there fluttered the huge sum before his dazzled eyes. He took a deep breath. "'God strike me dead,'" he began slowly. "'If I ever'"—

"No. 'And condemn me to the everlasting flames of hell'"—

"Have I got to?"

"Yes."

"'And condemn me to—to the everlasting flames of—of hell if I ever tell!'"

He ran off, pale with the fear that he might grow up, take to drink and some day tell in his cups, but so resolved not to coquet with temptation that he went round a block to avoid the door of the Rouen House bar. Nevertheless the note was in his hand and the fortune in his pocket.

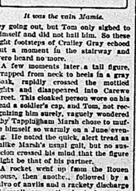
And Mr. Carewe was safe. He knew that the boy would never tell, and he knew another thing, for he had read the Journal, though it came no more to his house—he knew that Tom Vanrevel wore his uniform that evening and that, even in the dusk, the brass buttons on an officer's breast make a good mark for a gun steadied along the ledge of a window. As he entered the gates and went toward the house he glanced up at the window which overlooked his garden from the cupola.

CHAPTER XVIII.

CRAILEY was not the only man in Rouen who had been saying to himself all day that each accustomed thing he did was done for the last time. Many of his comrades went about with "Farewell, old friend," in their hearts, not only for the people, but for the usual things of life and the actions of habit, now become unexpectedly dear and sweet to know or to perform. So Tom Vanrevel, relieved of his hot uniform, loose as to collar, wearing a big dressing gown and stretched in a chair, watched the sunset from the western window of the dusty office, where he had dreamed through many sunsets in summers past, and now took his leave of this old habit of his in silence, with a long cigar, considering the chances largely against his ever seeing the sun go down behind the long wooden bridge at the foot of Main street again.

The ruins of the warehouses had been removed, and the river was laid clear to his sight. It ran between brown banks like a river of rubies, and at the wharf the small evening steamboat, ugly and grim enough to behold from near by, lay pink and lovely in that broad glow, tooting imminent departure, although an hour might elapse before it would back into the current.

The sun widened, clung briefly to the horizon and dropped behind the low hills beyond the bottom lands; the stream grew purple, then took on a luster of pearl as the stars came out, while rosy distances changed to misty blue; the chatter of the birds in the Main street maples became quieter and, through lessening little choruses of twittering, fell gradually to silence. And now the blue dusk crept on the town, and the corner drug store window lights threw mottled colors on the pavement. From the hall, outside the closed office door, came the sound of quick, light footsteps. It was Crailey going out, but Tom only sighed to himself and did not hail him. So these light footsteps of Crailey Gray echoed but a moment in the stairway and were heard no more.



It was the vain Mamie.

A few moments later a tall figure, wrapped from neck to heels in a gray cloak, rapidly crossed the mottled lights and disappeared into Carewe street. This cloaked person wore on his head a soldier's cap, and Tom, not recognizing him surely, vaguely wondered why Tappingham Marsh chose to muffle himself so warmly on a June evening. He noted the quick, alert tread as unlike Marsh's usual gait, but no suspicion crossed his mind that the figure might be that of his partner.

A rocket went up from the Rouen House, then another, followed by a salvo of anvils and a rackety discharge of small arms, the beginning of a noble display of fireworks in celebration of the prospective victories of the United States and the utter discomfiture of the Mexicans when the Rouen volunteers should reach the seat of war, an exhibition of patriotism which brought little pleasure to Mr. Vanrevel.

But over the noise of the street he heard his own name shouted from the stairway, and almost instantly a violent knocking assailed the door. Before he could bid the visitor enter, the door was flung open by a stout and excited colored woman who, at sight of him, threw up her hands in tremulous thanksgiving. It was the vain Mamie.

She sank into a chair and rocked herself to and fro, gasping to regain her lost breath. "Bless de good God 'lmighty, you ain' gone out!" she panted. "I run an' I run, an' I come so fas' I got stitches in de side f'um head to heel!"

Tom brought her a glass of water, which she drank between gasps.

"I nevah rŭn so befo' endurin' my livin' days," she asserted. "You knows me, who I am an' whum I cum f'um, nigh's well's I knows who you is, I reckon, Maje' Vanrevel?"

"Yes, yes, I know. Will you tell me who sent you?"

"Mis Tanberry, suh, dat who sended me, an' in a venomous hurry she done de same!"

"Yes. Why? Does she want me?"

Mamie emitted a screech. "'Deed she mos' everlas'in'ly does not! Dat de ve'y exackindes' livin' t'ing she does not want!"

"Then what is it, Mamie?"

"Lemme git my bref, suh, an' you hole yo'ne whiles I tell you! She say to me, she say, 'Is you 'quainted Maje' Vanrevel, Mamie?' s' she, an' I up'n' ansuh, 'Not to speak wid, but dey ain' none on 'em I don' knows by sight, an' none betterer dan him,' I say. Den she say, she say, 'You run all de way an' fin' dat young man,' she say, s' she, 'an' if you don' git dah fo' he leave, er don' stop him on de way, den God 'lmighty fergive you!' she say. 'But you tell him f'um Jane Tanberry not to come nigh dis house or dis gyahden dis night! Tell him dat Jane Tanberry warn him he mus' keep outer Carewe's way ontel he safe on de boat tomorrer. Tell him Jane Tanberry beg him to stay in he own room dis night, an' dat she beg it on her bented knees!' An' dis she say to me when I tole her what Nelson see in dat house dis evenin'. An' hyuh I is, an' hyuh you is, an' de blessed Jesus be thank', you is hyuh!"

Tom regarded her with a grave attention. "What made Mrs. Tanberry think I might be coming there tonight?"

"Dey's cur'ous goin's on in dat house, suh! De young lady, she ain' like herself. All de day long she wanduh up an' down an' roun' about. Miz Tanberry are a mighty guessifying woman, an' de minute I tell her what Nelse see she s'pec' you a-comin' an' dat de boss mos' pintedly preparin' fo' it!"

"Can you make it a little clearer for me, Mamie? I'm afraid I don't understand."

"Well, suh, you know dat ole man Nelson; he allays tell me ev'yt'ing he know an' ev'yt'ing he think he know, jass de same, suh. An' dat ole Nelse, he mos' 'sessful cull'd man in de worl' to crope roun' de house an' pick up de gossip an' git de 'fo' an' behine er what's goin' on. So 'twas dat he see de boss, when he come in to'des evenin', tek dat heavy musket offn' de racks an' load an' clean her, an' he do it wid a mighty bad look 'bout de mouf. Den he gone up to de cupoly an' lef' it dah an' den come down ag'in. Whiles dey all is eatin' he 'nounce th'ee time' dat he goin' be 'way endurin' de evenin'. Den he gone out de front do' an' out de gates an' down de street. Den, suh, den, suh, 'tain't no mo'n a half 'n 'our ago, Nelse come to me an' say dat he see de boss come roun' de stable, keepin' close in by de shrubbery, an' crope in de ballroom winder, w'ich is close to de groun', suh. Nelse 'uz a cleanin' he harness in de back yo'd, an' he let on not to see him, like. Miss Betty, she walkin' in her gyahden an' Miz Tanberry fan' on de po'ch. Nelse, he slip de house whuh de lights ain' lit an' stan' an' listen long time in de libery at de foot er dem sta'hs, an' he hyuh dat man move, suh! Den Nelse know dat he done crope up to de cupoly room an'—an' dat he settin' dah, waitin'! Soze he come an' tole me, an' I beg Miz Tanberry come in de kitchen, an' I shet de do' an' I tole her. An' she sended me hyuh to you, suh. An' if you 'uz a-goin', de good God 'lmighty mus' er kep' you ontel I got hyuh!"

"No, I wasn't going." Tom smiled upon her sadly. "I dare say there's a simpler explanation. Don't you suppose that if Nelson was right and Mr. Carewe really did come back it was because he did not wish his daughter and Mrs. Tanberry to know that—that he expected a party of friends, possibly, to join him there later?"

"What he doin' wid dat gun, suh? Nobody goin' play cyahds ner frow dice wid a gun, is dey?" asked Mamie as she rose and walked toward the door.

"Oh, that was probably by chance."

"No, suh!" she cried vehemently. "An' dem gelmun wouldn' play t'night no way; mos' on 'em goin' wid you tomorrer, an' dey sayin' goodby to de'r folks dis evenin', not gamblin'! Mis Tanberry 'll be in a state er mine ontel she hyuh f'um me, an' I goin' hurry back. You won' come dar, suh? I kin tell her dat you say you sutney ain' comin' nigh our neighborhood dis night?"

"I had not dreamed of coming, tell her, please. Probably I shall not go out at all this evening. But it was kind of you to come. Good night."

He stood with a candle to light her down the stairs, but after she had gone he did not return to the office. Instead, he went slowly up to his own room, glancing first into Crailey's—the doors of neither were often locked—to behold a chaos of disorder and unfinished packing. In his own chamber it only remained for him to close the lids of a few big boxes and to pack a small trunk which he meant to take with him to the camp of the state troops and he would be ready for departure. He set about this task and, concluding that there was no necessity to wear his uniform on the steamboat, decided to place it in the trunk and went to the bed where he had folded and left it. It was not there; nor did a thorough search reveal it anywhere in the room. Yet no one could have stolen it, for when he had gone down to the office Crailey had remained on this floor. Mamie had come within a few minutes after Crailey went out, and during his conversation with her the office door had been open; no one could have passed without being seen. Also, a thief would have taken other things as well as the uniform, and surely Crailey must have heard; Crailey would—Crailey—

A TORONTO MAN TRIES

Something New and is Delighted. Feels Like a Boy.

Mr. M. N. Dafoe, 29 Colborne St., Toronto, says:

"I have been a sufferer from Dyspepsia for years. I have been treated by doctors and have taken many medicines with only temporary relief. Since using Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill I can eat anything the same as when a boy. I find they regulate both stomach and bowels. My old time vigor has returned, so that my spirits are buoyant and temper normal. I give all credit to this wonderful remedy—Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill."

Keep Children Well.

Stomach and bowel troubles kill thousands of little ones during the hot weather. Diarrhoea, dysentery and cholera infantum sometimes come without warning and if prompt aid is not at hand the child may be beyond aid in a few hours. If you want to keep your children hearty, rosy and full of life during the hot weather give them an occasional dose of Baby's Own Tablets. This medicine prevents illness and cures it when it comes unexpectedly. And the mother has the guarantee of a government analyst that this medicine is absolutely safe. Mrs. W. J. Munroe, Sintaluta, Sask., says:—"For more than three years Baby's Own Tablets is the only medicine I have given my children, and I think the Tablets invaluable for stomach and bowel troubles." Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. Keep the Tablets in the house.

A Good Dog.

It is related by Professor Bell that when a friend of his was traveling abroad he one morning took out his purse to see if it contained sufficient change for a day's jaunt he intended making. He departed from his lodgings, leaving a trusted dog behind. When he dined he took out his purse to pay and found he had lost a gold coin from it. On returning home in the evening his servant informed him that the dog seemed very ill, as they could not induce him to eat anything. He went at once to his favorite, and as soon as he entered the room the faithful creature ran to him, deposited the gold coin at his feet and then devoured the food placed for him with great eagerness. The truth was that the gentleman had dropped the coin in the morning. The dog had picked it up and kept it in his mouth, fearing even to eat lest he should lose his master's property before an opportunity was afforded him to restore it.—Chambers' Journal.

Commencement At St. Agnes'.

A REVIEW OF THE INCIDENTS OF THE WEEK—A MOST SUCCESSFUL YEAR'S WORK COMPLETED—THE SCHOOL PRIZE LIST.

The closing exercises at St. Agnes' School began on Sunday afternoon with a short choral evensong in the chapel and an appropriate address by the Chaplain, the Rev. G. R. Peamish.

On Monday evening the physical culture classes gave a practical and pleasing exhibition, which showed the excellent training done in this department during the year.

On Tuesday morning the Kindergarten classes delighted their parents and friends by a very pretty and interesting series of songs, games and work, showing what can be done in developing the powers and perceptions of small children.

Tuesday evening was devoted to a dramatic recital, consisting of a French play, "Le Tresoe," by Francois Coppee, in which the Misses Sills, Pense, Pringle and McGinnis showed remarkable fluency and rare command of the French language. "Enoch Arden," with musical accompaniment, was admirably given by Miss Mabel Phippen, and "The Death of Sidney Carton," by Miss Flossie Graham. George Elliott's short drama, "Armgart," was cleverly portrayed, in which Miss Mary Ackerill, who took the character of the title role, showed wonderful dramatic ability and a fine interpretation of the character.

On Wednesday evening a song and piano recital of rare excellence was given, showing marked efficiency throughout all the numbers. Then followed the annual distribution of prizes, and a report of the work of the year by the Lady Principal, Miss Carroll, which was highly gratifying, showing the wonderful progress of the School during the past year, and auguring a very bright future for St. Agnes'.

The art exhibit deserves special attention. From the lowest grade to the highest, the work shows a thorough grounding in principles. The charcoal drawings are exceptionally clear and accurate. Particularly noticeable are the drawings of the Venus de Milo and of the Diver. The life class are to be especially commended upon the study, "The old woman with the spinning wheel." The class has shown ability in the handling of both oils and water colors.

The following are the results of the Theory examinations held at St. Agnes' School, June, 1906: Musical Form, First Class Honors—Ruby Milburn. Junior Harmony, First Class Honors—Muriel Howe and Muriel Sprague, equal. Honors, Addie Potter, Ethel Jones. Junior Counterpoint, Helen Houston and Addie Potter, equal. Pass—Muriel Howe. Primary Harmony, First Class Honors—Annie L. Smith, Charlotte Witherill. Honors—Eva Gunter. Primary Rudiments, First Class Honors — Edith Caldwell and Edna Benjamin, equal, Carrie May, Lois Benjamin, Annie Tenney, Eva Gunter, Adelene Sprague. Honors—Muriel Grills, Annie E. Smith, Georgia Schryver. The scholarship given by Mrs. MacColl to the pupil obtaining the highest marks in the Toronto Conservatory examinations in Theory, held at St. Agnes' School in February and June, 1906, was divided between Misses Addie Potter and Muriel Howe, there being a difference of but one mark in their four papers. The scholarship consists of one year's instruction with Mrs. MacColl.

Toronto Conservatory examination in Piano; Intermediate Piano—Helen Houston (First Class Honors), Muriel Howe (Honors). Junior Piano—Muriel Grills, Anna Purtelle, Edith Fenn, Adelene Sprague, Carrie May (Honors), Georgia Schryver, Pearl Trumpour, Maude Hubbs. Primary—Mae Waters (First Class Honors), Marjorie Johnson, Anna M. Little, Gertrude A. Barry, Flossie Purtelle, Muriel Clarke, Pearl Ireland (Honors), Eva Gunter (Pass.)

The founder and directress of the School, Mrs. F. R. Lingham, ably assisted by Mr. Lingham, has spared neither pains nor cost to make the School buildings and equipment as perfect as possible, and, we believe, unsurpassed, if, indeed, equalled, in Canada.

Deseronto People Married In Kingston.

Rev. Dr. McTavish, of Kingston, was called upon on Wednesday to unite in marriage George H. Woodcock and Miss Lillian Carscallen, of Deseronto. The couple were married at the parsonage, 241 Queen street, by their former pastor.

Miss Jean Gowan, daughter of Capt. John Gowan, of Deseronto, and Peter O'Donnell, of Kingston, were married on Wednesday evening by Rev. Father Kehoe in Kingston.

Presentation To Mrs. Bottum.

A pleasant event took place last evening at Mrs. Mills', Forin street, where the members of Christ Church Ladies' Aid met, by the kind invitation of Miss Mills, president, to give a little "send-off" to Mrs. (Capt.) Bottum, before her departure for Indian Head. A very handsome solid gold cross and chain had been secured by the Ladies' Aid and was presented by the rector to Mrs. Bottum as a token of the esteem in which she is held in that society, of which she has long been so active a member.

Refreshments were served by the Misses Mills, and the evening was spent altogether pleasantly.

A Storm Above the Clouds.

Professor John Wise, the eminent aeronaut, who lost his life in making a balloon ascension on Sept. 28, 1879, gave the following description of a thunderstorm which he once viewed from the "top side:" "The view of a stormcloud from above is one of the most interesting sights ever beheld by mortal man. A storm viewed from above the clouds has the appearance of ebullition. The upper surface of the cloud is bulged upward and outward and has the resemblance of a vast sea of boiling, upheaving snow. Immediately above the stormcloud the air is not so cold as it is in the clearer atmosphere above or in the cloud itself. The falling of the rain can be distinctly heard, making a noise like a waterfall over a precipice. The thunder heard above a stormcloud is not loud, and the flashes of lightning appear like streaks of intensely white light on the surface of the gray colored vapor."

A Life of Freedom.

People sometimes think how delightful it would be to be quite free. But a fish, as Ruskin says, is freer than a man, and, as for a fly, it is "a black incarnation of freedom." A life of so called pleasure and self indulgence is not a life of real happiness or true freedom. Far from it. If we once begin to give way to ourselves we fall under a most intolerable tyranny. Other temptations are in some respects like that of drink. At first, perhaps, it seems delightful, but there is bitterness at the bottom of the cup. Men drink to satisfy the desire created by previous indulgence. So it is in other things. Repetition soon becomes a craving, not a pleasure. Resistance grows more and more painful. Yielding, which at first, perhaps, afforded some slight and temporary gratification, soon ceases to give pleasure and, even if for a time it procures relief, ere long becomes odious itself.

Died Standing.

The incident of Ratisbon—a French officer, though mortally wounded, rides back to Napoleon, reports the capture of the city and then falls from his saddle dead—is paralleled by a story of Gettysburg. An officer of the Sixth Wisconsin regiment walked up to Colonel Dawes, who was in command—Colonel Bragg was in Washington on crutches. The officer was very erect and very pale. Dawes and Doubleday both thought he was coming with a report or to receive orders. But he was not. He had a favor to ask. "Colonel," he said to Dawes, "will you tell the folks at home I died as a man and a soldier should?" Then he unbuttoned his coat. His whole side was shot away. It was his last effort. He died standing.

Every day is a new life, every sunrise [illegible] a new birth.—Jordon.

WORDS OF CHEER.

A CORRESPONDENT SENDS A CONGRATULATORY APPRECIATION OF BEAUTIFUL BELLEVILLE — THE "ONE THING NEEDFUL."

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir.—Having been away from the city for some time, I am pleased to see the marked improvement in the good old town, for in all my rambles I run across no prettier place nor more pleasant surroundings.

While driving over in West Belleville I was surprised at the many new homes, and the air of general improvement in older houses, new verandahs, old fences taken down, and some of the best sidewalks of concrete that can be found in any part of Ontario. Moira and Coleman streets are greatly improved, and a nice little park graces the spot where, in years gone by, was an eyesore of rubbish and weeds. The Victoria Park is a lovely spot and the new Corby Park another pleasing addition.

Again I was delighted to see, as on the west side, so on the east side of the river, substantial improvements. St. Agnes' School, commodious verandahs, fine and well-kept boulevards, and new and up-to-date homes, again attest the growing time in our good old city. When completed I think that the spire on St. Michael's Church will be one of the finest in Ontario.

I am glad to know that our Mayor is a hustling, enterprising young man. One thing I noticed particularly in driving over the lower bridge, that is, the substantial wall lately built on the east side of the river, and I hope that His Worship will push along the completion of this fine wall to its finish, at or near Victoria Park, so that in days to come, he can point with pride to that monument of his regime.

One thing is still needed — a good swimming bath.

Pardon my intruding on your valuable space, but I am so glad to see the improvement in the old home town. Yours,

June 29, 1906. A BELLEVILLIAN.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

A Nose Tax.

A "nose tax" was in the ninth century exacted by the Danes from the householders in Ireland. It was so called not because it was levied on noses, but from the fact that a failure to pay was punished by slitting the nose from tip to eyebrow. It was continued during thirteen years, when the householders, objecting to this treatment of their nasal ornaments, rose in rebellion, massacred all the Danes in Ireland and put an end to the nose slitting.

Don't Be Touchy.

There are some people always looking out for slights. They cannot pay a visit, they cannot receive a friend, they cannot carry on the intercourse of the family, without suspecting some offense is designed. They are terribly touchy. If they meet an acquaintance in the street who happens to be preoccupied with business, they attribute his abstraction to some motive personal to themselves and take umbrage accordingly. They lay on others the fault of their irritability. A fit of indigestion makes them see impertinences in everybody they come in contact with. Innocent persons who never dreamed of giving offense are astonished to find some unfortunate word or some momentary taciturnity mistaken for insult. Of course, such a mental condition is due to too much thinking about self and to an exaggerated self esteem, even though unconscious. The best remedy is to persistently put thoughts of self out of mind. Find something more absorbing and more elevating to think about if you are one of the touchy ones, and you'll soon lose the habit.

A Timely Suggestion

Everybody experiences a certain degree of lassitude during the period of early spring and summer. While it may not be at all alarming in the case of the robust and healthy, it is an entirely different matter to those who are not naturally strong, who take cold easily, who are predisposed to consumption, or who, from any cause are not "up to the mark." These require something to build up and fortify the system, something that will assist nature to restore a healthy and normal tone, not a stimulant, but a builder. The ideal system builder is

AT REVOLVER'S POINT.

Fishery Inspector Confiscates Outfit of Yankee Poachers.

Brockville, June 30.—At the point of the revolver Fishery Inspector Fraser made a capture of poachers above Brockville. He was up the river with his motor boat, and on the south side of Grenadier Island he came on two men with a boat load of minnows and a lot of net. They were getting the minnows for bait.

The strangers hailed from Alexandria Bay, N.Y., and when the inspector proceeded to confiscate the outfit, including the boat, the Americans showed fight, but Fraser drew a revolver and the trouble was all over.

Strikers' Places Filled.

Montreal, June 30.—The strike at Ste. Anne de Bellevue of the laborers on the MacDonald Agricultural College has fizzled. One hundred and twenty-seven laborers are out, and their places have been filled by Italians. They were given $1.50 and demanded $2.20 per day. The bricklayers did not strike in sympathy, as was reported.

TEXT BOOK COMMISSION.

Premier Whitney Appoints an Editor and a Barristers.

Toronto, June 30.—John A. Cooper of Toronto, editor of The Canadian Magazine, and W. Crothers, St. Thomas, barrister, make up the commission appointed by the Ontario Government to enquire into the question of the cost of the production of school textbooks. Premier Whitney made the announcement yesterday. The appointment arises out of one of the provisions of the new Education Act.

New Sheriff of York.

Toronto, June 30.—Mayor Daville of Aurora is the new sheriff for York County, in succession to the late Dr. J. H. Widdifield. Premier Whitney gave definite announcement of the appointment yesterday afternoon. Francis Turner Daville is a native of Welland County, having been born in the little Village of Middlefort sixty years ago. Going to Aurora 27 years ago he established in a small way the Daville Tannery, which has since grown to large proportions and is still under Mr. Daville's management.

End of Atlas Loan.

Toronto, June 30.—The master-in-chambers yesterday received a request from the National Trust Co., that the Atlas Loan accounts, as passed by Referee McLean, be accepted by the court, and the company's remuneration fixed. A dividend of 43 cents on the dollar is declared to creditors and debenture-holders, which is 6 cents more than the interim dividend. As no affidavit placing the accounts, as passed, in evidence, had been sworn to, there will be some further delay. The gross amount realized on the assets has been $1,185,172, and the net amount is a little over $426,000. From contributors $47,494 was realized, of which $12,000 was claimed to be due to the careful audit of the books made by the liquidator.

Sues Newspaper.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 30.—William J. Stein, a painter, has served W. B. Burgoyne, publisher of The St. Catharines Standard, with notice of a suit for damages for libel. The alleged libel was contained in a report of a discussion in the Niagara Falls public school board of work done by Stein. The suit will be defended.

New Insect Pest.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 30.—A plague of insects of a new sort is affecting this city and vicinity. The bugs destroy rose bushes very quickly and Fair View Cemetery the pride of the city, is being ruined by them. The insects have now attacked the grape vines, and fruit-growers are much alarmed.

First Sod Turned.

Welland, June 30.—Welland received another boom yesterday on the turning of the first sod of the Ontario Iron and Steel Co. works. They have purchased 60 acres, and are erecting a plant to cost upwards of $100,000.

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton.

JUGGLED TO COVER LOAN.

Startling Evidence re. the Northern Life Before the Insurance Commission—Everybody Deceived.

London, June 30.—The Insurance Commission held a short session here yesterday when the examination of Northern Life was concluded, Actuary Milne being the chief witness. The Woodmen of the World was called, but the secretary, W. C. Fitzgerald, was not ready to go on.

Loans to directors to obtain money and the juggling of returns to the Government were the nasty features of this company's business.

Business Ignorance.

At the beginning of his evidence, T. H. Purdom, president of the Northern Life, told of the organization's proceedings conducted by himself and his partner, the late E. Jones Parke. They knew nothing of insurance business, but thought that London was a good place for a company.

Loans to Directors.

Besides transactions with the Dominion Savings Co. Mr. Milne admitted to Mr. Tilley after some cross-firing that Matthew Wilson, a director of the Union Trust Co., had put through a loan of $75,000, which was done to get some money invested by this loan company in the west.

Mr. Tilley then sprung an agreement between one of the directors (John Ferguson) showing that he was to buy $10,000 of two per cent. renewals. Mr. Milne said that it was treated as a loan from Ferguson and he was taking the renewals as security. The deal didn't appear in the returns to the Government.

Mr. Tilley said: "Then you deceived the department at Ottawa. Have you ever done this since."

"Yes, all along. The Ferguson account stood at the end of the year about $39,000."

"By his paying in and your paying out in this way the expenditure has been kept a little lower without showing the source, is that right?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"Yes," replied Mr. Milne.

Their Way of Deceit.

"So that at the present time you owe him nearly $40,000, and this is the income that is not shown in your return?"

"We didn't treat it as such."

"This is your way of deceiving the department and the policyholders?"

"We did not treat it as such."

"There is no doubt your intentions were good, but you did not go about it the way the law says you shall," said Mr. Tilley.

"Have there been any other deceiving action in your company, presuming that this is deceiving?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"There have not."

Woodmen Not Ready.

The Woodmen of the World, of which W. C. Fitzgerald is general secretary, was then called. The head office is in London.

The witness was without his books, and Judge MacTavish then ordered him to appear in Toronto on July 16 prepared with all the books to give a full account of the affairs of the order.

The commission adjourned then to meet in Toronto on July 9, when the Ancient Order of Foresters will be gone into.

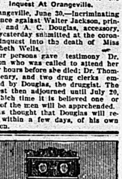
MISS WELL'S DEATH.

Incriminating Evidence Given At the Inquest At Orangeville.

Orangeville, June 30.—Incriminating evidence against Walter Jackson, principal, and A. C. Douglas, accessory, was yesterday submitted at the coroner's inquest into the death of Miss Elizabeth Wells.

Four persons gave testimony Dr. Carson who was called to attend her a few hours before she died; Dr. Thomas Henry, and two drug clerks employed by Douglas, the druggist. The inquest then adjourned until July 20, by which time it is believed one or both of the men will be apprehended.

It is thought that Douglas will return within a few days, of his own volition.



No range can bake so well as the Imperial Oxford, because no other range has the Diffusive Oven Flue that draws in pure air constantly, heats it just as hot as you want it heated, and sends it through every part of the whole oven every second. That flue, found only in this perfect range, keeps that heated pure air—DRY air—constantly moving DOWNWARD through the oven, over the baking food, and out up the chimney. When it enters the oven it's hot and dry; when it leaves it, it's wet air,—carries with it all the moisture, all the odors, but NONE of the juices of the food that's being baked.

Please visit any of our stores and see why this is the right range for your kitchen.

It certainly does do good baking

SERIOUS BLOW TO CZAR

Life Guards Treason Profoundly Affects His Majesty.

Nicholas Orders Name of His Favorite Regiment Stricken From Rolls—Decision to Dismiss Goremykin Cabinet—Nothing Would Be Surprising Now, and Czar Is Virtually a Prisoner—Bomb Misses Mark.

St. Petersburg, June 30.—The crushing blow inflicted on the Emperor by the discovery of disaffection in his favorite regiment, the Probrejensky regiment of Life Guards, as shown by its adoption of resolutions recently upholding all the actions of Parliament and announcing that the men wanted no more police duty entailing the slaying of brothers or fathers, has so affected His Majesty that he has ordered the name of the disloyal first battalion to be stricken from the roll of the Imperial Guards. In addition, the soldiers and officers of the battalion have been deprived forever of the special rights enjoyed by guardsmen and hereafter the battalion will be designated "the special infantry battalion."

The general staff no longer conceals its fear that the morale of the entire army is profoundly shaken, and that with Parliament championing the cause of the mutineers in each instance as it arises the first big test may find troops in line up as the French guards did two days before the Bastille fell, on the side of the people and against the monarchy.

To Dismiss Goremykin.

The Slovo yesterday says that the troubles in the army have routed the reactionary court camarilla, and have precipitated a definite decision, not only not to dissolve Parliament, but to dismiss the Goremykin Cabinet, and that in the meantime the Emperor has directed the Ministers to reply to all interpellations in Parliament.

Count Witte, from his self imposed exile abroad, has despatched several urgent telegrams here, emphasizing the necessity of putting a stop to the anti-Jewish outbreaks, the impression of which on the outside world has seriously affected Russia's credit.

An official denial is given of the report that the Emperor and court are leaving Peterhof and returning to Tsarskoe-Selo, owing to the discovery of a revolutionary plot among the palace servants.

Czar Virtually a Prisoner.

Since the revelations that disloyalty had invaded even His Majesty's Own Regiment (the Probrejensky Regiment of the Guards), it is asserted here that nothing would be surprising. Gen. Trepoff, commander of the palace, who is personally charged with protecting the safety of the Emperor's person, has redoubled his precautions. The garrison at Peterhof has been strengthened by a guard of Circassians, and the detachment of Cossacks about the palace has been doubled. The servants at the palace, as heretofore, are the Emperor's faithful Mamelukes and Tartars, some of whom do not speak the Russian language. The Russian servants are confined for the time being to tried lackeys and valets, but among these the terrorists have frequently boasted that they had spies. Newsboys carrying sacks are forbidden to enter the grounds of the old palace, to which the public is admitted, and no one is allowed within the walls surrounding the grounds of the small palace, where the imperial family resides, without a permit.

Bomb Misses Mark.

Warsaw, Russian Poland, June 30.—A bomb was thrown at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the chief of railroad gendarmes, Col. Muradoff, while he was driving through the streets in a cab. The cabman and a gendarme who accompanied Col. Muradoff were severely wounded, the colonel was slightly injured, and the horse attached to the cab was killed. The man who threw the bomb escaped.

Peasants Annex Land.

Nizhni Novgorod, Russia, June 30.—The peasants of this province are not only annexing the land of the gentry, but are taking portions of the land of the well-to-do peasants. Property in the vicinity of Samara, valued at about $250,000, has been destroyed by the peasants during the past month.

Two Others Refused.

Moscow, June 30.—Special despatches to The Russky Slavo say that two regiments at Yelizabethpol have refused to fire on strikers.

Found Tied Near River.

Brandon, Man., June 30.—A man named Jack Berry was discovered Thursday night by some men passing, with his hands and feet securely bound lying in the scrub near the river, just east of the Western Canada Flour Mills in this city. Berry had been drinking for several days, and it is thought that his companions led him down to the river and bound him, for the purpose of robbery, as he was known to have money. He can give little information as to his doings.

Stole Relief Blankets.

San Francisco, June 30.—Accused of selling large quantities of blankets and appropriating the money, John Clark, superintendent of Red Cross relief station at Golden Gate Park, and George Bryant, engineer at the children's playground in the park, who, it is alleged, aided and abetted Clark, were arrested.

Discipline At R. M. C. Poor.

Kingston, June 30.—At the closing exercises in connection with the Royal Military College yesterday, Lieut.-Col. Taylor, the first Canadian commandant of the college, reported that the health of the cadets had been fair; conduct fair, and discipline poor. The result of the examinations had been satisfactory.

Canada's New Zealand Fair Staff.

Ottawa, June 30.—The staff of the Canadian Exhibition Commission at the Christ Church, New Zealand, Exhibition will be as follows: Supt. W. A. Burns, associated with him T. H. Race, S. L. Broadbent, A. W. Despard and H. C. Knowlton. The Canadian exhibit is now being shipped.

Bookies Go Up For Trial.

Toronto, June 30.—The following "hand book" operators were formally committed for trial yesterday by Magistrate Kingsford, while the cases [illegible] were adjourned for a week: Richard Jackes, Fred Vose, Samuel Clapp, Frank Beer, Herbert Frankland, Frederick Allison, John Allison, and William Allison.

Saskatchewan Educational Council.

Regina, June 30.—The appointment of the following educational council is announced: William Grayson, Moose Jaw; T. H. McGuire, Prince Albert, both for two years, and A. H. Smith, Moosomin; W. H. Sparling, Battleford, and D. Gillies, St. Andrews, for three years.

Great Theologian Dead.

San Anselmo, Cal., June 30.—The Rev. William Alexander, D.D., LL.D., professor of church history in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary, died at his home here yesterday.

When the Liver is out of Order calomel, cascara, salts, strong liver pills and purging mineral waters won't do any permanent good.

When a person is bilious, the liver is not giving up enough bile to move the bowels regularly—and some of the bile is being absorbed by the blood. In other words, the liver is in a weakened, unhealthy condition.

Now, purgatives don't act on the liver at all. They merely irritate the bowels, and afford only temporary relief. But FRUIT-A-TIVES are the one true LIVER TONIC. They act directly on the liver—strengthen and invigorate this vital organ—and put it in a normal, healthy condition.

FRUIT-A-TIVES also stimulate the glands of the skin—and regulate the kidneys and sweeten the stomach. When skin, liver and kidneys are normally healthy, there can be no biliousness, no constipation, no kidney trouble, no impure blood, no headaches.

No other medicine known to science is so reliable and so effective in curing Biliousness as these fruit liver tablets.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are fruit juices with tonics added—and are free from alcohol and dangerous drugs. 50c. a box or 6 for $2.50. Sent on receipt of price, if your druggist does not handle them.
